

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XIII., No. 1. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF DR. TALMAGE and Picture of the Proposed New Brooklyn Tabernacle.
THE SKY ANTHEM. Dr. Talmage's Sermon.
THE SONG OF MARY. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE AT ADELAIDE.
A Repentant King—A Position Gained—Christmas at Bethlehem—A Missionary Letter from Guatemala.

THE SAVIOUR ANGRY. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
ANECDOTES AT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
PICTURE OF MANSFIELD COLLEGE, OXFORD, and Portrait of Principal Fairbairn.
WALTER LEIGH'S CONFESSION. (With Illust'n.)
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: (Continued.)
SCRIPTURE ALMANAC FOR 1890.

AGE, D. D.—

LYN TABERNACLE.

THE NEW BROOKLYN TABERNACLE.

A PICTURE of the new edifice now in process of construction in Brooklyn for the use of Dr. Talmage's Church, prepared from the plans of the architects, Messrs. John B. Snook & Sons, with a portrait of the pastor, appropriately forms the frontispiece of the new volume of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The new Tabernacle is to be in the City of Churches, and is to cost $150,000, exclusive of the site. The style is Norman, but not of the conventional ecclesiastical type. The material is a species of granite, with dark-red veins running through it, which is found in Connecticut. The facings will be of Lake Superior brown. The striking characteristics of the exterior will be a high tower at the corner, and two large gables on each facade, with small towers at the extreme ends of each facade. The corner tower will be 160 feet high from the ground to the finials. Its general form will be square, but over the two principal entrance-ways, one of which is on the Clinton Avenue side, and the other on the Greene Avenue side of the tower, there is a rounded projection which is carried up for two stories. Above that the tower is square, but the corners will be treated with slender round turrets, each of a different size, and somewhat different in treatment. The framework of the steeple will be of iron, and it will be covered with Spanish tiles. The general shape of

The Most Imposing Church Edifice

The Interior

will be that of a large amphitheatre, semicircular in shape. There will be two galleries, and the whole seating capacity will be about five thousand people, about one-half on the main floor, and the remainder in the galleries. The roof is to be open-timbered, with all the beams in sight, and its apex will be seventy feet above the ground. One good feature will be that there will be no steps except those leading to the galleries. The floors, both upstairs and down, will be what builders call "dished"—that is, there will be a gentle slope from the rear toward the rostrum, so that everybody can see and hear. The ground floor is to be so arranged as to utilize every foot of space for an audience room, except where staircases and retiring rooms are absolutely required.

There will be a lecture room on the Waverly Avenue side and reading room, Bible class rooms and lavatories on each side of the main auditorium; but the lecture and class rooms will be separated from the main room by great sliding doors that can easily be pushed aside, so as to throw the whole floor into one room.

One new feature will be two large reception rooms near the outer lobbies for the especial use of strangers visiting the church. The lobbies and passageways will be roomy, and the stairways wide, none being narrower than eight feet, and there will not be a winding stairway in the building.

On either side the rostrum, continued up for two stories, will be other small rooms, with windows on the Waverly Avenue wall, and also on the side toward the auditorium, so that they will be something like boxes in a theatre.

The whole building will be lighted with clusters of incandescent electric lamps. All the windows in the building will be of cathedral glass richly stained. The large rose windows in the gables will be particularly handsome.

All the interior furnishing, such as the upholstery in the pews, will be in warm, cheerful colors, and the prevailing effect, in harmony with the fine roof timbers, in their natural colors, will be of orange and subdued neutral tints.

The Corner-Stone

for the magnificent building is being cut from the historic locality of Mars' Hill, in Athens, from which the Apostle Paul preached his wonderful sermon. A recent letter from a companion of Dr. Talmage relates how this arrangement was made. It says: It was in his mail that Dr. Talmage found the first suggestion of that stroke of enterprise which will make the new Brooklyn Tabernacle a point of interest to the wandering antiquarian, as well as to the great multitude hungering for the sound doctrine to be thereat dispensed. He opened his mail at breakfast time, and finding in it an excellent drawing of the Tabernacle to be erected for him on Clinton Avenue, he remarked: "What a grand thing it would be to have the corner-stone for this magnificent-looking church from Mars' Hill! I shall write M. Tricoupis, and tell him just what I want, perhaps he will help me." Suiting the action to the word, he sat down, and penned a letter to the Prime Minister, who responded that he should have great pleasure in attending to the request made. Nothing could have been more satisfactory. Highly gratified at his success, Dr. Talmage immediately made arrangements to have the stone cut and shipped to Brooklyn, where it will arrive in good season for the time of corner-stone laying, which will be shortly after his return from his trip.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

IN a letter from a member of Dr. Talmage's party dated Alexandria, Egypt, November 25, the following account of the Brooklyn preacher's tour is given:

We did some sight-seeing at Corinth, but not much. That noble, natural fortress, the mighty Acrocorinthus which looms up grandly two thousand feet above the surrounding plain, well rewards the tourist who climbs its ascent. We saw ruins of the theatre, some temples, and the racetrack where runners contended for the corruptible crowns given to the victors in the struggle, to which the apostle Paul refers. It strikes one oddly on arriving at Athens to be entertained in a modern hotel, and with a French name, "Hotel de la Grande Bretagne," which ingeniously appeals to the patriotism of the universally wandering Briton. As the modern capital of Greece, Athens dates only from 1827, after a death of two thousand years. In recent years its inhabitants have shown considerable go. Our party arrived in time to share the rejoicing of the people in the splendid alliance made by the recent marriage of the Duke of Sparta, heir to the throne of Greece, to a sister of the German Emperor. This is regarded as giving the affairs of the little kingdom, in their relation of family interest to those of the greatest military power of Europe, a considerable "boost." The king of Greece is a brother of the Princess of Wales, and the heir-apparent is a brother-in-law of the German Emperor. These are truly splendid connections, and the Greeks have just reason to contrast with increased self-respect and patriotic pleasure their present condition with that when they were at the mercy of the unspeakable Turk.

We arrived in Athens on November 20. The next morning

Dr. Talmage Preached On Mars' Hill

to a gathering of Americans, Englishmen, and Greeks reading as the lesson of the day St. Paul's address to the Athenians of his time. (Acts 17.) The day was not Sunday, and preaching was not in order according to our prearranged programme, but the doctor was so carried away by the enthusiasm of the occasion that he took out his Bible and began to read. As he read he made interesting remarks on the passage he was reading. When he first began to read there were but few persons present, but as soon as he was fairly started they congregated fast and faster until a good-sized audience had assembled. Those who understood English listened eagerly to the preacher's words, taking such places and attitudes as enabled them to catch every word he said. The congregation sang: "All hail the power of Jesus' name," in which Dr. Talmage joined with enthusiasm. He then took his text from the address on which he had commented, and began to preach. It was fortunate that the weather was very fair, and his sermon was listened to in comfort. I think I have never heard him speak with greater fluency and impressiveness than he did on this occasion. The day following, Dr. Talmage visited an honor which resulted in this way: The sister of the statesman, who, like him, is unmarried, presides at his mansion. She entertained Mrs. Talmage in the morning when she suggested that the Brooklyn preacher visit her brother, who, she added, would be delighted to see him. Accordingly in the afternoon Dr. Talmage and the writer paid their respects to the Prime Minister at the War Department. Although a very busy man, holding two portfolios and crowded with important matters, the Greek Assembly being in session, M. Tricoupis received us very courteously. The Greek Premier is a man whose appearance impresses one that he possesses great mental power. He has a strikingly intellectual countenance, and is very polished in his manners. His countrymen honor and revere him to an extraordinary degree, and recent events have increased the hold he has upon their confidence. I learn that his reputation is of the highest for purity in his official conduct. M. Tricoupis would show little mercy in his dealings with "oodle" politicians.

M. Tricoupis, Premier of Greece.

This "modern Aristocrat," as he has been aptly called, speaks English with fluency. He is accurately informed on American affairs, and highly eulogized several of our statesmen. In his early days, while Secretary of the Greek Legation at London, he made the acquaintance of Edward Everett, who was then American Minister to England. He now asked Dr. Talmage concerning Mr. Everett's son, who, he had heard, filled creditably a professorship at one of the leading colleges. On bidding Dr. Talmage good-bye, M. Tricoupis assured him that he would cheerfully do all in his power to render his stay in Athens as attractive and agreeable as possible.

The United States Minister, Mr. A. M. Snowden, being absent at Bucharest, and our stay in Athens but brief, it was apparently not within the range of possibilities for Dr. Talmage and party to be Presented to the Queen.

A week or ten days' notice being required to secure an introduction to royalty, we had given up the expectation of seeing the amiable Queen, when, the morning after the interview with M. Tricoupis, Dr. Talmage was informed by that gentleman that he desired to present him and party to the Queen. When we arrived at the palace, we found that the ex-Empress Victoria, widow of the Emperor Frederick III., was just about to leave Athens, where she had attended the marriage of her daughter Sophie to the crown Prince of Greece. She bowed and smiled very sweetly as she passed us, although her eyes were filled with tears on her parting with the Queen. M. Tricoupis presented Dr. Talmage, wife and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Klopsch. Queen Olga shook hands with all in the right royal-democratic American fashion, and then engaged Dr. Talmage in conversation. Queen Olga said she had heard Dr. Talmage was on his way to Palestine, and hoped sincerely that he and his party would enjoy a safe and pleasant journey. We were all charmed with the simplicity of the Queen, and the cordial manner in which she received us. Our interview with her was one of the most delightful incidents of the trip, and Dr. Talmage insisted that the eulogies that he had heard concerning the gracious lady fell short of doing her justice. We did not meet the King of Greece at Athens, but saw him the day we were at Corinth, where he is about to embark with his father, the King of Denmark, and to accompany him as far as Corfu. He is very accessible to visitors, and M. Tricoupis seemed to regret his absence very much.

Dr. Irving J. Manz, Consul of the United States of America, at Athens, paid Dr. Talmage marked attention, and did a in his power to be of service to him. The Consul is a highly educated gentleman, a very eminent Greek scholar, and until recently he filled very acceptably the position of Chancellor of the Nebraska State University. He called at our hotel quite frequently. In one of his several interviews with Dr. Talmage, the preacher of the Brooklyn Tabernacle said that on his return to the United States he should recommend to wealthy people, where desirous of aiding deserving theological students to secure an education, to send them out in groups of ten or twenty on a tour such as he is now taking. "This is one of the grandest cures for sermonizing. Young men thirsting for knowledge would willingly dispense with luxury, and live together could by practicing ordinary economy, save over the same territory for about $250 each. What an inspiration it would be to them." The same amount of money could be spent nowhere else to equal advantage.

In Athens, which is yet as you know only of small size, Dr. Talmage became quite well known to the citizens, many of whom learned to recognize him as he wandered around sight-seeing. He showed enthusiasm in his work, reading up for every day's observations. Speaking of

The Modern Greeks

he said to me: "With their political freedom and artistic traditions, with the source of inspiration at their very doors, and we not expect that they, with all the rest of the world, but in a higher degree, will develop a capacity for art and literature, which may yet astonish the world? Their language does not differ greatly from classical Greek, they live in the same picturesque and sunny land as their fathers, and the materials out of which were raised the buildings which in their ruins we wonder at, are still theirs in the greatest profusion. These words were spoken among the ruins of the Parthenon, one of the wonders of the world."

There is much that is attractive in modern Athens. It has good buildings and well-kept streets, and its stores appear to be well stocked. My observation is that the majority of its population dress very much as we do. Of course houses of Oriental architecture still exist, and one sees many people dressed in the quaint attire of the East. Now and then a mountaineer of huge stature, angular and powerful, garbed somewhat like the Highland Scot, and armed heavily, stalks proudly by. As, I suppose, in all cities newly arisen from the dead, so to speak, contrasts are very striking, as the slow old Turk at his stall in the costume of centuries ago, and the pert young lady fresh from boarding-school, with all the furbelows of the most advanced fashion on her figure; and the modern policeman and the fierce warrior from the distant mountain region.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Pious Servant.*

"PHARAOH said unto his servants, Can we find such an one as this is, a man in whom the spirit of God is?" (Gen. 12:38.) One would have thought the fact would have been a disqualification in the eyes of Pharaoh. Pharaoh was a worldlyling; how could he respect that which was unworldly? All his motives were guided by the interests of the hour, how could he welcome a man who belonged to the immensities and eternities? It is because eternity includes the present hour, and he who has the spirit of eternity has also the spirit of the time. Think you that an atheist master would consent to have an atheist servant? Nay he would know that the temporal work would not be well done. He who would do well the temporal work must be beyond the time. No man can steer his way through the ocean of life whose eye is not on the stars.

Wouldst thou be fit for thy service? Then must thou be higher than thy service. Life would be too much for thee if thou didst not see ahead of it; thou art saved by hope. Thou canst not be a man of the world without a balanced mind, and a balanced mind is a mind at peace. God's peace is not something to die with; it is something to live by. Without it thou art but half a man—unfit for Egypt, unfit for Pharaoh, unfit for the coming famine. With it thou art more a man of the time than those who call themselves abreast of the age; he who would be abreast of the age must already have outrun it, for the world that now is, is lighted by the world to come.

The Use of Wealth.

"Join thyself to this chariot." (Acts 8:29.) It is not every chariot that can be joined by the prompting of the Spirit. There are forms of worldly riches which eat out the divine life. Yet the evil is not in the chariots, but their drivers. The Spirit does not wish to destroy the chariot but to get hold of the reins. It wants to turn the heads of the horses into a new direction—the direction of humanity. So far from despising the wealth of the world, it is the wealth of the world that the Spirit needs. It seeks to make friends with that which is now the Mammon of unrighteousness. It wants men of influence, men of power, men of resources, men who can afford to spend. It knows the power of the mountains over the valleys, and therefore it prays to the mountains. It says, "Come down ye rich and help the poor; come down ye strong and support the weak; come down ye great and make lighter the work of the lowly. Come and lift the toiling missionary, come and clothe the ragged school, come and heal the myriad sick, come and feed the starving millions. Bring your gold and silver to the feet of the child-Christ—to the door of that humanity which lies still in the manger of Bethlehem.

The Mentor.

The word of wisdom is equivalent to the wise word—the word spoken at the right time. Paul says Cor. 12:8, that the power to do this can only come through the spirit of Christ, in other words, through the sacrifice of my thought of self. How this is! How many of the most splendid addresses have failed in their effect just because, before they were spoken, I forgot to bury myself. Perhaps I was angry; perhaps I was indignant; perhaps I was ambitious; perhaps I was secretly gratified with my being a mentor. And so I failed to be a mentor—failed for want of the spirit. My word was not wise because it was spoken at the wrong time, and it was spoken at the wrong time because I did not put myself in the place of my brother. I was thinking of myself—not of him; therefore I lost the blessedness of the man who "bringeth forth his fruit in its season." I brought out my fruit of correction in winter when my brother was cold; it added to his bitterness and he rejected it with scorn. The Spirit would have taught me to create the springtime first around him, and to speak my word of wisdom when the singing of birds had come.

A TERRIBLE MESSAGE.

SPEAKING recently at the Gospel Tabernacle, New York, Miss Frances E. Willard said that a fisherman on the Bay of Fundy was one day watching his son out on the water fishing. The boy was accustomed to the work, and his father was not concerned for his safety. But while the boy was intent on his occupation the father grew anxious. From the shore he could see what escaped the boy's notice—storm-clouds gathering far out to sea. They gathered rapidly, and a low moaning wind ruffled the water. Then the boy saw and understood. But it was too late then. Though he struggled manfully to bring the boat in, the sea was too rough for him, and the boat capsized. It was not long before the agonized father was bearing his lifeless body to the bereaved home. His neighbors condoled with him, and spoke of God's inscrutable providences, but the fisherman's cry as he took his son's lifeless body in his arms had told the story. It was a bitter and a sorrowful cry, "O God, I see Thou art bound to have my heart!" He evidently knew what that bereavement meant. It was a call to him. Probably many had gone before it, and had not been obeyed, but now the old fisherman was hearing at last, and doubtless his heart broke as he thought that it had needed the death of his beloved son to bring him to Christ.

CHRISTIAN GIRLS BUYING A SLAVE.

In a letter to the Missionary Link, from Dr. Adeline Kelsey, who is laboring in Japan, she relates an interesting incident in connection with the death of Miné, one of the pupils in the Home. She says: In a very peculiar sense she was a child of the Home. When she was a little girl she attended Miss Fletcher's ragged School down on the bank of the canal, at the foot of the Bluff. Miné's parents were very poor, and when her father died, her mother married again. Her mother next died, and her step-father took another wife. They did not want Miné, and one day she was missing from the school. Miss Fletcher inquired, and searched, but could find no trace of her. After many anxious weeks of seeking and waiting and praying, she was rejoiced one day to learn that one of the older girls had seen Miné on the street. Miss Fletcher soon learned the sad facts connected with her disappearance. Her step-father had sold her for four dollars to be a little slave girl. Miss Fletcher lost no time in trying to rescue her from a life most terrible. The pupils in the Home raised the money to buy her from her bad master, and paid him seven dollars for her. He would have asked more, only he found she was physically weak, and would not be of much service to him. She has been for seven years truly "the child of the Home," owned and loved by the pupils and her teachers. She was a good scholar, and had a most remarkable memory. Our Miné had given her heart to the Lord Jesus long ago, before she was taken ill.

CHRISTMAS AT BETHLEHEM

THE following is a description of a Christmas ceremony in the Syrian village, where He was born, whose birth we have just been celebrating. It is an extract from Robert H. Beattie's narrative in the Interior. He says, at this season visitors to Jerusalem "find one road very much used. It is a broad carriage road, and you go down into the valley from the Joppa gate, then up past the Bishop Gobat School, on southward toward a village that covers the summit of a high hill, and the houses cling to each other about its sides. There are all sorts of people on the road. Many walk; some lead donkeys, on which their children ride in two great baskets; and some spur on their horses and almost ride down the weary foot passengers. But the Russian noble and the tall, lithe Abyssinian jostle each other along the road to Bethlehem.

"Up through the narrow streets into the great square, the city market-place, they go, and disappear through a low, heavy door that opens in the great wall opposite. Then, under some arches below the convent, they find the way that leads them into the church. Perhaps it is only sunset now, but people are gathering, and long before midnight the church is filled with a tired but eager audience. The priests move to and fro silently in their long gowns, sweeping about here and there, placing candles, changing lights, bringing fresh incense. But, near midnight, they commence to light the candles, hundreds and hundreds of them, and then the monks from the convent come and begin to sing the Christmas service. Soon the priests, with glittering, gold-embroidered robes, come in and the midnight service is begun. Prayer follows hymns and reading again and again. The sacraments are blessed, and this goes on before the waiting crowd for four hours. Then they disperse, having only seen a service and joined in the responses of a few prayers and hymns.

"But down in the crypt is the richest show of gold and silver. Here, in the little chapel of the nativity, the fragrant oil sends forth its light, and incense sweetens the air. Beneath the gold and silver lamps, is a stone manger, and this they say is the spot where Jesus was born. 'Is this true?' you ask, and I take you upstairs again and ask you whether Jesus ever commanded such a show. Whether His mantle of love appears? Is there a cup of cold water here for any little one? Are hearts made glad by these lavish outlays? The Spirit of Christ has fled from this Eastern Church, and formalism and tradition only remain."

A MISSIONARY LETTER FROM GUATEMALA.

AN interesting letter was read a few days ago at the meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions in Chicago from Mrs. D. Y. Iddings, who, with her husband, sailed for Central America in July and wrote from its capital, November 6. She writes: "Our journey was pleasant though it had its disagreeable features. The ocean was very rough where the water is rough on account of the shallowness of the ocean. Though we were repeatedly told it was smooth as a mill-pond we could neither see nor feel it to be so. Often we were told that when on the Pacific we would find smooth water, which we did, the water being smooth as glass all the time we were on that ocean. All the waves we saw were caused by the ship. Our landing was rather novel, as we were hoisted up in an iron cage, while the waves dashed our little bark against the pier very roughly, and the sharks were swimming in the water beneath. We also suffered much from heat both before and after landing, until we began ascending the mountains. We arrived here on the 9th of August, having been a month on the way. Mr. Haymaker was at the pier in the port of San Jose to meet us and the train was waiting to bring us to Guatemala, which is eighty miles from the coast, and five thousand feet high.

"This is the most beautiful country I ever saw; with high mountains and deep valleys, warm at mid-day in the sun, but cool in the shade, while the evenings and mornings are always cool. The whole land is covered with the most luxuriant vegetation; almost all varieties of flowers grow wild and all things grow with little attention. We plant our flowers and water them and that is all they need. Hedges are made of century-plants and geraniums. We have all the benefits of a tropical country, while, living in the mountains, it is very comfortable. We are hedged in upon all sides by high mountains. Three volcanoes are visible from our window, but only one is active, and it only smokes.

"But you desired to know something of the religious condition of this country. The Roman Catholic religion, which here takes the form of ignorance and idolatry, hangs over it as a cloud. All the people have many saints in their houses, and pray to them in turn, as the occasion demands. For instance, they cannot sleep unless a certain saint is under their pillows, and there are many other superstitions in which they are steeped. The saints are nothing but very ugly little dolls. A church in sight of our house has two large images of Christ screened with a wire net, and this net is completely covered with little threads and rags, taken from the clothing of the sick, and tied there because in so doing they think they will be healed. This same church has also a silver image of Christ, life size, which is carried about the streets on feast days with the feet out for the people to kiss. Also indulgences are sold, which permit the holder to commit certain sins for a specified time."

Voices of the Spirit, by George Matheson, M. A., a spiritual work which may be profitably used in the home. Pp. 241; price $1.25; published by A. C. Son, 714 Broadway, New York.

THE SKY ANTHEM.

Dr. Talmage's Christmas Eve Sermon at Beyrout, Syria.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Luke 2:14.

The December Christ—The Preacher's Visit to Bethlehem—Old Testament Associations—Joseph and Mary Coming There for the Census—The Birth in the Stable—The Announcement to the Shepherds—I. Indigence not Always Significant of Degradation—The World's Best Servants Obscurely Born—II. Divine Manifestations Come to the Usefully Employed—The Time of God's Visits to Men—III. The Christian Religion One of Song—IV. Glorious Endings from Humble Beginnings—V. The Effect of Christ's Mission—The March of the World's Armies—A Dying Girl's Vision.

At last I have what I longed for, a Christmas Eve in the Holy Land. This is the time of year that Christ landed. He was a December Christ. This is the chill air through which He descended. I look through these Christmas skies, and I see no lone star hastening southward to halt above Bethlehem, but all the stars suggest the Star of Bethlehem. No more need that any of them run along the sky to point downward. In quietude they neal at the feet of Him who, though once an exile, now enthroned forever. Fresh from full of the scenes suggested by a visit to that city. You know that whole region of Bethlehem famous in Bible story. There were the waving vests of Boaz, in which Ruth gleaned for herself and weeping Naomi. There David the warrior was thirsty, and three men of unheard-of self-denial broke through the Philistine army to get him a drink. It was to that region that Joseph and Mary came to have their names enrolled in the census. That is what the Scripture means when it says they came "to be taxed," for people did not in those days rush after the assessors of tax any more as they now do.

A Visit to Bethlehem,

The village inn was crowded with the strangers had come up by the command of government to register their names in the census, so that Joseph and Mary were obliged to lodge in the stables. I have seen some of those large stone buildings, the centre of which the camels were kept, while running out from this centre in all directions there were rooms, in one of which Jesus was born. Had his parents been more showily appareled I have no doubt they would have found more comfortable entertainment. That night in the field with crook and kindled fires, were watching their flocks, when hark! to the sound of voices strangely sweet. Can it be that the maidens of Bethlehem have come out to serenade the weary shepherds? But now a light stoops upon them like the morning, so that the flocks arise, shaking their snowy fleece and blessing to their drowsy young. The heavens are filled with armies of light, and the earth quakes under the harmony as, echoed back from cloud to cloud, it rings over the midnight hills: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men!" It seems that the crown of royalty and dominion and power which Christ left behind Him was hung on the sky in sight of Bethlehem. Who knows but that that crown may have been mistaken by the wise men for the star running and pointing downward?

The Shepherds,

My subject, in the first place, impresses me with the fact that indigence is not always significant of degradation.

When Princes are Born, heralds announce it, and cannon thunder it and flags wave it and illuminations set cities on fire with the tidings. Some of us in England or America remember the time of rejoicing when the Prince of Wales was born. You can remember the gladness throughout Christendom at the nativity in the palace at Madrid. But when our glorious Prince was born there was no rejoicing on earth. Poor, and growing poorer, yet the heavenly recognition that Christmas night shows the truth of the proposition that indigence is not always significant of degradation.

In all ages there have been great hearts throbbing under rags, tender sympathies under rough exterior, gold in the quartz, Parian marble in the quarry, and in every stable of privation wonders of excellence that have been the joy of the heavenly host. All the great deliverers of literature, and of nations, were born in homes without affluence, and from their own privation learned to speak and fight for the oppressed. Many a man has held up his weak light from the wilderness until all nations and generations have seen it, and off his hard crust of penury has broken the bread of knowledge and religion for the starving millions of the race. Poetry and science and literature and commerce and laws and constitutions and liberty, like Christ, were born in a manger.

Manger Births.

All the great thoughts which have decided the destiny of nations started in obscure corners, and had Herods who wanted to slay them, and Iscarots who betrayed them, and rabble that crucified them, and sepulchres that confined them until they burst forth in glorious resurrection. Strong character, like the rhododendron, is an Alpine plant that grows fast in the storm. Men are like wheat, worth all the more for being flailed. Some of the most useful people would never have come to positions of usefulness had they not been ground and pounded and hammered in the foundry of disaster. When I see Moses coming up from the ark of bulrushes to be the greatest lawgiver of the ages, and Amos from tending the herds to make Israel tremble with his prophecies, and David from the sheepcote to sway the poet's pen and the king's sceptre, and Peter from the fishing-net to be the great preacher at the Pentecost, I find proof of the truth of my proposition that indigence is not always significant of degradation.

The Time or Vision.

My subject also impresses me with the thought that it is while at our useful occupations that we have the divine manifestations. Had those shepherds gone that night into Bethlehem, and risked their flocks among the wolves, they would not have heard the song of the angels. In other words, that man sees most of God and heaven who minds his own business. We all have our posts of duty, and, standing there, God appears to us. We are all shepherds or shepherdesses, and we have our flocks of cares and annoyances and anxieties, and we must tend them.

We sometimes hear very good people say: "If I had a month or a year or two to do nothing but attend to religious things, I would be a great deal better than I am now." You are mistaken. Generally the best people are the busy people. Elisha was plowing in the field when the prophetic mantle fell on him. Matthew was attending to his custom-house duties when Christ commanded him to follow. James and John were mending their nets when Christ called them to be fishers of men. Had they been snoring in the sun Christ would not have called their indolence into the apostleship. Gideon was at work with the flail on the threshing-floor when he saw the angel. Saul was with great fatigue hunting up the lost asses of Israel. The prodigal son would never have reformed and wanted to have returned to his father's house if he had not first gone into business, though it was swine feeding. Not once out of a hundred times will a lazy man become a Christian. Those who have nothing to do are in very unfavorable circumstances for the receiving of divine manifestations. It is not when you are in idleness, but when you are, like the Bethlehem shepherds, watching your flocks, that the glory descends and there is joy among the angels of God over your soul, penitent and forgiven.

When He Found the Crown

My subject also strikes at the delusion that the religion of Christ is dolorous and grief-infusing. The music that broke through the midnight heavens was not a dirge, but an anthem. It shook joy over the hills. It not only dropped upon the shepherds, but it sprang upward among the thrones. The robe of a Saviour's righteousness is not black. The Christian life is not made up of weeping and cross-bearing and war-wagging. Through the revelation of that Christmas night I find that religion is Not a Groan, but a Song.

In a world of sin and sick-bed and sepulchre, we must have trouble; but in the darkest night the heavens part with angelic song. You may, like Paul, be shipwrecked, but I exhort you to be of good cheer, for you shall all escape safe to the land. Religion does not show itself in the elongation of the face and the cut of the garb. The Pharisee who puts his religion into his phylactery has none left for his heart. Fretfulness and complaining do not belong to the family of Christian graces which move into the heart when the devil moves out. Christianity does not frown upon amusements and recreations. It is not a cynic, it is not a shrew, it chokes no laughter, it quenches no light, it defaces no art. Among the happy, it is the happiest. It is just as much at home on the play-ground as it is in the church. It is just as graceful in the charade as it is in the psalm-book. It sings just as well in Surrey Gardens as it prays in St. Paul's. Christ died that we might live. Christ walked that we might ride. Christ wept that we might laugh.

Again, my subject impresses me with the fact that glorious endings sometimes have very humble beginnings. The straw pallet was the starting-point, but the shout in the midnight sky revealed what would be the glorious consummation. Christ on Mary's lap, Christ on the throne of universal dominion—what an humble starting! What a glorious ending! Grace begins on a small scale in the heart. You see only men as trees walking. The grace of God in the heart is a feeble spark, and Christ has to keep both hands over it lest it be blown out. What

An Humble Beginning!

But look at that same man when he has entered heaven. No crown able to express his royalty. No palace able to express his wealth. No sceptre able to express his power and his dominion. Drinking from the fountain that drips from the everlasting Rock. Among the harpers harping with their harps. On a sea of glass mingled with fire. Before the throne of God, to go no more out forever. The spark of grace that Christ had to keep both hands over lest it come to extinction, having flamed up into honor and glory and immortality. What humble starting! What glorious consummation!

The New Testament Church was on a small scale. Fishermen watched it. Against the uprising walls crashed infernal enginery. The world said, Anathema. Ten thousand people rejoiced at every seeming defeat, and said: "Aha! aha! so we would have it." Martyrs on fire cried: "How long, O Lord, how long?" Very humble starting, but see the difference at when Christ with His almighty arm has struck off the last chain of human bondage, and Himalaya shall be Mount Zion; and Pyrenees, Moriah; and oceans, the walking place of Him who trod the wave-cliffs of stormed Tiberias, and island shall call to island, sea to sea, continent to continent, and the song of the world's redemption rising, the heavens, like a great sounding-board, shall strike back the shout of salvation to the earth until it rebounds again to the throne of God, and all heaven, rising on their thrones, beat time with their sceptres. Oh, what an humble beginning! What a glorious ending! Throne linked to a manger, heavenly mansions to a stable.

The Consummation,

My subject also impresses me with

The Effect of Christ's Mission

upward and downward. Glory to God, peace to man! When God sent His Son into the world, angels discovered something new in God, something they had never seen before. Not power, not wisdom, not love. They knew all that before. But when God sent His Son into this world then the angels saw the spirit of self-denial in God, the spirit of self-sacrifice in God. It is easier to love an angel on his throne than a thief on the cross, a seraph in his worship than an adulteress in her crime. When the angels saw God—the God who would not allow the most insignificant angel in heaven to be hurt—give up His Son, His only, only Son, they saw something that they had never thought of before, and I do not wonder that when Christ started out on that pilgrimage the angels in heaven clapped their wings in triumph, and called on all the hosts of heaven to help them celebrate it, and sang so loud that the Bethlehem shepherds heard it: "Glory to God in the highest."

But it was also to be a mission of peace to man. Infinite holiness—accumulated depravity. How could they ever come together? The gospel bridge over the distance. It brings God to us. It is a revelation to God. God in us, and we in God. Atonement! Justice satisfied, sins forgiven, eternal life secured, heaven built on a manger.

But it was also to be the pacification of all individual and international animosities. What a source this word of peace had in the Roman Empire, which boasted of the number of people it had massacred that prided itself on the number of the slain, that rejoiced at the trembling provinces. Sicily and Corsica, and Sardinia and Macedonia and Egypt had been brought to her sword, and crouched at the cry of her eagles. She gave her chief honor to Seneca, Fabius and Caesar—all men of blood. What a temptation they must have had there for the unarmed Christ in the garb of a Nazarene, starting out to conquer all nations. There never was a place on earth where that word peace sounded so offensively to the ears of the multitude as in the Roman Empire. They did not want peace. The greatest music they ever heard was the clanking chains of their captives. If all the blood that has been shed in battle could be gathered together it would upbear a navy. The club that struck Abel to the earth has its echo in the butcheries of all ages. Edmund Burke, who gave no wild statistics, said that there had been spent in slaughter thirty-five thousand millions of dollars, or what would be equal to that; but he had not seen into our times, when in our own day, in America, we expended three thousand millions of dollars in civil war.

Oh, if we could now take our position on some high point and see

The March of the World's Armies.

What a spectacle it would be! There go the hosts of Israel through a score of Red Seas—one of water, the rest of blood. There go Cyrus and his army, with infuriate yell, rejoicing over the fall of the gates of Babylon. There goes Alexander, leading forth his hosts and conquering all the world but himself, the earth reeling with the battle-gash of Arbela and Persepolis. There goes Ferdinand Cortes, leaving his butchered enemies on the tablelands once fragrant with vanilla and covered over with groves of flowering cacao. There goes the great Frenchman, leading his army down through Egypt like one of its plagues, and up through Russia like one of its own icy blasts. Yonder is the grave-trench under the shadow of Sebastopol. There are the ruins of Delhi and Allahabad, and yonder are the inhuman Sepoys and the brave regiments under Havelock avenging the insulted flag of Britain; while cut right through the heart of my native land is a trench in which there lie one million Northern and Southern dead.

Oh, the tears! Oh, the blood! Oh, the long marches! Oh, the hospital wounds! Oh, the martyrdom! Oh, the death! But which flashed on all these swords and shields and musketry is the light that fell on Bethlehem, and louder than the bray of the trumpets, and the neighing of the chargers and the crash of the walls, and the groaning of the dying armies, is the song that unrolls this moment from the sky, sweet as though all the bells of heaven rung a jubilee, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Oh, when will the day come—God hasten it!—when the swords shall be turned into plowshares, and the fortresses shall be remodeled into churches, and the men of blood battling for renown shall become good soldiers of Jesus Christ, and the cannon, now striking down whole columns of death shall thunder the victories of the truth?

Brighter than the Light

When we think of the whole world saved we are apt to think of the few people that now inhabit it. Only a very few, compared with the populations to come. And what a small part cultivated. Do you know it has been authentically estimated that three-fourths of Europe is yet all barrenness, and that nine hundred and ninety-one one-thousandth part of the entire globe is uncultivated? This is all to be cultivated, all inhabited, and all gospelized. Oh, what tears of repentance when nations begin to weep! Oh, what supplications

When Continents Begin to Pray!

Oh, what rejoicing when hemispheres begin to sing! Churches will worship on the places where this very hour smokes the blood of human sacrifice, and wandering through the snake-infested jungles of Africa, Christ's heel will bruise the serpent's head. Oh, when the trumpet of salvation shall be sounded everywhere, and the nations are redeemed, a light will fall upon every town brighter than that which fell upon Bethlehem, and more overwhelming than the song that fell on the pasture fields where the flocks fed; there will be a song louder than the voice of the storm-lifted oceans, "Glory to God in the highest," and from all nations and kindred and people and tongues will come the response, "And on earth peace, good will toward men!"

On this Christmas Eve I bring you tidings of great joy. Pardon for all sin, comfort for all trouble, and life for the dead. Shall we now take this Christ into our hearts? The time is passing. This is the closing of the year. How the time speeds by. Put your hand on your heart—one, two, three. Three times less it will beat. Life is passing like gazelles over the plain. Sorrows hover like petrels over the sea. Death swoops like a vulture from the mountains. Misery rolls up to our ears like waves. Heavenly songs fall to us like stars.

I wish you a merry Christmas, not with worldly dissipations, but merry with gospel gladness, merry with pardoned sin, merry with hope of reunion in the skies with all your loved ones who have preceded you. In that grandest sense a merry Christmas.

A Dying Girl's Vision.

And God grant that in our final moment we may have as bright a vision as did the dying girl when she said: "Mother"—pointing with her thin white hand through the window—"Mother, what is that beautiful land out yonder beyond the mountains, the high mountains?" "Oh," said the mother, "my darling, there are no mountains within sight of our home." "Oh, yes," she said, "don't you see them—that beautiful land beyond the mountains out there, just beyond the high mountains?"

The mother looked down into the face of her dying child, and said: "My dear, I think that must be heaven that you see." "Well, then," she said "father, you come, and with your strong arms carry me over those mountains into that beautiful land beyond the high mountains." "No," said the weeping father, "my darling, I can't go with you." "Well," she said, clapping her hands, "never mind, never mind; I see yonder a shining one coming. He is coming now, in his strong arms to carry me over the mountains to the beautiful land—over the mountains, over the high mountains!"

MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

(See illustration on page 12.)

ONE of the most remarkable evidences of the drift of public feeling in England is the establishment of Mansfield College, Oxford. It is distinctively a Congregational College, established with the avowed object of training young men to occupy the pulpits of the Congregational churches. That the ancient University of Oxford should number among its colleges an institution with that object would two or three generations ago have horrified the university dignitaries. Theological students at Oxford were required to subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England before receiving the imprimatur of the University. From time to time men have abjured them after leaving the University, and have united with other churches, or with no church, but Oxford has remained pre-eminently the training-school for clergymen of the Established Church. But now, after a long and arduous struggle, young men intending to preach in Congregational pulpits can receive their college training in the historic university.

The institution now located at Oxford was originally known as Spring Hill College. Its home some forty years ago was in the manufacturing town of Birmingham. Professor Rogers, the author of The Eclipse of Faith, was its shining light, and John Angell James, the author of The Anxious Inquirer, was one of its warm friends and zealous overseers. About thirty-five years ago the institution was located in a more salubrious neighborhood about ten miles away from the big smoky town, and it has grown and flourished there with new life. But there was urgent need for a college at Oxford in which the tests of the Church of England were not enforced, where young men belonging to families of other communions could find a congenial home while studying for the legal and other professions, and where students for the Congregational ministry could receive theological training.

As soon as it became possible to establish such an institution under the wing of the University of Oxford, Spring Hill College availed itself of the opportunity. A suitable plot of land was purchased from Merton College, wealthy Congregationalist individuals and churches subscribed to erect buildings, and legal sanction was obtained for the transfer of endowments from the old institution to the new one. Four years have been occupied by these arrangements and in the erection and furnishing of the college. All is now complete, and recently the institution was opened with much jubilation by appropriate ceremonies.

The building is sixteenth-century Gothic. Its various departments are so grouped as to form three sides of a quadrangle. The block in the centre contains the tower, a lecture-room and dining-hall; the west wing contains a residence for the Principal, the library and another lecture-room; and the east wing is devoted to the chapel. The character of the college is indicated in its adornments. The statue of John Milton is conspicuous, and with it the statue of John Bunyan. In the chapel there are other statues in honor of men to whom Oxford has not been accustomed to render honor. Wycliffe, Whitefield, Wesley, Knox, Luther, Baxter, Watts, Owen, and others, whose names are an abomination to High Church and Broad Church, are here represented. It may be hoped that this will be no empty honor, but that the piety, zeal, and courage which distinguished those men will distinguish the young men who will go forth from that college to preach the everlasting Gospel to the world.

DR. FAIRBAIRN.

Principal of Mansfield College.

THE little vignette accompanying the picture of Mansfield College on page 12 is a portrait of its principal, Dr. Fairbairn. He is a man of profound learning, conspicuous ability, and excellent tact—all qualities much needed in the difficult and delicate position he has been called to occupy. He is a Scotchman, and is fifty-two years old. He received his university education at the University of Edinburgh, subsequently taking a theological course at Glasgow. Afterward, he went to Berlin, where he studied under the famous professors Trendelenberg, Dörner, and Hengstenberg. In spite of all his learning and attainments he settled quietly down, on his return to his native country, to an obscure little church in West Lothian. It was, however, only for a time. A large congregation in Aberdeen sent him an invitation to become its pastor. He accepted, and remained with them until 1877. In that year he was made principal of Airedale College, and his peculiar adaptation for the work of training young men was soon proved.

The establishment of Mansfield College, Oxford, was a matter of national concern to the Congregational denomination. The new college would, by its propinquity to the ancient and wealthy institutions of Oxford, invite comparison with them. Its success or failure would thus be conspicuous to the whole nation, and would affect Congregational interests to an important degree. Like "a city set on a hill," the college would be watched narrowly by friends and foes, and the standing of its students in the University class lists would be jealously scrutinized. The selection of a President was therefore a momentous matter, and when the choice fell on Dr. Fairbairn it was unanimously approved.

Dr. Fairbairn was chairman of the Congregational Union in 1883. Among his published works may be mentioned The City of God, Studies on the Philosophy of Religion, Studies on the Life of Christ, and Lectures to Working Men on Religion in History and the Life of To-day. He has also, since 1877 been a contributor to the Contemporary Review.

An Answer to a Prayer for Rain is Described in a letter home by Miss Whitechurch, a missionary at Hiao-i, in China. She states that the need for rain was very urgent, and at the regular Sunday meeting, when special requests for prayer were invited, there was a general desire expressed that prayer should be offered for rain. She continues: "We knelt in prayer, many offered audible petitions for this much-needed blessing, and while we were yet pleading the answer came. Drops were falling as we began the second preaching service, and the clouds gathered so quickly that we had to stop the meeting in order to send all the women and children home, and all reached their homes without getting wet, except the villagers, who got a soaking, but they were so grateful for the rain that they did not mind that. The rain poured down hour after hour in torrents.

A Man Saved on the Eve of a Journey to South Africa is an incident of the work of Dr. George F. Pentecost in Scotland. A fine-looking man, evidently a man of business, was at one of the Dundee meetings. He was seen to be greatly agitated, and with bowed head sat weeping in the body of the hall. During the evangelist's appeal a Christian gentleman went and spoke to him. Presently he arose and came forward to the front seat, weeping and shaking with emotion, fell on his knees, and was heard to cry out, "God be merciful to me a sinner." He afterward made a confession of faith in Christ. He said in the hearing of some of those around him: "I am a stranger in Dundee. I came into the city on Saturday to attend to some business, and I am sailing for South Africa to-morrow. I had not the least thought of doing anything of this kind, but resolved to come and hear Dr. Pentecost. I am a great sinner, but I have accepted Christ, and shall go to Africa a new man. Will you all pray for me? for my business will carry me among the most godless and reckless men in the colony."

SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE AT ADELAIDE, AUSTRALIA.

A GATHERING of those who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who are looking for His second and glorious appearing, has been held in Bentham Street Chapel, Adelaide. The proceedings of the day commenced with a prayer-meeting, presided over by Pastor T. Lees, in which several brethren took part: and the fervent prayers and hearty singing showed that those who had gathered together in the name of the Lord Jesus had come sincerely seeking a blessing.

At the conference the venerable Pastor Abbott presided, and gave an address on "The Lordship of Jesus Christ," in the course of which he contrasted the lowliness of Jesus at His first advent, when He was despised and rejected of men, with the high and honorable place He now occupies, and the still more important position He will assume at His second and Glorious Appearing.

Several passages of Scripture were quoted speaking of the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and, when these were fulfilled in their entirety, it would be seen that the honor in store for Him would more than compensate Him for all He had to bear when He undertook the great work of Redemption. The speaker urged upon all present to accord to the Lord Jesus all the glory and honor that was due to Him now, and pointed out the universal homage that would be given to Him by saints and angels in the age to come.

Pastor R. K. Finlayson gave an address on "The National, Social, and Religious Conditions of Life, between the Rapture of the Saints and the Revelation of Christ to the World." This was a large subject, and the brother to whom it was assigned evidently realized this fact, as it embraced Israel, the ten confederate kingdoms, Babylonianism, and the Gentile nations. The return of the Jews to Palestine with their silver and their gold, the rebuilding of the Temple at Jerusalem, and gathering of the armies of Antichrist against that city, the final destruction of Babylon, and the preaching of the "everlasting Gospel" to the nations, were respectively touched upon in the course of his address. As to the social condition of life the speaker considered that there would be a repetition of the state of things existing in the days of Noah immediately before the Deluge, which was predicted by the Lord Jesus while on earth. In the midst of the luxury, revelry, and licentiousness that will prevail just before the coming of the Lord to the earth, there will be a state of false security, and hence all classes of society will be plunged by that event into sudden confusion and dismay. With respect to religion, the speaker appeared to be of opinion that formal and sensuous worship would be in a flourishing condition after the rapture of the saints, and that Popery in particular will succeed better than it does now, until such time as it meets with a deathblow from the Antichrist, who will "hate her and burn her with fire."

After the Removal of the Church

Mr. W. Neill presided at the evening meeting, and made a few appropriate remarks, pointing out the necessity that existed for holding conferences of this kind. He stated that as the truth concerning the pre-millennial Advent of Christ was much neglected by many, and rejected by others, it behooved those who saw it to be a part of revealed truth, to bear their testimony to the fact.

Pastor H. Hussey, the editor of The Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, gave a report of the proceedings of the conference since the last annual meeting, from which it appeared that two conferences had been held, one at Mitcham, and one at the Semaphore, both of which were well attended. It was stated that the committee had held monthly conferences for some time past, and at a recent meeting a resolution was passed affirming the desirability of employing an agent to visit the churches, and extend the knowledge of the Lord's coming, wherever and whenever an opportunity occurred to do so.

Pastor A. E. Green gave an address on "Israel, Its Present Condition, and Testimony," setting out with the fact of their unconditional election as God's witnesses, the superlative favor God had granted them, their exalted national position among the nations, and, notwithstanding all this, their unfaithfulness, idolatry, rejection of the Christ, and of the Holy Spirit. The present position of Israel was said to be their rejection by God for the rejection of His Son, and they are now "without a king, and without a prince," without their temple worship, without the shekinah (the symbol of God's presence), and without their appointed sacrifices and feasts. The kingdom has been taken from them and given to another nation, and they are now scattered among the nations, numbering only about 8,000,000 out of the 1,510,000,000 of the earth's inhabitants.

The speaker considered that the present condition of Israel is a testimony to God's judgment of idolatry, and is a sad instance of man's moral depravity. Their condition is also a striking testimony to the truth of God's Word, and what has already been fulfilled is a proof that all that is written will yet be accomplished. The speaker in making a practical application of his subject, pointed out the effect the condition of Israel should have upon the Church, for if God spared not the natural branches, the branch that has been grafted on the ancient stock will, if unfaithful, also be cut off. The Church might at present be considered in the midnight period of her separation, but the dawn will arise, and "He that shall come will come and will not tarry." The Bridegroom will surely come, and His chariot wheels may now be heard on the distant hills. The long-suffering of God is for salvation, but wrath is being treasured up for those who have been often reprov'd and have not profited by the invitation of the gospel. God will as faithfully keep His word as regards His warnings as He will concerning His exceeding great and precious promises.

Pastor R. Woolcock was next called to deal with

"Second Advent Testimony:

Objections considered," and, in opening up the subject he mentioned the objections he entertained at one time to this doctrine, but which he was happy to say did not now exist. The leading objection he considered was the erroneous idea that the world would be converted by the preaching of the gospel before the coming of the Lord—an idea for which there was no warrant in the Scriptures of truth. It is quite true that the gospel of the kingdom is to be preached to all nations for a witness unto them, but there is no intimation that this witness will be accepted by all nations. The speaker pointed out that other objections to the pre-millennial advent of Christ are as groundless as the one adverted to, and as those that once existed in his own mind had been removed, he felt that it only required a mind to be open to conviction, and all objections would disappear with the entrance of light from the living oracles. The last, but by no means least objection to the reception of second advent truth, was stated by the speaker to be an unwillingness to accept this doctrine on account of what its acceptance involved. It would run counter to many plans that had been devised, and many existing practices would have to be discontinued in view of the advent of the Lord Jesus at any moment.

The last subject for the evening was

"Christendom—Its Present and Future,"

and in dealing with this topic Pastor T. A. Fieldwick showed how unfaithful the Church had proved to the trust committed to her. If weighed in the balances of God's truth, she would be found sadly wanting; and the errors that are now taught, though fulfilling the prophecies concerning her, are at the same time an evidence that we are living in the "last days" of this dispensation. The present condition of Christendom when contrasted with the unostentatious simplicity of the early Christians is painful to contemplate. The plans and methods adopted to raise money, the coquetting with the world, and the assumptions of certain religious organizations were touched upon by the speaker in a faithful manner. The ominous word "Ichabod" might now be written concerning much that bears the name of "Christian" or "Christianity," and still further departures from primitive purity and simplicity may be expected in the not distant future. The future of Christendom, according to the Scriptures, leads to the conclusion that it will culminate in a huge system of apostasy, characterized by formality, sensuality, and infidelity. The speaker concluded with a solemn warning to Christians to be on their watch-tower with reference to present and coming evils, also as regards the sudden and unexpected coming of Christ.

Appropriate selections from Mr. Ira D. Sankey's Songs and Solos were sung throughout the services of the day, and it is pleasing to find that in this popular collection there are so many pieces of an inspiring character setting forth the doctrine of the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. The attendance at each of the services, and the close attention given to the subjects introduced, could not be otherwise than gratifying to all concerned.

A REPENTANT KING.

THE barbarous King Mwanga, of Uganda in Africa, who murdered Bishop Hannington, and kept Mr. Mackay in daily expectation of death, has lost in his exile his haughty spirit, and appears ready to make any promises if the missionaries whom he persecuted will help him to drive out Kalem, the usurper whom the Arabs have set on his throne, and reinstate him in Uganda. Mr. Mackay sends the following translation of a letter he has received from the exiled king:

"BULINGUYE, June 25, 1889.

"TO MR. MACKAY,

"I send very many compliments to you and to Mr. Gordon.

"After compliments, I, Mwanga, beg of you to help me. Do not remember bygone matters. We are now in a miserable plight, but if you, my fathers, are willing to come and help to restore me to my kingdom, you will be at liberty to do whatever you like.

"Formerly I did not know God, but now I know the religion of Jesus Christ. Consider how Kalem has killed all my brothers and sisters; he has killed my children, too, and now there remain only we two princes [Kalem and himself]. Mr. Mackay, do help me; I have no strength, but if you are with me I shall be strong. Sir, do not imagine that if you restore Mwanga to Buganda, he will become bad again. If you find me become bad, then you may drive me from the throne; but I have given up my former ways, and I only wish now to follow your advice.—I am your friend,

(Signed) "MWANGA."

Mr. Mackay, on hearing that Mwanga meditated an attempt to recover his kingdom and had obtained the help of Mr. Stokes, an English missionary, who is now a trader, says: "We sent to warn Mwanga of the risk he was about to run, while we sent a message to our friends in Busagala, advising them not to join in an enterprise which would have all the appearance of a religious war, and which might prove disastrous to themselves. We counselled patience, as we felt sure the Baganda would soon tire of Arab rule, while Kalem himself would not long submit to be dictated to by the Arabs.

"The Baganda refugees, however, who were at Bukumbi, rejected counsel of patience, and counselled immediate action. Accordingly, Stokes and Mwanga embarked at Ukumbi with about fifty Baganda, arms and ammunition being supplied partly by Stokes and partly by the priests."

After describing two battles in which Mwanga and his friends were victorious, Mackay says: "Kalem had been so enraged at his general's defeat that he deposed that functionary from office, and fearing that the Christians would follow up their victory, doubtful though it was, and succeed in securing the person of one of the princes, all of whom were prisoners at the capital, he had every one of both princes and princesses (his own brothers and sisters) as well as his own children, burnt to death in the huts where they were confined. Had he known of Mwanga's arrival, probably he would not have committed such an atrocity, but Mwanga had not yet arrived at Dumo when the general returned crestfallen to the capital. Soon after, however, Mwanga's arrival was reported, and a fresh army was despatched by Kalem to meet him. Mwanga had several thousand adherents, mostly armed with spear and shield, as well as about 1,100 guns, while Kalem's force was vastly superior, not only in numbers, but in guns, also, especially breech-loaders, several Arabs being among the leaders. A battle was fought; Mwanga's troops were defeated, and his chief general, Mwemba, killed. The Arabs set fire to Mwanga's camp; most of the Christians fled back to Busagala, while Mwanga himself took refuge on board Stokes's boat."

A POSITION GAINED.

A GENTLEMAN who was at the John Street prayer-meeting in New York recently, said he would like to relate his own experience for the encouragement of praying men. In the year 1886 he was the superintendent of a large factory. He led a fast life, and his income failed to meet his expenses. His position was full of temptation, and it was not long before he was aware that his accounts would not bear a close inspection. But he was trusted, and there was no immediate danger. But he was naturally uneasy, and seriously considered his condition. It led to self-examination and prayer.

Finally he was converted, and his first business was to cut down his expenses to the very lowest and get his accounts right. Shortly afterward circumstances arose in the factory that rendered it impossible for a conscientious man to retain his position. He must either violate his conscience or resign. He chose the latter. It was a bad time to be out of employment. Winter was approaching, trade was dull, and he had but six dollars in the world. Besides this, a loving mother and sister were wholly dependent on him for support. Before the end of the week every cent was gone, and the man knew not what to do. Every application for employment failed. He went to the John Street prayer-meeting on March 12, clinging fast to his faith in God, but otherwise in despair. There he committed his case to God, and somehow the burden seemed to be lifted. No change, however, came in his circumstances for some days. But then he received the offer of an excellent position, just suitable to his capacity and with adequate remuneration. "A friend of yours," said the manufacturer who offered him the position, "was in our place on March 12, and told us of you; we have been making inquiries about you since then, and we are satisfied you are just the man we want."

THE SONG OF MARY.

By Mrs. M. G. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for January 12. Luke 1:46-55, Golden Text, Luke 1:46, 47.

Another Angelic Mission—The Jewish Maiden in the Household—Her Trusting Heart—The Significant Salutation—A Trial of Faith—The Indwelling Spirit—A Receptive Heart Required—Mary's Position Misunderstood—The Truth Revealed to Elizabeth—The Unconscious Homage of the Forerunner—Mary's Place—A Sinner, Not a Queen—The Refrain of the Song—Three Months' Blessed Companionship—The Impending Scandal—Averted by a Revelation.

THE same heavenly messenger who had visited Zacharias the priest, and who once before had been God's ambassador to Daniel (Dan. 8:16), was charged with a commission also to one other child of earth. This time, neither priest nor prophet was sought out by the angel, but a lowly woman, of the kindred and probably of the spirit of Zacharias and Elizabeth. It was but six months after his last mission to earth that "Gabriel was sent from God, unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin," probably quite a young woman. Mary was no recluse, there was nothing extraordinary about her outward life; she was, at that very time, espoused, or betrothed, "to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David," living as others around her lived, with the ordinary surroundings of a Jewish peasant's home, yet in that simple, lowly woman, God saw simple enough and true enough to follow Him at any cost; understood or not understood by those around her. Nothing is told us in the Word of God of any gift, or talent which Mary possessed, nor yet of anything remarkable in her life which might cause her to be the chosen one who should be the mother of the Lord Jesus. It was like all the dealings of God with man, of pure grace. The angel said to her, "Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women." There was nothing in such a salutation to exalt Mary in her own eyes, but everything to fill her with adoration. When God called Moses to his leadership, and Joshua after him, and when He sent to the timid Gideon, He made known to each of them the vocation to which He called them, and then declared, "I am with thee," or "the Lord is with thee." But to the lowly maiden of Nazareth the declaration came first, "the Lord is with thee."

A Heart Which Could Trust Him,

Mary "was troubled at his saying," she saw nothing in her person or in her life which should single her out as one specially favored of God. It was this very unconsciousness of self which made it possible for "the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity" (Isa. 57:15) to choose her as His instrument to bring Christ into the world. At first, she "cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be." But Mary's mind could not interpret the thoughts of God; she needed a word from on high, and the angel gave it her in the most explicit terms, prefacing his declaration that she should be the mother of the Messiah with the words, "Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God." This revelation was indeed above and beyond all the conceptions of Mary's mind. True, every woman in Israel dreaded to be childless, lest she should be cut off from the bare possibility of being the mother of God's Holy One. But Mary, an unmarried woman, could never dream that of all other women she should be the chosen one; it was a demand upon her faith which few could understand.

God "knoweth them that trust in Him" (Nahum 1:7), and He had foreseen in Mary one on whom He could count who would not fail Him. O, how which will understand and appreciate Him! How touching is the word of Jesus, "The Father seeketh such to worship Him." (John 4:23.) It was a tremendous announcement, "Thou shalt . . . bring forth a Son, and shalt call His name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David, and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end." It was to be the fulfilment of the expectation of the Jew. But far more, He was to be "the Son of God" as well as the Son of David, with a kingdom not hereditary, passing from father to son, but eternal.

God Longs for True Hearts,

Very naturally, the Jewish maiden asked, "How shall this be?" Her experiences were all against the possibility of such a thing, and perhaps the prophecy of Isaiah 7:14, did not once occur to her as touching her case. But when it was revealed to her that God would bring it about by the Holy Ghost, Mary doubted no more, so that her cousin Elizabeth could say soon after, "Blessed is she that believed." And just as truly as by the power of the Holy Ghost Jesus Christ was born of Mary, so also by His power only can Christ dwell in our hearts by faith. (Eph. 3:16, 17.) There are so many in whose experience everything is either a vague hope for the future or a vague regret for the past; but the Holy Ghost makes Jesus a reality to us and in us, just now, in every present moment. The true Christ-life is no fruit of effort or struggle on the part of man; it is the Holy Ghost taking possession of a yielded soul and body for God, and filling them with His life and presence. He makes the precious blood shed for us a reality to cleanse us; He makes Christ dwelling in us a reality to keep us from sinning, and to take the place of our own self-centred life.

The angel revealed also to Mary what God had done for her cousin Elizabeth, and said to her the great truth, "For

With God Nothing Shall be Impossible."

But Mary must be willing; God does not treat us as machines; He initiates His wondrous plans of divine grace, but man must enter into them and be receptive to his God. If Mary yielded herself up to God, she must be in a position where she would be misunderstood of man, and even of the man who was more to her than all others upon earth, her affianced husband, Joseph. It was indeed, with Mary, to suffer the loss of all things, that she might win Christ. (Phil. 3:8.) But God was real to Mary, and she reckoned as Paul did, that "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." (Rom. 8:18.) The position might be difficult for her, she might be unable to justify herself; but she would sacrifice herself to give to the world its Saviour. Her answer was the most complete self-abnegation, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word." Thus it is always; wherever the Spirit of God can find a human will entirely yielded up to the word of God, there He can manifest Christ. "Having delivered his message the angel departed." But the Lord abode with her.

The angel's communication regarding Elizabeth was not lost upon Mary; it was a lovely provision of our most gracious God that at least one soul on earth should be able to understand Mary. She "arose in those days, and went . . . with haste" to visit Elizabeth. No sooner did she salute her cousin than "Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost," and in the light of the Spirit of God, she saw the things of God. The same Spirit who had revealed to Mary God's dealings with Elizabeth, revealed also to Elizabeth His dealings with Mary; and the old matronly woman spake out with a loud voice in the very words of the angel, "Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb. And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come unto me," and she declared how the forerunner of the Lord, even before his birth, recognized the presence of his Saviour.

"Blessed is She that Believed."

O the encouragement that this must have been to Mary—"for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord." Mary's time of testing was not yet come, but God was strengthening her for it. Elizabeth's recognition of her as the mother of the Messiah must have been an untold help at such a time. Whenever there is a Mary called out to some unusual state of faith, God always provides some Elizabeth to stand by her. He needs not that any should testify of man for He knows what is in man (John 2:25), and He provides accordingly.

Mary's full heart broke forth in praise, she said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." The woman who is chosen to an honor above all other women who ever lived, speaks of her Saviour, knows she needs saving like any other sinner. Far from assuming the place which the Romish Church has given her as immaculate, and queen of heaven, Mary takes her place with other sinners, and rejoices in God her Saviour. Unlike Peter, who was puffed up when Jesus commended him for his confession that He was the Christ (Matt. 16:16-22), Mary remained humble, "For He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden." There is no assumption of superiority, all which she sees distinguishing her from other women is the incomprehensible grace of God. "For from henceforth, all generations shall call me blessed; for He that is mighty hath done to me great things; and

Holy is His Name."

Mary does not boast of her great faith, although it was incomparably greater than that of any believer who came after her; she does not boast in her own consecration, although she was indeed "a living sacrifice;" she has no eye for herself, her vision has been filled with the glory of Another, and God fills her horizon. She does not in any sense assume a position beyond others, "His mercy is on them that fear Him,"—others as well as me, "from generation to generation." And then, letting the grand truth sink into her heart that "with God nothing shall be impossible," she sings; "He hath shewed strength with His arm, He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts." No one had imagined that the long-looked for Saviour was to come in this way; men were looking for some princely personage, great in this world. "He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and hath exalted those of low degree: He hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich He hath sent empty away." In all this song, the littleness and nothingness of man and the glory and might of God are the refrain. This humble heart of Mary was so empty of itself that she lived in a clear atmosphere, and could see God. "The pure in heart . . . shall see God." (Matt. 5:8.) Mary, full as she is of her God, does not forget her people, "He hath holpen His servant Israel, in remembrance of His mercy; as He spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed forever." "He hath," to Mary the promise of God was as though fulfilled, she saw by faith the word which God had spoken, as though it were already come to pass.

About three months, three blessed months, Mary remained with Elizabeth, and then "returned to her own house," and her trials began. How much she had to suffer from friends before the crucial moment when Joseph seriously thought of putting her away, and breaking his engagement with her, we know not; but this must have been a time of exquisite suffering to Mary; and she must have learned in these days of misapprehension and silent sacrifice, that fellowship with Christ's sufferings which Paul so longed for later on. (Phil. 3:10.)

How was deliverance to come? She knew not. Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. (Matt. 1:19.) But he would do nothing in haste; he gave God time to guide him. And He who had sent Mary a message from heaven, now sent Joseph one also, "the angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost, and she shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins." In any grievous trial or perplexity, deliverance does not come from beneath, but from above. Mary stood this severe test, and her yielded spirit continued yielded through it. O with what joy must Joseph have taken his place as the earthly shield and guardian of this favored woman, and how her heart must have rested in the wondrous faithfulness of her God, who had thus provided for her in the time of emergency! And will He fail us? Will He be untrue to any that put their trust in Him?

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

TERMS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

An Apology is Due to Some Correspondents whose letters have recently come to hand. An offer to send the December numbers free to all applicants was made on November 27. The applications so largely exceeded our most sanguine expectations, that each edition was quickly exhausted, though provision was made for fully meeting the anticipated demand. During the past week many persons who delayed their application have written for the back numbers, but we are unable to supply them. To them we send this number with an apology, as the best amends it is in our power to make. We must also express our regret that we are unable to comply with the request of a few persons who ask to have the paper continued and promise to send their subscriptions later on. Several years ago a painful experience forced us to adopt the invariable rule that subscriptions must accompany orders, and we are obliged, though with extreme regret, to adhere to that rule, even in cases in which we are sure the promise to send the money would be kept. Agents also who are sending in names and promising to remit when their list is complete, will please take note of this rule. They should send with each list of names a cheque or Post Office-order for the corresponding number of subscriptions, otherwise, as we keep no "due book," disappointment will ensue.

CURRENT EVENTS.

As the Majority of the Readers of the Christian Herald will receive this number on January 1, 1890, a word of greeting is in order. To each and every reader we cordially and sincerely wish a happy new year, in the highest and best sense of the words. We have also to thank large numbers of them for the kindly words of appreciation and goodwill which every mail brings to us. It is our sincere hope and earnest prayer that during this year the blessing of God, which alone has made the paper useful in the past, and alone can make it helpful in the future, may continue to attend it. The large circulation it has now attained increases the responsibility of all concerned in its production, and, realizing this fact, the Editor, who during the past eleven years has had the benefit of the prayers of Christian readers in all parts of the country, earnestly begs the continuance of them. In the new type here used, and in the increased size of the pages, it is hoped that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be still more welcome than ever as a household visitor, and will grow in the esteem of its old friends, and win the regard of many new ones.

The Expedition Sent to Observe the Eclipse of the sun on December 22, reports partial success. It was sent at the expense of our Government to St. Paul de Loanda on the west coast of Africa, that being the place where, in the opinion of Professor David P. Todd, who conducted the expedition, the eclipse could best be observed. The first part of the eclipse was clearly seen, but at the moment of totality and afterward, the sun was obscured by clouds. The primary object of the expedition—that of making scientific observation of the corona at the moment of totality, was consequently defeated, but Professor Todd secured seventy photographs of the stages preceding totality. The mysterious corona is a greenish ring around the sun shining with dazzling brightness, through which shoot fiery red hydrogen "prominences," majestic tongues of flame, blazing with still greater brilliance, while massive streaks, sheets, and vast pyramidal jets of pearly light shoot out from all sides—some projecting ten million miles into space. The observations of the expedition have given no light on the question of the nature of this corona, which is as much a mystery as ever. Professor Todd, however, has made observations which he believes will be useful in determining other questions of interest.

The Number of Messages Sent to Congress by the President since its assembling has been 1,429, containing the nominations of about 1,600 persons. When the Senate adjourned on December 21 there had been made public the confirmation of about 1,000 of these nominations, the great majority of them postmasters. The chief arrears are in the Judiciary Committee, which has confirmed but a small proportion of the United States Court appointments all over the country. Six diplomatic appointments also, of which three are Ministers and three consuls, have not been acted upon. The others are appointments in the Customs, and the nominations of the two new Civil Service Commissioners.

An Amendment to the Civil Service Law is advocated by Senator Ingalls, of Kansas. He proposes that the children of veteran soldiers be exempted from the Civil Service examinations. The reasons given for the change are that when the war broke out the children were in many cases removed from school to work for the support of the family while the father went to the field, and after the war they were too old to return. The result is that their education is defective and they are not able to pass the higher examinations. The Senator cannot apparently get rid of the idea, which politicians of his calibre have so long held, that Government employment is of the nature of a pension and not service rendered for fitting wages. The whole country is concerned in having the federal business efficiently conducted, which cannot be done if inefficient clerks are appointed. It would be more economical and less embarrassing to give a pension directly to those whose education suffered by the war than to give it in the disguise of a Government clerkship. Ingalls probably could not understand this, but there are men of his party in Congress who can, and they should vote against his proposal.

Improvements in the Postal Service will probably be made during the present session of Congress. Congressman Bingham, who is chairman of the Post-Office Committee, expresses the opinion that the bills now under consideration will have the approval of both political parties, and will pass practically without opposition. Among these are a proposition to reduce the postage on fourth class matter, to provide for a limited postal telegraph service, and to extend the free delivery system to cities of the very lowest class. These developments are recommended by the Postmaster-General.

The Appearance of Russian Influenza is Reported from several of our cities. In Boston, Mass., a large number of persons are suffering from it, and a theatre company performing there was obliged to close on December 27, and return the money, owing to the seizure of performers by the disease. In Baltimore, Md., thirty Post Office clerks and letter-carriers are sufferers. At Atchison, Kans., several persons have caught the infection, Senator Ingalls among others. In Brooklyn, N. Y., the police and city officials are the chief victims. Chicago, Omaha, Wilkesbarre, and Rochester also report cases. Only one death was reported last week, and that of a man at Canton, Mass., who imprudently ventured out before he was fully recovered of the influenza, contracted pneumonia, and died. An eminent English physician, who has studied the disease in Paris, says that it is probably caused by a microbe in the atmosphere. He says that the disease is infectious, but not contagious. It can not be conveyed by means of the breath of an infected person to any one else. The remedy he recommends is small and frequent doses of quinine.

The Death of Henry W. Grady, of Atlanta, Ga., is a loss to the whole country. It occurred on December 23 after a week of severe suffering from typhoid pneumonia. He had been to Boston to deliver an address to the Merchants' Association on December 12. While there he imprudently exposed himself in the severe New England air and caught a heavy cold. He consulted a physician in passing through New York, and by his advice proceeded south without delay. The citizens of Atlanta had arranged to give him a public reception, but on his arrival he was too ill to accept it. He grew rapidly worse after reaching his home, and died on Monday. Mr. Grady did more than any other man to vindicate the New South in Northern judgment. Not only in his journal, the Constitution, but by his brilliant orations he corrected Northern mistakes, and disarmed Northern prejudices. The country owes to his efforts much of the more cordial feeling which has grown up between the sections since reconstruction days. Mr. Grady was thirty-eight years old. He was an active member of the First Methodist Church of Atlanta.

The Report that German Settlers in Brazil have invoked the interference of the Fatherland in opposition to the Republic, is categorically denied in a cable dispatch received last week. It states that they are content to await events, and are hopeful that a federated Republic will increase the general prosperity. They desire to see fully developed self-government or State sovereignty in the province, and believe that a republican constitutional convention will grant this and will accord to them an enlarged control of the provincial finances. All this accorded, they count upon the growth in the New World of a great German free State. The official world in Berlin is disappointed by this adhesion of the colonists to the Republic.

The Difficulty Between England and Portugal on the African question remains unsettled. Four of England's largest ironclads have been ordered to Lisbon, causing renewed apprehension of war. On the other hand, the attitude of Portugal has become more conciliatory. Senhor Gomez, the Portuguese Minister, recently said: "If England is willing to meet us upon the question of a delineation of the frontier in Africa, we are ready to adopt for all southeast Africa the most liberal commercial policy. Our help to the English would be given to extend their commerce to the interior, and to facilitate their trade with our long coast line, which would be an advantage that it would be difficult to overestimate. I attach to the friendship of England too great a value to neglect any effort to retain it, and a rupture with her would be a great misfortune to the Portuguese nation."

The Mysterious Epidemic of Influenza which is now afflicting Europe, and which has been styled La Grippe, has extended its ravages, and become more fatal during the past week. A report was circulated in Paris that 580 persons had died from it in that city in twenty-four hours. Though that number is probably an exaggeration, it is certain that the proportion of deaths is rapidly increasing. Reports from Berlin are to the effect that there is no abatement of the evil there. In Brunswick it has assumed a malignant type, and there have been many deaths. At Frankfort it is increasing. The tramways there have ceased operations because the employees are all ill. Mannheim has been very severely visited. At Munich the cases increase, and the transaction of business is much interfered with. The theatres announce that the programmes of the play are not to be depended upon, as the illness of actors may make it necessary to change the names at any moment or even to change the piece. In Vienna the schools are closed, children and teachers alike suffering. There is also a similar epidemic among the horses.

Mr. H. M. Stanley has Replied to the Critics of his expedition in a letter which was published last week. It satisfactorily disposes of several grave charges against him. He dwells at much length upon the case of Bartelot, and removes the impression produced by previous letters reflecting upon the Major's conduct. He says that to extricate himself from his dilemma Bartelot only needed qualities that will not be gained save by long experience in Africa, and eulogizes his courage and high qualities. He knew the Major was a man of little forbearance, and had intended to keep him with himself, but necessity compelled the change that caused him to leave him behind. Bartelot was ignorant of the language of the people, and his interpreter may have been false and occasioned the coolness between the men and the Major, which was never overcome and led to his death. Stanley denies with much emphasis the alleged Congo atrocities of the Manyema, the cannibalism and the stories of cruel executions of his men. During the whole expedition he executed only four men.

An Earnest Testimony to the Value of the work of the Rev. W. F. Re Qua among the Indians is sent to us by Rev. Charles Erdman, of Pueblo, Col. He says that the hardship and privation involved in the labor of this devoted missionary are well known to himself, as he has personally gone over the ground, and he believes that no one but those who have had that experience can have the faintest conception of the difficulties and trials inseparable from it. Mr. Erdman has also much to say of the need of just the work that Mr. Re Qua is doing. The evil results of the renegade white man's greed and lust are widespread, and the Indian has reason to complain that in a land of Bibles and Christians he is still in spiritual darkness. Mr. Re Qua has spent three of the best years of his life in going from village to village holding meetings, conversing with the Indians in their houses and tents, reading the Bible, and praying with them. He has been heartily welcomed everywhere, and urged to build schools and chapels, and settle missionaries in their midst. The open doors, while encouraging him on the one hand, depress him on the other. But for the help he has received from readers of this journal he could not have continued for these three years. He longs to remain at his post and extend his work, but funds must be sent him speedily or he must abandon it to avoid starvation. The need is urgent and imperative. His address is Rev. W. F. Re Qua, McAlester, Ind. Ter.

A Practical Answer to Persons who Doubt the value of rescue work among fallen women comes to us in the shape of a report from a society engaged in this work in London. It states that the number of girls rescued since the society began work is nearly 8,000. In the year 1883 there were 494 received, in 1887 the number was 542, but last year the total rose to 600. The interest of Christian people in these cases will be heightened when they learn that about 50 per cent. of the whole are not fallen, but purely rescue cases. Thus 292 out of the 600 received in 1888 were so; and by being placed in Preventive Homes, it is hoped that they will all take honorable stations in the world. Entire confidence is never felt in the ability of the girls to stand well in the world until they are converted; but when that change has taken place no fear is ever felt that they will ever fall again. The conversion to God of each is directly aimed at from the first day of her admission.

A Babe Saved a Woman From Expulsion from the United States recently. Among the passengers on an emigrant ship which arrived in New York from Ireland about a month ago was an Irish woman who was so manifestly of the pauper-class that the Commissioners of Immigration marked her case as one calling for inquiry. It was decided that she must be taken back by the ship that brought her. But before the ship sailed she became the mother of an infant, and she was allowed to remain in Castle Garden until she was strong enough for the voyage. Her case was referred to the Treasury, and last week Secretary Windom gave his decision. He said that the woman might remain if she still desired to do so. Her boy having been born in this country, was a citizen of the United States, and as the mother is his natural guardian it would be inhuman to separate her from him. She has therefore acquired through her son the right of citizenship from which her own poverty debarred her. Heavenly citizenship can be acquired only through analogous means. No man or woman has any right to it save as it is acquired through our Elder Brother, through whom we are "no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with saints, and of the household of God." (Eph. 2:18.)

Four Young People were Married in Fun at Wilkesbarre, Penn., on December 20. They were at a social gathering on the evening of that day, at which there was a great deal of joking and merriment in progress. It was proposed to have a wedding scene when the fun was at its height, and four young people who were casual acquaintances volunteered to be the principals. They stood up together apparently indifferent as to their partners, and all laughing at the joke. An alderman was among the company and he, being acquainted with the usual form, was asked to officiate. He complied, and having asked the customary questions, pronounced the binding words. A little later a question arose about this part of the evening's amusement, and when the alderman was appealed to he answered, nonchalantly. "Oh yes, it was a valid marriage, as valid as the law could make it." It was disagreeable news for both couples. In one case the young man, and in the other the girl, was engaged. The parents, also, when they heard of it, were deeply incensed, and say they will institute proceedings to have the marriages annulled. It is a contrary mistake that we have to deplore in the case of some who profess to enter into union with Christ. They are apt to think that a mere declaration or the joining of a church unites them to Him forever and secures for them eternal felicity, and they are disappointed when they learn that there can be no true union without a change of heart and surrender of themselves to Him (11 Cor. 5:17.)

A Remarkable Suit was Decided in the Probate Court of Kansas City, Mo., on December 24. It was brought by a colored woman to recover arrears of wages for twenty-five years. Shortly before the war she was bought in the open market by a planter, who, finding she was unfit for field work took her into his family as a sewing-woman. She was carefully taught, and soon became proficient in her occupation. The family removed as the exigencies of the war compelled, and the woman went with them. They would not allow her to associate with any of her own race, nor did they tell her how the results of the war affected her. She was well treated save that she was not allowed to go beyond the boundaries of the farm occupied by her master. A month ago he died, and then the woman ran away. Arriving at Boonville, she met a colored man and besought him to hide her. From him she heard for the first time of the emancipation proclamation and realized that she had spent twenty-five years unnecessarily in slavery. A lawyer, to whom she was introduced by her new friend, brought suit for wages against the estate of her deceased master, and last week she was awarded $700. Had she learned earlier that she was free, she would have quitted her servitude long ago. She would not have acted as men do who voluntarily remain in the service of Satan after they have heard that Christ has purchased their freedom. (Rom. 6:16.)

A Wealthy Man Sacrificed His Life for a Few pennies near Reading, Penn., on December 26. For some months past a thin withered old man has been seen crawling along the track of the Reading railroad carrying a tin pail, in which he collected the pieces of coal which had fallen from passing trains. The railroad officials were sorry for him at first, as they supposed he must be in dire poverty. They learned, however, that the man owned considerable real estate, and had therefore no need to risk his life in that way. They warned him of his danger, and as the man seemed indifferent to that consideration, they prohibited his trespassing on the tracks again. He desisted for a short time, but lately he has been back again with his old tin pail. He received another warning, but paid no heed, and a few hours afterward an express train struck him as he was stooping to pick up another lump of coal and killed him. It is found that he had accumulated a fortune of $40,000, but was still intent on saving. He lived in the attic of one of his own houses, using the most miserable furniture, and with no fuel save the coal that he found from day to day on the tracks. Even worldlings call a man a fool who thus sacrifices his life to make a hoard of money. But there is reason to fear that the sacrifice of his life was not the clearest evidence of folly. They who set their whole heart, as he did, on the acquisition of money lose their souls, too. (1 Tim. 6:10.)

and has been continually in mischief. The theory about him is that he is the child of some wealthy personage, who while afraid to acknowledge him, secretly watches over him, and when he is in trouble comes to his rescue. The unexpected ways in which the Christian is often delivered from his troubles is a mystery to men of the world, but in his case there is no doubt in his own mind as to the Source of his help, for he is privileged to call his Helper his Father, and to be recognized by Him as His Son. (Heb. 11:16.)

A Little Girl's Appeal to the Mayor of New York caused some amusement in the City Hall on December 24. On that morning the Mayor's secretary found in the morning mail a letter of a different type from his usual correspondence. It touched his heart, and he took it at once to his Honor. Its burden was thus quaintly told: "I am a little girl ten years old, and I am going to ask a favor of you. If you will grant it to me it will be the happiest Christmas that I have ever spent in my life. Dear Mayor, I was going to the store this morning and my doggie Nellie followed me and the dog catchers took her away from me and put her into the wagon and all my crying and begging did not do any good, so I thought I would ask you if you would please get my doggie for me. I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year." Mayor Grant is not the man to neglect such a petition. He immediately sent word to the dog-pound that the child's dog must be restored to her, and a courteous letter was sent to the child informing her that if she would go to the pound with the messenger and identify her pet she could have her. How many a heart might be gladdened, and how many a captive of Satan be released if the members of every family whom Satan has robbed would follow the child's example and appeal to One who is mighty for the deliverance of their loved ones! (Matt. 28:18.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. M. Baxter gave discourses on Coming Prophetic Events at Hartlepool, England, on December 22.

Maj. J. H. Cole began meetings in Hot Springs, Ark., December 8. He expects to remain in that State for some months.

Rev. Charles E. Stowe, son of Harriet Beecher Stowe, has resigned his position as pastor of the Windsor Avenue Congregational Church, Hartford, Conn.

Major Whittle has been greatly blessed during his latest mission at Stratford, in the east of London. He began, on December 15, a week's services at a Mission Hall in South London.

King Mwanga, of Uganda, the African king who ordered the execution of Bishop Hannington, and whose penitent letter to Mr. Mackay is printed on page 6, has been restored to his throne.

The Twentieth Anniversary of the Organization of the Ocean Grove Camp-meeting was celebrated on December 22. Dr. Stokes, President of the Association, preached, and many ministers took part in the services.

Mr. George Muller has lately sent home a letter from Agra, India, where, at the ripe age of eighty-five, he had just climbed a Mohammedan tower 300 feet high; he describes himself as in the best of health and spirits.

Rev. Sam Small has resigned from the Methodist Church, and has joined the Protestant Episcopal Church. It is understood that he will be ordained and act for some time as a mission preacher. He is the eleventh minister of the Methodist Church who has quitted that communion for the Protestant Episcopal during the past year.

The subjects suggested for the Week of Prayer (January 5-12) by the Evangelical Alliance are: Sunday, January 5, The Church of Christ; Monday, Confession and Supplication; Tuesday, Nations and their Rulers; Wednesday, The Young; Thursday, The Church at Home; Friday, The Church Abroad; Saturday, Thanksgiving; Sunday, January 12, The Future Glory.

The trustees of the Brooklyn Tabernacle have decided to organize the T. De Witt Talmage Winter Chautauqua Association, to be situated at Crescent City, Putnam County, Fla., which, like the summer schools of the same nature, is intended to furnish not only amusement but valuable instruction, by means of lectures, musical entertainments, etc., to those who attend its meetings. The first meeting is to be held about the middle of February.

A division in the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union has taken place. The seceders are to meet in Cleveland, Ohio, on January 22, to form a new union, which they call "the Non-Partisan Woman's Temperance Union." Reports indicate that the name is not quite accurate. The new union will, it is stated, be as closely allied to the Republican party as the original Union is to the Prohibition party. The call is signed by Ellen J. Phinney, Ellen M. Watson, Harriet G. Walker, and others.

THE SAVIOUR ANGRY.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And when He had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, He said unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand." Mark 3:5.

The Scene in the Synagogue—A Plain Question—The Dilemma of the Scribes—I. What Caused the Saviour's Anger—The Exact Fault of the Scribes—They Would not See—Would not Acknowledge their Conviction—II. Hardness of Heart in the Modern Church—Non-Committal People—Occasionally Melted—May Not be Given to Gross Sin—May Have Hardened Gradually—May Have been Specially Favored—III. Practical Lessons—Divine Surgery.

My text will really consist of these words: "He looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." It is the divine Lord, the pitiful Jesus, the meek and lowly in heart, who is here described as being angry. Where else do we meet with such a statement while He was here among men? A poor man was present in the synagogue who had a withered hand; it was his right hand, and he who has to earn his daily bread can guess what it must be to have that useful member dried up or paralyzed. In the same synagogue was the Saviour, ready to restore to that hand all its wonted force and cunning. Happy conjunction! The company that had gathered in the synagogue, professedly to worship God, would they not have special cause to do so when they saw a miracle of divine goodness? I can imagine them whispering one to another, "We shall see our poor neighbor restored to-day; for the Son of God has come among us with power to heal, and He will make this a very glorious Sabbath by His work of gracious power."

But I must not let imagination mislead me: they did nothing of the kind. Instead of this the Lord Jesus, not to be delighted by an act of His power, but to find somewhat of which they might accuse Him. When all came to all, the utmost that they would be able to allege would be that He had healed a withered hand on the Sabbath. Over-looking the commendation due for the miracle of healing, they laid the emphasis upon its being done on the Sabbath; and held up their hands with horror that such a secular action should be performed on such a sacred day. Now, the Saviour puts very plainly before them the question, "Is it right to do good on the Sabbath-day?" He put it in a form which only allowed of one reply. The question could, no doubt, have been easily answered by these Scribes and Pharisees, but then it would have condemned themselves, and therefore they were all mute as mice. Scribes most skilled in splitting hairs, and Pharisees who could measure the border of a garment to the eighth of an inch, declined to answer one of the simplest questions in morals. Mark describes the Saviour as looking round upon them all with anger and grief, as well he might.

They Sat Watching

You know how minute Mark is in his record; his observation is microscopic, and his description is graphic to the last degree. By the help of Mark's clear words you can easily picture the Saviour looking round upon them. Can you conceive the power of that look? The look of a man who is much given to anger has little force in it: it is the blaze of a wisp of straw, fierce and futile. In many cases we almost smile at the impotent rage which looks out from angry eyes; but a gentle spirit, like the Saviour's, commands reverence if once moved to indignation. His meek and lowly heart could only have been stirred with anger by some overwhelming cause. We are sure that He did well to be angry.

Note well that Jesus did not speak a word, and yet He said more without words than another man could have said with them. They were neither would mere words have had the slightest effect upon them. He saved His words for the poor man with the withered hand; but for these people a look was the best reply; they looked on Him, and now He looked on them. I wish I had skill to describe our Lord's look; but I must ask the aid of your understandings and your imaginations to make it vivid to your minds.

Not Worthy of a Word;

When Mark has told us of that look, he proceeds to mention the mingled feelings which were revealed by it. In that look there were two things—there were anger and grief, indignation and inward sorrow. "He looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." He was angry that they should willingly blind their eyes to a truth so plain, an argument so convincing. He had put to them a question to which there could only be one answer, and they would not give it; He had thrown light on their eyes, and they would not see it; He had utterly destroyed their chosen pretext for opposition, and yet they would persist in opposing Him. Evidently it is possible to be angry and be right. Hard to many is the precept, "Be ye angry, and sin not;" and this fact renders the Saviour's character all the more admirable, since He so easily accomplished what is so difficult to us. He could be angry with the sin, and yet never cease to compassionate the sinner. His was not anger which desired evil to its object; no touch of malevolence was in it; it was simply love on fire, love burning with indignation against that which is unlovely.

I. What Caused this Anger and grief? It was their hardness of heart. To use other words, it was the callousness of their conscience, their want of feeling. Their hearts had, as it were, grown horny, and had lost their proper softness. The hand may furnish us with an illustration. Some persons have very delicate hands: the blind who read raised type with their fingers develop special sensitiveness, and this sensitiveness is of great value. But when men are put to pick oakum, or break stones, or do other rough work, their hands become hard and callous: even so is it with the heart, which ought to be exceedingly tender; through continuance in sin it grows callous and unfeeling. Use is second nature: the traveller's foot gets hardened to the way, his face becomes hardened to the cold, his whole constitution is hardened by his mode of life. Persons have taken deadly drugs by little and little till they have been hardened against their results: we read in history that Mithridates had used poison till at last he was unable to kill himself thereby, so hardened had he become.

But hardening is of the worst kind when it takes place in the heart. The heart ought to be all tenderness; and when it is not, the life must be coarse and evil. Yet multitudes are morally smitten with ossification of the heart. Do we not know some men in whom the heart is simply a huge muscle? If they have any hearts they are made of leather, for they have no pity for anybody, no fellow-feeling even for their relatives. God save us from a hard heart: it leads to something worse than death! Those enemies of our Lord who sat in the synagogue that Sabbath-day were incorrigible: they were desperately set on hating Him, and they strengthened themselves in the resolve that they would not be convinced, and would not cease to oppose Him, let Him say or do whatever He might. Our Lord Jesus became angry, grieved, and sorrowful with them.

What was their Exact Fault?

First, they would not see, though the case was clear. He had set the truth so plainly before them that they were obliged to strain their understandings to avoid being convinced: they had to draw down the blinds of the soul, and put up the shutters of the mind, to be able not to see. There are none so blind as those that will not see, and these were of that blindest order; they were blind people that had eyes and boasted that they could see, and therefore their sin was utterly without excuse. Ah, me! I fear that we have many around us still, who know, but do not act on their knowledge; who do not wish to be convinced and converted, but harden strike your hand against a stone wall. Satan has fortified it, and made its possessor to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the works of sin. The enmity of such a heart leads it to resist all that is good; its hardness returns the efforts of love in the form of opposition. Our Saviour saw before Him persons who would oppose Him whatever He did, and would not change their minds however they might be made to see their error. Let this suffice to explain the scene before us of our Lord grieved and angry.

II. I must now come closer home, while I inquire, is there anything of This Sort Among us?

Remember, we may grieve the Saviour because of the hardness of our hearts, and yet be very respectable people. We may go to the synagogue, as these did; we may be Bible-readers, as the Scribes were; we may practice all the outward forms of religion, as the Pharisees did; and yet the Lord Jesus may be grieved with us because of the hardness of our heart.

We may anger the Lord, and yet be strictly non-committal. I dare say there are some here who are not Christians, and yet they never say a word against Christianity. They are strictly neutral. They judge that the less they think or say about this great matter the better. Jesus was angry that men should be silent when honesty and candor demanded speech of them. You must not think you are going to escape by saying, "I am not a professor." There can be no third party in this case. In the eternal world there is no provision made for Neutrals.

Those who are not with Jesus are against Him, and they that gather not with Him are scattering abroad. You are either wheat or tares, and there is nothing between the two. O sirs, you grieve Him though you do not openly oppose Him! Some of you are especially guilty, for you ought to be amongst the foremost of His friends. Shame on you to treat the Lord so ill!

Alas, this hardness of heart may be in us, though we have occasional meltings! I think that man has a very hard heart who is at times deeply moved, but violently represses his emotions. He hurries home to his chamber greatly distressed, but in a short time he rallies, and shakes off his fears. He goes to a funeral, and trembles on the brink of the grave, but joins his merry companions, and is at his sins again. He likes to hear a stirring sermon, but he is careful not to go beyond his depth while hearing it. He is on the watch against his own welfare, and is careful to keep out of the way of a blessing. By a desperate resolve he holds out against the pressure of the grace of God, as it comes to him in exhortations and entreaties. He is often rebuked, but he hardens his neck; he is occasionally on the verge of yielding, but he recovers his evil firmness, and holds on his way with a perseverance worthy of a better cause. How often have we hoped better things for some of you! How often have you blighted those hopes! You must be very hard in heart to hold out so long.

Yes, and we may have this hardness of heart, and yet keep quite clear of gross sins.

Your Outwardly Moral Man

is often a hardened rebel against God. His pride of character helps to harden him against the gospel of grace. He condemns others who are really no worse than himself. There is an abominable kind of prudence which keeps some men out of certain sins: they are too mean to be prodigal, too fond of ease to plunge into risky sins. Many a man is carried off his feet by a sudden flood of temptation, and sins grievously, and yet at heart he may be by no means so hardened as the cool, calculating transgressor. Woe unto the man who has learned to sin deliberately, and to measure out iniquity as if it were a lawful merchandise!

This hardness of heart may not overcome you to the full at present, and yet you may have grave cause to dread it. Hardness of heart creeps over men by insensible degrees. The hardest hearted man in the world was not so once; the flesh of his heart was petrified little by little. He that can now curse and blaspheme once wept for his boyish faults at his mother's knee, and would have shuddered at the bare idea of falling asleep without a prayer. There are those about us who would give worlds to be free from the bondage of habit, so as to feel as once they did. Their soul is as parched as the Sahara, it has forgotten the dew of tears; their heart is hot as an oven with evil passions, and no soft breath of holy penitence ever visits it. Well did the apostle say, "Exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin."

I cannot forbear saying that among the hardened there are some who may be said especially to provoke the Lord. Among these we must mention those who, from their birth and education, received an unusually keen moral sense, but have blunted it by repeated crimes. Those sin doubly who have had double light, and special tenderness of nature. Judge, O ye sons of the godly, whether there are not many such among you!

This is also true of those who have been indulged by Providence. God has dealt with them with wonderful favor; they have continued long in good health; they have been prosperous in business; their children have grown up around them; they have all that heart can wish; and yet God receives from them no gratitude; indeed, they hardly give a thought to Him. Let me not forget the obligations of others who have been often chastened, for this side of the question has its force also. Certain persons have endured many trials, they have often suffered pain of body, and have been brought at times to the verge of the grave; they have lost the beloved of their eyes with a stroke; they have followed their children to the grave; sorrows have been multiplied to them. Yet, after all, they are hard of heart. The Saviour looks upon all such with that grieving anger of which the text speaks.

III. We must now close. Oh that my poor pleadings may not have been lost upon you! In many things which I have spoken there has been a loud voice to many of you; now hear me while I raise the question, What should be our feeling in reference to this subject? First, let us renounce for ever

The Habit of Cavilling.

These Scribes and Pharisees were great word-spinners, critics, fault-finders. They found fault with the Saviour for healing on the Sabbath-day. He had not broken God's law of the Sabbath. He had only exposed their error upon that point. If the Sabbath had not furnished an opportunity for objection, they would soon have found another; for they meant to object: one way or another, they resolved to contradict. Multitudes of persons in this present day are most effectually hardening their hearts by the habit of cavilling. They criticise God's word. Any fool can do that, but only a fool will do it. They give themselves the airs of literary men; they are not like commonplace hearers: they require something more intellectual. They look down with contempt upon people who enjoy the gospel, and are proving the power of it in their lives. They themselves are persons of remarkable mind; men of light and leading, and it gives them distinction to act the part of sceptics. They show their great learning by turning up their noses at the plain teachings of the Bible. It seems to be the great feature of a cultured man nowadays to wear a sneer upon his face when he meets with believers in inspiration.

Let us never imitate that evil spirit, who in the garden of Eden proved himself to be

The Patron of all Sceptics.

Remember how he raised the question, "Yea, hath God said?" Forget not how he went further, and, like a sage philosopher, hinted that there was a larger hope: "Ye shall not surely die," said he. Then he advanced to lay down a daring, radical philosophy, and whispered, "God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods." This old serpent has left his trail on many minds at the present day, and you can see it in the slimy questions and poisonous suggestions of the age. Get away from cavilling; it is of all labors the least remunerative.

Next, let us feel an intense desire to submit ourselves unto the Lord Jesus. If He be in the synagogue, let us ask Him to heal us, and do it in His own way. Let us become His disciples, and follow Him whithersoever He goeth. Yield yourselves unto God. Be as melted wax to the seal. Be as the water of the lake, which is moved with every breath of the wind. All He wills is our salvation. Lord Jesus, let Thy will be done!

Let us be careful to keep away from all hardening influences, whether of books, or men, or habits, or pleasures. If there be any company which deadens us as to spiritual things, which hinders our prayers, shakes our faith, or damps our zeal, let us get out of it, and keep out of it. Shun false doctrine, worldliness, and strife. Keep clear of frivolity and trifling. Be in earnest, and be pure; live near to God, and remove far off from the throne of iniquity. Lastly use all softening influences. Ask to have your heart daily rendered sensitive by the indwelling of the quickening Spirit. Go often to hear the Word: it is like a fire, and like a hammer breaking the rock in pieces. Dwell at the foot of the cross.

So far I have kept to the text, bearing all the while the burden of the Lord. If it be not heavy hearing to you, it is certainly painful preaching to me. That same love which made the loving Jesus grieved has driven me to speak after this fashion. Not that I love men as much as He did; but a spark from His fire has kindled in my soul, and is burning there according to the measure of grace given. But now, my dear hearers, let me indulge myself with a word of gospel. Surely there are some among you who Desire to Lose Your Hardness.

To you is the word of this salvation sent: "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh." (Ezekiel 36:26.) See how this promise exactly meets your case! That kind of heart which you so greatly need shall be given you, though indeed it is a miracle of miracles to do it. What an operation to perform, and yet leave the patient alive! "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh." None but He that made the heart could execute such delicate surgery as this.

Now this is matter of promise. See how the verse glitters with "I will," and "I will." The Lord, who is able to perform His word, has spoken in this fashion, and He will not run back from His promise. But please read the thirty-seventh verse of this thirty-sixth chapter of Ezekiel, and mark it well. "Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." Will you not inquire? Will you not ask the Lord to do this for you? If so, your prayer has begun to be answered. Your desire is a token that the stone is softening, and flesh is taking its place. O Lord, grant that it may be so! Believe in the Lord Jesus that He is able to do this unto you, and it shall be according to your faith.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Enthusiastic Student.—An Evangelist relates: "I remember a young man who had come to Edinburgh to study for the ministry. He was respectable and diligent, and studied arduously. In a few months his health completely broke down; then it was discovered that he had been living on eight cents a day, and studying fourteen hours a day, all his exercise consisting in running up and down the stairs twice daily as he went to and from his classes. He endured all these hardships that he might qualify himself to become a minister of the gospel. He had set his heart upon that prize, and every difficulty, hardship, or trial must be surmounted that he might accomplish that end. So far, he sets an example to us of energy, self-denial, and perseverance, in striving to win the prize of our high calling of God in Jesus Christ."

Nellie's Refusal of Christ.—"A Short Time ago, I spoke to a young lady about Christ. She did not receive my effort gladly, and as I spoke she rose, and going to the piano ran her fingers nimbly over the keys. About three weeks afterward God laid His hand upon her, and she was stretched upon a bed of sickness, and soon it became evident that she would never recover. As she was within a hair's-breadth of the boundary line that divides time from eternity her sister came to her and said, 'Nellie, you are dying, are you trusting in Jesus?' Startled at the idea of approaching death the dying girl exclaimed, 'Dying! no, I am not dying; my soul is not saved.' But in a minute or two she breathed her last. As her father stood over her coffin, and gazed upon the beautiful features of his daughter, so still in death, as David did over Absalom, he said with tears streaming down his cheeks, and in an agony of despair in his voice, 'Oh, Nellie, Nellie, my daughter, would God I had died for you!' Sinners, ere it be too late hear the message of God, and accept the offer of salvation He has made to you through Jesus Christ."

Saying "Yes" to Jesus.—"When I Left a church of which I was formerly pastor, a deputation of elders was sent to ask another minister to become my successor. They all made speeches at the meeting, but I thought one made the shortest and best. He said that, that day, as he was preparing to leave his house, his little daughter came to him, and said, 'Father, this is the day that Mr. Davidson is to say

"Yes" or "No." Be sure and tell him from me to say "Yes." When he told the story, there happened to be another minister present, who was to speak at an Evangelistic meeting that evening. He thought he could not get a better illustration of how the gospel was pressed upon the sinner's acceptance than by telling that little story, and asking the people to say 'Yes.' At the end of the meeting, a big, strong man, a ship-builder, came pressing to the front. When he got hold of the minister, he said, 'I listened to your sermon unmoved until you came to the story of that little girl; and now, though this is the first time I have ever spoken to any one about my soul, I have come up to say "Yes" to Jesus;' and the big, strong man brushed a tear from his eye."

An Artist's Gift to a Preacher.—Dr. Pentecost said: "When I was a home missionary in one of our frontier towns, living in one room, and with a very small salary, a gentleman gave me a present of a picture. It was a very fine one, but it was only on the canvas. He was an artist, and had sent it to me just as he had finished it, without getting it framed; and for three years I was so poor that I could not get it suitably mounted. He had been to hear me preach, and as a token of gratitude and remembrance he sent me this picture. But when God gives us a gift, He does not, like that gentleman, leave the receiver to finish it, for the picture was not finished until it was framed. God gives us the finished gift, regeneration, redemption, and sanctification. Those whom He justifies He also glorifies."

Confidence in the Great Keeper.—Dr. Pentecost said: "I was talking with a friend the other night who knew that it was his duty at once to close with Christ's offered salvation, but he alleged as his reason for not doing so that he was afraid that, next week or month or some other time, temptation or trial might come upon him, or he might grow cold, fall back into his old Christless life, and bring disgrace, not only upon himself, but upon the Saviour whom he had professed to trust. 'Well,' I said to him, 'there is no doubt about it. If you are going to try it yourself you will never be able to hold out, but if you give yourself over wholly to Christ, He will be your Saviour and your keeper, and none shall pluck you from the strength of His hand.' 'I did not know,' he said, looking at me; 'that we had to take up such a childlike position.' He was satisfied with what Christ had done, and trusted in Him."

Six Miles Out of the Way.—Mr. McEwen said: "On one occasion in Nova Scotia, I was driving to Walls River. I drove for about six miles, but still no river came in sight. I was beginning to fear I had taken the wrong road; so when someone came in sight, I pulled up and asked him if I were near Walls River. 'Walls River!' he repeated, 'you are not on the way at all. You are six miles from the Walls River road.' 'Can I get round to it any other way without turning back?' 'No. There is no other way but to turn back for six miles and then take the right road.' So I had to turn my horse's head, and having regained the right road I was not long in reaching my destination. So it is with sinners. They have tried ways of their own to reach heaven, but they find out sooner or later that they have taken the wrong way. They sit and deliberate, 'Must I go back all the weary journey that I have come?' Must I put no more trust in my own righteousness? Yes; they must. 'There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is the way of death.'"

The Flower Growing in the Cave.—Dr. George F. Pentecost said: "I was one day in a mountain cave. This cave was not a small hole in a rock, but a stupendous cavern, running miles and miles under the ground. One of the divisions of it was called the banqueting hall, a great chamber, with a roof sixty feet high. I was going through it with a party of friends, and here the guide stopped, and taking us a little to one side of the general path, he showed us a curiosity—a little sickly white flower, with a little tiny blossom about the size of a threepenny-bit, was growing there. It had just the faintest suggestion of odor, and the slightest shadow of color. How had that flower come there, and how was it nourished? There were hundreds of feet of solid rock all around and above it. Few know how it came into that cave; but I know. Just above the flower there was a little rent, about two inches wide, in the roof. One looking at the high roof would fail to discern it, but there it is, and it is supposed that it goes right up to the surface of the earth. Somehow a little seed worked its way right through the fissure, and fell into the cavern, and drippings of rain, carrying little particles of earth, have followed in the same way, and enabled the little seed to take root. It has often occurred to me, that there is no heart so dark, no heart so far away from God, but that if it receives one living word of salvation, it will take root and bring forth fruit unto salvation."

Mansfield College, Oxford, England.—Principal Fairbairn. (See page 5.)

Indulgences Easily Parted With.—Mr. W. A. Campbell observes: "I know a young man who, at one time, although a professing Christian, was given to very free and easy ways. He and his pipe were inseparable; his glass, and many other things which savored of the world, were often indulged in. But a great change came over him. God gave him some special work to do, and as he became more and more engrossed in it, he relinquished first one thing, then another, until at last he had stripped himself of everything questionable. As I stood by his bedside, the other day, he said, 'Do you know, I never thought of giving up anything!' But as I got nearer and nearer to God, His Almighty arm seemed to sweep them out of my heart, and I had no longer any desire after my old favorite indulgences."

A Draught From a Deep Well.—Dr. Pentecost said: "I remember going into the country on one particular occasion for my vacation. At the farm where I lodged there was an old well, working with a sweep—that is, a big beam working in a pivot, with a bucket at one end, which was so suspended that the bucket end could be dropped into the well, which was about sixty feet deep. I got hold of the beam and swung it round till the bucket touched the water, and I got a good drink. Just then, the old farmer came out; he had seen me at the well. 'I have no doubt that is fair enough water,' he said, 'but you do not know how to get a right good drink,' and coming over he seized the beam and sent the bucket down into the water about twenty feet, and I got a draught taken from the very heart of the living rock. I had thought the water I had drawn myself, all that could be desired, but when I tasted the other I thought I had never drunk real water until then. I have often thought that young converts do not get deep enough spiritual draughts. One touch of the hem of Christ's garment, faith as a grain of mustard seed will save you, but if, dear friends, you wish to know Christ in His inexhaustible fulness you must drink deep of the living water which He so freely offers."

Sinking in a Miry Pit.—Rev. W. Haslam relates: "When I was a boy in India, I was running along a very muddy lane in the rainy season. There was a drenching rain pouring down upon me, and in some places the road was impassable for mud. Looking about, I espied as I thought, a smooth, hard surface by the side of the road. I made for that, and leaped upon it with delight. To my horror I found that I was in a miry pit, filled with thick mud and water. I instantly sank up to my middle, and felt myself slowly sinking deeper and deeper. The more I struggled the faster I sank, and if I made no effort, I was conscious of steadily sinking still. I was buried up to my arms, and then my paddling was over, and I was up to my neck in the pit. I cried out piteously for help, but no one was in sight. I can never forget the sickening horror of that death which seemed inevitable. I became insensible, and knew nothing more until I found myself lying in a bed, washed and comfortably tended. A friendly hand had saved me, and kindly cleansed me from the mire. But this was not so dreadful as when I felt myself sinking into hell as a lost sinner, but I gave myself to the Lord, and He saved me."

Something Wrong with the Watch.—Mr. McEwen said: "Some time ago I had a new watch. At first I thought there was not another such watch in the kingdom. It did very well for three weeks or so, then it began to go very irregularly, and to stop every now and again. I took it to a watchmaker, who fixed it up for me, and it went all right for another three weeks; then it was as bad as ever. I took it to one watchmaker after another, each declaring they knew exactly what was wrong with it, and they would make it all right; but it never kept time, and at last I got tired of getting it repaired, and allowed it to go or stop as it pleased. One day a friend came to me and said, 'Have you got that troublesome watch with you?' 'Yes,' I answered, 'here it is.' He took it from me, and I have never seen it since, but he gave me a fine new one in its place, which keeps perfect time, and never gives me any trouble. Some sinners are like my old watch, they think this or that is wrong with them, and they tinker away at themselves; but it will do no good. They can do nothing with their old nature, except hand it over to Jesus, who will take it from them for ever, and give them a new nature, and a new heart, and make them new creatures by the Holy Spirit's power."

WALTER LEIGH'S CONFESSION.

(See illustration on page 13.)

A PAINFUL subject of discussion was occupying the attention of three men in the private office of the large jobbing firm of Vernon & Son. The three were Mr. Vernon, the head of the firm, who had once been "Son," and then for a time the sole representative of Vernon & Son, but was now glad to have the old firm name a fact again by the admission of his son Harry, who was the second of the trio in consultation. The third was Mr. Carver, the general manager and superintendent. The question to be decided was the disposition to be made of the case of a wrongdoer among the numerous employees of the firm. He was little more than a lad, a country boy, the son of a widow, and for some two or three years had been in the service of Vernon & Son, conducting himself well, but with a boy's love of fun and dislike of monotonous work.

Both Mr. Vernon and his son came but little in personal contact with the employees. The business of engaging, managing, and discharging the boys was in the hands of Carver, the superintendent, who was responsible for the general conduct of the business.

A series of special meetings for young men, in which Harry Vernon took a deep interest, had, however, brought the junior member of the firm into intimate relations with some of the employees. He had given out invitation cards to each of them, and at the meetings had made a point of speaking personally to such of them as he saw present. Out of the whole number only about fifty had attended the first meeting, and of these many were evidently bored, and left before its conclusion. The next night only twenty were present, and among them was Walter Leigh. His bright, merry face attracted Mr. Vernon, who labored earnestly with him to induce him to decide for Christ. He was evidently under deep conviction, but some hidden obstacle interposed between him and decision. Mr. Vernon prayed with him, explained the way of salvation to him, but to no purpose. He spoke to him of his mother, and Walter Leigh admitted that she was longing and praying for his salvation. Still no light came.

The young Christian worker was puzzled, and made the lad's case the subject of earnest prayer. As the result, he determined to get Leigh's confidence and find out what it was that prevented his finding peace. He sought him out in the warehouse the next day, and reminding him that it was Saturday and there would be no meeting at the Mission Hall, invited him to spend the evening with him. Accordingly Walter Leigh presented himself at the apartments young Mr. Vernon had occupied since he had been a member of the firm, and had found it necessary to live nearer the store than his father's house in the country.

It was very difficult to succeed in the task Mr. Vernon had set himself. The boy's reticence wounded him. It was apparently impenetrable. Mr. Vernon extracted the admission that there was a secret which lay between him and salvation, but the boy said he could not disclose it. The consequences would be ruinous, and besides, others were involved whom he would not like to injure. Harry Vernon was as firm as Walter Leigh was obstinate, and the conversation showed no sign of reaching a conclusion. At last the young man said: "Well, Leigh, I cannot guess whether your lips are sealed by honor, nor whether you ought or ought not to tell, but I am satisfied that your eternal destiny depends on the thing being straightened out. Let us ask God to show you the right course."

Mr. Vernon prayed earnestly, with his arm over the shoulder of his young friend. When they rose, Walter said: "Mr. Harry, I will tell you, be the consequences what they may." It was a sad confession. Walter said that he had been approached by three young men who were in the service of another firm, and with them had been engaged in dishonest practices. His salary was very small, and most boys in his position were living at home free of charge; but his mother, who knew nothing of the cost of city life, had supposed that he could live upon it, as he could have done in the country. He got into debt, and when he was pressed for money the three young men, of whom he had spoken, showed him how to take articles out of the stock, how to get them away safely, and promised to dispose of them for him. He fell into the trap. They were true to him, though he believed they did not give him all the money the goods sold for. The stealing had been going on for six months.

Of course Mr. Vernon had to tell his father what he had learned, and Carver was called into consultation. In Carver's mind there was no question as to the course to be pursued. Leigh must be arrested and prosecuted. There was no other way to deal with the case, where so many were employed, and when one offence condoned might lead others to steal, in the expectation that they too would be pardoned. His experience was that severity alone would protect the firm. Mr. Vernon inclined to Carver's opinion, but he saw that his son was anxious to save the boy, and was reluctant to hurt his feelings. "You are young yet, Harry," he said, "better let Carver do as he wishes. He has a good deal of difficulty in managing these lads."

But Harry pleaded still. He could not explain the circumstances of the confession, for neither his father nor Carver had any sympathy with practical religious work, but he pleaded the lad's youth, his being the son of a widow, and the prospect of his reclamation. At length Mr. Vernon decided. Leigh was to be told that his offence would not be forgiven at once. He would be put on probation. If it was found that he had broken with his three bad companions, quitted disreputable resorts where he had been accustomed to spend his evenings, and could show that he was living within his income, he would not be prosecuted. Carver was dissatisfied and went away grumbling, but had to obey. Harry Vernon had young Leigh again to his rooms, told him the decision, and prayed with him for strength to resist temptation.

A month passed, and one Saturday evening Harry Vernon was sitting alone in his room, preparing the Sunday-school lesson for his Bible-class, when the door opened, and Carver entered. "I want your authority, Mr. Harry," he said, "to have that lad, Leigh, arrested. I have seen him to-night with those three pals of his, and they have all gone to Leigh's boarding-house. I followed them; they are there now. You know how your father decided. Leigh was to be arrested if he did not break with those fellows. He is at his old tricks again, and if I take a policeman now we shall catch them with the goods on them."

Harry Vernon's face fell. He tilted his chair back, and was lost in thought; Carver looked at him in astonishment. "You ought not to hesitate, Mr. Harry," he said, "it is a clear case. If your father were here he would wish it done when it can be done so neatly."

"Look here, Carver," Mr. Vernon said, "I cannot believe it, though I admit it looks bad; but I must see for myself. You and I will go alone. You can have a policeman outside if you like."

Sick at heart, Harry Vernon rapidly dressed, and was soon on his way with Carver to the boy's boarding-house. They were admitted, Carver having first posted a policeman at the door with instruction to enter when the signal was given.

Carver Reports that Walter Leigh is Trapped.

"Don't knock, Mr. Harry," Carver said, when they were directed to Leigh's room. "We will walk right in, and surprise them. Are you ready?" Harry nodded, and Carver flung the door wide open. There were no goods being divided, no accounts being settled, no signs of dissipation, only four lads on their knees, and one of them—Walter Leigh—praying, with tears, for their salvation.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 830.)

Famine and Treachery.

THE settlers of New England were at the point of starvation at the very time when they were returning to the sachem of the Narragansetts their message of defiance, and calmly providing the means of defence against Indian stratagem or open siege. The Pilgrim Fathers were slowly and painfully laying the foundations of a mighty structure, which the builders of many generations shall add to ere it be completed. It was a work which the dark cloud was oftener shadowing than the ray of hope illuminating and brightening with promise. They were to be perfected in the school of suffering; and, as the faithful pioneers of other generations, to open up the way for those who are reaping the harvest they sowed in hope and in tears. But they had within them the enduring elements of Christian faith and trust, which guarded them against worse dangers even than famine and disease. The self-sacrificing spirit of mutual love protected the little colony from discord and strife, and enabled it to surmount dangers and trials which had proved the ruin of the powerful settlements of Virginia, when they numbered the colonists not by tens but by hundreds, and boasted of noble birth and titled governors, and the influence and protection of the Court at their command.

But it needed all the long-suffering patience and enduring hope of the Christian to enable these exiles of New England to brave the sufferings by which they were encompassed. The first spring and summer, in which they watched the lessening sail of the homeward-bound Mayflower, had seemed to promise that their worst trials were at an end. But the return of another summer found them even worse off than at the first. They were starving in the land of promise! The fruits of their first harvest were exhausted, ere they had done more than commit the seed for their next reaping to the ground. Dearly indeed were the rights of conscience and the home of liberty won. Costly was the price they paid for freedom to rear their tabernacle in the wilderness.

Yet amid all their endurance of self-denial and suffering, the Pilgrim Fathers never murmured at their lot. They had counted well the cost. Their trusting reliance in the overruling providence of God remained unshaken, and in the darkest hour of their painful experience they looked with cheerful confidence to the future; nor ever turned back a repining gaze on the golden harvest homes of old England, where still there was enough and to spare for them, if only they would trample on the dictates of conscience, and worship God according to the will of a bigot king. Rare, indeed, are the examples which history furnishes that may be compared with this united band of Christian brethren.

The stores of the colonists had wasted slowly away, notwithstanding the rigorous and impartial frugality with which they were dispensed. The wild fowl, which are so abundant at some seasons of the year, and had furnished more than once a seasonable supply to their manifold necessities during their first winter's privations, were not then to be seen. "No man," said Winslow, "will go into an orchard in the winter to gather cherries; so he that looks for fowls there in the summer will be deceived in his expectation. The time they continue in plenty with us is from the beginning of October to the end of March; but these extremities befell us in May and June." True, indeed, the harvest-time of their well-stored bay was then fully come. The creeks and pools along the encircling coast of Cape Cod were glittering with the silver fins of the bass and the white-fish; and farther off the cod-fish abounded in the deep waters of the bay. But it was like the phantom streams of the desert to the traveller who is perishing of thirst. The nets which they labored to construct gave way with the very wealth of their seas; they were destitute of the necessary tackling for the cod-fishery, never having contemplated the interchange of such occupations with the labors of the field; and they were in danger of perishing for want in the midst of abundance.

Often they awoke with the necessity before them of going in search of means for their morning's meal ere they resumed the daily toils by which a future harvest was to be secured. It seemed, indeed, as if no change was destined to bring about any improvement on the hard lot of these suffering exiles, and doubtless, had they been mere trading adventurers, who looked forward to the realization of worldly gain as the great end of their settlement on the shores of New England, the broad savannahs which the Pilgrim Fathers found without an owner would speedily have been abandoned to the solitude of their Indian sepulchres. But there they had cast their lot, in full assurance that the good Providence of God would work out for them a haven of rest, wherein they might an build altar to His name, though it might be that the way in which they were led would prove a weary and desert road.

Among those friends who joined the first New England Pilgrims on the arrival of the Fortune, was Robert Cushman, whom Governor Bradford speaks of as "our ancient friend, who was our right hand with the adventurers, and for divers years managed all our business with them." He it was who was sent from Leyden to England commissioned to enter into arrangements for the settlement of the Pilgrims in the Virginia Company's territories. He was one of those who embarked in the Speedwell, and was compelled to turn back. His whole sympathies, however, were with the Pilgrims, and his prayers went forth for those whom he deemed more fortunate than himself, as he watched the lessening sail of the Mayflower, till it disappeared on the distant horizon.

Ere he reached the settlement of the Mayflower Pilgrims death had been busy with the little circle. One and another of his friends, for whom he may have most fondly inquired, had found only a grave where they had sought the home of liberty. He himself, too, had to partake of the stinted rations of that severe winter, and to share the pinching cares of the uncomplaining little band of friends, who, after parting their last winter's stores with their companions, often retired hungry and faint to rest, with no provision left for the morning's meal. Nevertheless, he is the author of a plea for the Pilgrim colonization of New England, in which we trace the true elements of the devoted and self-denying spirit which guided the Christian exiles in their unwavering course.

He entitles it Reasons and Considerations touching the Lawfulness of Removing out of England into the parts of America, in which he makes little account, indeed, of the needy adventurers, whose sole reason for abandoning their native land is their haste to be rich, and to store up the fancied treasures of the land of gold. He thus deals with the varied opponents, or opposites, as he styles them, of the scheme of American emigration. "Although the most of the opposites are such as either dream of raising their fortunes here—than which there is nothing more unlike—or such as affecting their home-born country so vehemently, as that they had rather with all their friends, beg, yea, starve in it, than undergo a little difficulty in seeking abroad; yet are there some who, out of doubt, in tenderness of conscience and fear to offend God by running before they are called, are straitened and do straiten others from going to foreign plantations. For whose cause especially I have been drawn, out of my good affection to them, to publish some reasons that might give them content and satisfaction, and also stay and stop the wilful and witty caviller."

A fine, touching train of natural eloquence mingles with the quaint simplicity of these Reasons and Considerations, testifying to the pure and elevated character of the author's own motives to action. God of old, he says, did summon our forefathers by dreams and visions, and many special providences, to leave their country and place of habitation, and wander from land to land, in obedience to His will, but now no such calling is to be expected. "Now the ordinary examples and precepts of the Scriptures, reasonably and rightly understood and applied, must be the voice and word that must call us, press us, and direct us in every action." Still the thought dwells on his mind that God has some land of rest and of hope in store for his suffering people, even as he kept so long the promised Canaan in preparation for the chosen seed. But he deals with the hope, not as an enthusiast, but as a Christian believer; reasoning with a degree of wisdom and intelligent simplicity altogether remarkable, when we consider both the character of the age, and the circumstances under which he wrote.

"Neither," argues he, "is there any land or possession now, like unto the possession which the Jews had in Canaan, being legally holy and appropriated unto a holy people, the seed of Abraham, in which they dwelt securely, and had their days prolonged, it being by an immediate voice said, that the Lord gave it them as a land of rest after their weary travels, and a type of eternal rest in heaven. But now there is no land of that sanctity, no land so appropriated, none typical; much less any that can be said to be given of God to any nation, as was Canaan, which they and their seed must dwell in, till God sendeth upon them sword or captivity. But now we are all, in all places, strangers and pilgrims, travellers and sojourners, most properly, having no dwelling but in this earthly tabernacle; our dwelling is but a wandering, and our abiding but as a fleeting; and, in a word, our home is nowhere but in the heavens, in that house not made with hands, whose maker and builder is God, and to which all ascend that love the coming of our Lord Jesus."

Referring then to the straits and difficulties to which the dwellers in the crowded cities of the Old World are subjected in their daily struggle for subsistence, he alludes, in passing, to the generous self-denial of the Patriarch Abraham, when his worldly-minded companion cast a greedy eye on the well-watered plains of Mamre, and exclaims,— "Let us not oppress, straiten, and afflict one another; but seeing there is a spacious land, the way to which is through the sea, we will end this difference in a day."

Finally, as to the inducements, and the hopes and fears that might guide those who sought a home beyond the Atlantic, he remarks:—"The land being, first, a vast and empty chaos; secondly, acknowledged the right of our sovereign king; thirdly, by a peaceable composition in part possessed of divers of his loving subjects, I see not who can doubt or call in question the lawfulness of inhabiting or dwelling there; but that it may be as lawful for such as are not tied upon some special occasion here, to live there as well as here. Yea, and as the enterprise is weighty and difficult, so the honor is more worthy, to plant a rude wilderness, to enlarge the honor and fame of our dread sovereign, but chiefly to display the efficacy and power of the gospel, both in zealous preaching, professing, and wise-walking under it, before the faces of these poor blind infidels."

"As for such as object the tediousness of the voyage thither, the danger of pirates' robbery, of the savages' treachery, &c., these are but lions in the way; and it were well for such men if they were in heaven. For who can show them a place in this world where iniquity shall not compass them at the heels, and where they shall have a day without grief, or a lease of life for a moment? And who can tell, but God, what dangers may lie at our doors, even in our native country, or what plots may be abroad, or when God will cause our sun to go down at noon-day, and, in the midst of our peace and security, lay upon us some lasting scourge for our so long neglect and contempt of His most glorious gospel?"

The author of these Reasons and Considerations was one of the friends from whom the first emigrants had parted with aching hearts, when the Speedwell put back a second time to Plymouth, and landed not only the cowardly and faint-hearted, but the faithful and true partners in their enterprise, who were thus compelled to abandon hopes so fondly cherished and defended. He also, as we have seen, was one of those whom the settlers welcomed amid mingling hope and apprehension, when the good ship Fortune cast anchor in the Bay. But for such friends privations might be borne; and we can the better understand the patient, uncomplaining endurance of their hard lot, which the colonists displayed, after glancing at the simple declaration of the motives and inducements to emigration set forth by Robert Cushman.

There is no high-colored picturing of a paradise of plenty amid the forests of the New World, where the wanderers should forget all cares, and bask in the delights of an eternal summer. Even after the first winter of death, and the second, wherein death's allies, privation and want, had threatened extermination to the colonists, they could still read these Reasons and confess their justice and candor, as well as the encouraging assurance which their calm Christian confidence was so well calculated to yield.

In the month of May, 1622, amid the severe privations to which we have alluded, the colonists had other additions to their cares, arising from the knavery of Squanto, their Indian interpreter. In his ambition to increase his own consequence, both with the settlers and the Indians, he had plotted and counter-plotted in a way that threatened to involve them in an exterminating war. Not the least ingenious device of the Indian plotter for raising his own importance, along with that of his English allies, in the estimation of his fellow-savages; was a story he narrated to them, in order to fill them with the dread of utter extermination, at the will of the colonists, by the same mysterious pestilence which had already depopulated so vast an area of the American continent. Less scrupulous colonists would have readily availed themselves of such falsehoods to secure a hold on the superstitious fears of the Indians, but these exiles for conscience' sake had learned not to do evil that good may come. They hastened to tell the untutored savage that God alone holds in His hands that dread power, before which the red warriors of the forest had faded away like the leaves of its autumn foliage.

"Let me not omit," says the historian of the colony, "one notable, though wicked practice of this Squanto; who, to the end he might possess his countrymen with the greater fear of us, and so consequently of himself, told them we had the plague buried in our store-house; which at our pleasure, we could send forth to what place or people we would, and destroy them therewith, though we stirred not from home. Being, upon the forenamed brabbles, sent for by the Governor to this place where Hobbamock was and some other of us, the ground being broke in the midst of the house whereunder certain barrels of powder were buried though unknown to him, Hobbamock asked him what it meant. To whom he readily answered, That was the place wherein the plague was buried, whereof he formerly told him and others. After this Hobbamock asked one of our people, whether such a thing were, and whether we had such command of it; who answered, No; but the God of the English had it in store, and could send it at his pleasure to the destruction of his and our enemies."

"This was, as I take it, about the end of May, 1622; at which time our store of victuals was wholly spent, having lived long before with a bare and short allowance."

Massasoit, the Indian ally of the colonists, was filled with the utmost indignation on learning of the machinations of the knavish interpreter, and demanded that Governor Bradford should give him up to him to be put to death. The Governor interceded for him, and dismissed the Sachem's messenger with many friendly assurances; but he speedily returned, accompanied with others, one of whom bore Massasoit's own knife, with which, according to the Indian custom, the offender was to be beheaded. Along with this, the Indians brought a valuable collection of skins, with which they sought to win the favor, and purchase the concurrence, of the Governor, to this act of savage justice. To this he replied by telling them that it was not the custom of the English to sell men's lives at a price, and while he acknowledged that the traitor well merited death, he again dismissed the messengers to renew the plea of mercy.

While these negotiations were in progress, the colonists found new cause of alarm in a boat which was seen to cross the Bay in front of their settlement, and disappear behind a neighboring headland. They dreaded the realization of many rumors which had reached them of a threatened attack by the French, and feared that advantage had been taken of the differences between them and the neighboring Indians to bring about an alliance between the latter and the European foe of the English colonists. With such foes united to their Indian enemies, all hope of safety or successful defence must have proved utterly vain. But though these fears were not realized, the strange boat was the harbinger of other and scarcely less imminent dangers.

The boat proved to belong to a fishing vessel called the Sparrow, which brought an addition of seven new colonists to add to their number, but without the slightest provision for a day's supply of food. At this very time tradition tells that they were reduced to their last pint of corn, which, being parched and distributed among them, yielded the fearful mockery of five seedling kernels to each individual. It may be that the generous hearts of the colonists felt even more sadness at the inhospitable welcome which they were compelled to offer to their friends, than at the additional difficulties arising from added numbers at such a season.

The boat, however, though it brought no provision from the Sparrow, conveyed letters pregnant with hope and fear. One from Mr. Weston, one of the merchant adventurers, under whose auspices the first band of New England Pilgrims had sailed, coldly informed them that his interest and theirs were no longer one. The other letter was from Captain Huddleston, a total stranger to the colonists, who commanded a ship engaged in the fishing trade along the North American coast. From the latter they learned of the massacre of four hundred English settlers in Virginia by the savage natives; so that, even in the depth of their severe privations, they had to acknowledge that mercy mingled with their trials, and that the unseen hand of a kind Providence had watched over them in the land of their adoption.

(To be Continued.)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC FOR 1890.

JANUARY.

1 W We love Him, because He first loved us. 1sa 52: 12.
2 F The Lord will go before you. 1sa 52: 12.
3 F The Lord will perfect. Ps. 138: 8.
4 S What I say unto you, I say unto all. Watch.
5 S Compel them to come in. Luke 14: 24.
6 M Be anxious for your own ways. Ez. 36: 27.
7 T Instructed in the way of the Lord.
8 W Who shall deliver me from the body?
9 F He hath heard my supplication.
10 F Whom He did predestinate, them He called.
11 S With the Lord is plenteous redemption.
12 S He hath prepared for them a city.
13 M When I see the blood I will pass over you.
14 T Unto you which believe He is precious.
15 W No man cometh unto the Father, but by 16 T My beloved is mine and I am His. [Me].
17 F My peace I give unto you.
18 S Fight the Lord's battles. 1 Sam. 18: 17.
19 S I will put my spirit within you. Ezek. 36.
20 M He showed them His hands. Lu. 24: 40. [27]
21 T Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God. Eph. 4.
22 W I know whom I have believed. [30]
23 T Come unto Me, and I will give you rest.
24 F What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?
25 S Set your affection on things above. Col. 3: 2.
26 S Bounded together for habitation unto God.
27 M Christ who is our life shall appear.
28 T Who maketh thee to differ from another?
29 W The justifier of him which believeth in 30 T Let him that is athirst come. [Jesus].
31 F Show me wherefore thou contendest.

FEBRUARY.

1 S Thou hast not forsaken them that seek
2 S Believe and thou shalt be saved. [Thee].
3 M It is good for me to draw near to God.
4 T Are there not with you sinners against your 5 W All things are of God. 1 Cor. 5: 18. [God?]
6 T Forgiveness of sins. Eph. 1: 7.
7 F Who can understand His errors?
8 S Heilleth thee with the finest of the wheat.
9 S Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin.
10 M O Lord, truly I am Thy servant. Ps. 116: 16.
11 T He shall bring all things to your remem-
12 W Thou hast cast all my sins behind. [brance].
13 T Except ye see wonders ye will not believe.
14 F I have learned to be content. Phil. 4: 11.
15 S Let My people go, that they may serve Me.
16 S Cause Jerusalem to know her abominations.
17 M O love the Lord, all ye His saints. [tions].
18 T The hand of the Lord hath wrought this.
19 W Believe that ye receive, and ye shall have.
20 T O thou whom my soul loveth! Cant. 1: 7.
21 F If thine eye be single. Matt. 6: 22.
22 S Washington's Birthday.
23 S Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at 24 M The Spirit beareth witness. [hand].
25 T I will be as the dew unto Israel.
26 W The wicked shall be turned into hell.
27 T Without Me ye can do nothing. John 15: 5.
28 F I can do all things through Christ.

MARCH.

1 S Created in Jesus Christ. Eph. 2: 10.
2 S That ye may know the hope of His calling.
3 M What is a man profited, if he lose his soul.
4 T Blessed is the man that endureth tempta-
5 W In returning and rest shall ye be saved. [tion].
6 T Jesus Christ maketh thee whole. Acts 9: 34.
7 F Able to succor them that are tempted.
8 S It is of faith that it might be by grace.
9 S The name of the Lord is a strong tower.
10 M If thou seek Him, He will be found of thee.
11 T Knock, and it shall be opened unto you.
12 W By grace ye are saved through faith.
13 T In all their affliction He was afflicted.
14 F The grace of God bringeth salvation.
15 S Great peace have they which love Thy law.
16 S Perfecting holiness in the fear of God.
17 M I will never leave thee. Heb. 13: 5.
18 T I will be as the dew unto Israel. Hos. 14: 5.
19 W Be ye followers of God? Eph. 5: 1.
20 T Let the peace of God rule. Col. 3: 15.
21 F Let us draw near with a true heart.
22 S Keep yourselves from idols. 1 John 5: 21.
23 T In My Father's house are many mansions.
24 M The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.
25 T Here we have no continuing city.
26 W For Thy name's sake guide me. Ps. 31: 3.
27 T The preaching of the Cross is power.
28 F Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I.
29 S Unto you which believe He is precious.
30 S I am Thy God who teacheth thee to profit.
31 M Knowledge puffeth, charity edifieth.

APRIL.

1 T An advocate with the Father. 1 John 2: 11.
2 W Serve God with a perfect heart.
3 T Thou preparest a table before me. Ps. 23: 6.
4 F Good Friday. It is finished. John 19: 30.
5 S Endure hardness as a good soldier of Christ.
6 S Easter Sunday. He is not here, He is 7 M Thy own. 1 Cor. 6: 19, 20. [risen].
8 T Tempted like as we are. Heb. 4: 15.
9 W Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus.
10 T Is not the Lord with you? 1 Chron. 22: 18.
11 F Lead me into the land of uprightness.
12 S Make Thy way straight. Ps. 5: 8.
13 S Renewed in the spirit of your mind.
14 M If sinners entice thee, consent thou not.
15 T Not I, but Christ liveth in me. Gal. 2: 20.
16 W Give Thy servant an understanding heart.
17 T I will bless the Lord at all times. Ps. 34: 1.
18 F Hair of the righteousness. Heb. 11: 7.
19 S My people shall know My name. Isa. 52: 6.
20 S Whom having not seen ye love. 1 Pet. 1: 8.
21 M Trust in the Lord with all thine heart.
22 T Let your light so shine before men.
23 W I will dwell among Israel. 1 Kings 6: 13.
24 T Who crowneth thee with lovingkindness.
25 F So shall we ever be with the Lord.
26 S Be not conformed to this world. Rom. 12: 2.
27 S Be not weary in well-doing. 1 Thess. 3: 13.
28 M True and righteous are Thy judgments.
29 T God commendeth His love toward us.
30 W The afflicted people Thou shalt save.

MAY.

1 T Is the Lord's hand waxed short?
2 F With Him is plenteous redemption.
3 S Set me as a seal upon thine heart.
4 S Serving the Lord with all humility.
5 M Surely the Lord is in this place.
6 T Joint-heirs with Christ. Rom. 8: 17.
7 W Lord, I will follow Thee. Luke 9: 61.
8 T Thy King cometh unto thee. Matt. 21: 5.
9 F Truly our fellowship is with the Father.
10 S Woe to them that are at ease in Zion.
11 S Who shall repay Him what He hath done.
12 M Of His fulness have all we received.
13 T Blessed are the peacemakers. Matt. 5: 9.
14 W The word of the Lord endureth forever.
15 T My beloved is mine, and I am His.
16 F Ascribe ye greatness unto our God.
17 S Whose trusteth in the Lord, happy is he.
18 S Continue in prayer, and watch. Col. 4: 2.
19 M Renew a right spirit within me. Ps. 51: 10.
20 T Why do ye not believe Me? John 8: 46.
21 W The name of the Lord is a strong tower.
22 T Hitherto hath the Lord helped us.
23 F I know that My Redeemer liveth.
24 S I will love them freely. Hos. 14: 4.
25 S Whit Sunday. Acts 2: 3.
26 M The Lord is a jealous God. Exod. 34: 14.
27 T O satisfy us early with Thy mercy.
28 W Gartner not my soul with sinners.
29 T Thou God seest me. Gen. 16: 13.
30 F Decoration Day. Forever with the Lord.
31 T I will be their God. Jer. 31: 33.

JUNE.

1 S They that be whole need not a physician.
2 M Lord, dost thou wash my feet? John 13: 6.
3 T For Christ's sake. Eph. 4: 32.
4 W God is faithful, by whom ye were called.
5 T Call unto Me, and I will answer thee.
6 F The precious blood of Christ. 1 Pet. 1: 19.
7 S Underneath are the everlasting arms.
8 S Whom He justified, them He also glorified.
9 M Able to keep you from falling. Jude 24.
10 T Mine iniquity have I not hid. Ps. 52: 5.
11 W Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord.
12 T Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.
13 F New on whom dost Thou trust?
14 S He shall feed His flock like a shepherd.
15 T It is the Spirit that quickeneth. John 6: 63.
16 M Satan hindered us. 1 Thess. 2: 18.
17 T Why stand ye here all the day idle?
18 W This Man receiveth sinners. Luke 15: 2.
19 T Walk in the light, as He is in the light.
20 F Lord, let it alone this year also.
21 S We walk by faith, not by sight.
22 S I do remember my faults this day.
23 M Thy gentleness hath made me great.
24 T Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice.
25 W Then said I, Here am I; send me.
26 T Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.
27 F Joy and peace in believing. Rom. 15: 13.
28 S Out of weakness were made strong.
29 T I will put My laws into their hearts.
30 M Praying in the Holy Ghost. Jude 20.

JULY.

1 T Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us.
2 W We shall see Him as He is. 1 John 3: 2.
3 T To-day I must abide at thy house.
4 F Independence Day.
5 S He only is my rock and my salvation.
6 S Even to hoar hairs will I carry you.
7 M Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned.
8 T Do as Thou hast said. 1 Sam. 7: 25.
9 W Boast not thyself of to-morrow.
10 T Therefore brethren, we are debtors.
11 F They hated Me without a cause.
12 S If He turn not, He will whet His sword.
13 S Why could not we cast Him out?
14 M Escape for thy life. Gen. 19: 17.
15 T That I may know Him. Phil. 3: 10.
16 W A friend of publicans and sinners.
17 T He found nothing but leaves. Mark 11.
18 F From Me is thy fruit found. Hosea 14.
19 S I will pour My spirit upon thy seed.
20 S God, that cannot lie. Titus 1: 2.
21 M It is expedient for you that I go away.
22 T Let us go forth, bearing His reproach.
23 W If God be for us, who can be against us?
24 T Suffer the little children to come unto Me.
25 F Speak, Lord; for Thy servant heareth.
26 S I am sent to thee with heavy tidings.
27 S And He arose and came to His father.
28 M Behold I now is the accepted time.
29 T Son, go work to-day in My vineyard.
30 W Thou hast the words of eternal life.
31 T Walk in newness of life. Rom. 6: 4.

AUGUST.

1 F I, even I, am He that comforteth you.
2 S He hath put a new song in my mouth.
3 S They forsook all, and followed Him.
4 M Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace.
5 T Thy counsels are faithfulness and truth.
6 W Son of David, have mercy on me.
7 T One Lord, one faith, one baptism. Eph. 4.
8 F Continuing instant in prayer. Rom. 12: 12.
9 S Rejoice in hope of the glory of God.
10 S Let us labor to enter into that rest.
11 M Take ye heed; watch and pray. Mark 13.
12 T Ye must be born again. John 3: 7.
13 W In understanding be ye men. 1 Cor. 14.
14 T O love the Lord, all ye His saints.
15 F He healeth the broken in heart.
16 S Speaking the truth in love. Eph. 4: 15.
17 S Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way.
18 M Rest in the Lord, wait patiently for Him.
19 T Holden with the cords of His sins. Pro. 5.
20 W He will ever be mindful of His covenant.
21 T Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe.
22 F Give Thy strength unto Thy servant.
23 W Sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise.
24 S The fruit of the Spirit is love. Gal. 5: 22.
25 M He led him about, He instructed Him.
26 T God now commendeth all men to repent.
27 W Teach me, O Lord, the way of Thy statutes.
28 T Sin shall not have dominion over you.
29 F Kept by the power of God through faith.
30 S I am the Bread of Life. John 6: 35.
31 S Lord, evermore give us this Bread.

SEPTEMBER.

1 M Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day.
2 T Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him.
3 W Your faith groweth exceedingly.
4 T A great way off his father saw him.
5 F Are ye now made perfect by the flesh?
6 S This man receiveth sinners. Luke 15: 2.
7 S Not to be ministered unto, but to minister.
8 M No man can come to Me, except the Father
9 T Give an account of thy stewardship. [draw].
10 W Jesus came into the world to save sinners.
11 T The hairs of your head are all numbered.
12 F If I had not come they had not had sin.
13 S The peace of God, shall keep your hearts.
14 S Beloved, now are we the sons of God.
15 M So run, that ye may obtain. 1 Cor. 9: 24.
16 T Wine and milk without money.
17 W It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.
18 T Joy over one sinner that repenteth.
19 F He has come to seek that which was lost.
20 S I was found of them that sought Me not.
21 S Faithful over a few things. Matt. 25: 23.
22 M Ye that love the Lord hate evil. Ps. 97: 10.
23 T As thy days, so shall thy strength be.
24 W I will take away the stony heart.
25 T I have somewhat against thee. Rev. 2: 4.
26 F Thou hast left thy first love. Rev. 2: 4.
27 S God be merciful to me a sinner. Luke 18: 13.
28 S They looked unto Him and were lightened.
29 M Examine yourselves.
30 T The blood cleanseth us from all sin.

OCTOBER.

1 W I am the Lord, I change not. Mal. 3: 6.
2 T Ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you.
3 F The Comforter shall teach you all things.
4 S A bruised reed shall He not break.
5 S Christ the power of God. 1 Cor. 1: 24.
6 M This do in remembrance of Me. 1 Cor. 11: 24.
7 T Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is lib-8 W Thou hast made us Kings and priests. [erty].
9 T One chosen out of the people. Ps. 89: 19.
10 F So He giveth I is beloved sleep. Ps. 127: 2.
11 S Our consolation also aboundeth by Christ.
12 S Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the 13 M Come to Me that ye might have life. [world].
14 T I have written to him great things of My 15 W See the place where T. E. Lord lay. [law].
16 T He hath made an everlasting covenant.
17 F The carnal mind is enmity against God.
18 S Let him that thinketh he standeth, take 19 M I, even I, will not remember thy sins. [heed].
20 T The sting of death is sin. 1 Cor. 15: 56.
21 T Who is sufficient for these things?
22 W When I awake with Thy likeness.
23 T His name shall endure forever. Ps. 72: 17.
24 F There shall be showers of blessing.
25 S With my soul have I desired Thee.
26 S Lord, increase our faith. Luke 17: 5.
27 M Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us.
28 T He shall choose our inheritance for us.
29 W I have chosen Thee in affliction.
30 T Despise not now the chastening of the 31 F Oh that I were as in months past. [Lord].

NOVEMBER.

1 S Grow in grace. 1 Pet. 3: 18.
2 S Casting all your care upon Him. 1 Pet. 5: 7.
3 M If a man die, shall he live again? Job 14: 14.
4 T Sanctified in Christ Jesus. 1 Cor. 1: 2. [14].
5 W He did it with all his heart. 1 Chron. 31.
6 T Who through faith obtained promises. [21].
7 F Thou hast hid Thy face from us. Isa. 64: 7.
8 S The Lord is my portion, saith my soul.
9 S Let him take the water of life freely.
10 M In due time Christ died for the ungodly.
11 T For the Lord's portion is His people.
12 W One day is with the Lord as a thousand.
13 T Deliver us from evil. Luke 11: 4. [years].
14 F Delight thyself also in the Lord. Ps. 37: 4.
15 S The love of Christ which passeth knowl-
16 T I will give you an heart of flesh. [edge].
17 M It is not a vain thing for you. Deut. 32: 47.
18 F He bare the sin of many. Isa. 53: 12.
19 W Repent ye, and believe the gospel.
20 T There is nothing too hard for Thee.
21 F If any man serve Me, let Him follow Me.
22 S None that I desire beside Thee.
23 S What meanest thou, O sleeper? Jonah 1: 6.
24 M Our conversation is in heaven. Phil. 3: 20.
25 T He hath made us accepted in the Beloved.
26 W All things are possible to him that believ-27 T Thanksgiving Day. Ebenezer. [eth].
28 F He hath said, I will never leave thee.
29 S He will discover thy sins. Lam. 4: 22.
30 S The fashion of this world passeth away.

DECEMBER.

1 M Without faith it is impossible to please
2 T Will He plead against me? [God].
3 W Tell how great things the Lord hath done.
4 T For me to live is Christ and to die is gain.
5 F As many as I love I rebuke and chasten.
6 S He saved them for His name's sake.
7 S Cleanse thou me from secret faults.
8 M Lovest thou me more than these?
9 T Without shedding of blood is no remission.
10 W A friend that sticketh closer than a brother.
11 T Make your calling and election sure. [er].
12 F Salvation is of the Lord. Jonah 2: 9.
13 S He shall deliver thee from the snare.
14 S Justified freely by His grace. Rom. 3: 24.
15 M You hath He quickened, who were dead.
16 T Christ is the power of God and the wisdom.
17 W How long halt ye between two opinions?
18 T Keep back thy servant from presumptu-19 F Just and true are Thy ways. [ous sins].
20 S The Lord is slow to anger.
21 S I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto 22 M He hath made Him to be sin for us. [Me].
23 T It shall be well with them that fear God.
24 W There remaineth therefore a rest.
25 T Christmas Day. Luke 1: 2.
26 F Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.
27 S I have sinned. Exodus 9: 27.
28 S Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed 29 M All things work good to them that love it 30 T Mighty to save. Isaiah 63: 1. [God].
31 W My soul, wait thou only upon God.

Astronomical Calculations for 1890.

ECLIPSES.

THERE will be three Eclipses this year, all invisible in the United States:

- I. An Annular Eclipse of the Sun, June 17, at 5 A. M.
- II. A Partial Eclipse of the Moon, November 26, at 8.38 A. M.
- III. An Eclipse of the Sun, December 11, at 10.19 A. M.
- IV. There will be a Lunar Appulse, June 3, at 1.30 A. M., visible in the United States.

MORNING STARS.

Mars, from January 1 to February 9.
Jupiter, " " 10 " May 1.
Venus, " " 1 " February 18.
" " December 3 " January 1.
Saturn, " August 30 " December 8.

EVENING STARS.

Saturn, from January 1 to August 30.
" " December 8 " January 1.
Jupiter, " January 1 " " 10.
" " May 1 " " 1.
Mars, " February 9 " " 1.
Venus, " " 18 " December 3.

CHURCH DAYS AND CYCLES OF TIME.

Septuagesima Sunday.....February 2
Sexagesima "....." 9
Quinquagesima "....." 16
Ash-Wednesday....." 19
Mid-Lent Sunday.....March 16
Good Friday.....April 4
Easter Day....." 6
Ascension Day.....May 15
Whitsunday....." 25
Trinity Sunday.....June 1
First Sunday in Advent.....November 30
Dominical Letter.....E

Ephat.....9
Golden Number.....10
Solar Cycle.....23
Roman Indiction.....2
Dionysian Period.....219
Julian ".....6803

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Letters prepaid by stamps, 2 cts. each or fraction thereof to all parts of the United States and Canada. For registering letters 10 cts. additional. Diop or local letters, 1 ct. each or prepaid; 2 cts. in cities with carriers. Government Post Letters, one cent each; if anything except address is pasted on a postal card, letter postage is charged. For 10 cts. additional, immediate delivery of any letter in places designated by the Department. Second-class matter: Postage on all new payers and periodicals sent to any part of the United States to subscribers must be prepaid at the office of mailing. 1 cent each for four ounces or part. Fourth-class matter: On all blank cards or envelopes, seeds, cuttings, bulbs, drawings, samples of merchandise, etc., the postage is 1 cent for each ounce.

"DAY BY DAY"

Trust to the Lord to hide thee,
Wait on the Lord to guide thee,
So shall no ill betide thee,
Day by day.

Rise with His fear before thee,
Tell of the love He bore thee,
Sleep with His shadow o'er thee,
Day by day.

Clouds with their silver lining,
Hopes and fears intertwining,
God on thee through them shining,
Day by day.

Such may be thy surrounding,
Still let His praise be sounding,
Praise for His grace abounding
Day by day.

Waiting for His appearing,
Watching the mist-clouds clearing,
Bright hopes thy spirit cheering,
Day by day.

Take this as New Year Message,
Bringing the sweet, glad presage
Of coming strength and courage,
Day by day.

—Ella Travers Poole.

Keep your blood pure and healthy and you will not have rheumatism. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives the blood vitality and richness, and tones the whole body. Give it a trial now.

SILKS.

James McCreery & Co.

are showing for the Holidays, and the Ball season the very latest ideas of Fashion in Rich Silk Novelties.

They also show large assortment of styles equally handsome and effective, but not quite so novel, at greatly reduced prices.

Plain Silks have been specially made to combine with the above, thus avoiding the annoyance frequently experienced in making combinations.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

National Temperance Almanac,
And Teetotalers' Year Book for 1896.

Contains 72 pages of Statistics of Intemperance,
Anecdotes, Stories, Puzzles, Choice Illustrations, Post-office Address of Officers of State and National Bodies, a full Directory of all Temperance Organizations in New York City and Brooklyn, all Temperance Papers, etc., etc.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Ten cents, single copies; $1 per dozen; $7 per hundred. Address
J. N. STEARNS, Publishing Agent,
58 Reade Street, New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTY
—ORGANS—
DETROIT, MICH., U.S.A.

FREE samples of cloth the famous Plymouth Rock #3 Pants are cut from, including full measurement blanks and linen tape-measure, if you mention this paper. Address Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Eliot St., Boston, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipissowa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers.
Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by
C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressing needed, and can be mailed to the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect
Tea, A TRIAL ORDER OF
3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English
Breakfast, or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P.O. Box 289, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach, 4 sizes cans.
Pamphlet free. Wholesale & Co.
(on every label). Palmer, Mass.

AGENTS WANTED to sell
The Christian Legacy,
One agent writes: "I have a record of hours worked, in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 89 orders." Another: "I have read the book daily. Its plan is new to me, and the amount of precious truth and Bible information it contains is a surprise. The book will be highly prized by devout minds, and has the food that the genuine Christian relishes." W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau
St., New York.

A CUP OF BLESSING

Every Day in the Year,

Being a Birthday Book of Cheering and Consola-
tory Texts, selected from Scripture and other sources, with a verse of selected poetry for each day. Beautifully bound in padded silk covers, and gift edge, 250 pages and index. Sent by mail, in box, post-paid, for 50 cents, by

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

If You Want

a PULPIT BIBLE,
a FAMILY BIBLE,
a TEACHER'S BIBLE,
HELPS TO BIBLE STUDY,
(Concordances, Commentaries, etc.)
BOOKS FOR THE AGED,
BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG,
BOOKS FOR THE CHILDREN,
a HYMN BOOK OR SONG BOOK,
the Picture of Christ on Calvary,
the Picture of Christ before Pilate.
to buy anything in this line,
to be our Agent and make money.

Write to or call upon

THOS. T. TASKER, Sr., Publisher,
921 Arch St., Philadelphia.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
ACT LIKE MAGIC ON A WEAK STOMACH.
25cts. a Box
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

OPIUM (Morphine Habit, Opium Smoking)
etc., easily cured. Book Free. J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wisconsin.

A Gem For The Little Folks.

THE STORY OF JESUS

For Little Children.

By MRS. G. E. MORTON.

Fully Illustrated.

12mo, 316 Pages,
Cloth, Printed in Colors,
$1.00, post-paid.

"Told in simple words and a very handsome book.
How wonderful that the biography of the Son of the Father is better adapted than any other to be told to little children. Angels study it; devils dive into it; babies love it. Blessed be the Story of Jesus."—C. L.
SPURGEON.

"The demand for a fourth edition of this pleasant and instructive work shows that it has already met with considerable favor. Planned something on the same lines as the 'Peep of Day.' Several illustrations and an attractive binding add to its value as a Sunday-school prize or children's reward book."—The Bookseller.

"A difficult task well executed in simple, but not childish language, the 'old story' is told once more.
The holiness of our Lord, and the great object of His life are kept in prominence, while his intercourse with all classes is described in a life-like way. We heartily recommend the book, which is improved by neat wood-cuts."—The Christian

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

The Dingee & Conard Co's

Largest Rose Growers in America.

65
Large
Rose Houses.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.,

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites
Of Lime and Soda.

There are emulsions and emulsions, and there is still much skimmed milk which masquerades as cream. Try as they will many manufacturers cannot so disguise their cod liver oil as to make it palatable to sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion of PURE NORWEGIAN COD LIVER OIL, combined with Hypophosphites is almost as palatable as milk.
For this reason as well as for the fact of the stimulating qualities of the Hypophosphites, Physicians frequently prescribe it in cases of

CONSUMPTION,

SCROFULA, BRONCHITIS and CHRONIC COUGH or SEVERE COLD.

All Druggists sell it, but be sure you get the genuine, as there are poor imitations.

ASTHMA—TAPT'S ASTHMALE
address, we will mail trial BOTTLE
DR. TAPT BROS., ROCHESTER, N.Y. FREE

ROSES, HARDY PLANTS
BULBS and SEEDS.

OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., elegantly illustrated, sent FREE to ALL who write for it. It describes ar-tells HOW TO GROW over TWO THOUSAND FINEST varieties of ROSES, HARDY PLANT, BULBS and SEEDS. 15 NEW ROSES, NEW SHRUBBERY, NEW CLEMATIS and Climber
Vines, NEW SUMMER FLOWERING BULB
JAPAN LILIES, GLADIOLUS, TUBEROSE CARNATIONS, New JAPAN CHRYSANTH-
MUMS, New MOON FLOWERS, and the choice

NEW and RARE FLOWER and VEGETABLE SEED

Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. Safe arrival guaranteed. If you wish Roses, Plants, or Seeds of any kind, it will pay you to see our New Guide before buying. Send for it—free. Address
THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., ROSE GROWERS and West Grove, Pa.
SEEDSMEN.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL

handsomely illustrated with colored plates painted from nature, tells all about the BEST SEEDS including RARE NOVELTIES of sterling merit, which cannot be obtained elsewhere. It is mailed FREE to all who want really first-class Warranted Seeds.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE PILLOW-INHALER

Cures Catarrh, Bronchitis,
Asthma and Consumption.
Used the same as an ordinary pillow, and only at night while sleeping as usual. No pipes or tubes, and perfectly safe to the most delicate.
Concealed reservoirs hold the medicine (tar, iodine and other healing ingredients), the vapor or fumes of which is breathed in—not swallowed—and goes right to the diseased parts of the air passages from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs.

Mr. G. B. WAGGONER, 3205 Spencer Terrace, Philadelphia, says:
"I had Catarrh for six years, and tried many remedies in vain.
Hearing of the PILLOW-INHALER I bought one, and after using it a few months I am entirely well. I recommend it as a sure cure for Catarrh."

Hon. E. L. HEDDEN, Ex-Collector of the Port of N. Y., 38 West 49th St., New York, says: "The PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

Experience has proven, in many instances, that if the simple directions are followed it will often heal hopeless cases. Send for Pamphlet and Testimonials to
THE PILLOW-INHALER CO.,
1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS
is a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

MUSIC SALE

To reduce our stock of music
we will send by mail post-paid 70 pieces full sheet music size, including songs, marches, waltzes, &c., by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, &c., for only 25c WHILE SUPPLIES LAST. 100 songs, words and music. 10c. SATISFACTION GIVEN or money refund d.
C. L. HATHAWAY, 339 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

STENOGRAPHY

AND
TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or s hand taught personally (or by mail in your home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teach-long established; hundreds of graduates ho responsible positions; success guaranteed.
type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets
Write or call. VERMILYIE'S COLLEGE
816 Broadway, New York

PRICE We Sell DIRECT TO FAMIL
PIANOS ORGA
$150 to $1500 $85 to $
Absolutely Perfect!
Sent for trial in your own home before you
buy. Local Agents
must sell inferior instruments or charge double what we ask. Catalogue free
MARSHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
265 East 21st St., N.Y.

UNION INVESTMENT COMP

Capital, - - $1,000,000.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

7 per cent. investment interest semi-ann
The direct obligation of the Company is by business property and recommended by nient business men and bankers of Kansas
Send for circulars with full particulars.

W. P. RICE, Pres. } Union Investment
O. F. PAGE, Treas. }

AGENTS SALES MEN, CLER
LADIES—Every one can ma-money with or without canvassing. $100 per to that amount weekly. Greatest, most proand easiest opportunity to make money. Pr parties started on Salary and Commission such we supply the capital. Address M. M.
Manager, Box 152, New York Post Office.

OUTFIT 1430 DAYS' TIME TO ACQ
Guaranteed $100 profits. Acqui in four weeks or no pay, to t work at home. No competi-
G. JARVIS & CO., Racine

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XIII., No. 2. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF THE EX-EMPEROR AND THE EX-EMPRESS OF BRAZIL, Picture of Rio Janeiro. THE SURPRISES OF RELIGION. Dr. Talmage's Sermon at Vienna. A Visit to an Opium Den—Heathenism in America—A Brahman Youth's Ordeal.

DR. TALMAGE IN EGYPT: A Visit to the Pyramids—A Sail up the Nile—Standing on Holy Ground. ANECDOTES AT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS. THE THREATENING PESTILENCE. Gems from New Books: Gen. Grant's Day-Dreams—A Sleeping Sentinel—A Yankee in India. THE SONG OF ZACHARIAS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE EAR AND ITS PLANTER. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. PORTRAIT OF THE LATE ROBERT BROWNING. PICTURE OF RUSSIAN EXILES ON THE WAY TO SIBERIA. GRACE MAYLING'S TRIAL. (With Illustration.) THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. (Continued.)

DOM PEDRO II., EX-EMPEROR OF BRAZIL.

DONNA THERESA, EX-EMPRESS.

THE EX-EMPEROR AND LATE EX-EMPRESS OF BRAZIL.—THE CITY OF RIO JANEIRO.

THE EX-EMPEROR AND LATE EX-EMPRESS OF BRAZIL.

Origin of Portuguese Rule in Brazil—The Flight of the Braganzas from Portugal in 1807—Abdication of Dom Pedro I.—Beneficent Reign of Dom Pedro II.—How the Revolution Came—Unpopularity of the Princess Isabella—Army Changes—A Mutiny—Fonseca Called In to Suppress It—Decides for the Republic—Dom Pedro Notified—His Dignified Reply—Departure of the Imperial Family.

THE revolution in Brazil deserves more than the passing comment we have been able to give to it in our news columns; we, therefore, this week give portraits of the ex-Emperor, the ex-Empress, who has died since her departure from Brazil, and a picture of the city of Rio Janeiro. The history of the settlement of is full of interest, and may be briefly sketched. It had its origin in the arrogance and greed of Napoleon I., Emperor of France, who took upon himself to divide the kingdom of Portugal between France and Spain. When the French army went in 1807 to carry the partition into effect, the thoughts of the royal family turned naturally to Brazil as a refuge. That country had been allotted to Portugal by the Pope when, shortly after its discovery in the sixteenth century, he divided the whole continent between Spain and Portugal. England, the inveterate foe of Napoleon, was not wanting in the crisis, and as soon as it became known that the King of Portugal proposed to fly to Brazil, she sent a strong fleet to Lisbon to convoy him across the Atlantic.

The Braganzas in Brazil

The Royal Flight

is described with much spirit by Sir A. Alison. Preceded by the archives, treasure, plate, and most valuable effects, the Royal exiles (says the historian) drove in a long train to the water's edge. The insane Queen, who for sixteen years had lived in seclusion, came first. "A ray of light had penetrated her reason in this extremity, and she understood and approved the courageous act." The dense crowd at the place of embarkation was so great that the Prince had to force his way through with his own hand. The British squadron fired a royal salute. "Numbers, however, observed with superstitious dread that at the moment of the salute the sun became eclipsed, and they mournfully repeated the words, 'The House of Braganza has ceased to reign.'" It was one of the most prodigious migrations of courts and courtiers known to history; 15,000 persons joined the royal train. They descended on Brazil like a swarm of locusts, and the attempt to provide them with places and pensions nearly ruined the colony. The royal squadron had hardly cleared the bar at Lisbon when Junot's advanced guard came in sight; but the prey was well beyond his reach.

"A few years later King John, in recognition of his generous reception by the colonists, and of their growing importance, elevated Brazil to the rank of a kingdom, in union with the mother country, Portugal. He returned to Portugal in 1821, leaving his son Dom Pedro behind as Regent. Soon after, Brazil declared its independence, and Pedro I. became its first Emperor, renouncing, of course, all his claims on Portugal. Dom Pedro was forced into abdication by a successful revolution in 1831, and nine years later his successor, the Emperor Dom Pedro II., now in exile, was declared of age at fifteen, and began to reign."

The Reign of Pedro II.

has lasted nearly sixty years. He was born December 2, 1825. To men who retain the old reverence for "blue blood," he must be an object of reverence by his illustrious descent. In his veins flows the blood of the Braganzas, the Bourbons, and the Hapsburgs, families whose representatives have occupied for centuries the proudest thrones in Europe. His father was a Braganza, and his mother a Hapsburg, whose sister was the wife of Napoleon I. Yet a more striking and creditable contrast than that existing between Dom Pedro and the families to which he is allied by blood cannot be found. The faults and vices which have made those great names hateful to thousands have no existence in the great mind and noble spirit of the American monarch.

He was proclaimed Emperor in April, 1831, when he was little more than five years old. His father, Dom Pedro I., had incensed the people by banishing the most popular leaders, and by acts which aroused the suspicion that he was scheming to make his government a despotism as absolute as that of the Czar of Russia. Finally, in 1831, he abdicated and sailed for Portugal, leaving his three children—one son and two daughters—behind. The boy Emperor was at once proclaimed, and a council of three regents was elected by the Legislative chambers to superintend his education, and to carry on the business of the country in his name. Three years later two of the regents were dispensed with, and Brazil became practically a republic under Feljoe, who was elected sole regent by the Legislature. His administration was not successful, more than one of his measures having aroused doubts of his fidelity to the young Emperor. Arango Lima, his successor, also failed to satisfy the nation. In July, 1840, the patience of the people and the Legislature was exhausted, and, encouraged by the reports of the young Emperor's ability, he was declared of age.

It was soon found that the Emperor possessed wisdom rare at his age. He was modest, studious, and solicitous for the welfare of the nation. His first efforts were directed to organizing a scheme of national education, and he personally aided the statesmen entrusted with the duty of executing it. His next effort was to devise plans for the gradual extinction of slavery, and this became the most earnest and persistent labor of his life. He struggled to overcome the prejudices of his people in favor of slave labor, and, by planting colonies of European immigrants, to prove to them that their own interests would be promoted by employing free men instead of slaves. It was a gigantic task, and it was not until 1871 that he had the pleasure of signing a decree declaring free every child born of slave parents after that date.

How the Revolution Came has been told by press correspondents in Brazil of the American journals. Mr. A. M. Gibson, one of the most brilliant of these, says in a letter to the New York Times that "For some time a silent, steady, deepening conviction had been growing in the minds of intelligent Brazilians that a republican form of Government was inevitable. Various causes contributed to this end. The machinery of State was obsolete, and the administration of affairs, even by honest men, was obstructed by circumlocution and vexatious routine. Delays were inevitable, and almost interminable. The Council of State had become not only useless, but obstructive. The Ministry, in theory responsible to Parliament, if corrupt and daring, could in many ways defy public sentiment and avoid responsibility."

The pruning-knife of revolution was demanded in many ways. The provinces were without autonomy, and yet exercised sovereign powers where the nation alone should have been supreme. They could obstruct inter-provincial trade by levying imports on commerce between one another. The development of the grand resources of the country was impossible without the removal of this obstruction to free exchange and communication.

The hope and expectation was that these reforms might be postponed till the death of the Emperor occurred. Dom Pedro had the entire respect of the Brazilian people, but there was well-nigh universal dislike and

Distrust of His Daughter,

Princess Isabella, the legitimate heir to the throne. Her husband, Count d'Eu, a Bourbon, was equally disliked and distrusted. She is a religious bigot, a fanatical Roman Catholic; he a foreigner and believed to be an avaricious schemer.

The revolution was precipitated by the conduct of Affonso Celso, Viscount Preto, who was made Prime-Minister on June 7, 1889. A bold, unscrupulous man, shrewd and ambitious, he resolved on a daring policy. Clever, insinuating, plausible, and conscienceless, he played upon the religious side of the Princess, at same time letting her understand that the abdication of her father on account of enfeebled intellect must soon occur. He determined to hasten the abdication, as the Emperor could easily be persuaded that his daughter's position as Empress would be more secure if assumed during his lifetime than it would be after his death. It was finally arranged that the Emperor should abdicate on December 2, and after that arrangement was made all Preto's efforts were concentrated on securing a quiet transference of power from the hands of the Emperor to those of the Princess.

The first step was to remove the only obstacle that stood in the way of complete and lasting success. The army officers, he knew, could not be depended upon. The great majority of them were imbued with Republican principles. Field Marshal Deodoro da Fonseca disliked Count d'Eu, nominal Commander-in-Chief, and his wife, the Princess Imperial. The devotion of the rank and file of the army to Marshal Deodoro was unquestioned.

The plan was to create a National Guard and officer it with the creatures of the ministry, and disperse the regular army to the frontiers of Bolivia and Peru. The execution of this scheme was begun by sending the Twenty-second Regiment to the province of Amazonas. It was to be followed up by dispatching two battalions to Matto Grosso.

The Republicans penetrated the secret motive of these changes, and at once began arranging plans for revolution. Their leader, Quintino Bocayuva, went quietly through the country, visiting the chiefs of the party and notifying them that the hour of change was at hand, and would not be later than December 2, when the Emperor was to abdicate in favor of his daughter.

A Stupid Act

of the Prime-Minister precipitated revolution. On November 15 he ordered the Ninth Battalion to go aboard a transport in the harbor, which was to convey them, via the river Plate, the Parana and Paraguay, to Columbia. Neither arms nor ammunition were to be taken from the barracks. The officers and men promptly refused to go, and the men at once seized their arms, supplied themselves with ammunition, and marched out of the barracks. As this was open mutiny, it was reported to Field Marshal Deodoro da Fonseca, the General of the Army, who, though at heart a Republican, might be expected to enforce discipline in the army. Fonseca with his staff soon arrived on the scene. He was received with cheers by the troops. He issued orders for the First and Ninth regiments of cavalry to report to him immediately. There was a quiet conference with the commanders of the marines, Captains Osta and Pestana, and it was decided to proclaim the Republic forthwith. Fonseca at once issued an order for the arrest of the Ministers, which was executed, and then the Emperor, who was at Petropolis, was notified and requested to return to the capital.

Marshal Deodoro da Fonseca assumed the title of Chief of the Executive Power; Benjamin Constant Botelho de Magalhães that of Minister of War; Eduardo Wandenhoik, a naval officer, that of Minister of Marine; Ruy Barbosa that of Minister of the Treasury; Quintino Bocayuva that of Minister of Agriculture, Commerce, and Public Works, and ad interim of Foreign Relations; Campos Salles, of Sao Paulo, was Minister of Justice.

The afternoon passed away quietly, no business being transacted in the city proper. But in Botofogo, Lajeiras, and other suburbs work went on as usual. Gangs of workmen, who for months have been engaged in laying a large water main along the Rua Cotellet, never ceased work. The cars ran all day long. The English Bank of Rio de Janeiro did not close its doors. The post-office remained open all day. Mounted couriers, officers accompanied by orderlies, dashed through the streets, and occasionally squads of cavalry rode hither and thither. The troops, after standing an hour or more on Rua Primeiro do Marco, were marched back to the Quartel. The city was declared to be in a state of siege. Soldiers took the place of police in patrolling the streets, and guards were posted about all the banks for their protection. The self-appointed Ministers took formal possession of the different departments, and, practically, before sundown, so far as possession was concerned, the provisional Government held all the machinery of the National Government in Rio de Janeiro, the capital.

The Emperor's Departure

could not be long delayed after these events. He and the Empress left Petropolis, with their attendants, by special train, and reached the station of the Dom Pedro Segundo Railway, opposite Praça de Acclamação, about 4 o'clock. A military guard received and at once escorted them to the old City Palace on the Praça Dom Pedro Segundo. Here the Count d'Eu and the Princess Isabella joined them. The deposed Ministers, who had been permitted to leave the Quartel, visited the Emperor, and formally presented their resignations. A guard was stationed about the palace, but access thereto was not denied those whose presence was desired by the Emperor. The Emperor during the evening summoned such of his Councillors of State as were accessible, and a formal council was held.

The Republican leaders carefully avoided the appearance of making the Emperor a prisoner. They were, however, determined to compel the abdication of the Emperor and his immediate retirement, accompanied by his whole family, to Europe. They most ardently desired to avoid forcible means, and wished to show as much respect as possible to the good old man who for nearly half a century had been a well-meaning ruler. While the dislike of the Princess Isabella was almost universal, and her husband, Count d'Eu, was despised, still the wisely-terminated policy was to get rid of them with every possible outward show of respect.

Fonseca accordingly sent a letter to the Emperor, in the course of which he said: "In view of the situation—it causes us regret to say it to you, and we only do so in compliance with the most imperious duties—the presence of the imperial family in the country under the new situation created by the irrevocable resolution of the 15th inst., would be absurd, impossible, and provocative of troubles which the public safety imposes upon us the duty of avoiding."

"In obedience, therefore, to the urgent demands of the national voice, with all respect due to the dignity of the public functions you have been exercising, we are obliged to notify you that the provisional Government expects of your patriotism the sacrifice of leaving Brazilian territory, together with our family, within the shortest possible period."

"For this purpose there is marked for you the maximum time of twenty-four hours, which we expect you will not endeavor to exceed. The transportation of yourself and family to a European port will be for account of the State, the provisional government furnishing you for this purpose a ship, with the necessary military equipment, the embarkation to be effected with the most absolute safety for your person and those of your family, whose comfort and health will be cared for with the greatest solicitude during the voyage, and continuing to account to you for the income secured to you by law until upon this subject the coming Constituent Assembly may decide."

Dom Pedro wrote with his own hand the following reply: "In view of the representation which has been delivered to me to-day at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, I resolve, yielding to the power of circumstances, to depart with all my family for Europe to-morrow, leaving this country beloved by all of us, and for which I have exerted myself to give constant proofs of deeply seated love and dedication for most half a century, during which I filled the position of Chief of the State. In departing, therefore, with all the persons of my family, I shall always retain the most tender remembrances of Brazil in offering ardent prayers for its greatness and prosperity."

At 3 o'clock on November 17, twenty-three hours after the letter was written, an ordinary landau rattled over the stone pavement and stopped at the private entrance to the palace. Presently the guard presented arms as the door swung open, and Dom Pedro and his wife stepped out and entered the carriage. Two old attendants followed, and the driver cracked his whip, and drove to the landing-place, less than 200 yards distant, where steps descended to the water's edge. The Princess, Donna Isabella, and her husband, Count d'Eu, with a retinue of servants, followed on foot across the square. A small steam-launch was at the stairs. The feeble old man and his faithful, motherly looking spouse, in quite vigorous, got out of the carriage, and, after waiting the arrival of the others, arm in arm descended the steps, and were assisted by the attendants aboard the launch. The Count d'Eu, wife, and followers stepped lightly down and on board, and with a lazy puff the engine started, the screw turned the water a moment, and away from the shore of Brazil went the late imperial family to the boat Parahyba, which was waiting to carry them away from Brazil to Portugal, the home of their ancestors.

THE CITY OF RIO JANEIRO

Picture of which is given on our front page, is the capital of Brazil, and enjoys almost unequalled advantages in situation and climate. Its harbor compares with that of Sydney, Australia, the honor of being the finest in the world. Though it extends for seventeen miles, has an extreme breadth of twelve miles, and is so vast in extent that it is said to be capable of accommodating all the navies of the world, it is completely landlocked, the entrance being only a mile wide. To the left of this strait stands the colossal Sugarloaf Mountain. The city itself stands on the west shore of the harbor, about four miles from its mouth. It consists of two portions—the old town, which is laid out in squares, the streets being narrow and ill-paved, and the houses (built of granite, for the most part) generally two stories high; and the new, which is much better built and is well lit with gas. These two portions of the city are separated from one another by an immense square or park, the Campo de Santa Anna, in which stand many of the principal buildings. The Cathedral of Nossa Senhora da Gloria, which is a conspicuous object in the panorama below, stands on a lofty hill on the south side of the city, but, like the other churches of the city, possesses no particular architectural merit. Among the other noticeable buildings are the fine Hospital of Misericordia, the splendid Public Library, the Academy of Medicine, and the University and College of Dom Pedro II. There is generally a great deal of commercial bustle and much social activity.

The climate of Rio resembles a perpetual spring; but this apparently charming characteristic has its drawbacks, for yellow fever is endemic in the Brazilian capital, and every year carries off a host of victims. Gradually, however, with the improvements in sanitation which have lately been introduced (and for this, again, the Brazilians are largely indebted to their late Emperor, Dom Pedro), this drawback may be expected to disappear.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Gen. Grant's Day Dreams.*

GENERAL GRANT said to a personal friend that his habit of day-dreaming never left him. When, after his resignation in early manhood from the army, he was working on a farm near St. Louis, he was accustomed to carry into the city a load of wood for sale, and then to ride back in his empty cart. As he rode he dreamed. His longing had been to command a regiment. And his wish, which now seemed a vain one, was to see Europe, with his wife to share his sight-seeing. A favorite dream of his, as he rode homeward in the dusky evening on that empty wood cart, was of himself as again in the army, this time as a full colonel; and then the dream would take him over the ocean for a tour of Europe. That day-dream was an inspiration and a hope to him until, at the close of his second term as President of the United States, with the military honors of a great chieftain freely accorded to him, he passed from country to country, as in a triumphal march, receiving the welcome of crowned heads and the greeting of hearts all the world round.

A Sleeping Sentinel.

At the close of the terrible series of seven days' fights in the vicinity of Richmond, in the second year of our civil war, when Gen. McClellan was making his move from the Chickahominy to the James, a detachment of cavalry was ordered in advance to the position which the Union army was to occupy near Harrison's Landing. A young officer of that detachment had assigned to him, at night, the picketing of an extended line with only ten men at his disposal. It was a critical time. His force was pitifully insufficient for the purpose; but it was all he had. The best he could do, therefore, must be the best he could. If he could guard that line until daybreak, he would do all that he was ordered to do. But his men were already well-nigh exhausted through prolonged active service without sleep; and he feared that some of them would be unable to keep awake. His own sense of responsibility enabled him to be sleepless even while as tired as any of his men. Anxious and faithful that young officer moved from post to post all the night through, keeping watch of the watchers. As he neared one man on his outpost duty he found him asleep. At a glance he took in the whole situation, and he acted in view of it. Arousing the sleeper he brought him face to face with his peril. Asleep on his post in the presence of the enemy! The penalty of that offence was death. The officer reminded the soldier of this. The soldier realized it. "But," added the officer, in generous consideration, "I know how tired you are, and I know the service which has worn you out. We are all tired together. But this line must be guarded, and we must keep awake to-night. Now give me your carbine, and lie down and get a nap. I'll take your place here for half an hour. Then you must get up and keep awake; for there's no relief for us until daybreak." And that officer carried out the arrangement to the letter. As the tired cavalryman stretched himself for his needed and longed-for sleep he realized as never before his indebtedness to one whose sleeplessness enabled him to sleep; and to the day of his death that lesson was never forgotten by him who learned it then and there. There is in fact no promise of God's loving fidelity to those who trust Him which is more precious as it stands than the promise of His tireless sleeplessness as the Watcher over His dear ones.

* From Aspirations and Influences. By H. Clay Trumbull. One of six dainty little volumes of essays full of bright original thoughts and sound Christian teaching. The six volumes in box, price $2.50. Published by John D. Wattles, Philadelphia.

A Yankee in India.

In a city mission school in Hartford, Conn., nearly forty years ago, a kind-hearted teacher toiled faithfully and endured patiently with one boy in his class who seemed thoroughly and hopelessly bad. He visited that boy in his wretched home, he invited him to his own pleasant room, he clothed him, found one place of employment after another for him, spoke to him always in kindness, counselling him and warning him untiringly, but all to no seeming purpose. The boy was still wild, coarse, profane, reckless, ungrateful. At last he ran away from his home, and shipped from New York on a vessel bound for Liverpool. The end had come to his life in that mission school; but what a harvest for all that sowing! Three years went by. Then from far up in British India word came from that boy saying that he was a soldier in the English army under Sir Colin Campbell, battling against the demon Sepoys. Already he had marched eight hundred miles, and endured untold privations and hardships. But there in that far land, shut in among the mountains, away from home and Christian surroundings, sick in body and sad in spirit, he had recalled the lessons of his Hartford teacher, and now the aftermath of that discouraged teacher's influence showed itself in his words of penitence and gratitude and of trust in his Redeemer's love.

A VISIT TO AN OPIUM DEN.

DR. MORISON, a medical missionary at Rampore-Bauleah, Rajshaye, India, relates: "I visited a shop at no great distance from my residence, and found an opium den attached. I stepped into the den, and found twelve men sitting down to their pipes. My sudden entrance was followed by a rush for the door, but I stayed them, and told them not to run out, but to tell me all about the habit. Many of the smokers I knew personally, all belonging to the laboring classes; a number of them were tailors, others day laborers, and one or two shopkeepers. They all settled down again, and two or three began to smoke. On looking over the smokers, I saw that most of them were sallow-complexioned, and one in the last stage of emaciation. I asked what was the effect of smoking upon them. They all with one accord said that it dried up their bodies, and the craving for it was such that they could not give it up. Any attempt at giving it up was followed by alarming diarrhoea, and sometimes dysentery, so that they had to fly to it again to stop their symptoms. They therefore said that if they gave it up they would die, 'but, sir, if you would give us some medicine to help us, then we might give it up.' 'Yes,' said one, 'those who go to the gaol have to give it up, and get stout and strong in gaol;' 'but,' added another, 'whenever they come out, their first money is spent in the "goolie" (or opium-smoking) shop.' I asked how many men came there. They said about fifty or more daily. This was the testimony of the shopkeeper, whose interest it is not to show too large a consumption, lest his license should be enhanced. I found none of them willing that these dens should be extended; on the contrary, all the men implored me to do what I could to have them closed, 'only let us die first, for if you deprive us of it suddenly we must die.' 'Ah!' said the shopkeeper, laughing, 'I don't think the Maharanee (the Queen) will close these shops; she gets too much money out of these opium ganja and liquor shops to think of closing them.' I replied, 'Not so; you are wrong. If the good Maharanee and the good people of England knew that these shops are demoralizing and destroying the people of this country, they would shut them up, and deliver you from the temptation.' The crowd outside had inconveniently increased, and I left, sad in heart at what I saw."

The Great Crisis from 1889 to 1901. By Rev.

M. Baxter. This is a 32-page pamphlet containing a résumé of his larger works, with diagrams and tables of prophetic dates. It has been specially prepared for distribution at meetings, lectures, etc., and is of a convenient size for sending in envelopes through the mails. Persons desiring to arouse the attention of their friends and the public to the momentous character of the period on which we are entering will find this a valuable means of assistance. Price Fourteen Cents per dozen, including postage. Address Manager, 45 Bible House, New York.

THE SURPRISES OF RELIGION.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached in Vienna, on Sunday, January 5, 1890.

"Behold, the half was not told me!" 1 Kings 10: 7.
Jerusalem a Spell of Fascination—Its Magnificent Monarch—Botanical Survivors of His Enterprise—His Wonderful Palace—His Royal Visitor—Her Decision for God—The Noble and Wealthy Last Among the Converts—Earnestness in Search of Truth—Religion a Surprise—Every Convert Astonished—A Greater Surprise to Come—The End of the Desert March.

APPEARING before you to-day, my mind yet agitated with the scenery of the Holy Land, from which we have just arrived, you will expect me to revert to some of the scenes once enacted there. Mark a circle around Lake Galilee, and another circle around Jerusalem, and you describe the two regions in which cluster memories of more events than in any other two circles. Jerusalem was that will hold me the rest of my life. Solomon had resolved that that city should be the centre of all sacred, regal, and commercial magnificence. He set himself to work, and monopolized the surrounding desert as a highway for his caravans. He built the city of Palmyra around one of the principal wells of the East, so that all the long trains of merchandise from the East were obliged to stop there, pay toll, and leave part of their wealth in the hands of Solomon's merchants. He manned the fortress Thapsacus, at the chief ford of the Euphrates, and put under guard everything that passed there. The three great products of Palestine—wine pressed from the richest clusters, and celebrated all the world over; oil, which in that hot country is the entire substitute for butter and lard, and was pressed from the olive branches until every tree in the country became an oil-well; and honey, which was the entire substitute for sugar—these three great products of the country Solomon exported, and received in return fruits and precious woods and the animals of every clime.

A Spell of Fascination

Solomon's Commerce.

He went down to Ezion-geber, and ordered a fleet of ships to be constructed, oversaw the workmen, and watched the launching of the flotilla which was to go out on more than a year's voyage to bring home the wealth of the then known world. He heard that the Egyptian horses were large and swift, and long-maned and round-limbed, and he resolved to purchase them, giving eighty-five dollars apiece for them, putting the best of these horses in his own stalls, and selling the surplus to foreign potentates at great profit.

He heard that there was the best of timber on Mount Lebanon, and he sent out one hundred and eighty thousand men to hew down the forest, and drag the timber through the mountain gorges, to construct it into rafts to be floated to Joppa, and from thence to be drawn by ox-teams twenty-five miles across the land to Jerusalem. He heard that there were beautiful flowers in other lands. He sent for them, planted them in his own gardens, and to this very day there are flowers found in the ruins of that city such as are to be found in no other part of Palestine, the lineal descendants of the very flowers that Solomon planted. He heard that in foreign groves there were birds of richest voice and most luxuriant wing. He sent out people to catch them, and bring them there, and he put them into his cages.

Stand back now, and see this long train of camels coming up to the king's gate, and the ox-trains from Egypt, gold and silver and precious stones, and beasts of every hoof, and birds of every wing, and fish of every scale! See the peacocks strut under the cedars, and the horsemen run, and the chariots wheel! Hark to the orchestra! Gaze upon the dance! Not stopping to look into the wonders of the temple, step right on to the causeway, and pass up to Solomon's Palace!

Here we find ourselves amid a collection of buildings on which the King had lavished the wealth of many empires. The genius of Hiram, the architect, and of the other artists, is here seen in the long line of corridors, and the suspended gallery, and the approach to the throne. Traceried window opposite traceried window. Bronzed ornaments bursting into lotus and lily and pomegranate. Chapters surrounded by network of leaves in which imitation fruit seemed suspended as in hanging baskets. Three branches—so Josephus tells us—three branches sculptured on the marble, so thin and subtle that even the leaves seemed to quiver,

A laver capable of holding five hundred barrels of water on six hundred brazen ox heads, which gushed with water, and filled the whole place with coolness, and crystalline brightness, and musical plash. Ten tables chased with chariot wheel and lion and cherubim. Solomon sat on a throne of ivory. At the seating-place of the throne, on each end of the steps, a brazen lion. Why, my friends, in that place they trimmed their candles with snuffers of gold, and they cut their fruits with knives of gold, and they washed their faces in basins of gold, and they scooped out the ashes with shovels of gold, and they stirred the altar-fires with tongs of gold! Gold reflected in the water! Gold flashing from the apparel! Gold blazing in the crown! Gold, gold!

The Royal Visitor.

Of course the news of the affluence of that place went out everywhere by every caravan and by wing of every ship, until soon the streets of Jerusalem are crowded with curiosity seekers. What is that long procession approaching Jerusalem? I think from the pomp of it there must be royalty in the train. I smell the breath of the spices which are brought as presents, and I hear the shout of the drivers, and I see the dust-covered caravans, showing that they come from far away. Cry the news up to the palace. The Queen of Sheba advances. Let all the people come out to see. Let the mighty men of the land come out on the palace corridors. Let Solomon come down the stairs of the palace before the Queen has alighted. Shake out the cinnamon, and the saffron, and the calamus, and the frankincense, and pass it into the treasure house. Take up the diamonds until they glitter in the sun.

The Queen of Sheba alights. She enters the palace. She washes at the bath. She sits down at the banquet. The cup-bearers bow. The meat smokes. The music trembles in the dash of the waters from the molten sea. Then she rises from the banquet, and walks through the conservatories, and gazes on the architecture, and she asks Solomon many strange questions, and she learns about the religion of the Hebrews, and she then and there becomes a servant of the Lord God.

She is Overwhelmed.

She begins to think that all the spices she brought, and all the precious woods which are intended to be turned into harps and psalteries, and into railings for the causeway between the temple and the palace, and the one hundred and eighty thousand dollars in money—she begins to think that all these presents amount to nothing in such a place, and she is almost ashamed that she has brought them, and she says within herself: "I heard a great deal about this place, and about this wonderful religion of the Hebrews, but I find it far beyond my highest anticipations. I must add more than fifty per cent. to what has been related. It exceeds everything that I could have expected. The half—the half was not told me."

Learn from this subject what a beautiful thing it is when social position and wealth surrender themselves to God. When religion comes to a neighborhood, the first to receive it are the women. Some men say it is because they are weak minded. I say it is because they have quicker perception of what is right, more ardent affection and capacity for sublimer emotion. After the women have received the Gospel, then all the distressed and the poor of both sexes, those who have no friends, accept Jesus. Last of all come

The Greatly Prospered.

Alas that it is so! If there are those here who have been favored of fortune, or, as I might better put it, favored of God, surrender all you have and all you expect to be to the Lord who blessed the Queen of Sheba. Certainly you are not ashamed to be found in this Queen's company. I am glad that Christ has had his imperial friends in all ages—Elizabeth Christina, Queen of Prussia; Maria Feodorovna, Queen of Russia; Marie, Empress of France; Helena, the imperial mother of Constantine; Arcadia, from her great fortunes building public baths in Constantinople, and toiling for the alleviation of the masses; Queen Clotilda, leading her husband and three thousand of his armed warriors to Christian baptism; Elizabeth of Burgundy, giving her jeweled glove to a beggar, and scattering great fortunes among the distressed; Prince Albert, singing "Rock of Ages" in Windsor Castle; and Queen Victoria, incognita, reading the Scriptures to a dying pauper.

I bless God that the day is coming when royalty will bring all its thrones, and music all its harmo-nies, and painting all its pictures, and sculpture all its statuary, and architecture all its pillars, and conquest all its sceptres; and the queens of the earth in long line of advance, frankincense filling the air, and the camels laden with gold, shall approach Jerusalem, and the gates shall be hoisted, and the great burden of splendor shall be lifted into the palace of this greater than Solomon.

Again, my subject teaches what is earnestness in

The Search of Truth.

Do you know where Sheba was? It was in Abyssinia, or some say in the southern part of Arabia Felix. In either case it was a great way off from Jerusalem. To get from there to Jerusalem she had to cross a country infested with bandits, and across blistering deserts. Why did not the Queen of Sheba stay at home and send a committee to inquire about this new religion, and have the delegates report in regard to that religion and wealth of King Solomon? She wanted to see for herself and hear for herself. She could not do this work of committee. She felt she had a soul worth ten thousand kingdoms like Sheba, and she wanted a robe richer than any woven by Oriental shuttles, and she wanted a crown set with the jewels of eternity. Bring out the camels. Put on the spices. Gather up the jewels of the throne and put them on the caravan. Start now; no time to be lost. Goad on the camels. When I see that caravan dust-covered, weary and exhausted, trudging across the desert and among the bandits until it reaches Jerusalem, I say: "There is after the truth." But there are a great many who do not act in that way. They all want to get the truth, but they want the truth to come to them; they do not want to go to it. There are people who fold their arms and say: "I am ready to come a Christian at any time; if I am to be saved, I shall be saved, and if I am to be lost I shall be lost." But Jerusalem will never come to you; you must go to Jerusalem. The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ will not come to you; you must go and get religion. Bring out the camels; put on all the sweet spices, all the treasures of the heart's affection. Start for the throne. Go in and hew the waters of salvation dashing in fountains around about the throne. Sit down at the banquet—the wine pressed from the grapes of heavenly Eshcol, the angels of God the cup-bearers Goad on the camels. The Bible declares it: "The queen of the south"—that is, this very woman am speaking of—"the queen of the south shall stand up in judgment against this generation and condemn it; for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and behold! a greater than Solomon is here." What infatuation, the sitting down in idleness expecting to be saved! "Strive to enter in at the strait gate. Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened to you. Take the kingdom of heaven by violence. Urge the camels!"

An Earnest Seeker

Again, my subject impresses me with the fact that

Religion is a Surprise

to any one that gets it. This story of the new religion in Jerusalem, and of the glory of King Solomon, who was a type of Christ—that story rolled on, and was told by every traveller coming by from Jerusalem. The news goes on the wings of every ship and with every caravan; and you know a story enlarges as it is retold, and by the time the story gets down into the southern part of Arabia Felix, and the Queen of Sheba hears it, it must be a tremendous story. And yet this Queen declined in regard to it, although she had heard so much, and had her anticipations raised so high, the half the half was not told her.

So religion is always a surprise to any one who gets it. The story of grace—an old story. Apostles preached it with rattle of chain; martyrs declared it with arm of fire; deathbeds have affirmed it; visions of glory, and ministers of religion have sounded it through the lanes, and the highways and the chapels, and the cathedrals. It has been cut into stone with chisel, and spread on the canvas with pencil; and it has been recited in the choirs of great congregations. And yet when a man first comes to look on the palace of God's mercy, and to see the royalty of Christ, and the wealth of this banquet, and the luxuriance of attendants, and the loveliness of His face, and the joy of His service, he exclaims, with prayers, with tears, with sighs, with triumphs, "The half—the half was not told me!"

I appeal to those who are Christians. Compare the idea you had of the joy of the Christian life before you became a Christian with the appreciation that joy you have now since you have become a Christian, and you are willing to attest before angels and men that you never, in the days of your spiritual bondage, had any appreciation of what was to come. You are ready to-day to answer and yield in regard to the the mercy, and the grace, and the goodness of God. "The half—the half was not told me!" Well, we hear a great deal about the good time that is coming to this world when it is to be girdled with holiness. Holiness on the bells of the horses. The lion's mane patted by the hand of a babe. Tips of Tarshish bringing cargoes for Jesus, and a hard, dry, barren, winter-bleached, storm-scorched, thunder-spilt rock breaking into floods of light water. Deserts into which dromedaries rest their nostrils, because they were afraid of the noon—deserts blooming into carnations, roses, and silver-tipped lilies.

Discoveries You Have Made

It is the old story. Everybody tells it. Isaiah told John told it, Paul told it, Ezekiel told it, Luther told it, Calvin told it, John Milton told it—everybody tells it; and yet—and yet when the midnight shall the hills, and Christ shall marshal His great army, and China, dashing her idols into the dust, shall be the voice of God and wheel into line; and India, destroying her Juggernaut and snatching up little children from the Ganges, shall hear the voice of God and wheel into line; and vine-covered hills, and wheat-crowned Russia, and all the nations of the earth shall hear the voice of God fall into line—then the Church, which has been lying and struggling through the centuries, robed and garlanded like a bride adorned for her husband, shall put aside her veil, and look up into the face of her Lord the King and say, "The half—the half was not told me!"

Well, there is coming a greater surprise to every Christian—

A Greater Surprise

in anything I have depicted. Heaven is an old story. Everybody talks about it. There is hardly a hymn in the hymn-book that does not refer to it. Children read about it in their Sabbath-school books. Aged men put on their spectacles to study it.

We say it is a harbor from the storm. We call it home. We say it is the house of many mansions. We weave together all sweet, beautiful, delicate, exhilarant words; we weave them into letters, and then we spell it out in rose and lily and amaranth. And yet that place is going to be a surprise to the most intelligent Christian. Like the Queen Sheba, the report has come to us from the far country, and many of us have started. It is a desamarch, but we urge on the camels. What though our feet be blistered with the way! We are tending to the palace. We take all our loves and desires and Christian ambitions, as frankincense and myrrh and cassia, to the great King. We must not stop. We must not halt.

The Night is Coming

and it is not safe out here in the desert. Urge the camels. I see the domes against the sky, the houses of Lebanon, and the temples and the dens. See the fountains dance in the sun, and the gates flash as they open to let in the poor pilgrims. Send the word up to the palace that we are coming, and that we are weary of the march of the desert. The King will come out and say: "Welcome to the palace; bathe in these waters; recline on these banks. Take this cinnamon and frankincense and myrrh and put it upon a censer and swing before the altar." And yet, my friends, when even bursts upon us it will be a greater surprise than that—Jesus on the throne, and we made like angels! All our Christian friends surrounding us in glory! All our sorrows and tears and sins gone by! The thousands of thousands, the one hundred and forty and four thousand, the great multitude that no man can number, will cry, world without end, "The half—the half was not told me!"

THE THREATENING PESTILENCE.

What shall be the signs of thy Coming and of the end of the World?—There shall be Famines, and Pestilences, and Earthquakes in divers places." Matthew 24: 7.

WHILE men who meet each other on the streets make jokes about the "Grippe," and laugh when they are told of some new victim of the disease among their acquaintance, the student of prophecy cannot fail to take a more serious view of the epidemic. In itself the disease appears to have few fatal results, except that it leaves the sufferer peculiarly susceptible to other and more dangerous diseases, especially pneumonia. The remarkable feature of it is the fact that in six weeks it has spread from the east of Russia to the west of the United States, proving that it is highly infectious, like the dread scourges of past times, and showing conclusively how rapidly in these days of constant communication any plague may spread through the whole world. This fact must remind the watchful Christian that the Lord, when asked what would be the signs by which men might know that His coming was at hand, mentioned pestilences as one of the signs.

La Grippe, or the Russian Influenza, broke out in the middle of November in Russia, and nearly half of the population have been suddenly attacked by it. It is still raging there, though not to the same extent as during the last fortnight of November. From St. Petersburg it has spread to Norway, Sweden, Germany, Austria, and France. The fact that it broke out in the Paris Post-Office, and in a large dry-goods establishment in Paris, indicates that its contagion may have been carried by letters or goods to those places. In the Military Academy of the Polytechnic at Paris, some 200 cadets, more than a third of the number, have been prostrated.

At Berlin, the capital of Germany, it has assumed an epidemic rapidity of contagion. At the Courts of Justice proceedings had to be postponed for a few days, on account of the judges being ill. At the University, the theatres and schools, the illness has made itself felt. One-third of the children attending the schools are affected by it. At Vienna, the capital of Austria, this epidemic influenza is spreading fast all over the city. It is still very prevalent in its original centre in Vienna, the General Hospital. Several professors, a number of assistant doctors, and half the nurses are afflicted. The disease is spreading among the patients, and one ward has no less than forty patients who have taken it. Dinners and parties have to be postponed daily on account of the hosts and guests being taken ill. At the Opera more than thirty persons are on the sick lists, so that the performances are given under considerable difficulties. Half the compositors of a newspaper have also been taken ill. At Madrid, the Spanish capital, the Government have decided to provide temporary hospitals in the case of an outbreak. This influenza epidemic has spread very rapidly in Dantzic, a North Prussian seaport, and about one-half of the children attending the schools of that place are reported to be affected by it. In America scarcely any large city is wholly free from it, though at the time of writing only few deaths from it are reported.

It is an infectious disease, with a distinct incubation period of two or three days, accompanied by debility, headache, and a low temperature, and followed by intense heat and accelerated action of the heart. It is propagated by microbes in the atmosphere, which may also be conveyed in letters or dry-goods from an infected district.

The two most prominent symptoms are high temperature and great frontal headache, accompanied in many cases by pain in the eyeballs, in all by a foul tongue and breath, and general malaise. The onset is rapid, the temperature running up at once very high, but the pulse is not in all cases raised proportionately with the temperature. In some cases the symptoms of catarrh of the nose and frontal sinuses are added; in others, sore throat and catarrh of the deeper air-passages; in some, gastrointestinal catarrh is a prominent symptom; and in many there are vague rheumatic pains about the back, shoulders, and limbs. The duration is short, averaging from three to five days, though sometimes prolonged to six or eight days or even longer, and convalescence is rapid. Allopathic physicians usually treat it with small and frequent doses of quinine. Homœopathic physicians prescribe arsenicum.

It is authoritatively stated that the prevalence of this disease in the human race has always been coincident with the prevalence of a similar disease among domestic animals—dogs, cats, cows, and especially horses. In the horse it begins suddenly with sneezing, followed by rigors, fever, bronchitis, and a short dry cough. Some horse owners of London report the occurrence of influenza among their animals, but it is not extensive. The identity of this specific influenza of the horse with the disease of the same name among mankind cannot be affirmed by medical authorities, but the probability that the disease is the same is held to be very great. The disease is not of a serious character unless complicated with bronchitis, to which catarrhal pneumonia may be superadded.

It has been stated that an epidemic of influenza is usually the precursor of cholera, but no connection between the two has been discovered. The plague of 1847 was, it is true, preceded by a large increase of influenza, but that may have been a mere coincidence which will not be repeated.

THE LATE ROBERT BROWNING.

(See portrait on page 28.)

THE death of Robert Browning, which occurred on December 12 at Venice, Italy, has been felt as a personal loss by a host of readers in all the lands in which the English language is spoken. Those who knew and liked his poems set no bounds to their admiration of the man, but they have never been a majority anywhere. Browning never spoke to the masses as Longfellow did, or as Tennyson does. The cultured, the thoughtful, read, admired, and loved, but the people failed to understand him. The recognition of his genius even by the classes who now think most highly of him was tardy. It was not until 1860, when the poet was forty-eight years old, and had written much, that there was anything like enthusiasm manifested about his work.

It was on May 7, 1812, that Robert Browning was born in London. He studied at Dulwich, and afterward at University College. In 1832 he wrote his first volume, Pauline, and in 1833 he published it. In 1834 he set out on a tour of Europe, and his travels extended to Russia. He had already, at the age of twenty-one, written Porphyria's Lover and Joannes Agricola. Paracelsus was published in 1835; a poem meditative in character, and full of the remote learning which has an attraction for youth, full of the dreams of youth and the foresight of their solution in failure and death; and at frequent intervals afterward he gave to the world the various compositions on which his fame as a poet rests; his last poems, entitled Asolando: Fancies and Facts, were published only a few days before he laid down his busy pen forever.

In 1846, on September 12, Mr. Browning married Miss Elizabeth Barrett, herself famous as a poet. Miss Barrett had already written her so-called Sonnets from the Portuguese, and other works had made her name familiar to the world. Mr. Browning and his wife went to Italy, which was their home for many years, and Italy continued to be Mr. Browning's home till the death of his wife in 1861. Probably Mr. Browning's fame will rest most permanently on his Men and Women, and on such pieces in his other volumes as might conveniently be classed with Men and Women. In these, not only his nobler qualities, his wisdom, sympathy, knowledge, and subtlety are best illustrated, but also his great technical skill in the management of curious and complex lyric verses.

Of Mr. Browning's views on the deeper questions of religion his writings are full. Brought up as a Nonconformist, his favorite preacher for some of his later years was the Rev. Thomas Jones, who drew many thoughtful persons to the Congregational Church in Charrington Street, London. Mr. Jones, being obliged to leave London on account of confirmed ill-health, removed first to Australia, and then to Swansea, where he died. A volume of his sermons, published soon after his death, had a preface by Mr. Browning, who expressed his high appreciation of the preacher and his sense of the spiritual profit he had derived from his evangelical pulpit services.

In private life, during his late years, Mr. Browning's alert and eager face, alive with kindness, intelligence, humor and interest, was among the most familiar and beloved in London. Though he was nearly seventy-eight years old, his youthful manner and elasticity of spirit made him seem a much younger man, and encouraged the hope that he might be spared several years longer. By the general wish of the leaders of English society he has been buried in Westminster Abbey among the illustrious men interred in Poet's Corner. His body lies near that of Spencer, the author of the Faerie Queen, and not far from those of Macaulay and Charles Dickens. At his funeral on December 31 there was a gathering of famous men in the venerable sanctuary, assembled to do honor to his memory. Among them were Robert Lincoln, the United States Minister, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Chief-Justice of England, the venerable Canon Farrar, the Duke of Argyll, Lord Wolseley, and many others.

DR. TALMAGE IN EGYPT.

FROM a letter received last week from a travelling companion of Dr. Talmage, who writes from Jerusalem, we make the following extracts, which we believe will interest our readers:

With our departure from Athens it seemed to me as if we had left civilization behind. The experience was a sorry one, to exchange the bright and gay capital of Greece, and the friends we had found there, for the overcrowded steamer which conveyed us to Alexandria. There is but one line of steamers between Greece and Egypt. It is known as the Egyptian Packet Steamship Company's Line. There being no choice in the matter, Alexandria having to be reached, we took the steamer Chakkieh from Piræus, which is the harbor of Athens and a place of considerably over twenty thousand inhabitants. The ship was so crowded with passengers that our party was compelled to divide up, some members of it being obliged to travel, as far as sleeping accommodations were concerned, in very inferior quarters. An Egyptian pasha aboard had five of his wives along, and for their exclusive comfort and convenience had hired the entire ladies' saloon and dressing-room, putting others to distressing inconvenience.

Arabs crowded the decks. Among them was very noticeable anywhere; he had a keen eye and a commanding look. Ashore he is at the head of a force of fifteen thousand men; at sea he is surely the most devout of Mussulmans. He was nearly always engaged in prayer, or in the ablutions preliminary to this exercise. Dr. Talmage was greatly impressed with the unabashed absorption of the followers of Mahomet in their practice of the duties prescribed for them in the Koran. He expressed himself as of the opinion that not one in a hundred thousand Christians would venture, in public places, with scores of spectators and under no undue pressure from exceptional circumstances, to thus openly demonstrate his religious faith. We survived the voyage to Alexandria, and will ever retain a strong impression of what it is to live two days in close contact with Arabs, pent up in narrow quarters, trying vainly to rest on miserable beds, and being obliged to consume food far from our liking.

A Sheik.

The voyage of forty-eight hours exhausted Dr. Talmage, who did not sleep a wink throughout the time. He maintained his habitual cheerfulness, however, living out his doctrine that people who travel should find something better to do than complain of the discomforts of the way, and vex their friends with the recital upon their return.

The arrival of our steamer created great excitement in the harbor. It was soon surrounded by boats containing fellows of many nationalities, yelling for dear life. These amiable beings were agents for boats and hotels, porters, beggars, and touters for jobs, and were a not agreeable reminder of home. We stopped two hours, pursuing our way to Cairo with only this inconsiderable break in the journey. However, we did manage while at Alexandria to eat a substantial breakfast, to see Pompey's Pillar, and to drive over to the palace of the Khedive. His Highness was at Cairo, and we did not see him. We were taken through the beautiful palace gardens, which were in full blossom, and ate fruit from the trees, while an attendant made bouquets of roses for the ladies of the party. As a matter of course, we did not fail to note street scenes in this great city of over two hundred thousand inhabitants. The houses, most of them, are such as Arabs erect everywhere. Razor-back donkeys attended by half-clad jabbering urchins awaited fares. People were oddly dressed, the men in the wide, baggy trousers every where a feature of the Orient. Women's apparel consisted of loose blue jean gowns, black head-capes, and veils, either black or white, held in position, oddly enough, by bamboo sticks. Very ancient looking were the buffalo carts and the water-wheels served by men or their faithful dumb servants, the buffalo and the donkey. Dust was everywhere too abundant. We arrived on the evening of November 26, all pretty well fagged out, and more than ready for the really superb accommodations awaiting us. We found our hotel surrounded by a garden which flourished in tropical luxuriance. What was more to the purpose, an excellent dinner awaited our attention, and comfortable beds the occupancy of people who never needed them more. The hotel was a surprisingly good one. I think I should not exaggerate in describing it as equal to the best in New York, but the management was not equal to the task of excluding from it flies and mosquitoes. Fleas are an Egyptian pest of which no more need be said.

At Alexandria

At Cairo

In the morning we all met at the breakfast-table greatly refreshed. After breakfast we visited the Boulak Museum, where are the mummies of many ancient kings of Egypt, including that of the Pharaoh of the Exodus. Dr. Talmage stood before this at least twenty minutes, inspecting it and making notes in his Bible. This, by the way, is his companion on every expedition. From the Museum we went to the place whither Mary and Joseph are said to have fled with the child Jesus to escape the wrath of Herod. The identity of the spot seems to be well authenticated, and is accepted by some of the most learned students of the age. Here for the first time we set foot

On Holy Ground.

Dr. Talmage removed his hat, and with his head uncovered, stood a few moments in silent meditation. He said: "Why others have passed this scene over entirely or touched lightly upon it I cannot say; but to me it is one of the most sacred spots on earth." After examining it thoroughly we left it to return to our hotel; but about fifteen minutes later Dr. Talmage insisted on going back to it at once, saying: "I must see it again, and must see it now," so back we went and a new inspection was begun, and Dr. Talmage carefully took the dimensions of the place, the girth of the pillars and their distance from each other. He then drew a diagram of it. Having finished this, he said: "I have seen all I care to see to-day. I shall not leave the house again until to-morrow."

This he was not permitted to do. On his return to the hotel he found there the notice of a funeral to take place at 3 P. M. from the American mission church at Cairo, the wife of Professor G. Lansing, an American scholar of note, eminent Egyptologist and clergyman, having died the day before, after active service in this mission field of over thirty-two years. Professor Lansing being an old friend of Dr. Talmage, the Brooklyn orator attended the funeral, with Mr. Eugene Schuyler, the American Consul at Cairo, Wilson Bey, and Dr. Grant, of Scotland. The body, clad in white, lay in front of the pulpit; a congregation had assembled about seven hundred in number. People were divided into three sections: on the one side sat the women with veiled faces, weeping; on the other side sat the men in their national garb of flowing robes, girdled at the waist and wearing the turban; while the centre aisle was occupied by foreigners. Every seat was taken, and the entire audience was deeply affected. The services were in both Arabic and English. At the request of the family Dr. Talmage took part in them.

Early the next day we started for which we reached after a three hours' trip. Dr. Talmage insisted on climbing to the top of the great Pyramid of Cheops, called the Ghizeh. In this the whole party joined him, and with the aid of twelve dragomen, and two boys who carried drinking-water, we ascended the pyramid, climbing or being pushed up as occasion required. We made the ascent in twenty minutes. Upon our descent we partook of a substantial lunch we had carried with us from Cairo, and proceeded to interview the Sphinx, which has stared stonily at the desert for uncouthed years. The next morning we

The Pyramids,

Sailed up the Nile

on a dainty little steam launch. Dr. Talmage, Bible in hand, read the prophecies concerning Egypt, and pointed out what appeared to his mind evidences of their fulfilment. Suddenly the launch stopped. On investigation we discovered that we had run on to a sand bank. The engines worked and reversed, but to no avail. Nubian negroes who manned the launch tried hard to push it off, but all in vain. Then one of them stripped and jumped into the Nile, and tried by main strength to clear the launch, moaning loudly with every effort. He not succeeding, another negro stripped and followed his comrade's example; then still another, but without success. The amount of moaning was increased, but the launch never budged. Finally Dr. Talmage and the writer took long poles, and, placing an end of each in the sandy bed of the river began to push; at the same time ordering the engines to be reversed, while the union of the strength of all the men aboard was brought to bear on the work in hand. By these means gradually the launch was freed, and the journey continued. About noon we reached Memphis with its ancient ruins, including the palaces of the Pharaohs. Here we mounted donkeys for the first time, amid considerable merriment; we started, surrounded by a hundred or more natives, who were clad more or less, particularly less. On our journey many incidents, perhaps too trifling to mention, but very amusing at the time, helped to keep us in excellent humor. One was the frequent braying of the donkey ridden by Miss May Talmage, whose vocal performances reminded her father of his experiences in a church choir in his younger days. After awhile, the Doctor grew very tired of his donkey, and decided to substitute a camel for him. As camels are plentiful in Egypt his wish was gratified at the first stop made. His experience on camel-back soon led him to regret the change. First he was jogged forward then he fell backward, and found the just position only to have his nose driven violently against the curious saddle that forms part of a camel's outfit. He looked so inexpressibly comical that we whisked out our photographic cameras in a jiffy, and before he could straighten out the broad grin with which he tried to cover his embarrassment, it was registered. To make my story short, the owner of the brute tickled it on the knee of one of its fore-legs. Down it went on them. He then scratched its hind-legs with the same effect, thus bringing the animal's body on a level with the sand, which enabled the Doctor to alight.

HEATHENISM IN AMERICA.

In a series of incidents extracted from reports of work in Alaska by the devoted medical missionary, Dr. George D. Dowkontt, of 118 East 45th Street, New York, whose labors in preparing young men for medical mission work are beyond all praise, the following, which shows how terribly the gospel light is needed in some neglected quarters of our own land: "The death of a girl among the Chilcats of Alaska was attributed by the Indians to witchcraft, and her companion, a girl also from Chilcat, was the accused. The Indians at Juneau employed the usual methods of torture to extort confession—cutting her hair off, then so weaving it into cords to form a rope, by which, after the body had been tied in a low crouching position, hands behind the back, feet together and knees against the breast, the head was drawn back and tied to a low stake driven into the ground. In this position the 'witch' is left for three days without food or water. This girl was then beaten, and after 'confessing' that she had bewitched the deceased and that her mother, an old woman living in a lower Chilcat village, had taught her the black art, and had herself killed ten men in that way, she was brought, bound in a canoe, to her mother's house, when the old woman was also seized, and was with difficulty that we saved their lives. They lived, hunted things as they were, like the beasts of the wood, until they stole to us secretly and were locked up. Soon after, passage was secured for them and they were taken to Sitka. I could give you chapters on the misery, which I have been perfectly cognizant of, resulting to women through this one old superstition of witchcraft."

A BRAHMAN YOUTH'S ORDEAL.

In a Christian land where the profession of religion entails no social loss, the words of Christ about the cost of following Him have not the force that they have in other lands. The following letter copied into the Missionary Herald from an Indian journal shows what the confession of Christ means there:

"I am a student in a mission school. Myself, Brahman, most of my friends are of the same caste. For seven or eight years we have all been receiving instruction in the Bible an hour daily, and have been taught by well-educated instructors.

"I mention a few points in which this influence may be seen. We do not believe in our senseless rules about ceremonial purity. Looking on festivals as mere holidays, we take no pains to observe them religiously. We are convinced that ablutions and pilgrimages can afford no relief to the sin-burden. We think there should be spiritual union with God. Knowing that there is salvation only through one sinless Saviour, we long to accept Him, with this in mind we offer prayer in secret to Him morning and evening.

"But how hard it is to make a public profession! Not only must we leave father, mother, relatives and loved friends, but we must become our enemies, as though we were guilty of some terrible crime. To escape this really needless suffering, although we do not embrace this religion openly, still, not doing so, we undergo mental agonies night and day. When this suffering becomes unbearable, feeling that something is better than nothing, and in order that we may pray openly, we are impelled to join the Prayer-Somaj, and to-day there is a considerable number of such students belonging to that body. Later on, however, feeling that these sects are not of God, but devised merely with a view to meet the present state of things, we weary of them. Then indeed our condition is a sad one. This, Mr. Editor, is not my condition alone, but that of many. When it comes to be understood that becoming a Christian implies no mere change of outward circumstances, but a change in faith, then the extent of the secret influences working on us will be perceived. That such a time may come soon, we pray Almighty God."

THE SONG OF ZACHARIAS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for January 19, Luke 1: 57-79; Golden Text, Luke 1: 76.

The Silent Participant in the Family Rejoicings—Naming the Child—A Protest from Officious Friends—The Father's Decisive Word—The Obedient Man Recovers Speech—The Child Filled with the Holy Ghost—The Condition of the Holy Ghost's Indwelling—The Silence of Four Centuries Broken—Faith Treating the Future as the Present—The Priest's Conception of Messiah's Reign—The Difference Between Holiness and Righteousness.

THE angel had declared to Zacharias that when his son should be born, he should have joy and gladness, and many should rejoice at his birth. And so it was. The promised son was born, Elizabeth became a glad mother, "and her neighbors and her kinsmen heard that the Lord had magnified His mercy toward her, and they rejoiced with her." (R. V.) When God fulfils His Word, He does it so literally that none but those who are unbelieving, or blinded with prejudice, can mistake it. But Zacharias was still dumb, and could only be in the joy of his house. Before his tongue could be loosed he must shew his renunciation of unbelief.

A Silent Participant

Eight days passed by, and then, according to the law, the child must be circumcised. "He that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations." (Gen. 17: 12.) It was the custom among the Jews, as it now is in our own land, to conserve family names, and they called the child "Zacharias, after the name of his father." Elizabeth knew of God's dealings with her husband, and objected, "Not so; but he shall be called John." The friends were very persistent, as friends are wont to be when it is a question of common usage versus faith, and they said unto her, "There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name." So persistent were they that, treating it as a woman's fancy, they referred the question to the father by signs, "and he asked for a writing table," and, to the amazement of all except Elizabeth, he "wrote, saying, His name is John." And they were yet more amazed when the dumb priest, with a loosened tongue, began immediately to praise God. Why should he not? It was prophesied to Israel that when they should "see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God . . . then shall . . . the tongue of the dumb sing." (Isa. 35: 2-6.) Truly, this passage refers to the future return of the Jews, and the reign of Christ; but it also teaches the principle which thousands have found true in our own day, as well as when Christ was manifest among men, that when men see the glory of the Lord, and are occupied with His excellency, then He does His works of blessing and healing among them.

People began to talk; the striking intervention of God on their behalf was well known in the history of the Jews, but it had come to be looked upon as history, as something of the past, and there were few who expected in that day manifestations of God's presence and power as of old. But here was the miraculous birth of this child, the sudden dumbness of Zacharias, his recovery as sudden—what could it all mean? "These sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judea: And all they that heard them laid them up in their heart, saying, What manner of child shall this be?" Many eyes were upon him; he was an unusual child, but only the parents knew the secret: God had told them, "He shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb." This prophecy was thus fulfilled, "the hand of the Lord was with him."

It is most instructive here to notice what is said of the Holy Ghost. First, He is spoken of as filling an unconscious infant (ver. 15), then a godly matron (ver. 41), and lastly an aged priest (ver. 67). Truly, with God, "the last shall be first, and the first last." Neither age nor priority in any way secures our being filled with the Holy Ghost; He comes when the place is not pre-occupied. Man was created, and is redeemed to be God's dwelling-place. As a self-centred being, a self-guided being, man is out of joint with himself and with all creation, and his life is one fret and jar; but filled with the Holy Ghost, responding to God, living as the instrument of the Holy Ghost, to manifest Jesus in life and work, man finds his place and fits exactly into it; the fret and worry go out of his life, he needs God, and his need is instantly supplied; God needs him, and with grateful joy he says, "Behold, here I am." Indwelt by the Holy Ghost, life is another thing, "all things are of God" (11 Cor. 5: 18), and all things are known to "work together for good to them that love Him." (Rom. 8: 28.) "Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied;" his resurrection gift of speech found utterance in praise, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for He hath visited and redeemed His people." The fore-runner of Jesus was yet a babe in arms, but the faith of the old priest saw, as though it were taking place before his own eyes, the revival which should be when that child was grown up, and when perhaps he himself would be in his grave.

Where He Can Find Entrance,

God Had Said it:

Was not that enough? His prayer was heard; the souls, many of them, were now living who, although disobedient at the present time, should be turned "to the wisdom of the just." The old priest seemed to understand beforehand the principle which Christ laid down, "All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye have received them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 11: 24, R. V.)

Since the days of the prophet Malachi, about four hundred years previously, there had been no direct dealing of God with His people. As in the days of Eli, so now, "The word of the Lord was precious; there was no open vision." (1 Sam. 3: 1.) And now God was drawing near to His people again. Had He not sent an angel direct from heaven, as He had done to Abraham, to Jacob, to Moses, etc? Was there not, in the person of the little babe before him, a real living prophet of the Lord, filled with the Holy Ghost as no prophet of old ever was? Truly, God had visited His people. But the Redeemer was also at hand; John was but to prepare His way, and the old man's faith reached out in something more than anticipation to the work of the Redeemer, "He hath visited and redeemed His people, and hath raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of His servant David." John was, on both sides, descended from the tribe of Levi, so that these words could only refer to the coming Saviour, whose birth was then approaching, and whose mother and reputed father were both of the house of David. But here again the old prophet saw the promise of God

As Though Already Fulfilled.

"A horn of salvation." The horn was the emblem of power, strength, and glory. (Deut. 33: 17.) Zacharias saw by faith the prophecies of the Messiah's reign, temporal and spiritual, as alike fulfilled, for the rejection of the Messiah by his nation was never contemplated by him. "He hath raised up a horn of salvation. . . As He spake by the mouth of His holy prophets, which have been since the world began." From the promise of the seed of the woman (Gen. 3: 15), through Abraham (Gen. 22: 18; comp. Gal. 3: 16), Isaac, and Jacob (Gen. 26: 4; 28: 14), through the sacrifice of Isaac, and the types in the books of Moses, through the numerous Messianic Psalms of David, and the direct prophecies of Isaiah and all the other prophets. Zachariah's anticipation of the Redeemer found its justification.

"That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us, to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember His holy covenant." Every pious Jew in the days of Zacharias knew that his nation was suffering through the disobedience of their forefathers, but he also knew that God had bound Himself by covenant to accept of their confession, and to restore them whenever "their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity," i. e., when they let themselves be Conquered by Their God.

"Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land." (Lev. 26: 41, 42.) But Zacharias went farther back than the date of this covenant in his inspired song of God's faithfulness and his faith in it; he appealed to "the oath which He swore to our father Abraham, that He would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve Him without fear." What was this oath to Abraham? It was sworn at the time when he had obeyed God's call to offer up his only son in sacrifice, and God had provided a ram for a burnt offering. God said to him, "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord; for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies. And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed My voice." (Gen. 22: 16-18.) There is a distinct promise of conquest over the enemies of Israel, therefore the old priest did but follow the Scriptures in his appeal to God to deliver his nation from their enemies (at that time the Romans, to whom they were tributary). There was something more than desire for political freedom in the song of Zacharias; it was that "we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might Serve Him Without Fear."

He never contemplated a religion in which Christ should have all the suffering, all the burden, all the humiliation, and Christians all the ease and all the joy. He saw clearly that man exists for God, not God for man. That the end of man's life is to serve and glorify God. It would not have come into Zacharias's heart to enter into the Tabernacle simply to get a season of religious enjoyment, or to hold the office of a priest because it was according to his taste, or because it improved his social position; he conceived of man's vocation that it was to "serve God," but to "serve Him without fear."

Perhaps Zacharias, having the wars of the Maccabees fresh in remembrance, meant freedom from fear of earthly foes; but Jesus, our great Redeemer, saves also from fear of spiritual foes. He took flesh and blood, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil (Heb. 2: 14), so that the great enemy of our souls is a conquered foe, no more to be dreaded while Jesus is fighting for us. Fear arises from the consciousness of being on the weaker side; but when we are convinced that "the Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our Refuge," then we can be "quiet from fear of evil." Zacharias's idea of service was not so much that of success and publicity, his song was not of power for service, but "that we might serve Him without fear."

In Holiness and Righteousness,

before Him all the days of our life—holiness, because indwelt by a holy God; righteousness, just and true in our dealings with man. There are righteous men, such as Job and Cornelius, who are not yet holy men, but there are no really holy men who are not righteous. A holiness which consists of words and emotions, and which does not regulate our conduct in money matters, and which does not produce kindness and consideration for others, is not the real thing. God's holiness is lasting, "All the days of our life," it has the element of continuity.

"And thou child," said the prophet-father, "shalt be called the prophet of the Highest, for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare His ways, to give knowledge of salvation unto His people, in the remission of their sins." (R. V.) John the Baptist was to be an evangelist, not a courtly herald; he was to precede the One who was coming, not as a martial conqueror, but as a dying Saviour. He was "to give knowledge of salvation," by throwing off not the yoke of Rome, but the yoke of sin. "Through the tender mercy of our God, whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, and to guide our feet into the way of peace. It was not Zacharias who composed this song; it was a Holy Ghost song of coming salvation. Probably the old priest understood only in part its significance, but though it was the song of a Jew about the Jews, we who know their Saviour may sing it too, and know daily that "tender mercy of God" which gives us light in darkness, and guides our feet into the way of peace."

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

TERMS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Any Subscriber who has Received a Notice of expiry since forwarding his subscription will please understand that it is a mistake which has already been rectified. It arises from the fact that at this time of year large numbers of subscriptions are received by each mail, and even with an increase of the office staff it is impossible to have all of them registered in their proper places on the list on the day that they come in. The amounts, however, are duly placed immediately to the credit of the senders, so that there can be no loss to them, but as the notices of expiry are necessarily made out from the lists they are in a few cases inadvertently sent to persons who have already renewed. Our friends need not trouble to write in protest, as the mistake is invariably discovered. The new date will in all cases appear on the address labels as soon as practicable.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Probability of Legislation Restricting Immigration has aroused a greater interest than usual in the annual return. The figures for New York were issued last week. From these it appears that during the past year 315,228 passengers have landed at Castle Garden, as against 383,595 for 1888, a falling off of 68,367. Of these 298,085 were immigrants, while the others were natives or citizens of the United States. The number of immigrants who arrived during 1888 was 370,822. The most noticeable feature of the past year has been the falling off in Italian immigration. The nationalities of the immigrants are as follows: Ireland, 40,790; England, 29,051; Wales, 616; Scotland, 6,719; Germany, 69,809; France, 4,432; Russia, 27,327; Poland, 2,875; Switzerland, 6,752; Sweden, 24,842; Norway, 2,167; Holland, 5,283; Italy, 27,216; Spain, 88; Portugal, 18; Denmark, 6,967; Hungary, 8,889; Austria, 13,656; Bohemia, 4,897; Australia, 15; Turkey, 260; Greece, 103; all others, 899.

The International Marine Conference concluded its labors on January 1, after devoting seventy-seven days to the discussion of its various problems. That the conference has done all that was expected of it cannot be said, but it has accomplished much work that is valuable, and will probably result in reducing the risks to the lives of passengers and sailors. The most important result of the conference was the thorough revision of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea. This is evident from the fact that, while the conference was in session for three months, all but five sittings were devoted to these "rules of the road." The labor of thoroughly revising the rules and getting them into a shape satisfactory to all the delegates was very great, but it is believed that the proposed rules, which are based on those adopted by Great Britain, will accomplish all that can be done to secure safety at sea. There is no doubt that all the Governments represented at the conference will adopt the necessary legislation to put the rules into practice. A second and very important recommendation is for uniformity in surveying laws, so that, among other things, similar vessels of different countries shall be required to carry the same number of small boats and similar or equivalent life-saving appliances. These two results are of inestimable value. Besides these, other matters of detail, such as the marking of buoys and the disposal of derelict vessels, were considered and recommendations made.

The Production of the New Postage Stamps is proceeding rapidly, though it may be a few weeks before they are ready for distribution. The chief change is in the reduction of size. The color also of the two-cent stamp is changed from green to red. The one-cent stamp, as of old, is blue, with the head of Benjamin Franklin. The new two-cent stamp has Washington's head on it, and it is a very fine engraving. The three-cent also has Washington's head. The four-cent stamp has Jackson, while a change has been made in the five-cent stamp by placing the portrait of General Grant on it instead of Garfield. Garfield's portrait will now appear on the six-cent stamps. The other stamps of the series are not yet ready, but there is very little change in the general design, except some finer and more delicate work in the engraving. New designs and dies have been made for all the stamps, and although the designs of the stamps are in some cases the same, fresh portraits, and better ones, have been made for the new issue.

An Effort to Enlist the People Against the politicians is to be made on the question of Civil Service Reform. The National League recently appointed a committee of five to examine the management of the Federal Civil Service and to suggest measures for the extension of the reform. A prominent member of the committee, in an interview with a reporter on December 30, outlined the course the committee would take. He said: "The general scheme of the movement is for the purpose of furnishing information of every kind tending to show the people the beneficial character of Civil Service Reform. We will certainly find some things which need correction, and we expect to find much to attest the fact that Civil Service Reform is highly beneficial in its nature to the public at large. As soon as the people understand this, it is our expectation that they will not allow the movement to be crippled for means to sustain its action, but that they will provide it with the sinews of war." There is encouragement in these remarks. There is no hope for the movement but in the strength of the people. When they are aroused the politicians have to obey.

The Australian System of Voting has received the endorsement of Mr. T. V. Powderly, the chief of the Knights of Labor, who last week issued a strong appeal for its adoption. This expression of opinion is the more important because it is the workingman who is most in need of protection from intimidation which the Australian system is designed to give. Mr. Powderly describes in vivid language the injustice of the present system, under which foremen and bosses are not only permitted to peddle tickets at the polls, but to follow the workman to the ballot-box and see that he deposits the vote handed him. Intimidation, as Mr. Powderly points out, may exist without bringing the offender within the clutches of the law. The mere fact that the eye of the man through whose favor the workingman secures bread for his wife and little ones is upon him is enough to induce any ordinary workingman to vote as he knows that man expects him to do. Under the new system, which was successfully used in Massachusetts last election and was described in these columns on November 13, 1889, the eye of the boss does not rest upon the voter when he gives his vote.

The Russian Influenza, or La Grippe, as the French have named it, made rapid progress in this country last week, though the number of deaths was small compared with the number of seizures. In New York the disease was very prevalent. An indication of its extent may be gained from the fact that of the 3,430 policemen in the city 359 were at the end of the week incapacitated for duty by the epidemic. Eight of them died from it, and from diseases induced by it. Three suicides took place in the city on Thursday, the perpetrators having become delirious in the fever which accompanies the disease. Another victim, in New Haven, Conn., committed suicide on the same day. The eminent physician, Dr. George F. Shady, in a published article declares that there can be no doubt that influenza, "or what is popularly known as 'la grippe,' has become epidemic in this city, and is scattered broadcast over the country." He finds that its general character corresponds "with those noted in connection with the prevailing type of the malady in Russia, Germany, and France." The Board of Health on January 2 issued a warning bulletin in the course of which it said: "The increased death rate of the diseases unfavorably influenced by the prevailing epidemic of influenza, emphasizes the importance of the employment of physical care on the part of all, healthy and diseased alike. Exposure to the influences of the extremes of temperature should be avoided, especially by the aged and those who are afflicted with pulmonary diseases. Persons suffering from 'cold' or from suspected 'influenza' should seek medical aid at once." That such a warning was needed was shown by the increase in the number of deaths registered. The record for the twenty-four hours ending at noon on Thursday was 220—a number rarely equalled in many years, even during the hottest summer weather. The number of deaths in Brooklyn, also, last week largely exceeded those of the preceding week. In New Jersey and Connecticut also the disease is increasing.

A Stubborn Conflict Between Labor and Capital is being waged in Belgium, where 20,000 coal miners are on strike. The mine owners are unable to fulfil their contract with the Government to supply 30,000 tons for the State, and the stock in hand for use on the railways is nearly exhausted. Amicable overtures made to the strikers have had no good result. Notices are placarded at Mons in which the miners insist upon an increase of fifteen per cent. in their wages, with a minimum of eighty-eight cents a day for any day, and the recognition of nine hours as a day's work.

The New King of Portugal was formally Enthroned on December 28 in Lisbon with great magnificence. The King and Queen went with a brilliant retinue to the Cortes, where the ceremony was to take place. They were met by a deputation from the Legislative Chambers, and conducted to the dais, on which two thrones of gold and crimson were placed. The sceptre was placed in the King's hand and then the oath of office was administered. The oath having been taken, and a short speech made by the King, the royal standard bearer unfurled the royal banner, a magnificent specimen of workmanship. The President of the Senate, standing in front of the King, then replied to King Carlos' speech, and at its conclusion, raising his voice, and being joined by all present, he pronounced the acclamation, "To the very high and very powerful, and most faithful King of Portugal, Carlos I!" Heralds proclaimed the conclusion of the ceremony to the crowds gathered outside, and royal salutes were fired by the vessels in the harbor. Not much is known of the new King, who succeeded his father in October last, but his subjects gave him an enthusiastic greeting on his inauguration.

The Death of the Ex-Empress of Brazil occurred at Oporto, Portugal, on December 28. She had been suffering from a cold, but no apprehensions were entertained. The agitation of her departure from Brazil is supposed to have undermined her strength. Her husband had remained behind in Lisbon, but was summoned by telegraph. She sank so rapidly that she died before he arrived. Her last words were: "I regret that my children and grandchildren are not around me, that I might bless them for the last time. Alas! Brazil, Brazil! that beautiful country! I cannot return there!" The exiled Emperor seems crushed by this new blow. He said, in a voice broken by emotion, "Her faithful and affectionate companionship has sustained me for forty-six years. God's will be done!" It is feared that the bereaved man's grief may overturn his reason.

New Confirmation of the Murder of Dr. Peters, the explorer of Africa, was received last week. It came from Lieutenant Rust, who wrote from Aden. He states that while on the way to join Dr. Peters he was seized with a severe illness, and lay unconscious for five days. All his followers thereupon deserted him except one personal attendant. Subsequently one of these deserters returned and told Lieutenant Rust that at a point one day distant he had seen the murdered bodies of Peters and Tiedeman, that one of Peters's arms was separated from his body, and that there were three spear wounds in Tiedeman's breast. Dr. Peters's friends still have hopes that these reports, like those circulated about Stanley, may be false.

A Plaintive Protest from the Pope was Issued on Dec. 30. He complains that the Italian adversaries of the Church persistently continued their war against it, as was made evident by the recent utterances of persons in public positions acquainted with the intentions, regarding the Church, of the rulers of Italy. He referred to the temporal power as necessary to the independence and liberty of the Pope in the exercise of his mission, and declared that he did not claim the restoration of the temporal power from human motives. It was his right, and he was required to preserve it intact and transmit it to his successor as one of the inalienable treasures of the Christian faith. It was a sufficient reply to the complaint to remind him that the Italian provinces under Papal rule were eager to depose their priestly ruler, and until they did so were conspicuous examples of misrule.

A Pathetic Testimony was Given at One of Mr. Re Qua's recent meetings in the Indian Territory. A young Indian rose, and said: "My father was a heathen and a scalper, and my grandfather before him was a heathen and a scalper. I myself have offered a horse as a sacrifice to our gods. But I heard that the Great Spirit of the white men had said, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' I could not understand, and I asked my teacher what it meant. She was not a Christian, and could not tell me. I asked a United States officer, but he did not know. Then the preacher came, and I asked him. He told me, and it has made a new man of me. I am a Christian, but I am as yet the only Christian among my people." Another Indian, a chief, rose in council after the Rev. W. F. Re Qua had spoken, and said: "We had better think about these words. If the Great Spirit has written these things that we have heard, we ought to know more; and it sounds like what the Great Spirit would say. I want to hear it all. I think the Great Spirit has sent this young man to tell us about it."

An Old Man's Misplaced Confidence has forced him into the county almshouse at Easton, Penn. He has always been an industrious, frugal man, and during the past twenty years he has worked for one employer, drawing but a small part of his wages, and leaving the balance in the employer's hands to accumulate as a provision for old age. In March last he concluded that he had saved enough to keep him as long as he would live, so he quit work, and drew the whole sum, principal and interest. He had $9,900 to receive. He took the whole sum to his married sister, who is his sole surviving relative, and gave it to her and her husband on condition that they should support him in comfort for the remainder of his life. They agreed to do so; but on December 27 the man applied for admission to the poor-house. He said that his sister and her husband made him work beyond his strength, and gave him food deficient in quality and quantity. He was over sixty-four, and he thought he would be better off in the poor-house. He must have bitterly regretted his confidence in his sister. Such regret never comes to those who trust God for support in their old age. The Psalmist said he had been young, and was then old, but he had never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread. (Ps. 37:25.)

A Five Years' Search for a Stolen Daughter has just ended in success in Alabama. In the summer of 1884 a widower who had three children took the youngest, a girl of four years, on a visit to his mother in Shelby County, of that State. The other two children he left behind in his home in Tuscaloosa County. While staying with his mother the little four-year-old girl disappeared. It was at first supposed that she had strayed away, but inquiries elicited the fact that she had been seen in the company of a woman of suspicious character. Both had as completely disappeared as if the earth had opened and swallowed them. The father searched through Shelby and the adjoining counties, and extended his search into Mississippi. He has spent in the quest since then all the time he could spare from his business, but without avail. Recently, however, a postmaster whose acquaintance he made in his travels, and with whom he left a description of the woman and child, wrote him that some persons were getting their mail from his office who corresponded with the description. The father lost no time in following the clue, and to his great delight discovered his child in the keeping of a farmer, who said the woman had left her with him, promising to call again for her. The farmer was doubtful of the father's claims, but when the child recognized him, and sprang with a cry of joy into his arms, he allowed him to take her away. It is so with the sinner. He must recognize God as his loving Father through Christ before he can be delivered. (Gal. 4:6, 7.)

An Official Lost His Position by Defending himself in New York last week. For many weeks past the streets of the city have been reeking with filth, which, in dry weather, the wind blew into the faces of pedestrians, and into the houses and stores, and which in rainy weather formed a deep layer of mud, which the horses' feet sent splashing on the sidewalks. The Mayor's attention was called to the condition of the streets. He thereupon sought an explanation from the Commissioner of Street Cleaning, hoping that in some way that officer would exculpate himself from blame, and hold out a hope of improvement. To the Mayor's astonishment, he understood the Commissioner to reply, "The streets are clean." The Mayor promptly wrote to the Board of Health requesting the removal of the Commissioner on the ground that "It is manifestly impossible to expect any cleanliness in our thoroughfares from an officer who does not scruple to assert that they are now in a cleanly and proper condition." It is because so many sinners act as the Commissioner did that they are not saved. Instead of confessing their faults and throwing themselves on the mercy of God through Christ, they trust in their own righteousness and are lost. (Rev. 3:17.)

Fatal Compassion is Certified as the Cause of the death of a boy in Brooklyn, N. Y., who was buried on December 31. Four weeks ago, while on his way home from school, a companion, who was about his own age, eight years, ran into the roadway, and was run over and instantly killed by a heavily laden coal wagon. The death of his companion moved him powerfully. On reaching his house the tears poured from his eyes as he told his mother about the killing of his little schoolmate. The boy continued to brood over the accident until he was seized with cramps and convulsions, and a physician was summoned. During the night he raved over the death of the boy, and he was too weak on the following morning to go to school. His parents tried hard to divert his mind from the accident, but failed in the effort, and from day to day there was a noticeable change for the worse in his condition, until finally hydrocephalus developed, and caused his death. To the last, in the intervals of his suffering he continued to talk about the death of his friend. It was a pathetic death. Compassion so intense as to kill is not often met with. It is, however, because there was once compassion still greater than men have the opportunity of salvation. The compassion of Jesus for a dying world so moved Him that He voluntarily gave His life to save it. (Rom. 5:7, 8.)

The Slaves of Fashion are Having a Hard Life, if the report of a New York business man is correct. The man was looking worn and haggard, and a friend who met him and was concerned about his evident indisposition, advised him not to work so hard. The man replied that his daughter worked harder than he did. "What does she do?" asked the friend. "Well, I don't know everything she does, because I haven't reached that point of interest in her mode of enjoying herself to keep notes. She's in society. Don't you understand that? Well, I don't either, but that explanation seems to be all that is necessary from her when I advise her to take a rest. Yesterday she was up at 8 o'clock, because she had to go out shopping. She came in at luncheon pretty well fagged out. Then she had a dozen calls to make, and when she came in to dinner she looked so poorly I felt tired for her. There was a reception somewhere at night, and she went there. She came in toward midnight, but this didn't prevent her from getting up this morning at 8 o'clock again. She belongs to societies and clubs which call her out every day, and sandwiched between all these are innumerable social calls, luncheons, and such things. I lead a lazy life as compared with the life she leads. Being in business isn't half as hard as being in society." Unhappily, physical exhaustion is not the worst penalty of such a life. The word of God is full of warnings to all such as lead it. (Isa. 3:16-24; 1 Tim. 5:6.)

A Lonely Death in a Lighthouse is Reported from Canada. It appears that the keeper of the Red Island Lighthouse which stands opposite the mouth of the Saguenay, Quebec, has been in the habit of having his wife and family live there with him during the summer and remaining as long as the weather continued mild. Last year they stayed longer than usual, but at last they went away. Soon after their departure the man fell sick. He conscientiously attended to his duties and kept the light burning, but it was with great difficulty. He needed medical attention and relief from work, but had no means of communicating with Green Island or the mainland. He built bonfires and tried other means of attracting attention, but without success. It was only a few days ago that his signals were noticed and understood. A storm was rising at the time but a brave lifeboat crew went out from Green Island to his relief. The storm delayed them, and when at length they did reach the lighthouse they were just too late. The lighthouse-keeper had breathed his last, and it is thought that his death was hastened by exposure and excitement while he was watching them coming to his rescue. It is well for the men who are keeping the gospel light burning for their Lord in this world that their communication with Him is never interrupted by storms. He never loses sight of them, and when their work is done He takes them to be with Him in glory. (Matt. 25:21.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Arrangements are being made to hold, this month, three united missionary meetings in London, at which Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, will speak.

The membership of Dr. R. R. Meredith's church at Tompkins avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., showed a net increase last year of 269. The present number is 1,152.

The Rev. Dr. Edward Beecher has sufficiently recovered from the injury by falling down the steps of his house to resume his pulpit in the Parkville Church.

Rev. John T. Vine has accepted an engagement with the Long Island Baptist Association to hold meetings in various towns during the next six months. He begins at Jamaica.

Mrs. Elizabeth Dean, of London, England, has given six valuable building lots in East Jersey Street, Elizabeth, N. J., to Grace Episcopal Church, as a site for a new church and rectory.

Union services are to be conducted in Paterson, N. J., during this month, by Rev. Thomas Needham. The churches uniting in the movement are the Park Avenue, First, Fourth and Union Avenue churches.

Mr. Robert Carter, the eminent New York publisher, died December 28, at the age of 82 years. He was an elder of the Presbyterian Church and much esteemed by all denominations of Christians in the city.

Mr. E. P. Telford commenced a three weeks' mission last Sunday in Dr. J. W. Hamilton's church in East Boston, Mass., after which he has promised to conduct services in Grace M. E. church, Haverhill, Mass.

The death of the Rev. Edward Bradley, Vicar of Lenton, England, is announced. He wrote several works under the name of Cuthbert Bede, which were widely circulated in this country. He was 62 years old.

The revival services conducted at New London, Iowa, by the Presbyterian evangelist, Rev. H. C. Keeley, have been blessed to the conversion of a large number of persons, and to the quickening of the spiritual life of the church.

The special services held by Dr. H. H. Wells in Bellefontaine, Ohio, during the past three weeks have resulted, by God's blessing, in many conversions. Dr. Wells is now holding meetings in Middletown, Ohio, whence in two weeks he goes to Chicago.

The pastor of a church at Auburn, N. Y., stopped in his sermon on Sunday last and requested the choir to cease laughing and talking. Being annoyed a few minutes later by a repetition of the misconduct, he closed the service and dismissed the congregation.

The editor of a journal published at Erie, Pa., which has a Sunday edition, presented a letter of transfer from the Presbyterian Church of his native town to the church at Erie. The pastor notified him that he could not be a member and edit a Sunday paper at the same time.

The little mission steamer Glad Tidings, which has been used in the work among the Indians, is reported to have been wrecked in Ketkatlah Harbor during a gale, and to have become a total loss. The telegram announcing the wreck does not mention any loss of life. It is hoped that Mr. Crosby and all on board were saved.

The Rev. E. W. Oakes and Mrs. Oakes sailed from New York for England, by the Etruria, on Saturday last. Mr. Oakes has arranged to hold special services at the stations of the Gospel Union, of which Rev. M. and Mrs. Baxter are Presidents. Mr. Oakes asks the prayers of his American friends for God's blessing on his labors during his visit.

Inter-denominational evangelistic services are being held in Old John Street M. E. Church, New York, every afternoon through this month. They will be conducted by various clergymen of the city. Archdeacon Mackay-Smith led the first service, Dr. A. C. Kendig that on January 2, and Dr. W. W. Bowditch on January 3. They commence at 3:30 p. m. and last one hour. Similar services were held last January and were much blessed.

THE EAR AND ITS PLANTER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"He that planted the ear, shall He not hear? He that formed the eye, shall He not see?" Ps. 94:9.

Practical Atheism—I. A Pernicious Notion—The Idea that God Does not Hear—Men who Hold It—Are Proud—Become Persecutors—Anarchy Developing from Atheism—The Idea Precludes Worship—And Moral Sense—And Comfort—Pantheism is Covert Atheism—II. An Absurd Notion—A Most Wonderful Mechanism—Gracious People Tempted—III. The Spiritual Ear—The Invitation and Response—God will Pity the Sufferer—A Foolish Customer at a Bank—Angels Finding Letter-Boxes Closed—IV. The Incentive to Prayer—A Wonderful Care-Killer.

AMONG the ungodly there are many whose lives prove that they know nothing about God. Indeed, their ignorance of God is their support in their present behavior. They comfort themselves with the notion, "The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it." To them God is out of the world as to observation or practical interference. They do not care whether He sees them or not; for their belief is, that if He does see, He cares nothing what men may think or do. He is too far off to be concerned about human affairs. He will neither grow angry with the sin of the wicked, nor take pleasure in the holiness of the godly. Of this practical atheism I am going to speak at this time, pleading against that frame of mind by the argument of the text, "He that planted the ear, shall He not hear? He that formed the eye, shall He not see?" May the Holy Spirit help me in my endeavor, and may all my hearers believe in the living, hearing, seeing Jehovah!

A Pernicious Notion.

I. Our first observation will be, the notion that God cannot hear or see is pernicious. In judging it, we will follow the line of the psalm which now lies open before us. We perceive that men who talked in this godless fashion were proud. Hence the prayer, "Lift up thyself, thou Judge of the earth: render a reward to the proud." The man who thinks that God is not in the world, or is not at all concerned in its affairs, thinks that he is, himself, about the greatest person in existence. There may be some other poor creatures about; but he is, in many respects, the most deserving of esteem. He who thinks little of God, thinks much of himself. If there be no God, or no God to care about, then straightway men delight in uttering things which make the blood of the godly to curdle. They render no praise to God; since they seek all glory for themselves. Because of their own conceit, they question His wisdom, cavil at His Word, doubt His justice, impugn the sentences of His bar, and speak evil of Him even as they list. Give a man of proud heart a fluent tongue, and opportunity enough to speak of God, and then take away from him the idea that God hears him, and there is no telling to what lengths of profanity he will hasten.

Nor is this the end of the mischief. When the fear of God is taken away from men they frequently proceed to persecute His servants. The prophet complains, "They break in pieces thy people, O Lord, and afflict thine heritage." As they hate God, so they manifest their hate against His people. If they cannot get at the Leader, if they cannot smite the Shepherd, they will at least worry the flock. Read the long and cruel story of human malice against the Church of God: it mingles with the record of every nation; it is an awful history, written in tears and gore. At times it has seemed as if God had given up His people, and caused the rod of the wicked to rest upon His heritage. No wonder that it was so with them; for thus it pleased Him to deal with His Only-begotten Son. He delivered Him up to the world to do with Him as it listed. You know the reason why; but it was

A Strange Procedure.

The Lord may deal thus with His own Church and His own cause, till His people cry, "How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in His anger!" The truth may appear to be wounded, slain, dead, and even buried. But yet, as Jesus rose again, so shall His true Church and cause rise again, though they be laid in the grave, and the stone is sealed, and the watch is set.

Take God away, and what a place this world would be! Without religion our earth would soon become a huge Aceldama, a field of blood. Ah, dear friends! men little know what they owe to the presence of God's people even in a city like this. There is no reason but religion why London should not become like Paris during the Reign of Terror.

When men say, "Doth God see? Doth God know?" then they seek every man his own; and, if they can, they turn like tigers upon each other; society is torn to pieces, and the weak are devoured. There is no telling how far the evil one may be let loose to excite men to evil; but, in any case, the chosen means of the devil will be the spread of atheistic principles among the masses. A world without God is a world without fear, without law, without order, without hope.

Note well, that if we were persuaded that God did not hear, and did not see, there would be an end to worship. Would there not? Could you worship a deaf God? I must confess that such a being would not be God to me. If He could not hear, and hear all things, I should see at once a limit to His nature; and a being of limited nature is not God, since God is, and must be, of necessity, infinite, to be God at all. Nor is this all: it seems to me that there is, to a large extent, an end of the moral sense. If there be no God to punish sin, then every man will do as seemeth right in his own eyes; and why should he not? By what consideration will he be hindered?

If There Be No Reward

for righteousness, and righteousness involves self-denial, why should he deny himself? If there is to be no punishment for sin, and sin is pleasurable, why should he not seize the pleasure? Take away all thought that God sees and hears, and you have removed the underlying basis upon which morality itself is to be built up. Without God, or even with a god that does not see and does not hear, where is the hope of the despairing? But if God sees and hears, the widow is not without a helper, and the dying man, in all his agony, is not without a hope. Oh cruel unbelief, put not out our one sun, and take not from the mourner his one consolation. Let me lose myself, but not my God, who is more than life to me. Oh yes, a God that hears and sees—we must have Him, or else we are orphaned indeed!

If God does not see and hear, we are shipwrecked upon the rock of blank atheism. I do not care a bit what men believe in, whether it be pantheism, or agnosticism, or theism; if they have no personal God that hears and sees, they have, in fact, no God at all. "There is a power that makes for righteousness," said one; but if that power is insensible, and never communicates with man, and never notices him, there is nothing in the forced admission of any use to him who makes it or hears it. It is big talk, such as men call "bosh," and nothing more. Though it be veiled in the language of philosophy, the scientific jargon which makes God into insensible force is covert atheism. I must have a God that hears and sees, and comes into the arena of my daily life, and helps me because He loves me, or else I have no God.

II. But, secondly, the notion that God cannot see and hear is An Absurd Notion.

According to our text, it is proved to be unreasonable. "He that planted the ear, shall He not hear?" Think of that argument for a little. Here is a creature which has ears, and can hear. The God who created that being, can He not hear? Has He given to His creature more than He has Himself? Has He made a creature which excels Himself in essential faculties? Has He bestowed a sense which He Himself never had? How can it be? The God that makes a man with ears to hear, must possess hearing Himself.

He that invented the idea, also planned the way by which hearing would become possible. What an intellect was that which forged the link between matter and mind, so that the movements of particles of air, and the impression made by these upon the drum of the ear, should turn into impressions upon mind and heart! God must have every power in perfection, or He could not have contrived and constructed such an admirable instrument as the ear. I should not think the time ill-spent if I were able to give you a lecture upon the human ear. We know far less about it than we do concerning the eye; and my own knowledge of it is so scant that I can only glance at the subject. That outer portion which we commonly call the ear, is only the vestibule of curious, winding passages, which communicate with chambers of bone and Vaults of Ivory.

Curtains are stretched along these passages, membranes which tremble as the head of a drum, or vibrate like a tambourine. Between two of these parchment curtains a chain of very small bones is extended. Have you never heard of the stirrupbone? Rows of fine threads, or nerves, convey the motion, or the sound, into the brain, and there the soul sits waiting for the news.

It is all Wonderful.

Nor must I forget to remind you that the ear is "planted." The important parts—the real ear—are so deeply seated in the head, as to be beyond mere external inspection. The lobe of the ear is like a leaf above ground, but the hearing organ is "planted" in the skull; it is placed very near the brain, and operates on both sides of it, so as to keep the whole mind in communication with sounds from every quarter. The ear is set deep and its chambers—some filled with air, and some filled with liquid—are thus protected from much harm, which might otherwise come to them from the outer world.

An aurist who explained to you the mechanism of the ear should make you feel that an undevout aurist is mad. The infinite wisdom of God is seen in this gate of sense; and it is there in far greater measure than we can perceive. And can you believe that this marvellous instrument for hearing was made by a deaf God, or a dead God, or an impersonal power, or that it came into existence through "a fortuitous concourse of atoms"? know not the precise terms in which they now attempt to describe creation without a Creator, design without a designer; but I can only say that those who believe in ears created by an unhearing force or being have more faith than I can muster.

But even if you had an ear made—and I suppose that it would be no very great difficulty to fashion in wax or some other substance, an exact resemblance to an ear—could you produce hearing then? God alone gives

The Life which Hears.

That particular point in which motion is translated into audible sound—where is that? That thing which hears—I mean not the vibrating parchment nor the telephonic nerves, but that living something which is informed by the nerves, and reads their message—where and what is that something? The surgeon searches with his knife, but he declares that he cannot find it. No, he cannot find it: it has fled before his instrument of search. But this much is sure—once gone he cannot restore it. He could not make it at the first, nor renew it when once departed. Not the whole troop of surgeons and physicians of all the hospitals could suffice to create a soul. There is a spiritual something—the true man, and this it is which God makes.

To imagine that the Creator of life does not see and hear is absurd; and yet the devil tempts gracious people, the best of people, at times to think that the Lord does not observe them in their trials. "Oh," say they, "God is too great, surely, to hear me, a poor sinful woman, or a frail, ignorant man. His greatness must prevent his hearing me." Yet surely, you would not think the Lord deaf because you are unworthy. "He telleth the number of the stars, He calleth them all by their names"; and He knows you, also, specially and individually. I marked a floweret in the centre of a beechwood in the New Forest. Surrounded by the princely trees of the wood, it smiled from the sod a modest beauty. I thought to myself, "When do you see the sun? Does his light and glory ever cheer you?" I tarried in that forest, and watched the sunbeams smiling through the interlacing branches of the trees, and while I lingered I marked how, ever and anon the sun found out a way to pour his golden glory direct into the centre of that flower, which glowed and smiled as heaven thus communed with its little mess. Rest assured that God, who is our sun, thinks of the least of us. Shall He that made the ear not hear? Shall He that formed the eye not see? Be not guilty of so absurd a thought as to fancy that these evil days are not watched over of the Lord.

The Spiritual Ear.

III. But now, thirdly and briefly, that God hears his own must be especially certain, from the very argument of the text. "Why?" say you. Why, because they have new and spiritual ears, and they have God-given spiritual eyes; and he that planted the spiritual ear, shall he not hear? and he that formed the spiritual eye, shall he not see? It has come to pass, my brethren, that now when God speaks by the Spirit we hear Him, blessed be His name! Time was when His threatenings spoke to us as with noise of thunder; but we would not hear them. Now we are humbled in the dust by His anger. He has given us ears which are joined to hearts of flesh. When He speaks by way of invitation, and says, "Seek ye my face," we answer, "Thy face, Lord, will I seek."

Do you imagine that if God has given us the grace to hear His voice, He will not hear us when we lift up our voices to Him?

He has created in the minds of some of you a sense of need, and will He not pity you? Perhaps you have not reached any farther than to know your wants and dangers; but he gave you this. You are hungry and thirsty; you had not these once; He gave them to you. Why? Wherefore? You were not hungry for mercy; you were not thirsty for righteousness till His Spirit came and you gave your life, and with that life the soul-hunger. Will He not satisfy the hunger He creates? Will he not fulfil the desire he has implanted?

Spiritual Appetites

In addition to this, He makes us long after holiness; will He not work it in us? I might say of myself and many dear brothers and sisters here, that we habitually desire to be holy, and to be wholly free from sin. We cannot endure evil. A preacher once declared that when Paul cried, "Oh wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" he was not a Christian. That shows how very little that preacher knew about the matter. No man but a true believer would have such anguish on account of sin. It is when we begin to loathe sin, and any leaning toward sin, and when we grow wretched because of a single evil thought, that we have grown in grace, and are far advanced, and are reaching toward that other verse, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory." To the ear which God has enabled to hear His call the Lord will lend His own ear to hear prayer. Surely, the very holiness of God that puts into us a desire to be holy is a guarantee to us that He will help us to be holy. He that makes us long for purity will work it in us. It may be, He will put us in the furnace; but by some means He will purify us as silver is refined. He that planted the desire after holiness is Himself holy, and will work holiness in His people.

Do you pray, brothers and sisters? I know you do; but do you really believe that God hears you? I cannot help thinking that a great mass of prayers are poured into a vacuum. I cannot shake off the thought that brethren seem often to be praying into pleading with an infinite nothing. They say the proper words, but they mean little or nothing by them. Does God hear prayer? Do you answer, "Yes"? Then let us pray as if we truly believed that He did. When we have done praying, let us expect Him to answer us. When we go into the bank with our cheques, we hand them in, take up the money, and are gone. Do we deal thus at the Bank of Faith? Do we plead the promise? If so, the Lord counts out the money; but do we take it up? I fear we leave it on the counter. The Lord might say, "Is that man gone? Gone without what he came for? He pleaded my promise, and has he gone away content without my reply?" Is it your habit to go to the throne of mercy and ask for the mere sake of asking? Do you grind at a mill for the mere pleasure of grinding? Surely he that asketh receiveth; and if he does not, he should inquire the reason why. A little time before prayer, to prepare the petition, would much help toward reality in prayer. A little time after prayer, to consider when and how the blessing is to be used when the Lord sends it, would be a further aid to faith. Sometimes the angels come to our letter-boxes and cannot put in the answers because the boxes are fastened down by unbelief. We are not prepared to receive what God is prepared to give. Let us pray, believing that as surely as God has given us an ear He has an ear Himself, and will hear our pleadings. "He that planted the ear, shall He not hear?"

Eternal Emptinesses

The Incentive.

IV. I have done when I say just this one thing more: a belief that God hears and sees has a very beneficial tendency upon those who firmly hold it. It works good in a thousand ways. Time would fail me to recount a tithe of them. It may suffice to take a thought or two, and turn the matter over in our minds. If we feel that God sees and hears, what an incentive it is to do right, and to be valiant for the truth! Soldiers will play the man in the presence of their prince. If our Lord looks on, what will we not do and dare? The same sense of His presence will act as a check to any and every deed of sin. We cannot indulge the thought of evil when the Lord Himself hears that thought. Does the Lord look on, and shall I sin in His divine presence? Shall I grieve Jesus when the Beloved of my soul is Himself close to me, and watches, with regretful eye, each sinful movement?

It acts grandly as a preservative against the desire of applause and the fear of man. He who knows assuredly that God hears him, will speak the truth though all the world should listen, or though no one but God should hear him. We do not want applause from men, since God hears us. If the Queen were by, and a soldier performed a deed of valor, and a person were to say to him, "You did well, and you may be proud that Corporal Brown and Sergeant Smith saw you and approved of what you did." "Oh," says he, "I care nothing for corporals and other petty officers; Her Majesty herself looked at me, and said, 'Well done.' She will, with her own hands, put the Victoria Cross upon me in due time. That is the reward I seek."

The assurance that God sees and hears, is A Wonderful Care-Killer.

Why should I be anxious? My heavenly Father knoweth that I have need of these things. What if I am in trouble? This my Father knows. Brethren, if the Lord knows our soul in adversity, and if his eye is ever upon us, are we not safe? Know that you serve one whose eyes are upon the righteous, and whose ears are open to their cry, and you will live above care.

And, oh, how this will tend to promote your fellowship with God! When your heart sings, "He leadeth me; He heareth me; He knoweth the way that I take," then are you filled with a sense of fellowship with the Eternal God. How we love Him who heareth us always! Since He is always seeing us, we learn to see Him. "Thou God seest me" is a word which brightens up our sad hearts till we also see God. Be of good cheer, our Father who sees and hears us in the midst of His people, and not so much as one of them shall perish. If the Lord were away, or asleep, or deaf, we might be in a trembling mood; but while His ear and eye are open to us, we cannot tolerate mistrust. A little altering the quaint poet's lines, we may say—

"Though winds and waves assault my keel,
He doth preserve it; He doth steer,
Even when the bark seems most to reel.
Storms are the triumph of His art,
He cannot hide His eyes, much less His heart."

Go, speak with the wise Planter of the ear; for He will surely hear.

Grace Mayling's Departure.

and who were now living in ease and luxury, and she trembled lest she too should fall. She knelt and begged God to take her.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Wandering Thoughts Lose a Horse.—Mr. Ralston relates: "There was a man in a certain town who, in conversation with the Bishop of the diocese, affirmed that while engaged in religious worship his thoughts never wandered; 'I could say the Lord's Prayer,' he said, 'without thinking of anything else while doing so.' 'Very well,' replied the bishop, 'begin, and if you do as you say, I will give you the horse I am riding.' The man commenced, and had scarcely got half-way through when he said, 'Will you give me the bridle too?' thus proving that his thoughts had wandered away from the prayer, and losing the promised reward. The case reminds us of the text, 'This people draw nigh to me with their mouth, but their heart is far from me.' (Matthew 15:8.) 'God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth.'" (John 4:24.)

Once a Fox Always a Fox.—Mr. Hastings observes: "I was at one time well acquainted with a fox, which when young was taken in a trap, brought home and chained to a kennel. In the course of time, the entrapped and broken leg healed up, and for three whole years, while chained, the animal was honest enough, simply because it could not get its designs and inclinations accomplished on the fowls and the lambs that kept at a safe distance from it. All the time, however, of its imprisonment it showed unmistakable evidence of its foxy nature, for though it did not avail itself of a tender chicken when it passed that way, it became greatly agitated and showed its sharp teeth. It was only a chained fox, that chattered with its teeth because it could not bite. As time wore on, the continuous restlessness of the fox was wearing the chain, till one night it snapped and Reynard got free. Its honesty for three years because of its captivity, did not improve its nature. Its first act after securing its freedom was to kill all the fowls belonging to the establishment; leaving none alive. How like man! There may be forced morality, but unless there is regeneration the old nature, though restrained, is not changed. Hence the words of our Lord, 'Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Ye must be born again.'" (John 3:5-7.)

A Lesson from the Lowering of the Lights.—Mr. McIntosh relates: "Some years ago a series of Gospel meetings were held in a certain church in Glasgow. A goodly number stayed to the after-meeting; and one by one, as they settled the momentous question of their soul's salvation, they left the hall, until one young man and the pastor only remained. It was getting late, and the church officer began to put out the lights. The difference in the light of the hall attracted the young man's attention. Suddenly he felt that his soul must be saved now or never. He sprang to his feet, and in the intensity of his anxiety exclaimed as he threw his arms around the hall-pillar, 'I will never leave this place until I am saved.' He had not long to wait, for when a sinner earnestly seeks Jesus, he soon finds Him, or rather is found by Him; and that night that young man left the hall rejoicing in Jesus. God is the 'Rewarder of all those that diligently seek Him.'" (Heb. 11:6.)

From Farm to Mansion.—Rev. Mr. Wells observes: "Two years ago I was visiting a friend who lived on the estate of the Marquis of Breadalbane. On the second day of my visit, as we were walking past a farm-house in the neighborhood, my friend stopped, and pointing to it, said: 'That is where the Marquis passed his boyhood. He lived there in a simple way, but one day his father took him from the farm to the family mansion, where he lived in a manner worthy of the son of the Marquis.' As I walked along I thought, that is very like what God does with us. We are busily engaged in our little, narrow, money-gathering, ignoble lives, but at last we hear God's call to leave all that and become one of His sons—one of the sons of the King of kings. Did that young nobleman decline to obey his father's command? Did he disdain the riches and splendors of the castle, and cling to the comparative poverty of the farm? No. And yet how many of us are guilty of even greater foolishness, in refusing the generous invitation of our Lord and King."

God Claims You.—Mr. Wells relates: "When the late Earl Cairns was a bright little boy of ten years of age, he heard in Dr. Cook's church in Belfast three words which made a memorable impression upon him. The Doctor in the course of a sermon made use of the expression, 'God claims you.' These words struck the little fellow very forcibly. After the service, he said to himself, 'God claims me. That is reasonable. God made me. He, and none other, has the right to claim me.' Then came the question, 'What am I going to do with the claim?' After some thought he answered, 'I will own it, and give myself to Him.' He went home and told his mother, 'God claims me.' At school and college his motto was, 'God claims me.' As a member of Parliament, and ultimately as Lord Chancellor, it was still, 'God claims me.' When he was appointed Lord Chancellor he was teacher of a large Bible-class, and his minister, thinking that now he would not have time to devote to that purpose, said to him, 'I suppose you will now require to give up your class?' 'No,' was the reply, 'I will not, God claims me.' Oh, miserable pleasure-seekers, who waste your time in the vain pursuits of pleasure, which ever eludes your grasp, God claims you."

Fell Dead in a Drinking-Bar.—Mr. Hamilton observes: "A town in Scotland was the centre of a large district famous for the distilling of whisky. There were not many total abstainers in the town, but one man, an habitual drinker, suddenly became aware that strong drink was fast making him a total wreck physically and financially. He resolved to stop drinking. He took the total abstinence pledge, and donned the blue ribbon. Some Christian workers told him that if he wished to be truly reformed, or even to be enabled to keep the pledge which he had just taken, he must accept the Lord Jesus as his keeper. 'No, no,' was his reply; 'I don't want any religion. I have signed my name, and I shall keep it. I have aye kept my word.' Despite all entreaties he refused to have anything to do with Christ, but went away determined in his own strength to lead a sober and moral life. For over three years he never went near a saloon, and for the first few months felt no desire to return to his old habits. But one day as he was walking down the street, without any temptation or meditation, or having purposed beforehand to do so, he turned into a saloon and began to drink. Glass after glass he poured down his throat, never pausing to think, until having consumed a very large quantity he fell dead. If God removes His restraining and sustaining power, then, left to our own perverse nature and the evil influence of Satan, like the swine at Gadara we will rush headlong to destruction. We cannot be safe unless 'the Lord is our Keeper.' (Psalm 121:5.)

The Late Robert Browning. (See page 27.)

Russian Exiles Going to Siberia.

Vision of a Drowning Man.—Mr. Hastings, of Boston, Mass., relates: "In the town of East Salisbury, Mass., half a mile from the railway station, lived an old lady named Rhoda Mercer. Some years ago she belonged to a company of women who used to meet and pray for sailors, their husbands, sons, and brothers on the sea. One day a woman came in to see her, and found her ironing, and said to her, 'Pray for my husband!' She replied, 'I have prayed for him to-day. But the visitor urged her to pray again, for she deeply felt his need of prayer. She therefore stopped ironing, and went away and prayed again. She came back to her ironing, and again went back and prayed. She came back again, and again retired to pray; and while praying this time, she could see this man, for whom she prayed, struggling in the waves. She saw a boat let down from a vessel, saw the man sink, and while she was praying, in agony, someone caught him by the hair and he was drawn into the boat and rescued. Months after, when the man returned safe and sound, he related that at that very day, and at that very hour, he was in those circumstances of peril, and was delivered precisely as she saw. This account we had from her pastor, who received it from her own lips." Several other somewhat similar cases are on record.

"The Master of a Common Lodging-House," says a Mildmay visitor in Service for the King, "in one of the 'slums' of our district was ill. I went to see him, and thought him looking very bad. He spoke, however, in a defiant kind of way, saying that he hoped to be well again soon; but when I went a few days after he was unconscious and apparently dying. I repeated a few texts by his bedside, and as I said 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow,' a look of intelligence passed over his face. The next day, I found him sensible, and he eagerly took my hand and gave me a warm welcome, saying that he had been so troubled because he thought he had insulted me. He had recognized my voice the day before, though he could not speak, and a minister had since been to see him. He was now quite happy, for his 'dirty sins were washed in the blood of Jesus,' and he was 'ready to meet his Maker.' He joined me in prayer, and thanked God that though his sins were as scarlet, they were now whiter than snow. The next time I saw him, he had a large Bible lying open on his chest. 'But you cannot read,' I said. 'No,' he answered, 'but I like to hold the Bible, and my wife can read to me a bit sometimes.' He was in rapid consumption, and died in a few weeks. 'I have lived in darkness all my life, but now I have God in my heart,' was his final testimony."

RUSSIAN EXILES TO SIBERIA.

SOME sad incidents are related by Dr. Bædeker of his experiences of Russian travel. He says that in the northeastern districts of the country to which he went distributing gospel portions and tracts, he frequently met exiles proceeding under military escort to that dreadful desert of Siberia. Some at an, he met, of the offence of conspiring eousness," said one; but if that power is insens and never communicates with man, and notices him, there is nothing in the forced ad before retiring to rest. "I believe I should do bet- sion of any use to him who makes it or hearter by applying personally. Some one calls on the It is big talk, such as men call "bosh," and nadvertisers and gets the position before my letter ing more. Though it be veiled in the language reaches them. I have made up my mind to go to they philosophy, the scientific jargon which makes the city and get board in some cheap boarding- I found they were civilized, and reached the house, and set out every morning to call on the men who advertise, right away. That is the only plan." inquired where they came from, and they said they were political exiles, but were now at liberty. This man was taken to prison as a suspect at the time of the death of the late Emperor. He was not concerned in it, but some of his acquaintances were concerned in it. They put him in prison in St. Petersburg, where he was sixteen months in solitary confinement. In this prison he was not allowed to talk or move, or even to clean his cell. It was forced idleness and forced silence. He seriously told me that many prisoners became insane. He said he fell ill, and when the doctor came he said he would die. Then they removed him from the solitary prison, and he recovered. As soon as he was recovered they put chains on his feet, and off he went to Siberia. Political prisoners have one-half of the hair shaved off their heads, and the other half is allowed to grow, and they are sent along in chains, surrounded by soldiers. They go some distance on foot, then they are taken by sledges or steamers until they reach Tomsk, but when they pass Tomsk they have to tramp. This man's brother, after six years' exile, was set at liberty. He was arrested, and his wife did not know anything about it. A little later his wife was arrested as a suspect, and she was sent to the distant region of Siberia, where they met again.

"Among the passengers on board a steamer on the Volga was a young married couple, who interested me very much. The man was a political exile. They were leaving Russia, and were being sent to Siberia. The man had a special permission to go into exile on his own charges, travelling at his own expense. When his intended young wife heard that her future husband was going to be exiled she at once sought him out, joined herself to him, and accompanied him in his exile. These dear people had little or no money, and I offered them a little, but they refused, and they went on their way wonderfully cheerful. Their destination was Irkutsk.

They said they would have to show themselves in Irkutsk, and where they would be sent afterward they did not know. They were afraid they might be sent to Yakutsk, which is far north and bitterly cold. These political exiles are sent, many of them, to settle down and live there all their lives." Thousands of Russians know that they too may be sent out into these solitudes any day, yet they go on bravely spreading their doctrines of the rights of man, and the iniquity of despotic government, content if by the sacrifice of their lives or liberty the day of their country's deliverance is brought nearer.

GRACE MAYLING'S TRIAL.

(See illustration on page 29.)

"I AM tired of answering these advertisements," said Grace Mayling, as she and her sister Caroline sat in their pretty bedroom talking over their affairs before retiring to rest. "I believe I should do better by applying personally. Some one calls on the advertisers and gets the position before my letter reaches them. I have made up my mind to go to the city and get board in some cheap boarding-house, and set out every morning to call on the men who advertise, right away. That is the only plan."

"Mamma will never agree to that," said Caroline. "She does not like your going away at all, and this is worse than going to take a position that you have secured."

"She must agree, Caroline. I cannot stay at home any longer. You know there is not enough for us all. Why, it has cost us every cent of our income just to pay rent and keep house. We have not been able to buy even a pair of shoes all this half-year. Something must be done, and this seems the only thing."

"I wish you could have brought yourself to accept young Dawson, Grace. Is there no chance yet, do you think? You could marry and settle down right here in the village. It would be so nice for me, and such a comfort to mamma. I am sure he loves you still in spite of your refusal."

● "Oh, do not speak of him again, Caroline. I am not fit for a farmer's wife. I should be killed with the dullness in a year. No, anything but that. I want something brighter—with more life in it. I will tell you what I do regret. I could not say it to any one else, but I think you have guessed it before. I am sorry I did not accept Robert Boden when he asked me. I did care for him, but I answered him with a jest, and he just turned away as if he had been struck, and the next thing I heard he had exchanged to a ship that was to be away on a three years' cruise, and I did not see him again. I know he thought I was a frivolous girl, and so I was then, but ever since papa died I have been sorry. Life seems so much more serious now. I could not hurt any one's feelings like that again, whether I cared for them or not."

"Why don't you write to him?"

"I did write just after papa's death, but it is quite a chance whether he would get the letter. I sent it to Singapore. His ship was stationed there at that time. If he received it I don't know that he would understand. I scarcely said anything about myself. I only told him about papa, and reminded him how fond papa was of him, and said how sad we were. It is nearly a year since, now, and he has not answered."

Mrs. Mayling, as her younger daughter predicted, was firmly opposed to Grace going to the city to earn a livelihood with no definite prospect before her. Though she had offered many prayers for the conversion of her daughters, they had not been answered, and she had heard that the city was a dreadful place for girls. How could Grace be preserved from temptation when she had not given her heart to God? In her honor and purity Mrs. Mayling had strong confidence, but what were they without God's grace? In poverty and difficulty, with no friends near to counsel her, both might succumb. Mrs. Mayling knew little of city life, or she would have been yet more apprehensive. Still, the financial difficulty pressed, and Grace, after many appeals to her, at last won a reluctant consent to her making the experiment.

No time was lost in making preparations, and one bright morning Grace was ready to set out. She bade adieu cheerfully to her mother, for she would not let that affectionate old lady see how her own heart sank before her enterprise. Then she and Caroline walked across their neat little garden to the rectory, to bid good-bye to Margaret Reeve, the rector's daughter, who conducted the Bible class of which both were members, and who had often earnestly sought to win them to Christ. Margaret saw them pass the windows, knew why they were coming, and went to the door to meet them. There was no need of concealment here, and Grace allowed her sorrow to show in her face. Caroline was still more mournful; her eyes were swollen with weeping, and the tears were rising again as she stood a little behind Grace holding her sister's bag and shawl.

"Good bye," said Grace, her voice husky with emotion; "I shall never forget all your kindness."

Margaret looked at her tenderly and yearningly. "I shall pray for you, Grace," she said. "You may be 'sifted as wheat' where you are going, and will need our prayers. It grieves me sorely to have you go, and still more to feel that you have not taken Him for your friend who is ready to help you and save you from the evil. Remember, 'If thou seek Him, He will be found of thee.'"

The three girls walked down the path to the cab waiting at the gate; there Grace was kissed and hugged, the door was shut and she was driven to the railroad depot.

Letters came during the next few weeks at intervals from Grace, but neither mother, sister, nor friend who read them learned her real experience. They were hopeful, even cheerful, letters, but Margaret Reeve, more than either of the others, saw that it had cost the writer an effort to make them so. She had not secured a position, but she had been told that trade was bad, that a little later she might obtain employment, that she must wait, etc., etc. Her money was not exhausted yet, and she was hoping and not much discouraged. There grew longer intervals after that between her letters, and of that time she would never tell the whole history. It was a time of fierce temptation. Without money, without friends, beset by offers of support that meant the loss of her honor and her soul. Cold, hunger, misery, and no prospect of relief. Oh, it was a dreadful time!

Then, at last, in her agony she turned to God. Her own strength was failing fast. She saw women who had failed in the struggle, who had purchased with their souls escape from what she was suffering, and who were now living in ease and luxury, and she trembled lest she too should fall. She knelt and begged God to take her into His keeping, and with full faith gave her life and all she was to Him, whether she might starve or not.

Grace Mayling's Departure.

It was the next morning after that crisis that a letter from home reached her. She opened it listlessly. What did they know of her condition? She had concealed it, and even now could not bear to wring their hearts by telling them. But her mood changed when she saw the enclosure. It was a letter from her sailor lover whose confession of love she had received so lightly when he made it in her frivolous days. He had missed her letter, and it had followed him to a distant station after long delays. He had read between the lines the change that had taken place in her, and confessed that, though wounded by her light answer, he still loved her. He was coming home on leave, and would arrive soon after his letter, and begged her to accept his love.

The revulsion of feeling from despair to joy almost made her faint, but it is not difficult to recover from the shocks that joy gives. Grace had only to wait now for money from home to take her back there, and to wait for her lover's arrival. As she once more greeted her Christian friend at the rectory, she filed Margaret's heart with thankfulness by telling her that she had been driven by her trials out of the darkness into light, and had learned, as Margaret had reminded her, that He was found of her when she sought Him.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 14.)

Unwelcome Guests.

GOVERNOR BRADFORD returned a kind and grateful answer to the friendly Captain; and almost immediately after the departure of the messenger, Mr. Winslow was dispatched in their own boat to endeavor to obtain provisions from the fishing ships. Captain Huddleston received Mr. Winslow with great kindness, and not only liberally contributed to supply the wants of the colonists from his own stores, but wrote to the captains of the neighboring ships, urging their good services on their behalf. Mr. Winslow found about thirty sail of ships on the fishing station, and, with the generosity of a grateful heart, he is more minute in detailing their liberality, than in recording his own privations.

"I was employed," says he, "by our Governor, with orders to take up such victuals as the ships could spare; where I found kind entertainment and good respect, with a willingness to supply our wants. But being not able to spare that quantity I required, by reason of the necessity of some amongst themselves whom they supplied before my coming, they would not take bills for the same, but did what they could freely, wishing their store had been such as they might in greater measure have expressed their own love, and supplied our necessities, for which they sorrowed, provoking one another to the utmost of their abilities; which, although it were not much amongst so many people as were at the plantation, yet through the provident and discreet care of the governors, recovered and preserved strength till our own crop on the ground was ready.

By careful husbandry the colonists had now bread enough to secure a quarter of a pound to each individual, daily, till harvest; and encouraged by this meagre yet most opportune supply, they set to work with renewed energy and thankfulness to their ordinary tasks. The dangers and perils of the second year of the infant colony were over—another victory, won with hard toil and privations, had crowned the trusting faith and indomitable perseverance of the Pilgrim founders.

The boat which hove in sight—and filled the colonists with apprehensions of European allies abetting their Indian foes, at the very time when they were negotiating with the agents of Massasoit on behalf of their treacherous interpreter Squanto—belonged to a fishing vessel dispatched to New England by Mr. Thomas Weston, a citizen of London, and one of the merchant adventurers, who was impatient to reap a speedier harvest from the colony than the returns of the Plymouth settlers seemed to promise. This was the same Mr. Thomas Weston on whom the Pilgrims had placed no slight reliance, who had visited them at Leyden, had advanced £500 to promote their scheme of colonization, and, with many noisy protestations of sympathy and favor, had hurried from London to Southampton to bid them farewell. When the Sparrow's boat sailed into Plymouth harbor towards the end of May, 1622, and landed seven new emigrants to add to the number of the colonists, at the very time they were parting among their feeble company the last grains of their winter's store, it was no unmeet foreshadowing of the future services they had to expect from the same quarter. The boat was freighted with no provisions even for those it brought, nor bore with it any message of good-will to the colonists. Already other ships were following on its track, sent out by the same unfriendly adventurer, crowded with rival colonists, destined to cause more sorrow and anxiety to the Pilgrim founders of New England than all the sufferings and privations which they had previously endured.

A letter received by that opportunity, addressed to Governor Carver, conveyed to the colonists the first notice of rivalry and disunion among the adventurers, on whose good faith their success seemed then so greatly to depend. "The shallop," says Bradford, "brings a letter from Mr. Weston of January 17, by which we find he has quite deserted us, and is going to settle a plantation of his own." The ungracious conduct of those who delivered the letter was a sufficiently intelligent illustration of the intentions of the writer, but the journals of the Pilgrims record no complaints or desponding forebodings, though they must now have sometimes cast an anxious look toward the distant horizon, not with the fond hope of despoiling a friendly sail bearing down on them from the far-off land of their nativity, but with the fear of unfriendly rivals coming to reap where they had sown, and to dispute with them the hard-won fruits of their persevering industry. Their worst fears could hardly surpass the reality.

Towards the close of the pleasant month of June the expected colonists arrived. From their citadel on Burial Hill the Plymouth settlers beheld two vessels round the point of Cape Cod and cast anchor in the bay. They proved to be the Charity and the Swan, two ships freighted by Mr. Thomas Weston, and bringing some sixty emigrants, sent over at his own cost, and commissioned to plant and colonize for his exclusive benefit.

The Charity was a large emigrant ship, having on board a numerous body of colonists destined for Virginia, in addition to those who landed at Plymouth. The Pilgrims soon found that their character amply corresponded with that which we have already described as most commonly pertaining to the vagabond settlers of the Virginia's Company's plantations. They dreamt of no aim to "do good or to plant religion." No wounded conscience had driven them to forsake the land of their birth, and to break the fond ties of home, in the hope of finding liberty to worship God amid the wilds of the New World. Even Mr. Weston owned that many of them were rude and profane fellows, and Robert Cushman wrote a warning letter to his friends at New Plymouth, in which he says, "They are no men for us, and I fear they will hardly deal so well with the savages as they should. I pray you, therefore, signify to Squanto that they are a distinct body from us, and we have nothing to do with them, nor must be blamed for their faults, much less can warrant their fidelity."

This indeed was the greatest of all the dangers they had to fear. Their most difficult task had already been to deal with their Indian neighbors, and establish an intercourse equally based on the foundation of respect for their courage and confidence in their integrity. The danger, therefore, of being held responsible for the excesses of such men was great; the impossibility of guaranteeing their fidelity was speedily still more apparent, for Mr. John Pierce in writing of them remarks: "They are so base in condition for the most part, as in all appearance not fit for an honest man's company." An inroad of savage Narragansetts, armed with tomahawk and scalping-knife could hardly have been more dreaded by the virtuous colonists of New Plymouth, as the arrival of such a band of vagabond adventurers, to taint their new settlement with the worst vices of the Old World. Nevertheless the colonists failed not in good services of kindly hospitality to the unwelcome strangers. "We received them," says Winslow, "into our town, affording them whatsoever courtesy our mean condition could afford." And yet their condition was such as might amply have justified the dismissal of their visitors to seek for themselves such a welcome as the forest wilds had afforded to the first settlers, under more inclement skies. But it was a trial of strength between selfishness and principle, wherein the former overreached herself, and proved how worthless is the policy of shrewd dishonesty and greed.

It was not alone in the simple rites of hospitality to the intruders that the sterling principles of the Plymouth Pilgrims were made manifest. Their generous faith triumphed over every selfish consideration, so that we almost rejoice in reviewing trials which led to the display of such true Christian nobility. So far from giving way to indignant feelings at the desertion of their cause, by one who had made such protestations of friendly zeal and disinterested sympathy on their behalf, the colonists still generously recurred to the early services of Mr. Weston; and Winslow, after narrating the base ingratitude of their guests, remarks, "Nevertheless, for their master's sake, who formerly had deserved well from us, we continued to do them whatsoever good or furtherance we could." Truly it was taking on their enemy the Christian's revenge, and "heaping coals of fire upon his head."

"In the meantime," says Winslow, "the body of them refreshed themselves at Plymouth, whilst some most fit sought out a place for them. That little store of corn we had was exceedingly wasted by the unjust and dishonest walking of these strangers; who, though they would sometimes seem to help us in our labor about our corn, yet spared not day and night to steal the same, it being then eatable and pleasant to taste, though green and unprofitable; and though they received much kindness, set light both by it and us, not sparing to requite the love we showed them, with secret backbitings, revilings, etc., the chief of them being forestalled and made against us before they came, as after appeared. Nevertheless, for their master's sake, who formerly had deserved well from us, we continued to do them whatsoever good or furtherance we could, attributing these things to the want of conscience and discretion, expecting each day when God in his providence would disburden us of them, sorrowing that their overseers were not of more ability and fitness for their places, and much fearing what would be the issue of such raw and unconscionable beginnings.

'At length their coasters returned, having found, in their judgment, a place fit for plantation, within the bay of the Massachusetts at a place called by the Indians Wichaguscusset; to which place the body of them went with all convenient speed, leaving still with us such as were sick and lame, by the Governor's permission, though on their parts undeserved; whom our surgeon, by the help of God, recovered gratis for them, and they fetched home, as occasion served.

"They had not been long from us ere the Indians filled our ears with clamors against them, for stealing their corn, and other abuses conceived by them. At which we grieved the more, because the same men [the Indians], in my own hearing, had been earnest in persuading Captain Standish, before their coming, to solicit our Governor to send some of his men to plant by them alleging many reasons how it might be commodious for us."

It was evil enough for the Pilgrims to have such neighbors planted in ungenerous rivalry beside them on the New England coast, but it would have been infinitely worse had the merchant adventurers, on whose good-will they so much depended, insisted on intruding such a vicious rabble into their own community. Then, indeed, it would have been vain for them to warn the Indians that they were blameless of the new comers' deeds, and scarcely less vain would it have proven for the elders of New Plymouth to strive to guard the rising generation, the hope and life of the colony, from their contaminating influence.

But as the season of harvest drew near the colonists were once more threatened with a renewal of the privations which had so sorely tried them in the earlier months of the year. Heedless of the stinted and hard-won stores which they had obtained when seemingly on the verge of want, they had generously shared them with their unwelcome guests. Added to this, their crop proved scanty, partly by reason of the weakness of its planters, through want, and partly owing to the base ingratitude and dishonesty of the new emigrants, who had plucked much of it while the ear was still green. They had shipped to the merchant adventurers a costly freight, but they looked in vain for any return; and once more the fading leaves of the forest warned them of the coming winter, and recalled to their remembrance former privations, when they had been better provided against threatened famine.

The colonists of New England had learned from their opportune visit to the vessels employed in fishing on the coast, that they might hope at times to interchange courtesies with their fellow-countrymen on that distant shore. Towards the end of August, when their scanty harvest had been reaped, and no adequate provision seemed to be left for the winter, they were gratified with the sight of two English ships entering the bay. One of these was the Sparrow, returning from the fishing grounds laden with the spoils of the sea, and in consort with it the Discovery, a stranger vessel, but commanded by Captain Jones, the same, it is supposed, who, as master of the Mayflower, had guided the Pilgrim Fathers to Plymouth Bay. To an American, more especially, these records of the early history of his country are peculiarly attractive, wherein he catches a glimpse of the strange and unknown sail welcomed at long intervals on the solitary shores, where now the merchant navies of the world are crowding to traffic with the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers of New England. The early colonial historians describe the vessels which visited them from time to time, generally as ships; but probably the little Mayflower, of one hundred and eighty tons, was regarded as no inconsiderable vessel by the colonists, who, had they sailed in a larger ship, would have been compelled to choose a more convenient harbor than the capacious but shallow waters of Plymouth Bay afford.

"To gain a satisfactory impression," says Dr. Cheever, "of the localities of Plymouth Harbor, we must ascend the Burial Hill, which rises, covered with its forest of grave-stones, directly above the terrace, where the Pilgrims laid out the first rude street of their settlement. It is a very sacred spot in their history, and the view from it is incomparably fine. The town lies below you, around the bosom of the hill. A few majestic elms and lindens rise in beautiful masses of foliage among the buildings on the water side, but in general there are few trees until the eye passes into that noble ridge of pine forest on the southeast, running out into the sea; a hill-range of the primeval wilderness, as deeply foliated as the Green Mountains, or the Jura range in Switzerland.

"The wide harbor is before you, with a bar or spit of land straight stretching across the centre of it, and dividing the inner flats from the deep blue water beyond. I say the wide harbor. And now it depends very much upon the time of tide when you first enter the town, whether you are greatly disappointed or pleased in the first impression. Plymouth Harbor is one of those vast inlets so frequent along our coast, where, at high tide, you see a magnificent bay studded with islands, and opening proudly into the open ocean; but at low tide an immense extent of muddy, salt-grassed, and seaweeded shallows, with a narrow stream winding its way among them to find the sea.

"Here and there lies the stranded bark of a fisherman, or a lumber schooner amidst the flats, left at low tide, not high and dry, but half sunk in the mud; and the wharves are dripping with rotting sea-weed, and the shores look decaying and deserted; not pebbly or sandy like a beach, but swampy with eel grass, and strewn here and there with the skeletons of old horse-fishes, crabs, muscles, etc., among the withered layers of dry kelp. Now and then, also, the red huts and fish-flakes of the fishermen vary the scene upon the shore, or a small vessel, about as large as the Mayflower, slowly, though with all sail set, follows the course of the stream winding among the shallows, the only channel, at low tide, by which there is any approach from the outer open bay, towards the quay or business landing-place of the village.

The extent of these flats and shallows at Cape Cod and Plymouth was the cause of great evil and hardship at first; for, speaking of Cape Cod Bay, where the Pilgrims first came to anchor, they say; 'We could not come near the shore by three-quarters of an English mile, because of shallow water, which was a great prejudice to us, for our people, going on shore, were forced to wade a bow-shoot or two in going a-land, which caused many to get colds and coughs, for it was by times freezing weather.' In these colds and coughs were the seed, to some of a speedy, to others a lingering, New England consumption, which soon sowed the harbor-side with graves, almost as many as the names of the living.

"But now if you behold this same sweep of sea scenery at high tide, beneath a clear sky, a bright sun, in the coloring of morn or evening, or in the solemn stillness of an autumn moon, what an amazing change! It is no longer the same region. You would think it one of the finest harbors in the world. You would think it was the preference and selection of the human will, after long searching, that brought the Pilgrims hither, and not merely the hand and compulsion of an overruling Providence. You would think how easy and how natural for them to find their way just to this landing-place, and how beautiful and admirable the region, for the thrift of a colony, both in commercial and in country life."

It was not, however, the will of Providence that the Fathers of New England should found a great city, whose swift commercial growth should reward them with the wealth of the Old World, and expose them to its envy and corrupting restraints. The wide-spreading oak, underneath which freedom was to shelter, needed the slow growth of centuries ere its sapling boughs were knit into sinewy strength, and required its unseen but strong and far-extending roots no less than the slightly canopy of its green foliage. It was God's good providence that frustrated the Pilgrims' plans of settling in Virginia, and guided the little Mayflower away from the fertile shores of the Hudson, to land them on the bare rocks of Plymouth Bay.

(To be Continued.)

Peculiar

...in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any medicine.

...in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known medicines of the vegetable kingdom.

...in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

...in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger bottles require larger doses, and do produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

...in its "good name at home"—there is of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where made, than of all other blood purifiers.

...in its phenomenal record of sales and, no other preparation has ever attained popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla

...at all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

A Perfect Remedy for Catarrh.

...earned professor in one of the largest and most colleges in America recently told a gentleman the Pillow-Inhaler had cured a nasal catarrh which had from birth, and that he owed his present and round appearance to the Pillow-Inhaler.

...er professor, Arthur F. Winslow, A.B., of the English and School at West Newton, Mass., says: "I believe the inhaler is in every case what it professes to be as a cure for I have tried it with entire success in my own case." I have tried it with entire success in my own case.

...inglish and well-known physician, Charles H. Craigin, D., Georgetown, D. C., writes: "The catarrh which has my air passages very seriously for a year has been much relieved by the use of the Pillow-Inhaler."

...dvisor, the Rev. J. T. Burrows, D.D., of Boston, writes: "I think the Pillow-Inhaler is a very great bit, and the man to it deserves the gratitude of all sufferers. I never so soundly, and my voice is better since using it."

...rter, M.D., Norfolk, Va., a well-known physician of bronchitis, says: "I believe the Pillow-Inhaler to be the best for the relief and cure of lung troubles that I have ever heard of."

...N. Daniels, Melrose, N. Y., writes: "I have used the inhaler for severe trouble in my throat and bronchitis and best results, and I say to others I believe bronchitis and catarrh can be cured by the Pillow-Inhaler."

...ance, Chambers, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, in City, writes: "I have used the Pillow-Inhaler for over five years and I hereby cheerfully testify to its effectiveness for catarrh and bronchitis. I would not be without it."

...T. Horner, 1601 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, who is the author of "Mrs. Rorer's Cook Book," and head of the Philadelphia Cooking School, says: "After a short trial with the inhaler for catarrh, I find myself greatly benefited. I did it to those who wish to get rid of catarrh."

...book about the Pillow-Inhaler and testimonials sent on application.

THE PILLOW-INHALER CO.,
100 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

LADIES 100,000 DEMOREST CORSETS FREE

100,000 SHOULDER BRACES FREE

YOUR CHOICE. 100,000 STOCKING SUPPORTERS FREE

A MARVELOUS OFFER

By A Reliable House!

Every lady has heard of MME. DEMOREST. Her name is a by word in every house in the land. Her celebrated Patterns have been in use over 40 years. We are the publishers of the well-known publication, Mme. Demorest's Illustrated Monthly Fashion Journal and we wish to increase its circulation 200,000 copies during the next 90 days, and to that end we will give away to new subscribers

100,000 Demorest Celeb'd Corsets FREE
100,000 Shoulder Braces FREE
100,000 Stocking Supporters FREE

The MME. DEMOREST ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY FASHION JOURNAL is a 36 page paper, beautifully illustrated, covering every possible field of Fashionable Fancy Work, Home Decorations, Cooking, etc., each department being under the special supervision of the best known contributors. It is besides replete with matters of interest to mothers, and is furthermore filled with illustrations, stories, sketches, humor and matters of general interest.

FREE!

FINE AMERICAN JEAN!
Perfect Fit.
Beautiful Ornamental Stitching.

Every line of reading is carefully guarded by an editor, who receives $5,000 per annum, and nothing is published in its columns but the best and purest reading matter. It may be admitted to any household and your children may read it as well as you. It numbers among its subscribers the wives of thousands of clergymen throughout the country. It is the best Fashion paper published in the world. It tells you "What to Wear," "When and How to Wear It." It gives you all the latest styles in Ladies' Hats, Bonnets, etc. It is always abreast of the times, and everything within its pages is new and original. It also contains the latest Fashion news from abroad by our Special London and Paris correspondents.

HOW TO OBTAIN FREE

The Mme. Demorest Corset FREE

Send us 50 Cents for one year's subscription to our JOURNAL and 25 cents additional to pay postage and packing, 75 CENTS in all, and we will mail you one of these handsome CORSETS FREE.

How To Obtain A PAIR OF SHOULDER BRACES AND Two Articles: A PAIR OF STOCKING SUPPORTERS FREE

Send us 50 Cents for one year's subscription to our JOURNAL, and 25 Cents additional to pay postage and packing, 75 Cents in all, and we will mail you these two articles, One Pair of SHOULDER BRACES and One Pair of STOCKING SUPPORTERS FREE!

REMEMBER THERE IS NO HUMBUG ABOUT THESE OFFERS.

We do exactly as we guarantee. Our house has been established for over 40 years, and we can refer you to any Commercial Agency, Bank, Express Office or Business Firm in the land. Make all remittances either by Draft, Postal Note, Money Order, or Registered Letter. When postal note is not procurable, send stamps. Address all communications to

THE DEMOREST FASHION & SEWING MACHINE CO.,
17 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK.

This offer should be taken advantage of at once as we will give away no more than 100,000 of each article. SHOW THIS TO YOUR FRIENDS. IT WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

We know the Demorest Fashion and Sewing Machine Co. to be a thoroughly reliable firm and advise our readers to accept their offer.—EDITOR.

The Cod That Helps to Cure The Cold.

The disagreeable taste of the COD LIVER OIL is dissipated in

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with HYPHOPHOSPHITES OF LIME AND SODA.

The patient suffering from CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, COUGH, COLD, OR WASTING DISEASES, may take this remedy with as much satisfaction as he would take milk. Physicians are prescribing it everywhere. It is a perfect emulsion, and a wonderful flesh producer. Take no other 235 THOUSAND.

LOOKING BACKWARD,

By EDWARD BELLAMY.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"All who are studying the problems of the age, all who believe in progress, all who are free to receive new light upon the capacities and possibilities of the race, will find in Mr. Bellamy's exceedingly clever book satisfaction and inspiration."

—New York Tribune.

By Mrs. E. PRENTISS.

New edition in paper, with eight illustrations.

25 CENTS.

Sold by all booksellers, or sent by mail on receipt of price in postage stamps.

Either of the above books sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

BOVININE

BUSH'S FLUID FOOD

HY is the FAME BOVININE Daily Growing in and POPULARITY of BOVININE Every State in the n, and 500,000 People in the United States take it during Last Year? BECAUSE in disease or foods are not assimilated, and thousands starve in the midst of BECAUSE Beef Tea and cooked Extracts are by all authorities pronounced useless for food. BE- SE BOVININE is the only raw meat food condensed by a cold ss, by which ALL the nutritive elements of selected beef are pre- l in a palatable form, ready for immediate use.

INVESTMENT COMPANY,

Capital, - - $1,000,000.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

cent. investment interest semi-annually. A direct obligation of the Company secured by less property and recommended by prominent men and bankers of Kansas City. Circulars with full particulars.

Rice, Pres. } Union Investment Co.
PAGE, Treas. }

If you desire them no use fooling away time on things that don't pay; but send money for insignificant outfit of our Great New Book. If book and terms not satisfactory we will refund your money. No Risk. No capital needed. dies and Gentlemen employed. Don't lose writing. "Step in while the waters are L." Days are worth dollars. Address B. F. & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

SALARY $10 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment at home or traveling. No soliciting, elvering and making collections. No Postal Address with stamp, HAPER & CO., Plous, O.

STENOGRAPHY.

AND

TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching; long established; hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free. Write or call.

VERMILYER'S COLLEGE.
816 Broadway, New York.

Rev. T. DeWITT TALMAGE'S

GATHERED GEMS, containing 30 of his best Sermons and a full History of his Life and Church, including the burning of the Tabernacle, Oct., 1889. 700 pages, 30 full-page illustrations, including a splendid portrait of Talmage. Low price and quick sales is my motto. Price, bound in cloth, $1.50; half Russia, $2.00. 50 per cent. discount to live agents. Send 50 cents for Prospectus and package of circulars, and go to work. Address

J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS

THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.

B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents

FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK,

Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beecham's Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper.)

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

A CUP OF BLESSING

FOR

Every Day in the Year,

Being a Birthday Book of Cheering and Consolatory Texts, selected from Scripture and other sources, with a verse of selected poetry for each day. Beautifully bound in padded silk covers, and gilt edge, 250 pages and index. Sent by mail, in box, post-paid, for 50 cents, by

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

ASTHMA CURED

SCHIFFMANN'S ASTHMA CURE

Instantly relieves the most violent attack. No waiting for results. Its action is immediate, direct and certain, and a cure is the result in all curable cases. A single trial convinces the most skeptical. Price 50c. and $1.00, of druggists or by mail. Trial package free to any address Dr. R. SCHIFFMANN, St. Paul, Minn.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.

A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full terms address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

$3.75 A DAY

And steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

TURKISH HAIR CROWDER.

Wanted to grow a beautiful mustache on the face of a man on both sides, without injury to the hair. The original and only reliable article of the kind on the market. Use no worthless imitations. One pkg. 15 cts. 2 for 25 cts. 5 for 75 cts. pp. A fortune for age. TREMONT MAN'G CO., Sta. A, Boston, Ma.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

Can I tell the wondrous fullness
Of His love, so rich and free;
Or reckon the priceless value
Of the blood He shed for me?
Ah, no! 'tis beyond my telling,
Though its theme I fain would know;
And my heart it fails to measure
The breadth of the love I owe.

Can I share the bitter anguish,
He bore 'midst the garden's gloom;
When His soul passed 'neath the shadow
Of the coming judgment's doom?
Ah, no! 'tis beyond my sharing,
The weight of my Saviour's woe;
And my heart it fails to measure
The length of the love I owe.

Can I grasp the mystic meaning
Of the cross with His nail-pierced form;
Where His heart for the sinner's ransom
Was crushed in the judgment storm?
Ah, no! 'tis beyond my grasping,
'Tis deeper than thought can go;
And my heart it fails to measure
The depth of the love I owe.

Can I see with earthly vision,
The walls of my blood-bought home?
Can I catch the matchless glory
That gleams from its golden dome?
Ah, no! 'tis beyond my vision,
Though it shine with fadeless glow;
And my heart still fails to measure,
The height of the love I owe.

Soon, soon in glorious beauty,
I shall see Him face to face,
And read in the nail and spear marks
The story of saving grace;
Ah! then I shall learn the meaning
Of His life-blood's crimson flow;
I shall measure the wondrous fullness,
I shall know how much I owe.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Rheumatism is caused by lactic acid in the blood attacking the fibrous tissues of the joints. Hood's Sarsaparilla, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, and thus cures rheumatism.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also Imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

"The Angelus," The Vesper Hour,

Millet's Famous Painting, bought for $110,600. To be exhibited in New York, and other American cities, winter of 1899-90. The above outline indicates the religious sentiment and marvelous beauty of the picture. Our Typographic is two-thirds size of the original. On plate paper, 19x24 (mailed in tube), price, $1. On extra paper. Proofs India tint, $2. Agents wanted. F. R. TREAT Publisher, New York.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE OF AUTOGRAPH OF STEWART HARTSHORN ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

National Temperance Almanac, And Teetotalers' Year Book for 1890.

Contains 72 pages of Statistics of Intemperance. Anecdotes, Stories, Puzzles, Choice Illustrations. Post-office Address of Officers of State and National Bodies, a full Directory of all Temperance Organizations in New York City and Brooklyn, all Temperance Papers, etc., etc.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Ten cents, single copies; $1 per dozen; $7 per hundred. Address J. N. STEARNS, Publishing Agent, 58 Reade Street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED to sell The Christian Legacy. One agent writes: "I have a record of hours worked, in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 89 orders." Another: "I have read the book daily. Its plan is new to me, and the amount of precious truth and Bible information it contains is a surprise. The book will be highly prized by devout minds, and has the food that the genuine Christian relishes." W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach, FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

ABSOLUTE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM, NERVOUSNESS,
DEBILITY, DISEASES OF THE LIVER, KIDNEY AND LUNGS.
FEMALE COMPLAINTS
ETC.

OFFICE OF GERMAN ELECTRIC BELT AGENCY
U. S. PATENT No. 357,647
P.O. BOX 178 BROOKLYN, N.Y. Dec. 2, 1889

INVENTED BY PROF.
R. H. VANDERWEYDE
PRES.
N.Y. ELECTRICAL SOCIETY
& LATE PROF. OF CHEMISTRY
N.Y. MEDICAL COLLEGE.

To the Editor, Please announce to your readers that we will for a short time give away to those likely to make good agents one of our $5.00 German Electric Belts Free. A letter or postal card will receive immediate attention Yours very truly,
German Electric Belt Agency

We would call our Readers attention to the above offer, and would advise all who are not enjoying good health, to write at once to the GERMAN ELECTRIC BELT AGENCY, P. O. BOX 178, BROOKLYN, N. Y. Mentioning this paper.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you. Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all. We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS, for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c. stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON, Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Williamantic Savings Institute, of Williamantic, Conn.

We send to all parts of the U. S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of dress.

RECOLLECT THE GOODS are delivered to you all carrying charges PREPAID

SHORTHAND by mail or personally. Situations procured all pupils when competent. Send for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N.Y.

CHRISTIAN WORK —IN— MEXICO.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the address of Bishop H. O. RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York.

A CUP OF BLESSING

FOR Every Day in the Year, Being a Birthday Book of Cheering and Consolatory Texts, selected from Scripture and other sources, with a verse of selected poetry for each day. Beautifully bound in padded silk covers, and gilt edge, 250 pages and index. Sent by mail, in box, post-paid, for 50 cents, by J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

IF YOU WANT AN "OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE, OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern." "An effective weapon." "A word of fire." "Only unanswerable work on the subject."—startling disclosures—History facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

After-Holiday Sale

Beginning Monday, Jan. 8, 1890 shall have on sale extensive amounts in the several departments Silks, Velvets, Woolens, Laces, Linens, at prices carefully reduced during the annual Stock-taking.

James McCreery & Broadway, cor. Eleventh St. NEW YORK.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Disease and Scrofulous Humors.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—Wilbor's Cod-Liver Oil and Phosphates has now been before the public twenty years, and has steadily grown in favor and appreciation. This could not be the case in preparation was of high intrinsic value. The nation of the Phosphates with pure Cod-Liver Oil prepared by Dr. Wilbor, has produced a new method in the treatment of Consumption and all diseases of the Lungs. It can be taken by the most invalid without creating the nausea which an objection to the Cod-Liver Oil when taken Phosphates. It is prescribed by the regular Sold by the proprietor, A. B. WILBOR, Boston, and by all Druggists.

PRICE We sell DIRECT to FACTORY PRICES
$150 to $1500
$180
Sent for trial in your own home before you buy. Local Agents must sell inferior instruments or charge double what we ask. Catalogue free. MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO., 285 East 21st St., N.Y.

RIDGE'S FOOD THE MOST RELIABLE For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a prepared Food, adapts weakest stomach. 43 Pamphlet free. (on every label). Put

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XIII., No. 3. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 15, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

TRAITS AND LIVES OF FIVE REPRESENTATIVE ENGLISH CLERGYMEN.

THE RESCUE OF A KING. Dr. Talmage's Sermon at Sunday in Paris.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE COMING COLOSSAL CONFLICT.

A Curious Pledge in India—A Marriage at the McAll

Mission—The Prosecution of Dr. T. J. Barnardo—The Confession of M. Eiffel—A Prayer for a Son.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE: The Streets of Cairo

—The Land of Goshen—An Egyptian Funeral.

JOY OVER THE CHILD JESUS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE SEEKER AT THE SEPULCHRE. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. ADONIRAM JUDSON.

Gems from New Books: Jesus at Home—Mary Reproved.

A PERILOUS CRISIS IN A MISSIONARY'S LIFE.

A FATHER'S UNHEEDED WARNING. (Illustrated.)

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: (Continued.)

REPRESENTATIVE ENGLISH CLERGYMEN: 1. The Bishop of Derry—2. The Bishop of Chester—3. Dr. Joseph Parker—4. Rev. John Wilkinson—5. Rev. James Ormiston.

THE ENGLISH RELIGIOUS CONVENTIONS.

FOUR notable conventions have taken place in England which affect as many religious bodies. The portraits on the first page this week are representatives of these conventions, and are of men well known by reputation on this side the Atlantic. Dr. Alexander, Bishop of Derry, Ireland, and Dr. Jayne, Bishop of Chester, are identified with the Protestant Episcopal Congress held at Cardiff; Dr. Joseph Parker with the Congregational Union, which met at Hull; the Rev. John Wilkinson with the Jewish Mission Society in conference at Mildmay, and Rev. James Ormiston with the Convention of Christian Workers at Clifton.

THE RIGHT REV. ROBERT ALEXANDER,
BISHOP OF DERRY.

THE Bishop of Derry, who preached the opening sermon at the Cardiff Church Congress, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Robert Alexander, Rector of Aghadoey, and Canon of Derry Cathedral. He was born in the historic city of Derry on April 13, 1824, and is therefore now sixty-five years old. He was educated at Tonbridge School, and afterward proceeded to the University of Oxford. He commenced his university career at Exeter College, but subsequently he went to Brasenose, from which college he graduated in 1847. The same year he returned to Ireland, and was ordained deacon, serving as curate of Templemore, the principal parish in the city of Derry; the church of which (St. Columba's) is the cathedral of the diocese. During this time he did not, however, abandon his studies, for in 1850 he obtained the Denyer prize at Oxford for a theological essay, the subject of which was "The Divinity of our Lord." This essay has since been republished. In 1860 his poetic gifts gained him a prize of considerable value, given every three years for the best poem on a sacred subject. That which he selected was "The Waters of Babylon;" it may now be found in the volume of his collected poems, entitled St. Augustine's Holiday. During these years his was rapid. He was successively presented to the parishes of Termonamongan, Fahan, and Camusjuxta-Mourne, to which last he was nominated in 1860. The Deanery of Emly became vacant in 1863, and it was offered to and accepted by Dr. Alexander. In the year 1867, on the death of Dr. Higgins, he became Bishop of Derry, and from that time to the present day he has ruled over the united dioceses of Derry and Raphoe, with which he was so long connected, both by family and personal ties. His alma mater of course conferred the usual degree of D. D. upon her distinguished son on his accession to the Episcopal bench.

Advancement in the Church

As a Preacher and Speaker

the Bishop is well known. There are few occupants of the bench who surpass him in glowing eloquence and poetic fire. In the University pulpits Dr. Alexander is often heard, and few of the select preachers at Oxford or Cambridge are more popular. In 1876 he was Bampton lecturer, and chose for his subject, "The Witness of the Psalms to Christ and Christianity;" these discourses, when published, became widely known, and have passed through several editions. His lectures on literary and social subjects, as well as printed sermons, are too numerous to mention here, and embrace a very wide field of secular and theological learning. Of his power as an expositor of Scripture he has given ample proof in valuable contributions to

"The Speaker's Commentary."

The portions assigned to him were the Epistles to the Colossians and Thessalonians, the Epistle to Philemon, and the Epistles of St. John. This shows that as an exegetical writer the Bishop may claim a high place.

The Bishop's gifted wife is well known as the writer of "There is a green hill far away," and other beautiful hymns. She is the daughter of an Irish gentleman, and was married to Dr. Alexander in 1849.

THE RT. REV. FRANCIS JAYNE,
BISHOP OF CHESTER.

THE second of the portraits on the first page is of Dr. Francis John Jayne, the 33d Bishop of Chester. He is about forty-six years of age. He was educated at Rugby, and afterward obtained a scholarship at Wadham College, Oxford. He took a first-class in 1866, and graduated as first-class in all subjects, and first-class in Modern History in 1868. At Oxford his career was a distinguished one. Mr.

Jayne was ordained by the Bishop of Oxford in 1870, and began parochial work as assistant-curate of St. Clement's, Oxford. In 1868 he had been elected a Fellow of Jesus College, and after having undertaken parochial work for a year, he accepted a Lectureship at Jesus College, and a tutorship at Keble College, in the same University. He remained in Oxford until 1879 when he was made the Principal of St. David's College, which he retained until 1886, when he was appointed to the Vicarage of Leeds. He had been but little more than two years at Leeds, where he did most excellent work, when he was appointed Honorary Canon of Ripon, and then, early in September, 1888, was elected to succeed Dr. Stubbs in the important See of Chester.

REV. JOSEPH PARKER, D. D.

THE intimate friendship which existed for many years between the late Henry Ward Beecher and Dr. Parker brought the latter frequently to this country on visits to his friend, during which he has made the acquaintance of many American churches. Joseph Parker was born about sixty years ago at a small town not far from Newcastle, Eng. His circumstances were humble, but at a very early age the youth gave evidence of unusual ability. From the outset of his career, in spite of difficulties which would have baffled weaker men, his course has been one of splendid and unbroken success, and he holds to-day a prominent place in the religious community of his country.

When he was quite a young man he received an invitation to become the minister of the Congregational Church at Banbury, Oxfordshire, and having rendered excellent service here for a few years, he accepted the pastorate of Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, where his genius at once secured him general attention. In 1868 he went to London to succeed the late Rev. Dr. Spence, at the Poultry Chapel, only a few yards distant from the official residence of the Lord Mayor. The church, which is now under Dr. Parker's pastoral charge, is the oldest Congregational church in the city, and it has the distinction of which it may well be proud, of having had for its first pastor the Rev. Dr. Goodwin, chaplain to Oliver Cromwell. The church first assembled in Anchor Lane, Thames Street, from which place it removed, in 1672, to Paved Alley, Lime Street. After several other changes it settled in the early part of the century at the Poultry, where it remained till 1873, when, Dr. Parker being then the minister of the church, the present magnificent City Temple was erected on Holborn Viaduct.

One of the most remarkable features of Dr. Parker's ministry is his weekly noon service. The idea of preaching at noon in a church in the heart of the business centre of London was ridiculed when Dr. Parker broached it. He was asked if he thought merchants, bankers, and brokers would leave their business to come. He said he thought they would, and he proved to be right. The service has been well attended from the first, and continues to be so after seventeen years. On a recent Thursday every seat in the area was filled and the galleries well occupied, which means that between fifteen hundred and two thousand persons were present, most of whom were men, evidently of the "substantial class," and a most manifest sprinkling of clergymen, ministers, and students. Such an assembly at such a time of the day in a busy city must be characterized as phenomenal.

Dr. Parker is an author of considerable eminence. One of his first works was Helps to Truth Seekers, a book of an apologetic character, and which has been of considerable service to young men. Other works which have helped to extend his fame are Ecce Deus, The Priesthood of Christ, and Tynechilde. He now confines his literary labors to the great work which he undertook a few years ago, The People's Bible, which is to be completed, if life be spared, in about twenty volumes, twelve of which have already been published, and republished in this country by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, of New York.

REV. JOHN WILKINSON, MISSIONARY TO THE JEWS.

THE subject of portrait No. 4 is the famous evangelist who has been so remarkably blessed as a missionary to God's Chosen People. John Wilkinson was born in a country village in Lincolnshire about sixty years ago. He was converted in boyhood, and at once began to speak in Sunday-schools, in cottages, and little meetings, for Christ. Through a young friend, who was preparing to enter upon labor among the Jews, he was led to think of the same sphere of labor, and finally, after much consideration and prayer, offered himself for the work. He was accepted as a student by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, and commenced study in the old college in Blackfriars, London. Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Latin, Greek with the ordinary groundwork of logic and theology, composed the "harness of proof which had to put on," and no light task was it. So least the deal planking of his study bore witness for a pathway was worn from end to end of the little chamber by the tramping of student feet, dint of rising at 4 o'clock in summer and 5 in winter, Mr. Wilkinson achieved the mastery of much Hebrew in two years as many students in years (so said his admiring professor), finished the usual curriculum a twelvemonth before the time appointed, and left Blackfriars College, the first and only Gentile who ever graduated there.

He labored under the auspices of the Society from 1852 to 1876. In the latter year he believed the way had been opened by the great political changes in Turkey and the East, for more direct work in the centres of Jewish life, and he urged the Society to allow him to take up that work. They preferred his laboring in the home field, and declined his request. Thereupon he resigned, and trusting wholly for the support of himself and family to the Lord, he commenced an independent mission in connection with the Institutions at Mildmay Park. He was encouraged in his effort at the outset by meeting a merchant who had heard of his step he was taking, and who quietly put into his hand a cheque for $1,500, "to help him along."

The mission grew and prospered. In 1878 he responded to a pressing invitation from Swedish friends to visit that country, to awaken an interest in Israel; for six weeks he addressed crowded public and private meetings, including the Universities of Upsala, and Lund, and was honored with an audience of the king. Other large gifts have been made to help in the work, and only recently there was one of $15,000, with which Mr. Wilkinson was enabled to purchase 100,000 New Testaments in Hebrew, which were distributed by missionaries in Europe and the north of Africa. Over 2,200 of these Testaments were sent to as many Jewish Rabbis on the Continent. With the examples of Rabinowitz and Lichtenstein, both aroused and converted by the reading of the New Testament, there is abundant encouragement for hope for yet greater harvest from God's blessing on Mr. Wilkinson's labors.

REV. JAMES ORMISTON,

CONVENER OF THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE.

THE labor which Mr. Ormiston has taken up is one of great value. It is that of aiding, stimulating, and organizing lay workers in Christ's cause. He is the rector of the parish church of St. Mark, Bristol, and a popular preacher of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God. He was originally educated at King's College, London, where he gained much distinction as a diligent and successful student. At the termination of his academic course in 1863, when he was about twenty-three years of age, he was ordained deacon, and the following year was appointed priest by the Bishop of Carlisle, and continued to work in the diocese until 1880, when he was induced to become the rector of the populous and important parish where he has since continued to labor with manifest approval of his Divine Master. A few years ago, the Rev. S. Walker, who inaugurated the Clifton Conference, passed to his rest, it everywhere felt to be the most natural thing in the world that Mr. Ormiston should succeed him as Convener. In this capacity he has rendered service to the whole Church of God. His choice of subjects has always been considered most profitable, and their consideration most profitable. The latest conference his sagacity and "knowledge of the times and of what Israel ought to do" again conspicuous.

A CURIOUS PLEDGE IN INDIA.

THE principle of the total abstinence pledge has been recently applied in India to other evils besides the liquor evil. The latest number of the Witness received thus refers to it: Influenced by the Hindus in Western India are moving in the direction of reform. The latest attempt at modifying the evils of child-marriage, expensive weddings, and the oppression of child-widows has taken form of a conditional pledge to be signed by the individual. There are several pledges of a more or less definite character, which the contracting party may sign as a whole, or from which he is at liberty to select such as will not particularly embarrass him to keep. Among these are such as the following: Not to give a daughter in marriage till she is ten or twelve years of age; not to spend more than a year's income on the marriage of a daughter, or more than half a year's income on the marriage of a son; not to hinder widows in the family from remarrying; not to drink intoxicating liquors except by order of a physician. The party taking the pledge signs all or any one of these pledges and forwards a copy of its signed pledge to the Secretary of the movement. If it is a reform to have marriage expenses reduced according to the pledge mentioned, what must the abuse be? What wonder that many Hindus are in the pitiless clutch of the money-lender? Small as a year's income may be to many, it represents as much to him as the larger income of his more favored brother. It is all he has with which to feed and clothe and shelter his family and to meet the demands of the grasping Murwari. If he borrows money for the glitter and show of a great wedding, he must struggle for years with the millstone of debt at his neck, and, probably, leave it for his children after him to pay. This particular pledge ought to be extensively signed.

THE COMING COLOSSAL CONFLICT.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

THE prophecies of Daniel and Revelation indicate that most probably in 1890, and certainly not later than in 1891 the Greatest European War ever known will take place—that is to say, the Greatest War in respect of its intense violence and severity during the comparatively short period of its continuance, which will apparently not exceed more than a few months, or at most a year, because the war must be finished not later than the early part of 1892 by the completed transformation of twenty-three existing States or Kingdoms into a Casarean Confederacy of Ten Roman Empire Kingdoms: France, Britain, Spain, Italy, Austria, Greece, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, and Balkan States: prefigured by the Ten-horned Wild Beast and Ten-toed Image in Daniel 7: 24 and 2: 44.

Then after an interval of a few months, and not later than the latter part of 1892, Prince Napoleon will arise as Daniel's Little Horn; that is, as Sovereign of a Little Græco-Byzantine State or Principality, such as Macedonia, and be admitted to take its seat at the table of the International Congress with the other Ten Kings. He will then imitate the career of Alexander the Great, the ancient King of Macedonia, by "waxing great" over Greece and Turkey, and becoming king of Syria by 1894 "King of the North"—Daniel 7: 24; 8: 9; 11: 40), and will fulfil Daniel's Seventieth Week by confirming a League or Covenant with many of the Jews in Judea for a term of Seven Jewish Years from Passover Day, April 21, 1894, to Passover Week, 1901, which will be the Last Week of this Age. Daniel 9: 27; 11: 22.)

It is evident, from the foregoing succinct outline of coming Eschatological Events from this new year 1890 to 1901, the Last Year of this Age, that the dreadful and tremendous war inevitably requisite to transmute the present twenty-three different countries inside the territories of Cæsar's original Roman Empire into Ten Confederated Kingdoms prefigured by Daniel's Ten-horned Wild Beast must occur in 1890 or 1891, because Daniel predicts this war to precede the rise of the Little Horn Napoleon as a Hellenistic King about 1892, and his progressive advance by 1894 to the throne of Syria previous to his Jewish Covenant for the seven years from 1894 to 1901.

It is therefore well for us to realize the appalling character of this Coming War as sketched in the London Times of December 17 by M. Blowitz, its Paris correspondent, who says:

"What will be the inevitable consequences, material and financial, of a general European War? Rulers must have drawn back terrified at the reply to that question. The rapidity of the mobilization of the successive contingents of which a national army is composed has become the essential condition of success. The rapid mobilization of the successive contingents of nations like France, Germany, and Russia, which, having reached their final military development, can each send into the field early two millions of men, and which desire to mobilize them completely and rapidly to be prepared for all contingencies, represents a first immediate expense of twenty million pounds sterling. ($100,000,000.) The support of these contingents in a mobilized state represents a cost of forty million pounds ($200,000,000) a month.

"Now, as in the present political state of Europe a conflict between any two nations implies the entrance of the other three great nations on the scene of action (the five great military nations being France, Germany, Russia, Austria, Italy), it may be estimated that such a conflict would cost, in the first place, one hundred million pounds to set the movement in operation, and twenty thousand million pounds to meet their monthly expenses. The struggle might be prolonged, like that of 1870-71, for seven months. We should then have, for the five great Continental nations implicated, one hundred and forty thousand millions of pounds irretrievably lost, Europe being thus comparatively ruined for a century. (This last-mentioned sum is more than 140 times the National Debt of Britain, which is now a little over $3,500,000,000.)

"But this is merely a commencement. All the other European Powers, great or small, would have to mobilize and arm. Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark would be obliged to shoulder their arms to prevent being submerged. Roumania, in the first place, and then the other Balkan States, would be obliged to defend themselves against surprises during the war. Montenegro could not remain a simple spectator, and the war would compel Turkey, carried along by the movement in the Balkan Peninsula, to imitate the rest of Europe. England herself, in spite of her isolated position, would be obliged to watch events which might occur in the North Sea, in the Red Sea, in the Mediterranean, and of which the reaction would be felt in the most distant countries, in India as well as in Africa. England will be compelled to have her whole fleet in a state of readiness, and all Europe, from one end to the other, under arms, would advance towards a general conflagration. I am not the inventor of this picture. The figures I have employed are those which in certain countries have been brought by the War Minister under the notice of the Finance Minister.

"The life of Europe would in a measure be stopped by this tremendous convulsion. All the springs of industry would dry up, because the whole able-bodied section of the nation, being under arms, would cease to do the work required in time of peace. It is not, then, to be wondered at, in presence of this prospect, that the young German Emperor himself has become an advocate of peace, that he not only wants it for Germany, but that he has calmed the irritation in Austria, and that during his long conversations with King Humbert he whispered to him ideas of peace and conciliation which have been translated quite recently by the sympathetic and friendly language used by the King of Italy to the French Ambassador, designed to remove painful impressions, and to bring about a cordial understanding between the French and Italian nations, separated by the Alps. France herself is also at present a powerful promoter of the ideas of peace. The Paris Exhibition, by causing a general feeling friendly to France, created at the same time a sentiment in favor of peace. The elections confirmed the effect produced by the Exhibition in reducing to powerlessness firebrands leagued under the leadership of a chief who, unable to realize his impossible promises, would have sought a diversion in some warlike enterprise."

A MARRIAGE AT THE McALL MISSION.

In the report just issued by the American McAll Association at 1710 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, is given the following extract from a letter sent by the superintendent of the St. Etienne Station of Mr. McAll's Paris Mission: "A young man came to our meetings in a spirit of frivolity, but he was much impressed by the seriousness of what he heard, and returned frequently. The spirit of God soon touched his heart and he became an earnest Christian, and for some time gave us great joy. Unfortunately he fell away and went into sin again, but he did not remain long thus, for we sought him out and prayed with him, and at last he became convinced of his wrong and took a firm stand again, shaking off all his evil companions, and even leaving his mother's house, as his step-father had been the means of turning him away from the right path. About this time a young girl became converted through the meetings, and, being persecuted by her parents, a sort of natural sympathy sprang up between these two young people, which ended in marriage. In spite of the opposition of all their friends they had the ceremony performed in a Protestant church. I went to see them this morning, and found the wife in tears. On asking the cause, she told me that they were invited yesterday to dine at her father's, and that she was reproached by all the persons present except her mother for having changed her religion. Her father turned her out of the house with her husband, whom he would have struck had it not been for the interference of her mother. She said that she had been praying for a servant of God to come and comfort her, and that she considered my coming to be an answer to her prayer. She said that her sister (who is leading an immoral life) is loved much better by her parents than she is. We prayed together and she seemed much comforted. Both she and her husband are walking close to God."

THE CONFESSION OF M. EIFFEL.

AN agent of the Paris McAll Mission sends the following interesting item of intelligence about M. Eiffel, the engineer who built the famous Eiffel Tower at the Paris Exposition: While the name of God is scarcely to be found in the Paris Exposition, and the Christian religion has received no recognition from the Government, we are happy to learn that M. Eiffel is a religious man. Toward the latter part of the summer he was in Switzerland, at Ormont-Dessus. When the members of the religious choral society of the village heard of his arrival in the town they went to serenade the great engineer with their religious and patriotic selections. M. Eiffel, moved by this manifestation, rose and said: "Dear friends, I am touched by the attention which you show me. I am the more deeply stirred because I discover that there are three sentiments among you which I also share: the love of God, the love of liberty, and the love of country. Wherever I find these I am happy."

When Mr. Edison was in Paris he ascended the Eiffel Tower, and wishing to recognize especially this feature in the life of M. Eiffel, wrote in his album these words: "To M. Eiffel, the engineer, the courageous builder of a gigantic and original specimen of the art of modern engineering; a man who has the greatest respect and admiration for all engineers, and also for the greatest among them all, the blessed God."

A ROMISH TRICK.

THE prosecution of Dr. T. J. Barnardo, the friend of homeless waifs of London, has been so extensively commented upon by the press on this side that the actual facts ought to be known. Dr. Barnardo received into his home a boy whom his mother had twice deserted, and who eventually sold him to two organ grinders. The woman was nominally a Roman Catholic, and the priests used her as an instrument of annoyance to Dr. Barnardo. Many of the boys in his homes are Catholics, but they are not Catholics when they leave them. The priests helped the woman to set the law in motion, and Dr. Barnardo, having had some experience before of the results in cases where deserted children, having been cured and clothed and taught, were wrested from his hands and sent back into the mud gutters, used a stratagem to save this boy, of whom he had much hope. A gentleman who brought excellent testimonials as to his Christian character, applied to Dr. Barnardo for a boy whom he could adopt and train in Christian principles. Dr. Barnardo introduced the particular boy involved in the threatened litigation, and the gentleman accepted him. The Doctor purposely refrained from taking his address, so when the case came on for trial he was unable to surrender him or state where he was. Those are the facts. Dr. Barnardo, perhaps, was not prudent, but no true Protestant will be severe in blaming him.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 523 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE RESCUE OF A KING.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday, January 12, 1890, in Paris.

"Jehosheba, the daughter of King Joram, sister of Ahaziah, took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain; and they hid him, even him and his nurse, in the bedchamber from Athaliah, so that he was not slain. And he was with her hid in the house of the Lord six years."

II Kings II : 2, 3.

The Scene of a Crime—The Murderous Old Grandmother—A Woman's Brave Rescue—The Hidden Prince—The Day of his Disclosure—Summary Vengeance on the Murderess—I. The Extermination of Righteousness Impossible—Persecution Always Fails—Infidelity's Futile Onslaught—A Bereaved Father Burning a Bible—II. Still Opportunities to Save Royal Life—Murderous Temptations—The Imperilled Children of a King—The Attempt at Rescue Often too Long Delayed—III. The Church a Hiding-Place.

GRANDMOTHERS are more lenient with their children's children than they were with their own. At forty years of age, if discipline be necessary, chastisement is used, but at seventy, the grandmother, looking upon the misbehavior of the grandchild, is apologetic and disposed to substitute confectionery for whip. There is nothing more beautiful than this mellowing of old age toward childhood. Grandmother takes out her pocket-handkerchief and wipes her spectacles, and puts them on, and looks down into the face of her mischievous and rebellious descendant, and says: "I don't think he meant to do it; let him off this time; I'll be responsible for his behavior in the future." My mother, with the second generation around her—a boisterous crew—said one day: "I suppose they ought to be disciplined, but I can't do it. Grandmothers are not fit to bring up grandchildren." But here, in my text, we have a grandmother of a different hue.

I have within a few days been at Jerusalem, where the occurrence of the text took place, and the whole scene came vividly before me while I was going over the site of the ancient temple and climbing the towers of the king's palace. Here in the text it is old Athaliah,

The Queenly Murderess.

She ought to have been honorable. Her father was a king. Her husband was a king. Her son was a king. And yet we find her plotting for the extermination of the entire royal family, including her own grandchildren. The executioners' knives are sharpened. The palace is red with the blood of princes and princesses. On all sides are shrieks, and hands thrown up, and struggle and death-groan. No mercy! Kill! Kill! But while the ivory floors of the palace run with carnage, and the whole land is under the shadow of a great horror, a fleet-footed woman, a clergyman's wife, Jehosheba by name, stealthily approaches the imperial nursery, seizes upon the grandchild that had somehow as yet escaped massacre, wraps it up tenderly but in haste, snuggles it against her, flies down the palace stairs, her heart in her throat lest she be discovered in this Christian abduction. Get her out of the way as quick as you can, for she carries even a young king. With this youthful prize she presses into the room of the ancient temple, the church of olden time, unwraps the young king, and puts him down, sound asleep as he is, and unconscious of the peril that has been threatened; and there for six years he is secreted in that church apartment. Meanwhile old Athaliah smacks her lips with satisfaction, and thinks that all the royal family are dead. But the six years expire, and it is time for young Joash to come forth and take the throne, and to push back into disgrace and death old Athaliah. The arrangements are all made for political revolution. The military come and take possession of the temple, swear loyalty to the boy Joash, and stand around for his defence. See the sharpened swords and the burnished shields! Everything is ready. Now Joash, half affrighted at the armed tramp of his defenders, scared at the vociferation of his admirers, is brought forth in full regalia. The scroll of authority is put in his hands, the coronet of government is put on his brow, and the people clapped and waved and huzzaed and trumpeted. "What is that?" said Athaliah. "What is that sound over in the temple?" And she flies to see, and on her way they meet her and say: "Why, haven't you heard? You thought you had slain all the royal family, but Joash has come to light." Then the queenly murderess, frantic with rage, grabbed her mantle and tore it to tatters, and cried until she foamed at the mouth:

A Precious Burden,

"You have no business to crown my grandson. You have no right to take the government from my shoulders."

Treason! Treason!

While she stood there crying that, the military started for her arrest, and she took a short cut through a back door of the temple, and ran through the royal stables; but the battle-axes of the military fell on her in the barnyard, and for many a day, when the horses were being unloosed from the chariot, after drawing out young Joash, the fiery steeds would snort and rear passing the place, as they smell the place of the carnage.

A Futile Effort.

The first thought I hand you from this subject is that the extermination of righteousness is an impossibility. When a woman is good, she is apt to be very good, and when she is bad, she is apt to be very bad, and this Athaliah was one of the latter sort. She would exterminate the last scion of the house of David, through whom Jesus was to come. There was plenty of work for embalmers and undertakers. She would clear the land of all God-fearing and God-loving people. She would put an end to everything that could in anywise interfere with her imperial criminality. She folds her hands and says, "The work is done; it is completely done." Is it? In the swaddling-clothes of that church apartment are wrapped the cause of God and the cause of good government. That is the scion of the house of David; it is Joash, the Christian reformer, it is Joash, the friend of God; it is Joash, the demoralizer of Baalitic idolatry. Rock him tenderly; nurse him gently. Athaliah, you may kill all the other children, but you cannot kill him. Eternal defences are thrown all around him, and this clergyman's wife, Jehosheba, will snatch him up from the palace nursery, and will run down with him into the house of the Lord, and there she will hide him for six years, and at the end of that time he will come forth for your dethronement and obliteration.

Persecution Always Fails.

Well, my friends, just as poor a botch does the world always make of extinguishing righteousness. Superstition rises up and says, I will just put an end to pure religion." Domitian slew forty thousand Christians, Diocletian slew eight hundred and forty-four thousand Christians. And the scythe of persecution has been swung through all the ages, and the flames hissed, and the guillotine chopped, and the Bastille groaned; but did the foes of Christianity exterminate it? Did they exterminate Alban, the first British sacrifice; or Zuinglius, the Swiss reformer; or John Oldcastle, the Christian nobleman; or Abdallah, the Arabian martyr; or Anne Askew, or Sanders, or Cranmer? Great work of extermination they made of it. Just at the time when they thought they had slain all the royal family of Jesus, some Joash would spring up and out, and take the throne of power, and wield a very sceptre of Christian dominion.

Infidelity says, "I'll just exterminate the Bible," and the Scriptures were thrown into the street for the mob to trample on, and they were piled up in the public squares and set on fire, and mountains of indignant contempt were hurled on them, and learned universities

Decreed the Bible out of Existence.

Thomas Paine said: "In my Age of Reason I have annihilated the Scriptures. Your Washington is a pusillanimous Christian, but I am the foe of Bibles and of churches." Oh, how many assaults upon that Word! All the hostilities that have ever been created on earth are not to be compared with the hostilities against that one book. Said one man, in his infidel desperation, to his wife, "You must not be reading that Bible," and he snatched it away from her. And though in that Bible was a lock of hair of the dead child—the only child that God had ever given them—he pitched the book with its contents into the fire, and stirred it with the tongs, and spat on it, and cursed it, and said, "Susan, never have any more of that damnable stuff here!"

How many individual and Organized Attempts

have been made to exterminate that Bible! Have they done it? Have they exterminated the American Bible Society? Have they exterminated the British and Foreign Bible Society? Have they exterminated the thousands of Christian institutions, whose only object it is to multiply copies of the Scriptures, and throw them broadcast around the world? They have exterminated until instead of one or two copies of the Bible in our houses we have eight or ten, and we pile them up in the corners of our Sabbath-school rooms, and send great boxes of them everywhere. If they get on as well as they are now going on in the work of extermination, I do not know but that our children may live to see the millennium! Yea, if there should come a time of persecution in which all the known Bibles of the earth should be destroyed, all these lamps of life that blaze in our pulpits and in our families extinguished—in the very day that infidelity and sin should be holding jubilee over the universal extinction there would be in some closet of a backwoods church a secreted copy of the Bible, and this Joash of eternal literature would come out and come up and take the throne, and the Athaliah of infidelity and persecution would fly out the back door of the palace, and drop her miserable carcass under the hoofs of the horses of the king's stables. You cannot exterminate Christianity! You cannot kill Joash!

The second thought I hand you from my subject is, that there are opportunities in which

We May Save Royal Life.

You know that profane history is replete with stories of strangled monarchs, and of young princes who have been put out of the way. Here is the story of a young king saved. How Jehosheba, the clergyman's wife, must have trembled as she rushed into the imperial nursery and snatched up Joash! How she hushed him, lest by his cry he hinder the escape! Fly with him, Jehosheba! you hold in your arms the cause of God and good government. Fail, and he is slain. Succeed, and you turn the tide of the world's history in the right direction. It seems as if between that young king and his assassins there is nothing but the frail arm of a woman. But why should we spend our time in praising this bravery of expedition when God asks the same thing of you and me? All around us are the imperilled children of a great King.

They are born of Almighty parentage, and will come to a throne or a crown if permitted. But sin, the old Athaliah, goes forth to the massacre.

Murderous Temptations

are out for the assassination. Valens, the emperor, was told that there was somebody in his realm who would usurp his throne, and that the name of the man who should be the usurper would begin with the letters T, H, E, O, D, and the edict went forth from the emperor's throne, "Kill everybody whose name begins with T, H, E, O, D." And hundreds and thousands were slain, hoping by that massacre to put an end to that one usurper. But sin is more terrific in its denunciation. It matters not how you spell your name: you come under its knife, under its sword, under its doom, unless there be some omnipotent relief brought to the rescue. But, blessed be God, there is such a thing as delivering a royal soul! Who will snatch away Joash?

This afternoon, in your Sabbath-school class, there will be a prince of God—some one who may yet reign as king forever before the throne; there will be some one in your class who has a corrupt physical inheritance; there will be some one in your class who has a father and mother who do not know how to pray; there will be some one in your class who is destined to command in Church or state—some Cromwell to dissolve a parliament, some Beethoven to touch the world's harpstrings, some John Howard to pour fresh air into the lazaretto, some Florence Nightingale to bandage the battle wounds, some Miss Dix to soothe the crazed brain, some John Frederick Oberlin to educate the besotted, some David Brainerd to change the Indian's war-whoop to a Sabbath song, some John Wesley to marshal three-fourths of Christendom, some John Knox to make queens turn pale, some Joash to demolish idolatry, and strike for the kingdom of heaven.

There are sleeping in your cradles by night, there are playing in your nurseries by day, waiting for dominion, and whichever side the cradle they get out will decide the destiny of empires. For each one of those children sin and holiness contend—Athaliah on the one side, Jehosheba on the other. But I hear people say: "What's the use of bothering children with religious instruction? Let them grow up and choose for themselves. Don't interfere with their volition." Suppose someone had said to Jehosheba: "Don't interfere with that young Joash. Let him grow up and decide whether he likes the palace or not, whether he wants to be king or not. Don't disturb his volition." Jehosheba knew right well that unless that day the young king was rescued, he would never be rescued at all. I tell you, my friends, The Reason we Don't Reclaim our Children from worldliness is because we begin too late. Parents wait until their children lie before they teach them the value of truth. They wait until their children swear before they teach them the importance of righteous conversation. They wait until their children are all wrapt up in this world before they tell them of a better world. Too late with your prayers. Too late with your discipline. Too late with your benediction. You put all care upon your children between twelve and eighteen. Why do you not put the chief care between four and nine? It is too late to repair a vessel when it has got out of the dry-docks. It is too late to save Joash after the executioners have broken in. May God arm us all for this work of snatching royal souls from death to coronation!

Imperial Souls

Can you imagine any sublimer work than this soul saving? That was what flushed Paul's cheek with enthusiasm; that was what led Munson to risk his life amid Bornesian cannibals; that was what sent Dr. Abeel to preach under the consuming skies of China; that was what gave courage to Phocus in the third century. When the military officers came to put him to death for Christ's sake, he put them to bed that they might rest while he himself went out, and in his own garden dug his grave, and then came back and said, "I am ready;" but they were shocked at the idea of taking the life of their host. He said, "It is the will of God that I should die," and he stood on the margin of his own grave and they beheaded him. You say it is a mania, a fool-hardiness, a fanaticism. Rather would I call it a glorious self-abnegation, the thrill of eternal satisfaction, the plucking of Joash from death, and raising him to coronation.

The third thought I hand to you is that

The Church is a Good Hiding-Place.

When Jehosheba rushes into the nursery of the king and picks up Joash, what shall she do with him? Shall she take him to some room in the palace? No; for the official desperadoes will hunt through every nook and corner of that building. Shall she take him to the residence of some wealthy citizen? No; that citizen would not dare to harbor the fugitive. But she has to take him somewhere. She hears the cry of the mob in the streets; she hears the shriek of the dying nobility; so she rushes with Joash unto the room of the temple, into the house of God, and then she puts him down. She knows that Athaliah and her wicked assassins will not bother the temple a great deal; they are not apt to go very much to church, and so she sets down Joash in the temple. There he will be hearing the songs of the worshippers year after year; there he will breathe the odor of the golden censers; in that sacred spot he will tarry, secreted until the six years have passed, and he come to enthronement.

Would God that we were all as wise as Jehosheba, and knew that the church of God is the best hiding-place! Perhaps our parents took us there in early days; they snatched us away from the world, and hid us behind the baptismal fonts, and amid the Bibles and the psalm-books. Oh glorious inclosure! We have been breathing the breath of the golden censers all the time, and we have seen the lamb on the altar, and we have handled the shials in which are the prayers of all saints, and we have dwelt under the wings of the cherubim. Glorious inclosure! When my father and mother died, and the property was settled up, there was hardly anything left; but they endowed us with a property worth more than any earthly possession, because they hid us in the temple. And when days of temptation have come upon my soul I have gone here for shelter; and when assaulted of sorrows, I have gone there for comfort, and there I mean to ve. I want, like Joash, to stay until coronation, mean to be buried out of the house of God.

O men of the world outside there, betrayed, caricatured, and cheated of the world, why do you not come in through the broad, wide-open door of Christian communion? I wish I could act the part of Jehosheba to-day and

Steal You Away From Your Perils,

and hide you in the temple. How few of us appreciate the fact that the Church of God is a hiding-place. There are many people who put the church too low a mark that they begrudge it everything, even the few dollars they give toward it. They make no sacrifices. They dole a little out of their surplusage. They pay their butcher's bill, and they pay their doctor's bill, and they pay their landlord, and they pay everybody but the Lord, and they come in at the last to pay the Lord in His church, and frown as they say, "There, Lord, it is; if you will have it, take it—now take it, take it; send me a receipt in full, and don't bother me soon again!"

I tell you there is not more than one man out of a thousand that appreciates what the Church is. Where are the souls that put aside one-tenth for Christian institutions—one-tenth of their income? Where are those who, having put aside that one-tenth, draw upon it cheerfully? Why, it is pull, and drag, and hold on, and grab, and clutch; and giving is an affliction to most people when it ought to be an exhilaration and a rapture. Oh that God would remodel our souls on this subject, and that we might appreciate the house of God as the great refuge! If your children are to come up to lives of virtue and happiness, they will come up under the shadow of the Church. If the Church does not get them, the world will.

Ah, when you pass away—and it will not be long before you do—when you pass away it will be a satisfaction to see

Your Children in Christian Society.

You want to have them sitting at the holy sacraments. You want them mingling in Christian associations. You would like to have them die in the sacred precincts. When you are on your dying bed, and your little ones come up to take your last word, and you look into their bewildered faces, you will want to leave them under the Church's benediction. I don't care how hard you are, that is so. I said to a man of the world: "Your son and daughter are going to join our church next Sunday. Have you any objections?" "Bless you," he said, "objections? I wish all my children belonged to the Church. I don't attend to those matters myself—I know I am very wicked—but I am very glad they are going, and I shall be there to see them. I am very glad, sir; I am very glad. I want them there." And so, though you may have been wanderers from God, and though you may have sometimes caricatured the Church of Jesus, it is your great desire that your sons and daughters should be standing all their lives within this sacred inclosure.

More than that, you yourself will want the Church for a hiding-place when the mortgage is foreclosed; when your daughter, just blooming into womanhood, suddenly clasps her hands in a slumber that knows no waking; when gaunt trouble walks through the parlor and the sitting-room and the dining-hall and the nursery, you will want some Shelter From the Tempest.

Ah, some of you have been run upon by misfortune and trial; why do you not come into the shelter? I said to a widowed mother after she had buried her only son—months after—I said to her, "How do you get along nowadays?" "Oh," she replied, "I get along tolerably well except when the sun shines." I said, "What do you mean by that?" when she said: "I can't bear to see the sun shine; my heart is so dark that all the brightness of the natural world seems a mockery to me." Oh, darkened soul, Oh, broken-hearted man, broken-hearted woman, why do you not come into the shelter? I swing the door wide open, I swing it from wall to wall. Come in! Come in! You want a place where your troubles shall be interpreted, where your burdens shall be lifted, where your tears shall be wiped away.

Church of God, be a hiding-place to all these people! Give them a seat where they can rest their weary souls. Flash some light from your chandeliers upon their darkness. With some soothing hymn hush their griefs. Oh, Church of God, gate of heaven, let me go through it! All other institutions are going to fail; but the Church of God—its foundation is the "Rock of Ages," its charter is for everlasting years, its keys are held by the universal proprietor, its dividend is heaven, its president is God!

Sure as thy truth shall last,

To Zion shall be given

The brightest glories earth can yield,

And brighter bliss of heaven.

God grant that all this audience, the youngest, the eldest, the worst, the best, may find their safe and glorious hiding-place where Joash found it—in the temple!

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H.

Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 45 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfillment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

A PRACTICAL CHRISTIAN.

A SERIES of articles on the London poor has been published in a daily journal by a reporter who has been exploring the slums of the great city. Among the incidents he describes is one of a poor woman who earned a living for her two children by selling vegetables from a truck on the streets. He says: "She is one of the humble folks who are spoken of as having got religion, which in her case has proved a very great boon and blessing indeed to herself as well as to society. Poor as Mrs. Watt is, she is always working and planning to help her still poorer neighbors. Two years ago an unhappy deserted mother died of consumption in one of the neighboring tenements, leaving a wee baby girl of eight months without a soul in the world to care for the child, and Mrs. Watt's own motherly feelings led her to pity and tend the forlorn human mite. She took the baby from its squalid bed, where the dead woman lay, to her own home, and adopted the child. I found the little one, now a well-grown plump girl of three, asleep on a couch-bed, with a bandage round her temples. She had come in from play tired and with an infantile headache, whereupon this good woman had bathed her brow and lulled her to rest. Nearly twelve months ago another poor mother died in the market, leaving a child, a girl of thirteen, to shift for herself. The father was a drunkard, and, as in the former case, had disappeared. What was to be done? No one seemed inclined to aid, so once more Mrs. Watt came to the rescue and took charge of the girl. Yet Mrs. Watt has two children of her own. Most mothers would possibly have argued their own offspring required all their attention. Fortunately Mrs. Watt is of resolute, active habits; and she did not let the fact of her own family needing her care stand in the way of trying to do a most merciful kindness toward two hapless little children. She is still earning a living for them all, and may be seen any day with her truck of vegetables going through the streets in the Hoxton neighborhood."

FIFTEEN YEARS BLINDFOLDED.

AN interesting testimony given recently at a meeting held by Dr. Cullis in the Beacon Hill Church, Boston, Mass., is published in his Times of Refreshing. A lady rose in the meeting, and said: "I have come down to the front that you may look at me. For eighteen years I have been under treatment for my eyes. At the end of the first three I came to the crisis that threatened me. I was under the care of several different physicians. They did not understand my case; I found myself growing worse and worse. For seven years past I have not had any use of my left eye. I have had to wear a mask over the upper part of my face for fifteen years, and I have not been able to remove it except on the very darkest night in my own room. Sometimes I have been obliged to shut myself up in a dark room for two or three days at a time. I could not look upon my husband and child, and I had to be led by my husband wherever I went. Sometimes I was able to go to church, but I had to wear this mask, composed of fifteen thicknesses of cambric, and even then the light that penetrated inconvenienced me, so sensitive were my eyes. I had given up all hope; my eyes had caused me more suffering than usual for a month before I came to Dr. Cullis. They were growing so much worse that the physicians thought of removing my left eye in order to save the other, which was affected through sympathy. In this condition I was placed. There was nothing for me to do but to cast myself upon the Lord. I think He brought me to this place so that I might throw myself upon His mercy, so that I might exclaim, 'Lord, save or I perish!' I had been a Christian a great many years. I had heard of people being healed by prayer, and friends had told me that I had not faith enough. Dr. Cullis told me the Lord does not expect what we have not got. He only wants us to cast ourselves upon Him. Dr. Cullis prayed with me, and then told me to take off the bandage from my eyes. I said: 'Oh, no, I cannot, I have not had it off for fifteen years.' Then said he, 'You are not trusting the Saviour.' I debated about five minutes, and then I took off the bandage, and I never have felt the least inconvenience since. The world looked so strange to me that I felt as if I was suspended in mid-air. I never experienced such a state of exaltation before."

Holy Ghost Days. By Mrs. M. Baxter.—A volume containing 144 pages. Price, neatly bound in cloth, 35 cents, including postage. Address Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Jesus at Home.*

THE door-bell rings, some night, and, going out, you see on the door-step a man who is evidently a stranger from a strange land. You know nothing of him; he is quite outside the circle of your interest; he is ten thousand miles away from your spirit. But if he can say, "Don't you know me? I am your brother," how near he comes—ten thousand miles at one step! You and he are connected by an indissoluble bond; and this bond may either be a golden clasp, which is an ornament, or an iron clamp, which burns and corrodes your very flesh. This is the element of necessity in the institution of the family. Jesus could not touch humanity without being caught in this fetter of necessity. He entered the mysterious circle when He was born of a woman. He became a member of a family which had its own traditions and its own position in society; and He had brothers and sisters. These circumstances were not without importance to Him. That His mother exercised an influence on His growing mind cannot be doubted. We have not, indeed, the means of tracing in much detail how this influence acted, for few notices of His early years have come down to us; but it may be noted as one significant fact that Mary's hymn, the so-called Magnificat, in which, at her meeting with Elizabeth, she poured forth the sentiments of her heart, embodies thoughts which are echoed again and again in the preaching of Jesus. This production proves her to have been a woman, not only of great grace, but of rare natural gifts, which had been nourished from God's Word, till she naturally spoke the very language of the prophets and the holy women of old. We may not ascribe too much to her and Joseph, but we can say that the holy childhood of Jesus was reared in a home of pious refinement, and that there were marks of this home on Him after He left it.

Mary Reproved.

Mary attempted again and again to interfere unduly with His work, even after His public ministry had commenced. It was her pride in Him that made her do so at the marriage in Cana of Galilee; it was anxiety about His health on other occasions. She was not the only one who ventured to control His action in an undue way. But, if anything could arouse the indignation of Jesus, it was such interference. It made Him once turn on Peter with, "Get thee behind me, Satan;" and on more than one occasion it lent an appearance of harshness even to His behavior to His mother. On no other occasion had His conduct so much appearance of unfilial harshness as when His mother and brethren came one day, in the midst of His work, desiring to speak with Him, and He retorted on the person who told Him, "But who is my mother? and who are my brethren?" and, looking around on His disciples, added, "Behold my mother and my brethren!" The words are probably to be read with what goes immediately before them in the gospel of Mark, where we are told that His friends made an attempt to lay hold of Him, saying, "He is beside Himself." So absorbed was Jesus at this period in His work that He neglected even to eat; so rapt was He in the holy passion of saving men that to His relatives it appeared that He had gone mad, and they conceived it to be their duty to put Him under restraint. If Mary took part in this procedure it is no wonder that there should have fallen on her a heavy rebuke. At all events, she evidently came to Him thinking that He must at once leave everything and speak to her. But He had to teach her that there are higher claims even than those of domestic affection.

A Place for Prayer.

There is scarcely a town out of which you cannot escape in a very few minutes, and find yourself quite alone on a bit of shore, or on a mountain, or in a pasture or a wood. The town or city may be thundering away quite near, with its imprisoned multitudes bound on the treadmill of its toils or its amusements; but you are out of it, and alone with God. There is more than mere solitude in such a situation to assist prayer. There is a ministry of nature which soothes the mind and disposes it to devotion. Never did I feel more strongly that in this habit Jesus had laid bare one of the great secrets of life, than one day when I climbed, all alone, a hill above Inveraray and lay on the summit of it, musing through a summer forenoon. On every hand there stretched a solitary world of mountain and moorland; the loch below was gleaming in the sun like a shield of silver; the town was visible at the foot of the hill, and the passengers could be seen moving in the streets, but no sound of its bustle reached so high. The great sky was over all, and God seemed just at hand to hear every word. It was in spots like this that Jesus prayed.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

THE scribe of Dr. Talmage's party has kindly sent us another letter during his sojourn at Jerusalem, describing the incidents of the last day in Cairo, from which we extract the following:

Taking individual objects in Cairo, next to the Boulak Museum, the citadel of the Mosque of Mehemet Ali interested us most. It is a fine structure built of alabaster, and combining all the best features of Moorish architecture. The view from this wonderful building commands a scene never to be forgotten. A few miles off is seen the obelisk of which the mate now stands in Central Park, New York. The source of the vast supply of stones used in the erection of the Pyramids is seen in those distant quarries. Beneath one's feet are the myriad sights and sounds of the great city. Of all the scene the placid Nile longest detains the eye. Rhoda, the island said to have been the place where Pharaoh's daughter found Moses, can also be seen from this elevation. Near the city the country presents a verdant appearance; to the north are green fields and a flat expanse of land. The distant south is desert, beginning seemingly where the giants Ghizeh and Sakkarah raise their venerable heads, and between them and the city of Cairo are seen the ruins of Memphis.

Among the commonest objects of interest on

The Streets of Cairo

are strings of camels laden with fuel and produce. They are led by a swarthy Arab dressed in a flowing white garment. The children one sees, little brown creatures, have no clothing, or next to none, and it is pitiful to see how many of them are sufferers from weak eyes. In striking contrast with them in the matter of clothing is the woman wrapped in voluminous draperies, who ambles along on donkey-back. Her face is covered with a white veil. The most useful vehicle apparently is the bullock cart, but porters, asses, and camels do a great deal of the business of carrying. Carriages built in Europe are used by wealthy foreigners and native officers of rank and their ladies. In the bazaars the indolent Arab is seen in his quiescent glory, pipe in hand, in conversation with another Arab, who might be his brother, so closely does he resemble him, or negotiating with a customer on the business principle, which is not unheard of in other cities than Cairo, of getting as much as he possibly can for his wares. The famous bazaars are in narrow streets, where stalls extend in rows from the ground-floors of the low-roofed houses. This is the arrangement most frequently seen. Religious duties are recognized in the presence of texts from the Koran on the walls of the establishment, the proprietor of which sits cross-legged on cushions.

We were hurried from the city some nine hours before the time when we expected to leave it, taking the cars at 9 in the morning by the Egyptian Railroad, bound for Ismailia. We found this a pleasant place. Its streets are broad and well paved, and lined with rows of trees and gardens, grateful to the sight and cooling and refreshing in an eminent degree. To reach Ismailia we crossed

The Land of Goshen.

It was interesting to recall the residence of the Israelites as the honored guests of the Egyptian king in that fertile land, especially so as we noticed the contrast it presents still in its rich and productive soil to the great stretches of desert country in close proximity to it. As we rattled along on our journey, Pithon, the newly uncovered treasure city (Ex. 1:11), was pointed out by one of the party. Dr. Talmage contrasted the magnificently appointed train in which we were riding with the humble means of conveyance possessed by the little party of three who passed over the same, or nearly the same, country on their way of escape from the king who sought the young child's life. (Matt. 2:13-20.)

At Ismailia our craft lay in waiting, and in a few minutes after we had left the train ourselves and baggage were on board. Five minutes later and we were off, cutting the waters of the grand Suez Canal constructed by the genius of De Lesseps. We made about fifteen miles an hour speed on our journey from Ismailia to Port Said, which occupied four hours in all. Port Said may be described as having been created by the Suez Canal, on the west side of which it lies. While there we saw

An Egyptian Funeral.

A procession consisting of about twenty men, at the head of whom were two Moslem dignitaries preceded the corpse, which was carried by six men on their shoulders. The body was enclosed in a white casket, to the head of which was fastened a piece of rough wood in an upright position. This object was partially covered with a thin white veil and on the veiled part were suspended the cheap jewelry and some of the hair of the departed, who, we understood, was a young girl. The casket was followed by about thirty women dressed in black and nearly every one of them carrying a nursing infant. One of their number, who was their leader, held in her hands a shred of calico, which she stretched and handled between her hands as a boomerang, handles a bean-shooter, pointing in her movement to the casket. This curious performance was a relic of the ancient custom of rending the garment as an expression of intense grief. She accompanied her gesticulations with moans and shrieks, and these were taken up in dismal chorus by the women following her. The first part of the procession stopped at the door of a mosque, which the women were not permitted to approach. To lift the casket within the open door was the next proceeding after which the two Moslem dignitaries whom we mentioned before followed it into the building, first taking off their shoes at the entrance. Within the mosque the clergymen, as we should call them, stood near the casket for about three minutes, seemingly engaged in prayer. After prayer the casket was carried out into the street, where the procession was re-formed as before, with a multitude of yelling, grinning urchins on either side.

The cemetery reached and the entire company having passed through the gate, we prepared to follow them. The women, who were last in the procession, thereupon turned fiercely upon us, jabbering and gesticulating as if they were threatening to tear us to pieces. Two or three of the men then undertook to explain what was intended by the demonstrations of the women, vigorously shaking their heads to tell us that we must not follow them and pointing outside the gate as indicating that was just where we should be. We promptly followed the instructions thus ingeniously conveyed. The deceased person, I suppose, was poor, for the casket which enclosed the remains was borrowed for the occasion, the corpse being in it only during the ceremony and the procession to and from the mosque. Afterward the body was permitted to slide out into the open grave. Then the casket was removed ready for service on a future occasion.

Our busy day at Port Said and its suburbs ended in our embarkation in the evening on a palatial French steamer bound for Joppa.

A PRAYER FOR A SON.

IN the current number of Mrs. M. Baxter's magazine, Thy Healer,* she reports a remarkable testimony recently given at Bethshan by Mrs. Henaki, a German lady, who said: "My son, who lives in Manchester, was taken sick with congestion of the lungs, and had become delirious, with a tendency to brain fever. A telegram was sent to us here in London informing us of his dangerous condition. My husband immediately set out by the first train for Manchester, and I came to Bethshan to entrust your prayers for my boy. After my husband left the second telegram arrived, saying that his journey would be needless; our son was fast sinking, and must die before he could arrive. The best known physicians in Manchester had pronounced his case hopeless. Still I could not abandon hope. God could recover him from the very verge of the grave, so his case was committed to Him, in this room that day in believing prayer. At about 5 P. M. I got a telegram from my husband saying: 'My

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where missions are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual subscription, 50 cents, to be sent to Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD.

* From Imago Christi. By Rev. James Stalker, M. A. This is a series of chapters on Jesus in the various relations of life. Among them are: Jesus in the home, in the state, in society, as a student, as a worker, as a philanthropist, as a preacher, and as a sufferer. It is a tender, loving hand that draws this many-sided portrait, and none can read it without gaining new and clearer views, not only of the Divine Subject, but of the principles which should govern Christians in the same relations. Pp. 332. Price $1.50. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, New York.

etter—knew me, and thanked God that I had come." When my husband arrived the attendant could not allow him to enter the sick-chamber, saying that life was ebbing away peacefully, and that he must not be excited. When the doctor came my husband begged to see his son. On promising not to show himself he was allowed in. After a while my son opened his eyes, looked round the room, saw his father, smiled, and said, 'Father, thank God that you are come,' and fell into a sweet sleep. From that time he rapidly improved, and is now in full health and strength. All glory to the great Physician."

JOY OVER THE CHILD JESUS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

. S. Lesson for January 26, Luke 2: 1-20; Golden Text Luke 2: 14.

Joseph and Mary Summoned to Bethlehem—The Home of the Descendants of David—The Edict of a Pagan Power Leading to Fulfilment of Prophecy—Crowded Out of the Inn—Now Crowded Out of the Heart—The Heavenly and Earthly Estimate of the Event—The Shepherds Alarmed—Reassured by the Joyful News—The Proclamation of Amnesty to the World—The Wise Resolve of the Shepherds—Going to Jesus After Hearing of Him—The First Preachers.

It had been prophesied that the coming Messiah should be born in Bethlehem. "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto me that is to be Ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." (Mic. 5: 2.) Mary's home was now in Nazareth. Just before the birth of Jesus a decree went forth from the imperial court at Rome that a census should be taken of the entire population of the empire, which the Government haughtily designated "the world." In obedience to this law Joseph and Mary were bound to appear, and to answer to their names in Bethlehem, David's city, Joseph being descended from Solomon, the son of David, and Mary, the daughter of Heli, from Nathan, David's son. (Matt. 1: 7-16; Luke 3: 23-31.) Thus God wonderfully brought about the fulfilment of prophecy, and the proof that Jesus was David's son.

During their stay at Bethlehem Jesus was born. His birth was in far other circumstances than that of His forerunner. John was born in the family home, neighbors and kinsmen congratulating the happy parents who were so well known and loved; "Many shall rejoice at his birth;" and then the wonderful healing of his father's infirmity had added to the family joy, and the whole countryside knew what had happened. It was otherwise with the birth of Jesus; no family home received Him, all was discomfort about Him, there were no rejoicing friends around; the only preparation made was the swaddling-clothes in which He was laid, and the manger was the only cradle found for the Son of God, "for there was no room for them in the inn." "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not." (John 1: 9.) Is it not so when Christ is formed in us (Gal. 4: 19)? When "the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints . . . which is Christ in you, the hope of glory," becomes a reality by Christ dwelling in us.

What Kind of Accommodation

does He find? Are our hearts much better than Bethlehem's stable? Camels, asses, perhaps also cows, were at home there, and jealousy, strife, variance, emulations, the works of the flesh, have found a home in these hearts of ours. Jesus came into the world as one of the weakest things the world knows—the young of no animal is so helpless as the human babe—and yet He was Lord of all. And so He comes into our human life, not with noise and how, to the eyes of man so little, so humble, needing to be fed and cherished in our hearts, and yet so truly Lord of all.

But while the unconscious, indifferent world slept, all heaven was moved. In that upper world things are otherwise regarded than down here; all which bears upon eternity, all which appertains to God, is the main thing in that upper world. Here titles, position, appearance, the opinion of men, etc., have weight, "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," but the atmosphere of that upper world is purified by the presence of Him who is "the Sun of Righteousness," before whose face the mist and smoke of earthly things vanish away. To the eyes of men, a poor young peasant woman had given birth to her first-born son, and none cared to know who she was or what was the destiny of that son. But deep in that woman's heart lay the message from on high: "That holy thing that shall be born, of thee shall be called the Son of God." Would no man recognize Him? Must she keep this tremendous secret? If she spoke of it, who would believe her word? Mary could wait; "he that believeth shall not make haste," and Mary was essentially a "believer."

The hours passed by, and in the whispered words between Joseph and Mary, unheard by any human ear, we may well believe that the name of God's anointed had its place. In the eyes of heaven Mary was not a simple peasant woman, but the woman most honored and trusted of God of all who had trodden this earth. And God looked down to find and sufficiently true to Him and empty of themselves, to understand the wondrous thing which had occurred. It was not to the kings or captains or great ones, it was not to the scribes and Pharisees, the learned and religious ones, it was not to the prominent men of any class, but to a band of simple shepherds, that God made known His wondrous tidings. Away on the plains near Bethlehem were shepherds keeping the night watches, lest any beast of prey should rob their flock. "And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid." Oh how God must be grieved that His drawing near so often arouses fear in the hearts of those whom He loves so well. His message to the shepherds, as it had been with Gabriel's message to Zacharias, to Mary, and the angel's first word to Joseph (Luke 1: 13, 30; Matt. 1: 20), was, "Fear not." "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Joy which began in heaven and then came down to earth! Oh how strange that angels should rejoice in that which so much more nearly touched man, and that man must be aroused from on high out of indifference to understand that his God had come nigh unto him, and that the wondrous, inscrutable word of the Old Testament was now an actual reality! God was with man, in man, "the Word was made flesh," and had begun to dwell among us. The angel gave, as the burden of his song of joy, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord." All Israel looked for a Messiah; it had been said, in prophecy, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and His name shall called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." Therefore, if they knew their Old Testament Scriptures, it would be no stumbling-block to them to find Him a new-born babe. And this babe was to become the Saviour; He was the Anointed Lord, He was born where prophecy had declared, "in the city of David." But now their faith was to undergo a trial. This august babe was to be found, not in the midst of kings and nobles, not in the high priest's palace, not in Herod's court, but wrapped in swaddling-clothes, lying in a manger. Probably all their preconceived ideas and expectations of the Messiah received a rude shock; could it be that such an One could be born in circumstances so humble? Were they not, after all, deceived? But just at this moment there came, again from on high, an unlooked-for confirmation of their faith. The whole heaven was lit up, not with stars, but with angels, "praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men." Incomprehensible as it might be to them, they got the truth from heaven, and they believed. Thus they could join the angels' song, and find in the drawing near of God a glory to Himself; His condescension only made His glory more glorious, He was not less great because He came down to man. And then He proclaimed to a world of sinners, of law-breakers, an universal amnesty, an unconditional pardon, to all who would accept it, "On earth peace, good-will," or "good pleasure among men" (R. V., margin). Oh how different to God's drawing near on Mount Sinai amid the thunders and terror of the law!

Hearts on Earth Simple Enough,

"Emmanuel"

It was an overwhelming communication for the shepherds! Were they indeed the recipients of this tremendous secret? What, then, should they do? Should they exult in the favor done them, and in their own eyes? This is what spiritual pride does. There are men who, through vegetarian diet, combined with an unnatural abstinence from sleep, and an attempt in other ways to live above the laws of nature, become highly imaginative, and open to spiritual impressions. Where they are not distinctly led of the Holy Ghost into such a life, and pride gets possession of them, the door is easily open to Satan, and the impressions they receive come from evil spirits, and not from good ones. Where this is so, it is almost invariably the case that in all their dreams and visions, which are very numerous when the body is brought into this state, they see themselves as something remarkable; either they are prophets or special messengers of God, or they are chosen to have revelations, etc., etc. The real presence of God empties and humbles, but never exalts us in our own eyes.

Magnify Themselves

The shepherds, instead of indulging in dreams of their own greatness, agreed together to go at once to Bethlehem, trusting their flocks to the Lord, "that they might see this thing which was come to pass, which the Lord had made known to them." It is the wisest, truest thing to do, when any new light from God comes to us, to go straight to Himself with it. That which we learn as doctrine, becomes life in communion with Him. They came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in the manger—all so humble, so ordinary, and yet exactly as God had said; and the shepherds, taught of God, so that flesh and blood had not revealed it unto them, took in the glorious fact that God was indeed among men in the person of that little Babe. It must have been an intense joy to Joseph and Mary when there were others, however humble, to share their faith. At such a time it was especially blessed, and as the shepherds told of the excitement and joy in heaven which they had witnessed but an hour or two before, Joseph and Mary would have to tell, on their part, of the communications of God to them, and so the little company would rejoice together.

These shepherds were the first preachers of the Messiah's first advent, and thus, in Judea, from place to place, the news spread that the Messiah was actually born. Business went on as usual, the temple services were unaltered, but the greatest event which earth had ever witnessed had occurred, and a heaven of prepared and believing hearts was working its way among the population, and preparing men for the ministry of the Baptist and of Christ. In every age God's work goes on and His purposes are being fulfilled, but it is only which can detect the signs of His working, the educated ear which knows the sound of His footsteps. The shepherds realized something of the importance of the communication which had been made to them, and with no lingering steps they came to Bethlehem and sought out until they found the birthplace of their Messiah. It did not stumble them, illuminated as they were with light from on high, that all the surroundings of the infant Saviour were so mean and poor; they saw in Him, by faith, God's Anointed, and they went forth and preached to others that the Messiah was born at Bethlehem. People could not contradict the testimony, but few took the trouble to ascertain the truth of the assertion of the shepherds; they simply "wondered." Men in general look upon the things of God as an outside thing, to be added on to the main purpose of life, which, with the world, consists in doing the very best for one's self in the way of food, clothing, housing, enjoyment, etc. It is only the men of faith, the men who "endure as seeing Him who is invisible," that are alive to the fact that these outer things are the "addenda," and that the real purpose of man's life is to be worthy of God.

The Attentive Eyes

There was one heart which did more than wonder; "Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart." Her mind was receptive; she took in and laid to heart every direct communication from above; she was no visionary woman, her plain, practical advice to the servants at Cana of Galilee, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it" (John 6: 5), proves this. She is a wonderful type of the soul in whom Christ is formed, who becomes "one spirit" with Him (1 Cor. 6: 17), and who, like Mary of Bethany, takes in His thoughts. The shepherds returned to their occupation, but "a new song" was in their mouth; they were "glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them." They were "not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."

Holy Ghost Days. By Mrs. M. Baxter.—A volume containing 144 pages. Price, neatly bound in cloth, 35 cents including postage. Address Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

TERMS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Monroe Doctrine in Relation to Cuba promises to be a subject for the consideration of the Department of State. Senator Call drew the attention of the Senate to the financial condition of the island last week, and pointed out the opportunities it afforded for European interference. From his statement it appears that Cuba has a standing debt of $124,000,000 which it is never likely to pay. Nor is Spain in a condition to assume the burden. The bulk of the creditors are German bankers, who would naturally expect the support of their Government in any demand they might make for the better security of their loans. Should that demand involve financial control of the Cuban finances, the next step to political control would be slight, as it has been in Egypt. Senator Call, foreseeing this danger, advised the Senate to ask for any information the State Department might have, so that it might take necessary action to uphold the Monroe doctrine.

The Federal Government Proposes to Assume control of the immigration in New York, and it is expected that this week Secretary Windom will give the State the requisite sixty days' notice of the termination of the contract. This is the result of the inquiry which Mr. Hepburn, the Solicitor of the Treasury, has been making. Mr. Hepburn holds that no legislation is necessary in order that the national Government may undertake the control of immigration in New York or elsewhere, and Secretary Windom agrees with him. But legislation is necessary to create the office of Immigration Commissioner, and to provide a salary and funds for the maintenance of the office. Secretary Windom can get on without that for a time, if necessary, by putting the business under the control of the Collector of New York, who would have the assistance of a Deputy Collector in control of immigration. It would be possible, however, to get the requisite bill through Congress before the sixty days' notice of rescission shall have expired, and in that case the new federal commission would be ready for business.

The Admission of Idaho into the Family of States is complicated by the Mormon question. The number of Mormons now settled in the Territory renders it necessary to take precautions almost as stringent as those which would be required in admitting Utah. The fact that the people of Idaho are prepared to give the required guarantees was indirectly proved by the protest which was made last week by Bishop Budge, of the Mormon Church, when he appeared before the Senate Committee on Territories. He said that if Idaho was admitted under their present constitution, which contains the Idaho test oath, it would effectually disfranchise the members of his Church, and deny them all the rights of citizenship. The advocates of admission point to that statement as a proof that with Idaho a State the Mormon influence need not be feared. Coming as it does from the leader of the Church it silences, it is said, forever all doubts to the contrary. Bishop Budge is at present under indictment for polygamy, and has always been one of the most troublesome spirits in the Territory. The accumulated wealth of the Territory is estimated at one hundred million dollars; the population is 120,000, and it spends $175,000 a year on its public schools.

The Pan-American Conference is Continuing its labors, and is making a business-like subdivision of the details not yet decided. Several committees meet daily, hearing arguments from merchants and others interested in the subjects under consideration. The Secretary of the Treasury has detailed Special Agent J. F. Evans to act as secretary of the Committee on Customs Unions and the Committee on Customs Regulations; the Post-Office Department had detailed a clerk of the Bureau of Foreign Mails to act in a similar capacity for the Committees on Postal Communication. Lieutenant Zinn, of the Engineer Corps, has been detailed by the Secretary of War to assist the Committee on Railway Communication, and other specialists from the departments of the Government have been assigned to other committees.

The Death of Hon. William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, the Father of the House, which occurred on January 9, removes a notable figure from public life. He had served continuously during fourteen Congresses, a period of more than twenty-eight years, and was not only the oldest member in point of service, but the oldest in years. During the whole of this long period he served the same constituency well and faithfully, and gained a place in the nation's history such as few men ever attain. He was quite robust for a man of his years until a few months ago, when his health began to fail. He was in his place in the House of Representatives, however, when the Fifty-first Congress was called to order at the beginning of December, but in a few days his familiar face and figure were missed from the halls of legislation. Judge Kelley was seventy-six years of age. He began the world as a messenger-boy at a salary of a dollar a week.

Russian Influenza, or the Grippe, Made Alarm-ing progress last week. In New York especially the disease spread fast, and was more fatal in its effects. It has largely increased the death-rate in the city. On January 8 the total number of deaths from all causes was 250, a higher number than has been registered in one day since one summer day in 1872, when there was a large number of deaths from sunstroke. Of the 250 deaths registered on Wednesday, only four were due directly to La Grippe, but in 147 it was a contributory cause. On Thursday the number sank to 207, and on Friday to 202. The great mortality is due not so much to the disease itself as to the more serious diseases to which it opens the way. The number of deaths from pneumonia last week are so far beyond experience as to be very alarming, and they increased day by day. A remarkable feature of the epidemic is the variety of its forms, which appear to be as extensive as the variety of constitutions. In many cases the usual symptoms of influenza were absent, and the disease was described by physicians as a catarrhal fever. The only unfailing symptom was the increase of temperature. Reports from other cities show that the disease, though less severe than in New York and the neighborhood, is very prevalent and is increasing the death-lists. An authority on the subject authorizes us to state that the best preventive is quinine, in quantities for adults of two grains twice a day.

The Reports of a Massacre of Siberian Prisoners by Russian soldiers, which were sent two weeks ago, but were discredited, are now confirmed, and even Russian journals admit the massacre, while pleading mitigating circumstances. It appears that thirty prisoners, all of them arrested on suspicion and not one guilty of actual crime, were on their way to Siberia. They had arrived at Yakutsk, where exiles make a halt before commencing their terrible journey across the mountains to Kolimsk. Some difficulty arose about a change in the mode of pursuing the journey, and the exiles respectfully protested against the increase which it made in the difficulty and danger of travel. A band of soldiers was sent to the house where the exiles were confined, and attacked them with the butt-ends of their muskets. The prisoners defended themselves as best they could, and the soldiers rushed out into the yard and fired into the house from all sides, and afterward charged on the helpless prisoners. Six of them were killed and nine wounded. A woman among them was torn to death with bayonets. On the next day three of the survivors were hanged, and the remainder sent to the mines. For such things as these God will take vengeance some day.

The Death of the Dowager Empress Augusta, of Germany, widow of the Emperor William I, took place on January 7. She was in her seventy-ninth year. For three days previous she had been suffering from the prevalent influenza, but appeared to be recovering, when pneumonia set in, and proved fatal. Her grandson, the Emperor, the Empress, and their two sons were at her bedside when she died. She was the daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Weimar, and was married to Prince William of Prussia, afterward Emperor of Germany, in 1829. She proved a devoted wife, and when the aged Emperor breathed his last his hand was clasped by his faithful Empress. Her health was then barely equal to the shock of bereavement, but she rallied, and a few months later saw her son, the Emperor Frederick, follow his father to the grave. Since that sad event she has been always feeble, and has led a very quiet life, though her interest in public affairs was still maintained. She was to the last the zealous associate with her daughter-in-law, the Dowager Empress Frederick, in efforts for the improvement of the condition of women.

The Strained Relations of England and Portugal took a more favorable turn at the close of last week. Advices from Lisbon state that Lord Salisbury, the British Prime-Minister, regards the reply of Senhor Gomes, Portuguese Minister of Foreign Affairs, to the last British note relative to the Anglo-Portuguese dispute concerning territory in East Africa, as affording the basis for an amicable settlement of the trouble. All the political groups in the Cortes concur in the opinion that the Serpa Pinto incident will not retard the two Governments in reaching a satisfactory agreement. It is also announced that Portugal has made a concession, which removes one serious obstacle to an amicable settlement. The Portuguese Government had forbidden the reception at Quillimane, near the mouth of the Zambesi, of all British dispatches intended for England, but not intended to pass through the Portuguese Post-Office. That prohibition is now removed.

Mr. H. M. Stanley has Written a Letter to Mr. Bruce, the son-in-law of Dr. Livingstone, describing the expulsion from his kingdom of Mwanga by a revolt of the combined native Christians and Mohammedans, and the subsequent appeal of the King to the Christian missionaries for help. Stanley says that the fact that the native Christians had grown strong enough to make a revolution in one of the most powerful of the African kingdoms is one that, if Livingstone could have known it, would have filled his dying moments with content and love. The most deadly persecutions—the stake, the knife, and the bullet—had failed to shake the stanch fidelity of these African converts. Stanley expects to reach London by the middle of February. Great preparations are being made for his reception.

The Work on the Nicaragua Canal is Making encouraging progress. Chief Engineer Menocal reports that the difficulties are less than he expected. The cores from the rock borings of the great divide cut have arrived in New York, and determine exactly the conditions of that portion of the work. They present no difficulty, and the competition for this contract is likely to be close, the latest application being from a strong English syndicate, which is also desirous of constructing the eastern locks. It is proposed to divide the work into three sections. The Atlantic harbor at Greytown and the section of the canal to the first lock will be one contract; the second will be from the first lock to the lake; and the third, from the lake to the Pacific. The last will probably be given to a California firm on account of the facilities for the transport of tools and material.

Mr. Gladstone has Placed Himself on Record on the subject of Mr. Henry George's doctrines. Speaking on Jan. 10, at a rent dinner given to the Hawarden tenants, upon the subject of farming interests, he touched the subject of the nationalization of land. He said that if it could be proved that the system was a benefit to the whole community the change might be made, and the land would be entitled to fair compensation; but he thought it would not be a favorable change for the farmers. He could not approve it, because he failed to see how the state could be a good and capable landlord. He believed the present system, properly worked, to be the best.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $20. They are from Des Moines, Iowa, $5; Lakeville, Cal., $3.50; Western Union, Wis., $4; Vassalboro, Me., $2; Morganville, N. Y., $1; Bridgton, Me., $1; Centerville, Mass., $1; Sunbury, Pa., 50 cts.; Woodhaven, N. Y., 50 cts.; Brookfield, Mass., 50 cts.; China, Me., $1. These contributions enable us to add to our list twenty of the names now waiting. One of these, a young minister at Yemassee, S. C., who received the paper through this fund last year, writes that it was of immense assistance to him in his own soul, and in his work during the year, and adds: "I feel deeply indebted to the person who paid for it to be sent to me. May the blessing of our Heavenly Father rest on such a one. My church is poor, and I am not able to purchase the books that I need. Please continue to send the paper if possible, though I am not able to pay for it."

The Death of Two Missionaries in Africa is reported by Mr. F. S. Arnot, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 10, 1889, and who recently returned with a party of helpers to the scene of his successful labors in the Dark Continent. On October 14 Mr. Arnot wrote home: "A very happy company we are; in fact, I might say that the perfect harmony we all enjoy is the Lord's special favor upon us. Nearly all our number are able now to make their minor wants known in Umbundu." Five days later the cloud of sorrow broke. Mr. Morris and Mr. Gall, two devoted members of the party, fell sick and died. Mr. Morris's last conscious words were, "The crowning day is coming by and by." The dead were buried a few miles from Bihe, and the other members of the party, who are in good health, resumed their journey.

The Heroism of Two Miners Saved Five Lives at Wilkesbarre, Pa., on January 6. A disastrous cave-in of the Nottingham Mine occurred a few days previously, which drove the gas in the direction of the shaft. On Monday evening while five men were at work in the section of the mine where the cave-in occurred, their lamps set fire to the gas and there was a terrific explosion. The brattice-work and timber at once caught fire and burned furiously. The five men were caught between the cave-in and the fire, and all manner of exit was cut off. The report spread about town that the men were dead, and in a few minutes hundreds of men, women, and children gathered at the mouth of the slope expecting to see the dead bodies of the miners hoisted to the surface. The wives and children of the imprisoned men lost all control of themselves in their grief, and some sorrowful scenes were witnessed. Two miners, however, volunteered to go to the rescue of their comrades. It was a service of great danger, but the men were resolved on going down. Covering their faces to save them from the intense heat, they succeeded in extricating the five men one after the other, and in half an hour had them safely raised to the surface. Shouts of praise for their gallant exploit greeted the exhausted rescuers as they emerged from the mouth of the pit. The story of the deed of daring excites admiration from men who listen with indifference to the gospel story of Him who, to save a world from perishing, came down and gave His life for its redemption. (Rom. 5:7, 8.)

A Man Was Almost Frozen to Death on a Car platform in Minnesota recently. In a complaint entered in the courts of St. Paul, Minn., on January 2, as a preliminary to a suit for damages, a travelling salesman describes a terrible experience. He states that on December 28 he boarded a train of the Northern Pacific Railroad just as it was leaving Glyndon, Minn. He climbed on the front platform of the first passenger car, which was next to the baggage car. He found that the door of the car could not be opened from the outside, so he waited on the icy platform until the conductor should come through the car. It was a wild, stormy night, and as the train was going at a high rate of speed he was in an unpleasant position. When at last he attracted the attention of the train-men, he was told that the door was locked and he could not be let in. He tried to keep on his feet by clinging to the door-knob, but he became numbed, and felt that he was in danger of being thrown off the platform by the wind and the swaying of the train. No longer able to stand, he fell down on his back, threw one leg around the platform railing, and with one hand clung to the brake-rood. Thus he rode to Fargo, where he had to be carried from the train. His right side was frozen from his ear to his ankle, and it is probable that several fingers of his right hand will have to be removed. For this treatment he claims $10,000 damages. If his story is true the company will probably have to pay for the inhumanity of their employees. There are some churches against which similar complaints of inhumanity are made. Converts, especially if they are poor, are not welcomed, and though in spite of the inhospitality they may reach heaven in safety they suffer terribly from cold treatment by the way. The apostolic warning against this conduct is emphatic. (James 2:5.)

A Valuable Product from an Offensive Nuisance is now being extracted in Long Island City, N. Y., through the discovery of an ingenious operative. For some years past the people residing in the locality have been disgusted, and many of them made sick, by the powerful odor which comes from sludge acid. This acid resulted from the chemical purification of distilled petroleum, which is carried on extensively in the works there. The petroleum, when treated with sulphuric acid to make it fit for illuminating purposes, left a deposit of sludge acid, the odor of which is horrible. The oil company built a tank-steamer for the sole purpose of carrying it out to sea, and there emptying it in the form of thick black wax to the bottom. One of the employees of the company recently experimented with small quantities of it, and has found out a way of utilizing it as fast as it is made. By his process the offensive stuff, which cost the company so much to throw away, is separated into two parts, one of which is a weak acid that can be used, and the other a valuable fuel, free from smell. For the latter there is an unlimited demand at a good price, and the offensive nuisance has thus become a source of profit. An analogous result is continually taking place in the human race. Some of the worst men, who are a nuisance to society, become a blessing when their nature is changed by the grace of God. (1 Cor. 6:9-11.)

A Plot to Liberate a Condemned Murderer in Kansas City, Mo., was discovered on January 6. Lying in the prison there under sentence of death is a young man whose execution is to take place on February 7. Three persons arranged a plan to deliver him. They were his sister, his sweetheart, and a man who was his friend. They raised enough money between them to buy saws and acids, which were secretly conveyed to him, but it was found that even if he could succeed in getting out of his cell by their means, he could not get out of the courtyard of the jail. It was then decided to obtain a permit to visit him, and it was arranged that his sweetheart should exchange clothes with her condemned lover, and remain in the cell while he went out with his sister and friend. The girl expected that she would be punished for her share in the undertaking, but she declared that she was ready to bear any punishment the law might inflict if she could only save her lover from an ignominious death. The scheme worked smoothly until the exchange of clothing commenced, when the prison guards surprised them and discovered the plot. They were all arrested, but the two women have since been released. The convict remains in prison awaiting the execution of his sentence. There is probably now no prospect of his escaping his doom, but he may learn, from the plot that was frustrated, how he may escape the far more terrible fate awaiting the impenitent beyond the grave. An infinitely greater love than that of the girl who tried to take his place has made atonement for the sinner, and Christ, by suffering in his stead, has purchased redemption for all who trust in Him. (Isa. 53:5.)

The Disappointment of a Returned Husband is described in a press dispatch from Seattle, Wash. It states that in 1878 a sea-captain married in that city and quitted sea life to settle on a homestead in Whatcom County. For about seven years he worked on the farm, living happily with his wife. He perceived that his land would be worth a much larger sum if he had capital to spend in developing it. He therefore resolved to go on a whaling voyage, the proceeds of which, he hoped, would furnish him with the needed funds. He left his wife behind, gaily promising to return when he had secured his prize. But his schooner was totally wrecked on the shores of Alaska. He and the crew escaped, and after wandering for some time began whaling from the shore and were very successful. They also captured walrus and seals, and last summer the captain found that his profits, including the skins and ivory, amounted to $20,000. That was a larger sum than he had hoped for, and he determined to take the first opportunity of returning home. The opportunity was long in coming, but at last, just as the year was closing, he had the joy of standing once more in Seattle with his fortune in his pocket. He lost no time in making his way to his home, but to his dismay found it deserted. His wife had heard of the wreck of his schooner, and after waiting for three years, and hearing nothing of him, she concluded he must be dead, and had married a Canadian tourist, with whom she had gone away he knew not where. The disappointment of the man on hearing this news was pitiable, and doubtless his wife, when she hears of his return, will be deeply grieved over her impetuosity. She had strong reasons for expecting that she would never see her husband again, and therefore her conduct was not without excuse. That, however, cannot be said for unfaithful Christians who have ceased to watch for their Lord's return, and who at His coming will be in alliance with the world. (Luke 12:45, 46.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Home for Friendless Women to be built at Eau Claire, Wis., by the W. C. T. U., will cost $20,000, including the site.

The Rev. William W. Patton, D. D., President of Howard University at Washington, D. C., is dead from congestion of the lungs.

Mrs. Van Cott has been holding meetings in the First Methodist Church, Marshalltown, Iowa. Great crowds attended the services, and many were converted.

Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Scudder, at Niigata, Japan, have been compelled, on account of the illness of their daughter and their own age and infirmities, to retire from their work.

Dr. Dollinger, the great opponent of the doctrine of Papal Infallibility, and the head of the Old Catholic movement in southern Germany, died on January 10 of influenza. He was eighty-one years old.

Rev. M. Baxter and other clergymen have been giving Second Advent discourses in St. George's Hall, London. On December 26 and 29 Mr. Baxter lectured in the Portman Rooms on the same subject.

Dunkard College, at Bridgewater, Va., has been burned. There are now only two colleges in the United States belonging to this denomination—one at Mt. Morris, Ill., and one at Huntingdon, Pa.

The Rev. Dr. Justin D. Fulton has been invited to the pastorate of the Immanuel Baptist Church of Toronto, Canada, but has declined it on the ground that his call to the work of exposing Romanism is imperative.

Rev. Dr. Pierson is preaching at Westminster Congregational Chapel, London, every Sunday during January. On January 15, 16, and 17 he is also to address special meetings in London on the subject of missions.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, sending "Christmas salutations" to the supporters of his Stockwell Orphanages, says: "We have no need to plead destitution; our Father supplies our wants before we even begin to feel the pinch of them."

The Right Rev. A. Cleveland Coxe, Bishop of Western New York, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration on January 4. A large number of clergymen from all sections of the United States and Canada took part in the celebration.

Mr. Philip Phillips, the Singing Pilgrim, gave his song services at Central Park Baptist Church, New York, on January 13, 14, 15. From January 16 to 22 he is at the Willet Street M. E. Church every night. At the conclusion of this engagement he sets out on a tour in the West.

The Paris Dix-Neuvième Siècle publishes a letter, saying that Prince Louis Napoleon, in a private conversation lately, made an important declaration. It is that he resigned his commission in the Italian Army because he positively knew that Signor Crispi was preparing to make war on France.

The Tabernacle Congregational Church in Jersey City has had the satisfaction of publicly burning the mortgage of $11,000 on their church edifice. The church was crowded to the door. Fifty clergymen, of all denominations, occupied seats on the platform, and the exercises were original and interesting.

Wanted, for Christian service, to save unruly boys, young men who have given themselves to God. Hard work, simple fare, small pay, on an industrial farm, where some manual labor will be required. There will be thorough training for institutional work in the methods of the Raube Haus. Address W. M. F. Round, 135 East 15th Street, New York.

The Rev. George C. Needham, having completed his visit to Kansas, is now at Hannibal, Mo. Throughout Kansas the churches have been crowded and pastors and people rejoiced. Many souls were saved. The great tabernacle at Hannibal has been crowded from the beginning. Mr. Needham's Bible lectures are producing a deep impression. He is a firm believer in the whole Bible, and an unsparing critic of the higher criticism.

THE SEEKER AT THE SEPULCHRE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Then the disciples went away again unto their own home. But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping," etc. John 20: 10-16.

Mary Representative of Two Classes—I. A Seeking Soul has its Own Way—Persistent Looking—With Tears—Stooping the Right Attitude—Looking in the Wrong Place—II. Takes Small Account of Anything but Jesus—Mary Not Afraid of the Angels—Makes a Personal Acknowledgment—III. May be Near Jesus Without Knowing it—His Presence Still Felt—What Prevented Her knowing Him—IV. Will do Anything to Find Him—Mary's Proposal—V. May Find Him Through One Word—VI. Will Respond.

I WANTED to speak to-night to believers who have lost the joyful presence of their Lord, and who are saying, "Oh that I knew where I might find Him!" But when I thought of that matter, I said to myself, Many will be in the congregation who have never yet found Him, and therefore do not know His sweetness by experience, and yet they may be longing to find Him. Is it possible to benefit two classes at once? "Well, well," I said to myself, "I can speak to the saint, for she who figures in the text was Mary; but I can also, at the same time, talk to the sinner; for she was Magdalene, and that name has somehow become connected with penitent sinners." I pray, at the beginning, that, if there be one here who has long been a Mary, and has followed Christ lovingly, and if there be another here who is more like what is commonly, but erroneously, known as a Magdalene, both the Mary and the Magdalene may find direction and consolation in my discourse.

I shall have no other preface but these remarks; for we have before us a long text to be handled in a short time, and I would not perform my task slightly. We will advance by a series of observations.

I. Our first observation shall be this:

A Soul Seeking Jesus

has ways of its own. Read carefully the tenth verse: "Then the disciples went away again unto their own home. But Mary," Mary had her own way of proceeding. Mary was seeking Christ more intensely and affectionately than even the choicest of the apostles. They were more able to wait for events than her eagerness would allow her to do. John was able to go home, because he had seen and believed. Peter went home all the more readily because a cloud darkened his sky. Mary was of another order from either of these: she loved, and longed to see Him whom she loved. Whether He be dead or alive, she would find Him. When you are seeking the Lord, it brings out your individuality. Every truly anxious soul seek the Lord in his own way. Each case is peculiar: each seeker feels himself to be one by himself. There are not two Mary Magdalenes; and Mary differs from John and Peter.

One part of her way was this—that she would stay at the sepulchre after others had gone to their own homes. So have I seen lingering at the mercy-seat when the prayers of others were ended, and remaining in the use of the means of grace when others had enjoyed a full sufficiency of them. Perhaps Peter and John had other necessary business to attend to, and their duty called them away from the tomb; but Mary stood there still, hoping to hear something about her Lord, and, at least, to know where they had laid His body. It is a blessed thing when the heart becomes so resolved to find Christ that it cannot be happy without Him, cannot even live without Him. When you are resolved to wait at the posts of wisdom's doors until the Incarnate Wisdom appears to you, you will not have to wait long.

The Lover of the Lord

Mary had ways of her own besides, for she stood there "weeping." She wept as if her heart would break. Where was her Lord? What had they done with that sacred body? She had seen it wrapped in spices and fine linen, and laid in the tomb of Joseph; where was it now? The tomb was evidently quite empty of all but the cerements; where was the body? What new indignities had the cruel ones put upon it? That dear mangled body—to what malicious treatment was it now exposed? She stood, in deep emotion, sorrowing as love alone can sorrow when its beloved object is in peril. It is a great thing, dear soul, when you cannot find Christ, to weep your eyes out till you can.

Mary did something more, which was according to her own mode of action—"she stooped down and looked into the sepulchre." They that would find Christ must stoop to look for Him. They must not merely wait for Him, but look for Him on their knees. I have known some people pretend to wait for the Lord, and they have kept up the pretence to their soul's ruin! for they never looked to Him by faith. I have known some weep much, but they would not open their eyes to look to Jesus and be saved.

Note this peculiarity: that she Looked in the Wrong Place.

She looked into the sepulchre for the living and risen Jesus. Earnest, true-hearted, zealous, Mary was; but she labored under a mistake. Well might the angels say, "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen." Thus have I known true penitents seek the Lord where He cannot be found. They have expected to undergo a sort of inward purgatory, and they have sought for Jesus in their own feelings. He is not there. They have imagined that they must be carried away with despair before they might lay hold upon the Saviour. Yet the Lord is not in the wind of feeling, nor in the fire of despair; His presence is known by His still small voice. They have not looked with a simple, childlike trust to Jesus; but have gone about to this, and that, and the other thing, and all in vain. They have sought for Jesus among forms and ceremonies, but in vain. Possibly they have gone to human priests, or sages: these are as dead as the tombs. Priestcraft and philosophy are no places for the living Christ to be found in.

Yet I am glad that Mary looked into the tomb; for, though she looked in the wrong place, it was a good thing to be looking for Jesus after any fashion. Better blunder in seeking Christ than be so wise as to go away from Him. I mean, better to be a sincere, but foolish, seeker after Jesus, and fall into a hundred errors of doctrine, than to be highly cultured, and all the while to be looking to self, or to the world, and forgetting the Lord Jesus.

II. But now, going a little further on, I would observe, secondly, that a soul seeking Jesus makes small account of anything else. Mary, when she looked down, at the head, and at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain. At any other time, if Mary Magdalene had seen two angels, she would have been astounded, so as to lose her balance, through reverent fear. A vision of angels, even to the ungodly soldiers that watched the grave of Christ, had made them faint, and become as dead men; but if you read the passage attentively, you will see that Mary talked to these angels as if they had been good men whom she had met before. She was not abashed by them. When they say to her "Woman, why weepest thou?" she answers them, very plainly, "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." She is not frightened at spirits and angels. Neither is a soul that is in earnest after Christ to be put away from its search by any sort of diversion.

Saw the Angels

Notice, too, as confirmatory of what I have said, that when a soul is seeking Christ, nothing but Christ's own word will satisfy it. This holy woman was not content with what the angels said. Though they said to her, "Woman, why weepest thou?" those shining ones do not appear to have comforted her at all. She went on weeping. She told them why she wept, but she did not, therefore, cease her tears. Beloved, never sit down short of Christ; for short of Christ is short of salvation. Whatever you hear, never be content with hearing: long to find Him of whom you hear. Let not voices from heaven, if you could hear them, much less the voices of godly men and women on earth, ever content you, apart from the Lord Jesus Christ, who is all in all. Furthermore, a soul seeking Jesus is

Glad to Confess

Him. When she spoke to Peter and John, in the second verse, she said, "They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre;" but when she addressed the angels, she said, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." It might not be necessary to say, "my Lord" to the two apostles, who knew exactly what she was; but she had not seen those angels before, and she would not let them go without their knowing that Jesus was her Lord, her very own; and so she puts it, "They have taken away my Lord." I like that amazingly. Are you a seeking saint? Whether you see Him or do not see Him, He is still yours; and you must hold to it that He is still your own.

III. Let us now make a third observation: a soul seeking Jesus may have Him

Very Near, And Not Know it.

Read, "When she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus." He was behind her while she stood looking into the sepulchre; and though she did not perceive it, His presence operated upon her. She had been speaking to the angels, and answering their question; and suddenly she was conscious that someone was standing just behind her. How came she thus to feel? You have been sitting at your table, writing, and a friend has come behind you with noiseless tread, but yet on a sudden you have been aware of a presence. Before you had heard or seen, you were impressed—what if I say overshadowed? Was it not so with Mary Magdalene and the Saviour? I am not superstitious if I assert that something very similar happens to me when Jesus is near. Many a believer will tell you that he has, at times, when he has been in prayer, or hearing the Word, or meditating, felt as if he could be sure that the Lord stood near him. There could, of course, be no palpable impression upon the flesh; for now, after the flesh, know we Him no more; but yet His presence has impressed our souls.

There are influences of mind on mind which are beyond the recognition of science. The great spirit of our Lord has means of making itself spiritually known to our spirits—means which flesh and blood know nothing of, and which lips could not describe. I have discerned the special presence of my Lord with me by a consciousness as sure as that by which I know that I live. Jesus has been as real to me, at my side in this pulpit, as though I had beheld Him with my eyes. I appeal to the experience of many of you. Have you not been moved by a mysterious influence, which has overawed, inspired, and impressed you beyond description?

What was it, do you think, that prevented her seeing and knowing her Lord? Shall we say that her unbelief and sorrow dimmed her eyes? Was it that, like the disciples on the road to Emmaus, her eyes were holden? Very possibly. I think it was that the sight was Not What She Expected.

She was longing to see Jesus; but, may be, she only hoped to see Him wrapped in grave-clothes; and so you notice that the evangelist puts it, "She saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus." If she had seen Him lying down, with the image of death upon His face, she would have known Him; but to see Jesus standing was far more than she could have hoped for.

Beloved, our conceptions of our Lord are so poor and low, that if He were to come to us in even a moderated degree of His glory, we should fail to apprehend that it was really He. It may be that the Lord Jesus is truly appearing to some sinner here; but as the appearance is not what he expected he is unable to hope that it is his Saviour. You are told simply to trust Him; and this is hardly what you looked for: you thought that you would suffer an experience of amazing sorrow. You looked for an affair which could be put into a biography. Tell me, did you not? But you will not have anything of the sort. You hear a voice which cries, "Only trust Him, only trust Him." Obey that voice, and enter into immediate rest. The Lord Jesus is present wherever there is humble faith in Him, for that plant never grows except where He sets His pierced foot. Believe, and then know that it is Jesus.

And you, dear brother, who have lost the presence of Christ a while, perhaps you expect Him to come to-night, and carry you away in a sacred transport; instead of which, it may be He will calm you, and fill you with repose, or He may even rebuke you, and send you out to work and suffer for Him. May you have the discernment, however your Lord may come, to know that it is the Lord! Though He comes not in the way in which you looked for Him, yet be not so purblind as to mistake Him for another.

In a word, she was so far from discovering her Lord that she took Him to be her foe rather than her Friend. She imagined that the gardener had borne the body away. Was he so unwilling to have a corpse within the region of his gardening that he had put it in a corner, that no one might perceive it? She humbles herself to him, and offers to carry away the form to which she feared he had such an objection. "Tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away." He to whom she spoke had not taken away her treasure: He had brought it to her; yea, He was Himself that treasure! Beloved, you and I also have reckoned our best Friend to be our enemy; so foolish are we, and so soon mistaken. In the darkness of our souls we judge unrighteously, and complain of our Lord, whom alone we ought to praise.

IV. Upon my fourth observation I will be very brief—a soul seeking Jesus will do Anything to Find Him.

Mary Magdalene was still seeking; and when she saw one standing before her, whom she thought to be the gardener, what did she do? Why, she inquired of that gardener where she might find Him whom she loved. She was willing to learn from anyone. If you are in earnest to find the Lord Jesus you will not be particular about where you go, or of whom you learn. No matter whether the preacher is a doctor of divinity or a converted coal-heaver, so long as he preaches Christ, you will be glad to learn from him. She supposed him to be the gardener; but yet she said to him, "Sir, if thou hast borne Him hence, tell me where thou hast laid Him." Many have been happy to learn of Jesus from fishermen and cobblers. Does my friend object to my hearing an illiterate man? Ah, sir! when I am seeking eternal salvation, I care little about the philosopher, I want the experimental Christian. Let him be a chimney-sweep—if he will lead me to Jesus, I will follow. So it was with this holy woman; she desired to find the Lord, and she was altogether absorbed in that one pursuit. She speaks as if everybody was equally intent upon the one theme; for instead of mentioning the name Jesus, she says, "If thou hast borne Him hence." Why, Mary, what art thou talking about? "About Him," saith she. But who is this of whom thou speakest? Ah, friends! to her there was but one "Him" in all the world, just then!

Oh, to be thus Absorbed!

Such was the desire of Magdalene to find the Lord Jesus, that she feared no ghastly sight. Let her know where the body is laid, and she will be there. Notice that she dreads no heavy burden. She says, "I will take Him away." Why, Mary, you could not bear away so great a load! You would fall beneath the weight of a man's corpse! You are not strong enough for the sad task! Ah! but she thought that she could bear the blessed burden, and she meant to try! It would seem a grim and terrible task for a woman, at early morning, to be carrying from its grave the corpse of one who had been hanged upon a tree; but she offers herself for the deed, and is even eager for it. To a soul that would fain find Christ, nothing is too hot or too heavy, nothing is too cold or too sickening. We would do anything, refuse nothing, and suffer everything, if we might but clasp Him in our arms, our Jesus and our all.

V. And that brings us to our fifth point: a seeking soul may find Jesus

Through One Word.

We might be wise to clip our sermons down, and make them much shorter. Long discourses have often missed the mark; but our Lord's one word gave Mary all she sought. He said to her, "Mary"; and at once she knew Him, and cried, "Rabboni." Only one word! Jesus can preach a perfect sermon in one word. O dear friends, when you cannot say much to an anxious inquirer, say a single word. Who knows what that one word may do? When you cannot repeat a sermon, quote a verse. "A verse may hit him whom a sermon flies." Do not think that strength lies in length; it is often the reverse.

That one word was the Magdalene's own name. It was as though He had said, "I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine." Words, when they are spoken with a general bearing, may prove feeble. When the angel said, "Woman," and Jesus Himself said, "Woman," that name belonged to a large class of individuals, and Mary did not take it to herself. But when our Lord said, "Mary," it came home to her without fail. This is what is needed; an assured, personal application of the Word. Then it is that you find the Lord, and know of a surety that it is He.

That word from the Master's lips, that word your own name, that word shall wake the echoes of your heart by arousing happy memories and recalling hours of sweet delight. When a soul knows that Jesus knows its name, it soon begins to know Jesus for itself. Who but He could have said, "Mary" with that emphatic accent, with that peculiar intonation? "Mary!" was the Open Sesame of her heart and mind. Oh, now she has Him! Lord, speak in this fashion to some seeker who is here looking for Thee!

VI. The last head is this—

A Seeking Soul Will Respond

with reverence to the word of Jesus. Mary said at once, "Rabboni." This is a Hebrew word signifying "Master," or, as Parkhurst says, having a Chaldee particle within it, which makes it to mean, "My Master," or, as I have heard some say, "Great Master." At any rate, she meant that He was her Lord and Teacher. He knew her heart. He understood her inmost soul, and therefore she owned Him Lord. He had called her by her name, and she owned that all-controlling voice. He was her Master, since He could so divinely know and move her heart. Even thus may we each one say, "My God, my Saviour!"

In addition to this, she feels that she knows Him. He is no stranger to her. Had He been a stranger, He might have said "Mary" many times; but because He was the Good Shepherd that knows His sheep, and calls them by name, therefore Mary, as one of His sheep, responded to His call. Mary knew Him; do you know the Master? Beloved, do you know the Lord Jesus? To know Him is life eternal! Have you this life? Not to know Him is an ignorance dark as death. I do not say, do you know about Him? But do you know Him? Has the Lord ever spoken to you? If so, you will at once take Him to be your Teacher, and yield your intellect to His instruction. Henceforth opposing philosophies will go to the wind, and you will learn of Him.

"Rabboni" means also "Master" by way of authority. Mary confessed herself the follower of Jesus. From that time, even if it had not been so with her before, Mary Magdalene was one of those of whom it could be said, "They follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." Happy man and happy woman, who will keep close to every footstep of the Lord. If you are seeking Him at this hour, pray that, at this moment, He may speak the revealing word, so that you may henceforth feel that a change has come over you, the like of which you have never known. May you experience a sacred twist which shall affect your whole character! May Jesus touch your heart so that your whole body, soul, and spirit shall never forget that touch in time or in eternity! Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Delivered from the Jesuits.—Mr. Hamilton said: "A converted Malagasy named Razaka was impressed as a soldier, and his captain, an idolater, persecuted him in every way. Once when the captain was in a great rage, Razaka quietly drew from his pocket a tract, on the resurrection of the dead, and began to read it. The words went to the officer's heart, the happy result being that he gave himself to Christ. At another time this persecuted one was exiled and carried with three or four companions as a slave to the island of Bourbon. There they were brought under the influence of the Jesuits, who tried to turn them toward Roman Catholicism, but they remained true. 'No,' they replied, 'we will not change our religion for which our brethren are bleeding and dying!' Soon the Jesuits became tired of them and sent them home with a sum of money each. So the Lord brought His own back again, after bringing them through great tribulations, and they were able to say with truth, 'God is my refuge and my strength, a very present help in time of trouble.'"

Saved on a Locomotive.—Mr. McFarlane said: "Before my conversion I was the driver of a locomotive. I thought I was a decent enough fellow. I was a sober man, and a church member. What more could any person want? For years I remained in that self-satisfied condition, but some time ago I was shifted from one station to another, where I came among a number of men who were as sober and respectable as myself, yet between whom and myself I felt there was a great, though indefinite, difference. One day as I stood talking to one of these men, he said, 'You are not so good but that you might be better. You need something more than you have already got. Will you not come down to the Mission Hall instead of going to the theatre to-night?' I went that night, and heard something that made me very anxious about my soul, and I vowed, as I left the building, I would never enter it again. I tried to get rid of the sense of sin which weighed upon me, but I could not. It was with me on duty and off, making me miserable. At last a crisis came. I was on the engine, running at sixty miles an hour, and with my hand on the lever I was peering out along the track when suddenly the conviction of my sins came upon me with overwhelming force. Tears of repentance and sorrow coursed down my cheeks. I could stand out no longer, and cried to God to help me. He heard and answered, and immediately sent peace to my soul. Tears still streamed from my eyes, but they were tears of joy, not of sorrow. I knew the exact spot where I was saved, and have ridden over it many times, always with a thankful heart to Him who took me from the mire and clay and set my feet upon the Rock."

A Visit to a Leper Home.—Mr. W. Thomson said: "Some time ago a minister went on a visit to Norway. Among other places, he visited the hospital for lepers. The doctor in charge showed him through the place, and indeed it was a terrible sight. As the clergyman marked the fearful ravages which the foul disease had made on the faces and frames of some of the patients, his conductor seemed to read his thoughts, and said, 'There is a strange fancy that some of our patients have. Do you see that man over there?' The person indicated was a loathsome spectacle, terribly disfigured with the disease. If you were to ask him who was the most beautiful person in Norway, for reply he would point to some one of the lepers about him. He has leprosy in his eyes, and looks at everything with a leprosy look, and leprosy to him appears more beautiful than health. The sinner resembles the leper in this respect. He looks at all things through a sinful eye. To him sin seems the best and most beautiful thing in the world; but let his eyes be opened, and like the prophet he will see that from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet are wounds, bruises, and putrefying sores, and only the Great Physician can heal him."

A Malagasy Persecutor Converted.—Mr. Hamilton said, "I heard the story of a wonderful Malagasy Christian. He was the only son of his parents. His father was the chief of his native town, and so his son was allowed to do almost as he pleased. Owing to his pride, obstinacy, and evil passion, he became the terror of the whole neighborhood, and people coming to his father on business were afraid to approach if they saw the son near. This youth delighted to make fun of the Christians, and never lost an opportunity of teasing them. On one occasion, when he had been more than usually outrageous, one of the Christian teachers told him that if he did not repent his soul would be lost for ever. At this he waxed very wrath, and accused them of perverting the people from their ancient religion. But a change came; he noticed that the scholars did not swear, and that sometimes when he was near they spelled their words so that he might not understand what they were saying. 'Ah,' he thought, 'they may be cursing me, and I not know it.' He resolved to attend school, and soon he was able to read, and under the guidance of the missionary he was led to Christ. Then he became as zealous in upholding Christianity as he had formerly been in ridiculing it, and took every opportunity to show the falsity of idolatry, its priests and sooth-sayers."

Sad End of a Physician.—At the Same Meeting Mr. Hamilton related: "I have heard a gentleman tell how, after years of slavery to strong drink he was enabled by God's help to give it up. Twice had indulgence in drink temporarily driven reason from its throne and brought him to the verge of the grave. On the second occasion his doctor told him he must pull himself together and give up that habit which was fast killing him. He wished to do so, but he knew that in his own strength it was impossible. What hope had a dipsomaniac, with his shattered nerves and craving appetite, to break the limbs of one of the devil's strongest chains? but he knew there was a stronger than the strong man, and to Him he went, casting himself with all his sins upon the Saviour, and by His grace and power was enabled to give up drink. Some time afterwards he visited the same doctor, who, strange to say, had in the interval fallen a victim to intemperance. The physician expressed surprise that his late patient had been able to stop drinking so suddenly as he had, for he said, 'Now that I know the strength of the grip with which strong drink holds its victim, I can scarcely realize that it is possible to overcome the craving for intoxicants.' My friend pointed him to Christ, and asked him to take his case to Him who was willing and able to help him, adding, 'We have both had chances, and you do not know, if you neglect this one, if you ever have another.' But the doctor would not

Mrs. Adoniram Judson.

Mrs. Judson Interfering for the Protection of Her Husband.

up the intoxicating cup. A few weeks afterwards, as he lay in bed one night, unable to sleep with shattered nerves, he rose to take, as was his custom when so situated, a dose of morphia. This time he took an overdose, and next morning was dead."

MRS. ADONIRAM JUDSON.

(See portrait and illustration.)

THE devoted lady whose portrait is here given had the honor of being the first lady foreign missionary. Her name was Ann Hasseltine, and she married, in 1811, the noble, consecrated man who has been well styled the Apostle of Burmah. She died in 1826, a martyr to the zeal and devotion with which she gave herself to her missionary work, and to her attention to her husband during his captivity. It was in 1824 that hostilities broke out between England and Burmah. Though Dr. and Mrs. Judson were Americans, they were well aware that the Burmese authorities would not discriminate between them and their English foes, but would regard them as of one race and nationality. They remained, however, bravely at their post.

In Mrs. Judson's diary the thrilling story of their suffering is thus narrated: "On June 8, 1824, an officer entered our house by command of the King. He had in his hand a black book, and he was followed by a dozen Burmese soldiers accompanied by one, who, from his spotted face, we knew to be the executioner, and 'a son of the prison.' 'Where is the teacher?' was the first inquiry. Mr. Judson presented himself. 'You are called by the Emperor,' said the officer, a form of speech always used when about to arrest a criminal. The spotted man instantly seized Mr. Judson, threw him on the floor, and produced the small cord, the instrument of torture. I caught hold of his arm. (See illustration.) 'Stay,' said I, 'I will give you money.' 'Take her, too,' said the officer 'she also is a foreigner.' Mr. Judson, with an imploring look, begged that they would let me remain till further orders.

"The scene was now shocking beyond description. The hardened executioner, with a kind of hellish joy, drew tight the cords, bound Mr. Judson fast, and dragged him off, I knew not whither. In vain I begged and entreated the spotted-face to take the silver and loosen the ropes, but he spurned my offers and immediately departed. I gave the money, however, to Moung Ing to follow after, and make some attempts to mitigate the torture of Mr. Judson, but, instead of succeeding, when a few rods from the house the unfeeling wretches again threw their prisoner on the ground and drew the cords tighter, so as almost to prevent respiration."

A guard of ten ruffians was set over the house, and Mrs. Judson was closely watched, together with the little Burmese girls, whom she had taken to teach and train up in her own family. Very soon, however, she was summoned forth to the veranda, to be examined by the magistrate for supposed complicity with the English foreigners. After the examination she was allowed to retire to an inner room with the children, but the carousal and vile language of the guard, her own suffering, unprotected, desolate state, as well as the uncertainty of her husband's fate, combined to render it a most memorable night of terror and dismay, sleep being altogether out of the question.

She sent Moung Ing, however, early next morning to ascertain Mr. Judson's situation, and, if possible, to give him and his fellow-prisoner food. He soon returned with the tidings that both the missionaries and all the white foreigners were confined in the death prison, with three pairs of iron fetters each, fastened to a pole to prevent their moving.

By bribes, by persistent pleadings, she at length gained permission to wait upon her husband, and during his captivity of twenty-one months she attended him continually when not driven away by his brutal guards. When the war came to an end and Dr. Judson was released, she herself was worn out by her labors and troubles, and died before her husband could bring her home.

A FATHER'S UNHEEDED WARNING.

(See illustration on page 45.)

AMONG the little groups of worshippers who were leaving the usual week-night service of a church in a quiet New England town were a tall, white-haired old man and his daughter, a beautiful girl about twenty-two years old.

"Papa," she said, as soon as they were clear of the other church members, and were turning into the lane that led homeward, "I have been thinking of what you said yesterday about your work being too much for you. Why do you not have a partner? Since brother Harry died it has seemed the only thing to do. Plenty of young men would be glad to join you. Don't you think Martin Eldon would be good?"

A shrewd smile played over the rugged features of Squire Wingfield, as he looked down on the bright face at his side. "I thought we should come to that if I waited," he said. "As I have no son now," the old man could not refer to the fact without a sigh, "you think a son-in-law would be a good substitute."

"Oh, papa! that is too bad," Margaret Wingfield answered, with the rich color suffusing her cheeks. "You have no right to say anything of the kind. Martin Eldon never even hinted such a thing."

"I am glad of that," said the Squire, seriously; "I should be still more thankful if I were sure neither he nor my little girl had even thought of it."

"Why, papa?"

"Because nothing but sorrow and misery could come of such a marriage. Martin is brilliant, and would make a good lawyer if he would give his mind to it. I have often thought of him, especially since I have seen that you and he were so much about together, but I am sure there is no hope of his doing any good. He is idle, and more fond of pleasure than a young man ought to be when he has his own way to make."

"Oh, I don't think so, papa. All young men are fond of pleasure, and he is so bright and witty he is made welcome everywhere. But when he has an object in life he will settle down. There is no harm in him. Don't take the short cut to-night, papa. I want to talk to you, and, besides, it leads past the saloon, and the men will be coming out; it is near closing time."

"You are not afraid when I am with you, surely, Maggie? And we can talk just as well at home. Come along, none of those merry-makers will molest us."

A burst of hilarious laughter struck on their ears in a few moments, telling them that the company in the saloon was breaking up. Across the road they could see a group about the door of the drinking-place, and could hear the boisterous merriment, snatches of questionable songs, and see the rough horse-play of the hilarious men. A lady who was on that side of the way turned out to avoid them, but one or two young men, with mock politeness and that lack of delicacy which intoxication produces, stepped off the sidewalk toward her and volunteered to see her safely home. The lady was scared and ran, and the young men laughed loudly over her timidity, but did not follow her.

"Do you still think there is no harm in Martin?" the Squire asked. He knew his daughter must have recognized one of the young men, as he did.

"He must have been excited, he is not himself to-night, papa. I am sure there is good in him."

"Oh, I don't doubt that, but there is evil too, as you see, and the evil will grow so quickly and surely that the good will have no room and gradually disappear. No, Margaret, he is no fit husband for you, and no fit partner for me. The sooner you get that fact settled, the better."

Martin Eldon was not intoxicated that night. As he described it, he was "elevated." He recognized the squire and his daughter after they had passed, and hoped that they had not seen him. He was conscious of having lowered himself, and resolved that he would keep away from saloons in future. He knew that, after drinking strictly in moderation—and he never passed the bounds he set himself in that matter—he did and said silly things which he would not have done if he had not had any intoxicant at all. He would turn over a fresh leaf and be more careful. Martin kept his resolution. His place was vacant at the club assemblies, and his old companions twitted him with his moral turn, and advised him to join the church at once. That step did not seem improbable, though it was only advised in jest, for Martin was more frequently seen at the Sunday services than ever before.

Squire Wingfield shook his head when Margaret called his attention to the change. "Won't last," he said, "there is no stay in him. Put him out of your heart, little one, and keep him out."

Margaret tried to take her father's advice. It was very hard, for Martin was the brightest young man in the village. All the girls liked him, and were glad to have him as an escort, and it gratified Margaret's vanity to have him show so decided a preference for her. She struggled against her love, on her father's account, but now that Martin was so much improved, she began to think that her father's dislike was mere prejudice. The struggle ended when one day Martin told her that he had been offered a partnership in a law firm in New York and wanted her promise to marry him. She gave it, and then set herself to win her father's consent.

The Squire had never refused his daughter anything. She was his only surviving child. Her brother and two sisters had died young, and all his affection was lavished on her. He could not refuse her this, but he exercised all his tact to wean her heart from her lover. Of course he failed, as he must in a contest of that kind. Finally, with a sad heart and many misgivings, he yielded, and the treasure of his home was given up to adorn the home of the young lawyer in the distant metropolis.

The Squire said little about it and seemed to give more of his attention to business than before, but his neighbors thought he aged fast and was more cynical and acrimonious than he used to be. Once a year he would go to New York for a few days to see his daughter, and in the summer she would come to her old home and spend a month, bringing a little girl, the exact image of her former self, with her. Her father forbore to question her as to her life and her husband on these occasions. On her first visit she was full of Martin's praises, and labored to convince her father that he was mistaken. Martin was all, and more than all, that she expected of him, and she insisted upon the fact so forcibly that the old Squire half fancied that she was trying as much to convince herself as to convince him. Gradually, in her later visits, she said less and less about him, and finally they scarcely ever spoke of him when they were together.

On her return from one of these visits, Margaret noticed that her husband was looking sick and worried. It was a sad indication of the relations into which their married life had drifted that she sought no explanation of his changed appearance. But she was not kept in suspense. The following morning Martin entered the room where she sat at work, while their child read a book that her grandfather had given her on leaving him. Seating himself listlessly on a corner of the table, and letting the newspaper which he had been reading trail on the floor, he asked her bluntly if the Squire had given her any money. She replied in the negative.

"We must have some by some means," he said; "I have no occupation now."

"Your partners wearied of it at last, I suppose," she said, without looking up from her work.

"That does not signify," he said; "it is sufficient that I am no longer in the firm, and I want your father to help us until some new opening occurs. You will write and ask him, will you not?"

"Never!" said Margaret, rising with flashing eyes. "Ask my father for money to spend as you would spend it? Never!"

"But we must have it, Margaret. I will behave, and we will begin life afresh."

"How many times during these seven years have you made that promise?" the wife asked, bitterly. "You have not kept it once. I should be ashamed to ask my father, and I will not."

Martin Eldon looked at her, saw that her resolution was inflexible, and he turned and quitted the room without another word.

Squire Wingfield received a letter a week later from a friend in New York. "That precious son-in-law of yours has deserted his wife," it ran; "you had better come and look after her. The poor lady needs your help, but seems to be too proud to ask for it."

Martin Eldon's Appeal to His Wife.

The Squire needed no second summons. In a few days he was back again in his home with Margaret and her daughter permanently installed there. The Squire was glad to recover his daughter on any terms, and after a time he secretly responded to her wretched husband's appeals for money by pensioning him on condition that he remained an exile. No word of reproach did Margaret ever hear from his lips, but her own heart reproached her. In a quiet, subdued way, all the old light-hearted gaiety, forever banished, she devoted her wrecked life to comforting her father's declining years, and to training her own child to trust in God for guidance in all the affairs of life rather than in her own impulses and unsanctified caprices.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 30.)

Friendly Offices to an Indian Ally.

THE opportune arrival of the Sparrow and Discovery in the harbor furnished the colonists of Plymouth with the means of weathering another winter. They obtained from Captain Jones some supply of such provisions as they stood most in need of; not, however, without paying full value for such seasonable stores. "As he used us kindly," says Winslow in his relation, "so he made us pay largely for the things we had." Such is the passing allusion of these contented and grateful exiles to the usurious dealings of the English trader, who made them pay fully double the original value of their needful supplies. Costly, however, though it was, the supply proved most seasonable; and it is thus thankfully recorded by the historian of the colony:

"Had not the Almighty, in His all-ordering providence, directed him to us, it would have gone worse with us than ever it had been, or after was; for as we had now but small store of corn for the year following, so, for want of supply, we were worn out of all manner of trucking-stuff, not having any means left to help ourselves by trade; but, through God's good mercy towards us, he had wherewith, and did supply our wants on that kind competently."

In addition to the more direct necessities, consisting of bread and other provisions from the ship's stores, the colonists became possessed, in consequence of this transaction, of a stock of clasp-knives, scissors, beads, and trinkets of various kinds, by means of which they were enabled to trade with the Indians both for corn and furs, and thereby to secure the expected returns at a future season for satisfying the adventurers who had supplied the original cost of the outfit and passage from England.

By this time the rival colonists at Wessagusset (the Indian name which Weymouth then bore) had been established, with every reasonable prospect of success. They reached the destined site of their settlement, not like the Pilgrim Fathers, amid the bitter frost and the piercing gales of winter, but in the sweet and sunny month of June, when the birds were singing in the trees, and the green corn-fields sown around the settlement at New Plymouth gave evidence of the arts and virtues of civilization having preceded them to the New World. They found, too, however undeservedly, a friendly and hospitable reception from their precursors, and were aided with counsel and direction in the choice of a site for their settlement, and in the construction of their dwellings; so that long ere the first blasts of winter were felt, they were provided with effective, though perhaps homely enough, shelter against its severities.

Toward the latter end of autumn the Charity returned to England, after having seen the colonists settled in their new habitations, and left them sufficiently provisioned for the winter, while the Swan, a smaller vessel, remained behind.

The Pilgrims agreed, at their urgent request, to co-operate with them in trading with the Indians for corn; and a party, composed of members of both companies set sail accordingly in the Swan, accompanied with Squanto as their interpreter.

Difficulties speedily beset them. Mr. Richard Green, brother-in-law of Mr. Thomas Weston, who had been appointed to the Governorship of the new colony, suddenly died. Captain Standish, who was employed to replace him in the conduct of the trading expedition of the Swan, was seized with a violent fever; and Governor Bradford had to leave his charge of the settlement at Plymouth to take the command. After incurring considerable dangers and difficulties in consequence of the total ignorance of the colonists of the pilotage of the shallow seas along the coast, a landing was effected at Manamoyt, and by the aid of their Indian interpreter they speedily entered into friendly negotiations with the natives and procured, in return for their beads and trinkets eight hogsheads of corn and beans in addition to a store of venison and other victuals. The supply was most opportune; for the Plymouth Company were again nearly reduced to straits, chiefly in consequence of the reckless dishonesty and ingratitude of Weston's colonists, who had so shamefully requited their hospitality.

Encouraged by his success, the Governor was bent on prosecuting his trading expedition along the coast; but, says Winslow, "God had otherwise disposed." Just when they were about to resume their southern voyage, Squanto, their Indian interpreter, was suddenly seized with fever, of which he died in a short time. Poor Squanto, notwithstanding the extravagancies and deceits occasionally practiced by him, proved an invaluable friend to the New England colonists; and they mourned his loss with sincere and affectionate sorrow. The upright and consistent piety of the Pilgrims, and their uniform friendly and generous treatment of him, had won the heart of the wild Indian. On his death-bed he bequeathed the personal ornaments, and other possessions most prized by him, to several of his English friends, "as remembrances of his love;" and calling Governor Bradford to his side, he besought him to pray that he might go to the Englishman's God in heaven.

Such was the end of this poor child of nature; the first that had been brought under the influence of those who made it one of the objects which they sought in seeking a home amid these savage wilds, and friendly relations with their ancient claimants, "that warring with them after another manner than their wont—by friendly usage, love, peace, honest and just carriage, and good counsel—we and they may not only live in peace in that land, and they yield subjection to an earthly prince, but that they may be persuaded at length to embrace the Prince of Peace, Christ Jesus." It may be that Squanto had learned to bow the knee, and to utter the child-like prayers of a poor Indian savage to the Englishman's God, and that not in vain were the last prayers uttered by his couch, asking for him reunion with Him in heaven.

The death of Squanto overthrew all Governor Bradford's plans and compelled him to return. Coasting along the Bay, he negotiated various interchanges with the natives, and obtained considerable supplies of corn and beans; but a violent storm having cast away the shallop belonging to the Plymouth colonists, and greatly damaged the small boat of the Swan, they were no longer able to keep up the necessary intercourse between that vessel and the shore, and were compelled to leave their latter purchases behind, committing them to the care of the Indian sachem. From Nauset, or Eastham, where the Governor had effected these arrangements, he returned home with his company by land, a distance of about fifty miles, leaving the vessel to follow as soon as the weather admitted of her sailing, and soon afterward the colonists succeeded in recovering their shallop, and bringing home the remainder of their purchases, which were honorably divided between the rival settlements.

During their second visit to Nauset, for the purpose of recovering the shallop and corn, an incident occurred, which is worth quoting, as an illustration of Indian manners at that early period; "Having occasion," says Winslow, "to lie on the shore, laying their shallop in a creek not far from them, an Indian came into the same, and stole certain beads, scissors, and other trifles out of the same; which, when the captain missed, he took certain of his company with him, and went to the sachem, telling him what had happened, and requiring the same again, or the party that stole them (who was known to certain of the Indians), or else he would revenge it on them before his departure, and so took leave for that night, being late, refusing whatsoever kindness they offered.

On the morrow the sachem came to their rendezvous, accompanied with many men, in a stately manner, who saluted the captain in this wise: He thrust out his tongue, that one might see the root thereof, and therewith licked his hand from the wrist to the finger's end, withal bowing the knee, striving to imitate the English gesture, being instructed therein formerly by Tisquantum. His men did the like, but in so rude and savage a manner as our men could scarce forbear to break out in open laughter. After salutation he delivered the beads and other things to the captain, saying he had much beaten the party for doing it; causing the women to make bread, and bring them according to their desire; seeming to be very sorry for the fact, but glad to be reconciled. So they departed and came home in safety, where the corn was equally divided as before."

The Governor renewed his trading intercourse with the neighboring Indians from time to time, though not without receiving frequent evidence of the evil effects resulting from the unprincipled conduct of Weston's colonists. By these expeditions the settlers of Plymouth were not only secured in a sufficient supply for the winter, but were able to store up furs and other native produce, for exporting to England, as opportunity might offer. Toward the end of April, when new hopes were once more cheering the Pilgrims with the anticipations suggested by the approaching summer, the disheartening news was brought to Plymouth, that Massasoit, their Indian ally, was dangerously ill. Winslow was immediately dispatched on a friendly visit to him, furnished with medicines and cordials, and accompanied by Mr. John Hampden, a gentleman from London, who had passed the winter with them, and who has been supposed by some, though on little better evidence than the name, to have been the celebrated English patriot.

Their visit to the sick-bed of the sachem proved altogether fortunate, and their medical skill was productive of the best effects. "Many," says Winslow, "while we were there, came to see him; some, by their report, from a place not less than an hundred miles. To all that came one of his chief men related the manner of his sickness, how near he was spent; how, amongst others, his friends the English came to see him, and how suddenly they recovered him to this strength they saw, he being now able to sit upright of himself.

"The day before our coming, another sachem being there, told him that now he might see how hollow-hearted the English were, saying, if we had been such friends in deed as we were in show, we would have visited him in this his sickness, using many arguments to withdraw his affections, and to persuade him to give way to some things against us, which were mentioned to him not long before. But upon this his recovery, he brake forth into these speeches: Now I see the English are my friends, and love me; and whilst I live I will never forget this kindness they have shown me."

On their return to Plymouth, they lodged for a night with a neighboring chief, with whom the following very characteristic intercourse took place. "That night, through the earnest request of Conbatant, who till now remained at Sawaams, or Puckanokick, we lodged with him at Mattapayst. By the way I had much conference with him, so likewise at his house, he being a notable politician, yet full of merry jests and squibs, and never better pleased than when the like are returned again upon him. Amongst other things he asked me, if in case he were thus dangerously sick, as Massasoit had been, and should send word thereof to Patuxet for maskiet, that is physic, whether then Mr. Governor would send it; and if he would, whether I would come therewith to him. To both which I answered, Yea; whereat he gave me many joyful thanks.

"After that, being at his house, he demanded further, how we durst, being but two, come so far into the country. I answered, where was true love there was no fear; and my heart was so upright toward them, that for mine own part I was fearless to come amongst them. But, said he, if your love be such, and it bring forth such fruits, how cometh it to pass, that when we come to Patuxet, you stand upon your guard, with the mouths of your pieces presented toward us? Whereupon I answered, it was the most honorable and respective entertainment we could give them; it being an order amongst us so to receive our best respected friends; and as it was used on the land, so the ships observed it also at sea, which Hobbamock knew and had seen observed. But shaking the head, he answered that he liked not such salutations.

"Further, observing us to crave a blessing on our meat before we did eat, and after to give thanks for the same, he asked us what was the meaning of that ordinary custom. Hereupon I took occasion to tell them of God's works of creation and preservation, of His laws and ordinances, especially of the ten commandments; all which they hearkened unto with great attention, and liked well of; only the seventh commandment they excepted against, thinking there were many inconveniences in it, that a man should be tied to one woman; about which we reasoned a good time.

"Also I told them that whatsoever good things we had we received from God, as the author and giver thereof; and therefore craved His blessing upon that we had, and were about to eat, that it might nourish and strengthen our bodies; and having eaten sufficient, being satisfied therewith, we again returned thanks to the same our God, for that our refreshing, &c. This all of them concluded to be very well; and said they believed almost all the same things, and that the same power that we called God they called Kiehtan. Much profitable conference," adds Winslow, "was occasioned hereby, which would be too tedious to relate, yet was no less delightful to them, than comfortable to us. Here we remained only that night, but never had better entertainment amongst any of them."

One of the most important fruits of this journey was the discovery of a plot concocted by a neighboring Indian tribe for utterly exterminating the colonists at Wessagusset. It was a danger brought on Weston's colony chiefly in consequence of their own dishonest and vicious practices, but it threatened to involve the peaceful settlers at Plymouth in the same unmerited fate, had they not thus providentially learned of the Indians' designs in time to counteract them. When they reached Plymouth, they found that Captain Standish had left the previous day in company with one of the Indians who had been employed to decoy him from the colony, where his military skill was of so much avail. Fortunately he was driven back by contrary winds; and having been informed of the infamous plot that was in progress, the Indian was quietly dismissed, without making him aware of their knowledge of his designs, and Governor Bradford immediately proceeded to adopt all needful steps for the defence of the colony.

As time wore on the state of Weston's colonists grew daily worse. The Charity set sail for England in the month of October, leaving them well housed and provisioned for the winter, and furnished with a vessel by which they could command a ready intercourse with the natives along an extensive coast, and by barter or by fishing secure for themselves abundant stores and the means of future export to England. But all these advantages were thrown away on the reckless and improvident band of emigrants, whom Weston had selected to establish a colony in opposition to the simple and pious founders of Plymouth. In his short-sighted, worldly wisdom Weston had flattered himself that a band of active and daring spirits, unencumbered by wives and children, and not over-scrupulous as to the means to be used for gaining their purpose, could hardly fail of success in opposition to the New England Pilgrims, who numbered among them old men and maidens, wives and helpless infants, and were straitened in their dealings with the rude Indian by the constant suggestions of tender consciences.

All experience, however disproves the popular notion that the domestic relationships furnish an impediment to the progress of early colonization, or indeed to the rise of man in any of the social spheres of life. The stimulus which the calls of affection and duty supply far more than compensates for these added claims, while the social and domestic comforts which woman is able to create around the most lowly hearth are such as, without her presence, no wealth can secure.

The return of spring brought with it no cheering hopes to the settlers at Wessagusset. Improvidence, dishonesty, and frequent dissensions had squandered their means and completely debarred them from any united efforts for the general good. Toward the end of February frequent complaints were brought to Plymouth, by the Indians, of their unjust and faithless dealings, while these received abundant confirmation by the few of their number who were really honestly disposed deserting the settlement and imploring permission to unite themselves with the colonists of Plymouth. All attempts at restraint by those who still retained a nominal authority proved utterly vain. These men, who, by ordinary industry might have secured ample means to supply every want, squandered their bread and corn, without even preserving enough of the latter for seed wherewith to provide for the golden fruits of harvest.

So utterly lost were they to all honesty or virtuous shame that they at length degraded themselves to beg a meal of food from the neighboring Indians, and hired themselves to fetch wood and draw water for them, that they might share in the more provident stores of the savages. From this abject servitude they sought relief by robbing the Indians' stores; and though there was still authority enough left in the Governor of the colony to visit such crimes with the pillory and the lash, this was altogether ineffectual either for the reformation of the unprincipled emigrants or the mollification of the exasperated savages, who had thus been taught both to hate and to despise their white neighbors.

(To be Continued.)

The Great Crisis from 1889 to 1901. By Rev. M. Baxter. This is a 32-page pamphlet containing a résumé of his larger works, with diagrams and tables of prophetic dates. It has been specially prepared for distribution at meetings, lectures, etc., and is of a convenient size for sending in envelopes through the mails. Persons desiring to arouse the attention of their friends and the public to the momentous character of the period on which we are entering will find this a valuable means of assistance. Price Fourteen Cents per dozen, including postage. Address Manager, 45 Bible House, New York.

Write to or call upon
THOS. T. TASKER, Sr., Publisher,
921 Arch St., Philadelphia.

A large pile of small, round, light-colored objects, possibly seeds or small fruits, arranged in a grid pattern on a dark surface. The objects are densely packed and appear to be of uniform size and shape. The background is dark and textured, possibly a wooden surface or a mat. The overall image has a sepia or aged tone.

THE LITTLE GEM SWEET ALYSSEUM

BURPEE'S GEM COLLECTION
FOR 1890

Contains one regular size packet each of the fragrant Little Gem Sweet Alyssum,—the rare and lovely blue Torenia Fournieri,—the gorgeous new Shirley Poppies,—many varieties mixed of Choice Double Asters,—the unequalled strain of Burpee's Superb Camellia-Flowered Balsams,—Finest Mixed Chinese and Japanese Pinks,—Extra fine Mixed New and Beautiful Ipomeas,—Choice Mixed Pansies,—Forkhoof strain of Superfine Petunia Hybrid,—and twelve grand New Sweet Peas Mixed,—in all TEN VARIETIES Best new and popular Annuals for 25 Cents, or 5 Gem Collections mailed for $1.

Try to get up a Club. Illustration and directions for growing printed on each packet. Purchased separately at retail, the ten packets in our 25 cent Gem Collection would cost 85 cts., and this Special Offer is made to induce all to

TRY BURPEE'S SEEDS.
ORDER NOW and ask for a Handsomely
Illustrated CATALOGUE BEST SEEDS
—mailed FREE—of all the
including Rare NOVELTIES of unusual merit.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea, A TRIAL ORDER of 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest Inducement ever offered to regular customers for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powders. For full particulars and address, write to:

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 239, 31 and 33 West 31st St., New York

RIGHS If you desire them no use fooling away time on things that don't pay; but send $1.00 at once for magnificent outfit of our Great New Stanley Book. If book and terms not satisfactory we will refund your money. No Risk. No capital needed. Both Ladies and Gentlemen employed. Don't lose time in writing. "Step in while the waters are troubled." Days are worth dollars. Address B. F. JOHNSON & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.—If you are a good man to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the large manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full terms and address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

$60 SALARY. $40 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment at home or traveling. No soliciting.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills.
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

BUSH'S FLUID FOOD

BOVININE

A SEVERE INFLUENZA, OR "LA GRIPPE" ATTACK OF

Always leaves the System in a -BOVININE- The TONIC and NUTRIENT, will alleviate the feeling of lassitude and depression and tone up both body and mind to their normal state. Ask your Physician about it. C. M. HURLBURT, M. D., of South Dennis, Mass., writes: I am convinced that for "a person requiring a gentle stimulant, combined with food of a highly nutritive quality, I have never found an article so eminently fitted to fill that place as your BOVININE."

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S

ROSES AND SEEDS

We offer postpaid at your door, the LARGEST STOCK of ROSES in America, all varieties, sizes and prices. New CLEMATIS and CLIMBING VINES, New Hardy FLOWERING PLANTS, New Summer FLOWERING BULBS. ALL THE FINEST NEW ROSES, New CHRYSANTHEMUMS, GLADIOLUS, TUBER ROSES, New MOON FLOWERS, New and Rare FLOWER & VEGETABLE SEEDS. New GRAPES. Satisfaction guaranteed. OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., handsomely illustrated, Write for it FREE. It will pay you to see it before buying. Goods sent everywhere by mail or express.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., Rose Growers and Seedsmen, West Grove, Pa.

Mrs. Parker's Complete Housekeeper.

This is an ENTIRELY NEW WORK of nearly 600 PAGES and a LARGE NUMBER of ILLUSTRATIONS, beautifully bound in extra cloth with ink side stamp and gold back. It embodies the ripe experience of a veteran housekeeper, and its recipes (of which there are great numbers on all branches of cookery) can be relied upon as accurate and trustworthy.

BREAD. It tells how to make BREAD of all kinds, and gives numerous ways of preparing YEAST. Numerous recipes are given for making ROLLS—BISCUITS—CRUMPETS—SALLY LUNN—BUNS—CRACKERS—BATTER CAKES—CORN CAKES—MUFFINS—GEMS—WAFFLES—PUFFS—FRITTERS—MUSH—GRITS—Etc.

SOUPS. It tells how to make 60 different kinds of SOUPS, including OX-TAIL, BOUILLON, MOCK TURTLE, TERRAPIN, CONSOMME, SPANISH, FRENCH, TOMATO, JULIENNE, Etc.

FISH. Directions are given for cooking all kinds of FISH in a great variety of ways, including OYSTERS and CLAMS.

MEATS. Clear and concise rules are given for BOILING, ROASTING, BAKING, BROILING, and

A detailed illustration of a thick, old book. The cover is dark with a lighter, textured spine. The title 'MRS. PARKER'S' is written in a large, ornate, cursive script at the top. Below it, 'COMPLETE' is in a smaller, bold, serif font, enclosed in a decorative rectangular frame. At the bottom, 'HOUSEKEEPER' is written in a large, bold, serif font. The book is shown at a slight angle, revealing its thickness.

MRS. PARKER'S
COMPLETE
HOUSEKEEPER

BUTTER MAKING. Careful directions are given for making BUTTER.
SERVING FRUITS of all kinds. Directions are given for CANNING and PRE-given for preparing JELLIES and JELLIES and MARMALADES. Numerous ways are ICE CREAM AND WATER ICES. 35 recipes are given under this head, with full direc-WATER ICES. tions for preparing and making ICE CREAM and to both old and young housekeepers, including many ways of making Soap.
DYEING. It tells how to dye clothes successfully in a variety of colors and shades, with directions for or CLEANING SOILED GARMENTS. Numerous recipes are given or CARING FOR THE HAIR, with directions for removing FRECKLES or TAN, and producing a clear FRESH COMPLEXION. Careful directions to young mothers on the CARE OF INFANTS are given in this depart-CARE OF THE SICK. It tells how to take care of the Sick, and how to prepare palatable food for invalids. Recipes are given for curing COUGHS, COLDS, SORE THROAT, THE NURSERY. CROUP, SICK HEADACHE, ASTHMA, CONVULSIONS, NEURALGIA, CRAMP, COLIC, CONSTIPATION, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM, BURNS, Etc., Etc.
 This is the latest and best work of the kind ever brought out, and the only one fully illustrated in its different departments. It is a book which every housekeeper, young or old, ought to possess and keep as a constant reference.

The publisher's price for the above book is $1.50, but having secured a large number, I am enabled to furnish it to the readers of the Christian Herald for $1.00, post-paid.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 22 Bible House, New York.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES
of Lime and Soda

is endorsed and prescribed by leading physicians among both the Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites are the recognized agents in the cure of Consumption. It is as palatable as milk.

Scott's Emulsion is a perfect Emulsion. It is a wonderful Flesh Producer. It is the Best Remedy for CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, Bronchitis, Wasting Diseases, Chronic Coughs and Colds. Ask for Scott's Emulsion and take no other.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE.

If you are thinking about building a house you should send 25 cents for my new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up, costing from $300 to $5,000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house, and will suit you almost as well as if you paid $5.00 for a book. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address

J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 ROSE ST., NEW YORK.

MEXICO
Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to
the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTEY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

STENOGRAPHY.

AND

TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching established; hundreds of graduates hold responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free. Write or call.

VERMILYER'S COLLEGE.
816 Broadway, New York.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW
ELASTIC TRUSS

has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self adjusting Laid in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the center presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

For a DISORDERED LIVER
Try BEECHAM'S PILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

For Gas

BAILEY'S
COMPOUND LIGHT-SPREADING
WATER-PLATED COPPER GLASS
REFLECTORS.
A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Catalogue and price list
free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.
118 Wood st., Pittsburgh, Pa.

For Oil

ASTHMA—DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALEN!—CURED never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial BOTTLE FREE
DR. TAFT BROS., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

A CALL TO THE WEARY.

BY R. M. OFFORD.

Come, ye weary, do not tarry,
Bring to Jesus all your grief;
Why your burden longer carry
Since he offers sure relief?
Heavy-laden, sin distressed,
Come to Jesus Christ and rest.

Have you tried all worldly pleasure,
Sounded all the depths of sin,
Found no joy in earth's best treasure,
Seek you other joy to win?
Come to Jesus, He imparts
Lasting joy to joyless hearts.

On His lips is no upbraiding,
Though from God thou far hast strayed,
Though thy life's brief light is fading,
Sad the record thou hast made.
Come and welcome, do not wait,
Late it is, yet not too late.

Vile and most unworthy feeling,
'Twas for such His life He gave;
Bring thy wounded heart for healing,
If not lost how could He save?
Hast thou sinned beyond compare?
Greater need His grace to share.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Salt rheum often appears in cold weather, attacking the palms of the hands and other parts of the body. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, cures salt rheum. Try it.

Just Published. One of the best Books for Christian Workers.

GOLD FROM OPHIR.

A NEW BOOK OF BIBLE READINGS, ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

By J. E. WOLFE, Evangelist.

With introduction by DR. JAMES H. BROOKES. In addition to original readings by the author, there are many articles and readings by

REV. JAMES INGLIS,
REV. A. B. MACKEY,
DR. W. S. FLUMMER,
PASTOR F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
REV. G. S. BOWEN,
DR. JAMES H. BROOKES,
J. N. DARBY,
DR. EDERSHHEIM,
DR. L. W. MUNNELL,
PASTOR A. J. GORDON,
DR. HORATIUS BONAI,

PROF. G. W. MOREHEAD,
DR. ANDERSON,
REV. C. H. SPURGEON,
THOMAS NEWBERRY,
LADY DENT,
REV. W. P. MACRAY,
DR. NATHANIEL WEST,
REV. E. P. MARVIN,
PROF. BLAIRIE,
MR. & MRS. G. C. NEEDHAM,
DR. G. F. PENTECOST,

GEORGE MULLER,
REV. W. F. CRAFTS,
REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD,
GEORGE SOLTAN,
DR. H. M. PARSONS,
W. FLINT JONES,
LORD RADSTOCK,
F. E. MARSH,
REV. W. J. ERDMAN,
ALF. SANDHAM,
DR. ALEX. WHYTE,

C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, and many others.

The book is also enhanced in value by a very full Index.

"The best book of Bible Readings out."—HON. D. N. ROSS, U. S. Commissioner.
"These Bible Readings, these nuggets of gold, are arranged under the heads, Ruin, Redemption, Regeneration, and Resurrection. The Readings are brief, lively, full of the marrow of the gospel. This book would be helpfully suggestive to our catechists, and to inexperienced preachers. Eminent writers in the 'old country,' as well as on this side the ocean, are drawn upon. We recommend the volume to the reader as eminently Scriptural and practical."—Presbyterian Witness.

"One of the best books I have ever seen. Every Pastor, every Evangelist, yea, every Christian Worker should have a copy."—EVANGELIST BISCHOFF.

"It is excellent in matter, material and make up."—REV. E. P. MARVIN.

Royal Octavo, 308 pages, strongly bound in cloth, $1.25. Mailed free on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

We Sell DIRECT to FAMILIES
PIANOS ORGANS
$150 to $1500 $35 to $500.
Absolutely Perfect!

Sent for trial in your own home before you
buy. Local Agents
must sell inferior instruments or charge double what we ask. Catalogue free
MARSHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
255 East 21st St., N.Y.

Parturition Without Pain.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godley's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail,
$1.00, postpaid.

HOLBROOK CO., 25 Bond St., New York.

A CUP OF BLESSING

FOR
Every Day in the Year,

Being a Birthday Book of Cheering and Consola-
tory Texts, selected from Scripture and other sources, with a verse of selected poetry for each day. Beautifully bound in padded silk covers, and gilt edge. 250 pages and index. Sent by mail, in box, post-paid, for 50 cents, by
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

To introduce our publications, we offer 150 full-size pieces music, including 112 Jigs,
Polkas, Waltzes, Reels, etc., for piano or organ; 12 selections for the violin, and 40 of the most popular songs of the day arranged by that great composer CHARLES D. BLAKE. This grand collection and our complete catalogue of musical goods, forming altogether a book of 136 large pages, sent to any address on receipt of 20 cents, stamps or silver. Address GALAXY of Music, 408 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of Send for new books. Shot at Sundry Targets, by 1 image
$2.50. Quick sales. Big name. Also, Mother,
Home & Heaven,
400 best authors. Edited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75.
120,000 sold. 5000
Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT, N.Y.

WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell
"The Christian's Legacy."
One young man started on the 13th of December and ordered 59 copies before the 31st of December.
102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150
Nassau St., New York

RIDGE'S
FOOD
The MOST RELIABLE Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans.
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.

OPIUM (Morphine Habit, Opium Smoking)
etc., easily cured. Book Free, Dr.
J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wisconsin.

DR. SCOTT'S
Electric Insoles

GIVEN AWAY EVERYBODY

KNOWS prevention of Disease SAVES
many valuable lives and much pain, suffering, expense and anxiety, hence

To those who cannot get them of their druggist.
Thousands of persons are now writhing in diseases which were started by catching a cold from Damp or Cold Feet.
"Keep the feet warm and the head cool" is an axiom as old as the hills, and it is as true to-day as it was then.

Always wear our Insoles when using our Electric Plasters. Dr. Scott's Electric INSOLES
keep the feet at one temperature all the year round (50 cents per pair). They are light and persons wearing them feel a pleasant glow of warmth.

In connection with Dr. Scott's Electric
Plasters, Dr. Scott's Electric Insoles
will prevent and assist in CURING almost every form of Disease, including:

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cold Feet, Kidney Complaint, Gout,	Catarrh, Heart Disease, Nervous Prostra- tion, General Debility.
---	--

and help in the treatment of all forms of diseases resulting from Over-work, etc.

If you will send and get that very valuable book entitled, "THE DR'S STORY" you will see it gives an outline of the law of heat which explains the reason why Dr. Scott's

ELECTRIC INSOLES

keep the feet warm and at one temperature all the year round, or why you can stand

On Ice all Day and Yet Have Warm FEET.

They are light and despite the layers of different material needed to produce the effect, persons wearing them cannot distinguish anything but a pleasant glow of warmth.

Persons whose Feet Perspire will find a ready cure in Dr. Scott's Electric Insoles.

Indispensable to sufferers from Gout, Absence of Circulation, and fatigue after walking or exercise.

The CHEAPEST CURE ever OFFERED in the World.

with much pleasure and confidence we offer to GIVE AWAY a pair of Insoles. We do this in order to introduce quickly into every neighborhood Dr. Scott's celebrated remedial

ELECTRIC PLASTERS

They are a wonderful discovery, as they combine with Electro-Magnetism the best qualities of porous plasters made.

DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC PLASTER

Is a really wonderful remedy CURING Colds, Coughs Chest Pains, Nervous, Muscular and Neuralgic Pains, Stomach, Kidney and Liver Pains, Dyspepsia, Malarial and other Pains, Rheumatism, Gout and Inflammation IN ONE TO THREE MINUTES.

We unhesitatingly guarantee that it will produce
most astonishing results, effecting rapid cures where medicine and all other treatments fail.

"The Dr's Story," an eminently interesting work, price 25c., sent free to those who name this paper and send us 25cts. for one of Dr. Scott's
Electric Plasters.

To quickly introduce Dr. Scott's remarkable Electric Plasters to those families who cannot obtain them at their Drug store, The Pall Mall Electric Association of London & New York have decided for a short period to MAKE A PRESENT of a pair of 50ct. Electric Insoles as you will read below

To Get Dr. Scott's
ELECTRIC INSOLES

FREE

Remit one dollar, naming this paper, and we will deliver, all charges paid, to any part of U.S.
4 Electric Plasters, retail $1.00
1 Pair Insoles, FREE, " .50
1 Dr's Story, FREE, " .25

NO RISK! MONEY RETURNED EVERY TIME
IF NOT SATISFACTORY.

We want everyone to keep our Plasters on hand, as we know the great benefits to be derived from using them, and how very important to have a few in the house, ready for prompt use in an emergency. Hence for 30 days this liberal offer to give away our Electric Insoles. Mention this paper and remit $1.00 in Draft, Post-office Money Order, Stamps or Currency in Registered Letter payable to DR. SCOTT, 842 Broadway, New York City.

State Size Required and whether
LADIES OR GENTS.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XIII., No. 4. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF CAPTAIN WISSMANN AND MAJOR PINTO.
 THE KNELL OF NINEVEH. A Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
 ANECDOTES RELATED AT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
 THE RISE AND RULE OF ANTICHRIST. By Dr. Andrew Bonar.
 Gems from New Books: A Convict's Question—A Captain's Dilemma.
 DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE: The Town of Joppa—The Jewish Colony—A Visit to Arimathea—First View of Jerusalem.
 JESUS BROUGHT INTO THE TEMPLE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
 A Gambler's Downward Course—The Converts at Aintab.
 THE SHEPHERD AND THE SHEEP. By Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
 PORTRAITS OF THE LATE EMPRESS OF GERMANY, HON.
 WALKER BLAINE, JUDGE KELLEY, HENRY W. GRADY.
 EMILY HENDON'S REMORSE. (With Illustration.)
 THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. (Continued.)

CAPTAIN WISSMANN AND MAJOR SERPA PINTO—INTERVIEW WITH TIPPOO TIB IN AFRICA. (See page 53.)

THE STRUGGLE FOR AFRICA.

THE cable dispatches of the past few weeks have been full of the dispute developed some months ago between England and Portugal, as to the right of possession of Nyassaland, in Africa, which reached a crisis a few days ago and is not yet finally arranged. England has hitherto regarded Germany as its most formidable rival in the African field. There was at one time considerable friction between the two Powers on the subject, but an amicable arrangement, based on geographical lines, was made. It averted all danger of collision between the Powers, though it has left much jealousy between their representatives in Africa, and has injuriously affected the progress of mission work. As Mr. H. M. Stanley has said, the Germans have not the faculty of managing the African races, as the English have. They stir up enmity, and have already so excited the passions of the people as to put more than one mission station in peril. While this difficulty has been agitated, it has occurred to the Portuguese that a part of the territory which has been assigned to England was originally a possession of Portugal. It is true that its title dates back four centuries, and that Portugal has made no use of it in that time. It has done nothing to settle it, colonize it, or civilize it, esteeming it of no value. But English missionaries and explorers have been at work there for many years, have demonstrated its value, and have done much to improve it and bring its people under Christian influence. Now Portugal realizes its value, and asserts its right to the territory by sending out Major Serpa Pinto to take possession. He carried matters with a high hand, and in one of his encounters with the natives is said to have fired on the English flag. This was an overt act, which a more discreet commander would have taken care to avoid. It furnished England with a cause of complaint which brought the friction to a crisis. As the dispute has been a matter of extensive newspaper comment, we this week publish, on the preceding page, portraits of Captain Wissmann, the head of the German contingent in Africa, and Major Serpa Pinto, with a picture of an interview with Tippoo Tib, the wildest and most powerful of African potentates.

CAPTAIN H. WISSMANN.

THE world first heard of Captain Wissmann as an explorer, and he became better known when he was appointed to the command of the German expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha a year ago. As Emin is a German, it stirred the national feeling to think that the brave commander was to be rescued through English effort. It was remembered that the most direct route to the place where he was holding the fort for civilization against barbarism and cruelty lay through territory under German control, and at length a German expedition for his relief was fitted out. The command was given to Captain Wissmann, who is an officer in the German army, about forty years old. His services had already been recognized beyond the boundaries of his own country. In 1888 he was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society, of London, for the explorations he had already achieved in Africa, which had then extended over seven years, and in particular for the arduous and adventurous journey in which he traced the course of the river Kassai from its upper waters to its previously unknown confluence with the Congo. These explorations have done much to open out the southern portion of the great tract included in

The Congo Free State.

Also at a meeting of the British Association, Sir Charles W. Wilson, President of the Geographical Section, in delivering his opening address, pronounced a high eulogium on Captain Wissmann, remarking that "he possesses all Livingstone's indomitable courage, his constancy of purpose, and his kindly feeling toward the natives, and has twice crossed Africa in its widest extent without firing a shot in anger. He recently visited England, filled, like the great English traveller, with indignation at the atrocities perpetrated by the mercenary Arabs on the blacks, and eager to find effective means, if such there be, of putting an end to, or at least mitigating, the unspeakable horrors of the slave trade." He showed great skill in organizing the expedition for the relief of Emin, making special provision for the promotion of the object dear to his heart. He was able to render effective service to Stanley in the latter part of his return journey, when, after so long and trying a march with Emin and his followers, he stood in need of help to complete his journey to Zanzibar. Stanley speaks of him in terms of gratitude and high esteem, and evidently believes that he is doing a good work, though freely criticising his methods.

MAJOR SERPA PINTO.

ALEXANDRE ALBERTO DA ROCHA SERPA PINTO, whose portrait accompanies that of Captain Wissmann on the first page, was born on April 20, 1846, at the Tendaes, in the province of Douro, Portugal, and is now therefore nearly forty-four years of age. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Lisbon. He began his military career by joining an infantry regiment in August, 1863, became ensign in 1864, lieutenant in 1868, captain in 1874, major in 1877, and aide-de-camp of the King of Portugal in March, 1880. In 1869 he was in the Zambesi War, and in the battle of November 23, at Massangano, he succeeded in saving the so-called "Regiment of India." He was then in command of the African Native Troop. During 1877 to 1879 he crossed Africa from Benguela to Durban, and he has admirably described the journey in a work entitled How I Crossed Africa. This geographical task obtained for him the gold medals of the geographical societies of London, Paris, Antwerp, Rome, and Marseilles. He was also elected a Fellow of all the important geographical societies in the world, and of many scientific associations.

His Expedition to Nyassaland

has not been one of exploration, but of conquest. Portugal has claims on a district bounded by the river Ruu, and these claims have been recognized by England. It was, however, Major Pinto's desire to extend his country's power beyond that river, over the contiguous district, which is inhabited by the Makolo tribes. The settlement of those tribes there dates back to Livingstone's journeys. "Every one who has read Livingstone's narrative of his great journey across Africa to Angola, and his return down the Zambesi to the Indian Ocean," says an eminent authority, "will remember his faithful Makololo companions. His parting with them at Tete, on the lower Zambesi, was pathetic, and their joy at meeting him once more when, in 1858, he returned to fulfil his promise to take them back to their homes, was a thing to be remembered. Some of these Makololo, however, did not care to return home to the swamps of Linyanti. Like many of their tribe, they were enterprising; they thought the country along the Shiré river, which runs from Lake Nyassa to the Zambesi, was a desirable land to live in, and they believed themselves quite able to keep their place among the various peoples (thinned out as they were by Portuguese and Arab slave raids) who were scattered about the district.

Makololo Rule.

"So they settled on the right bank of the river Shiré, in the district between the Ruu and the cataracts, the native inhabitants of which had begged the Makololo to protect them against their enemies. They chose one of themselves to be chief, and, handful though they were, succeeded in imposing their domination upon the surrounding tribes, all of whom are now known as Makololo. Moreover, fugitives from all quarters flocked for protection to these powerful chiefs, for Livingstone's influence still swayed them, and they refused to have anything to do with slavery or slave hunting. Thus, in time a really powerful State grew up in this part of Nyassaland. All the villages and towns between the Ruu and the last cataract are Makololo. These are the people who gladly and naturally, a few months ago, accepted from the British Consul Buchanan the British flag, and placed themselves under British protection; and these are the people whom, the other day, Major Serpa Pinto mowed down with Gatling guns because they preferred the flag of England to that of a power of which they knew little, and that little not of a kind to commend itself to native Africans who love freedom."

An Unjustifiable Claim

is the verdict of all explorers and missionaries as to the Portuguese case. The country was utterly unknown to Portugal until Livingstone explored and described it. Not a white subject of Portugal went near the lake for long after Livingstone had returned home; no interference on the part of the Portuguese Government was attempted with his operations; no sign of any official or semblance of administration was evident when Livingstone was there or has been since. With but little interruption, for some thirty years English and Scotch missionaries and traders have been spreading themselves over Nyassaland, east, south, and west; towns have been established, churches, schools, and stores built, legitimate trade carried on, roads made, steamers placed on the lake, and the lake itself accurately surveyed; yet no sign was given till the other day by the Portuguese that they regarded these operations as a usurpation of their own administrative functions.

The Work of the Missionaries is witnessed all over the district in the evidences of civilization. In the beautiful Shiré Highlands, in the country of the Makololo, the mission of the Established Church of Scotland has been at work for twelve years, its head station being named Blantyre, after Livingstone's birthplace. Stations have been planted elsewhere, and the influence of the mission extends over a great area. The ground has been largely cultivated, and coffee, tea, wheat, and other produce are grown. Some eighty children are boarded at the mission, and at another station is a school with 100 pupils. Besides the missionaries, there are a medical man, teachers, a gardener, and general agent, all white, besides several native teachers.

Mr. John Buchanan, a planter of Zomba, one of the Church stations, writes in his instructive little book on The Shiré Highlands: "There are only two of us now at Blantyre who saw what the country was like before the mission was established, and who are capable of judging the difference now and then. The difference is great indeed, and one requires to know the whole history of the mission and of the district to be able to comprehend, even in a small degree, the powerful influence now working for good. I know of no mission which is likely to have a better future than Blantyre. Some £40,000 has already been expended on the mission, and if allowed to work away in peace, the Shiré Highlands would in time become one of the most civilized, healthy, and prosperous spots in Africa."

Such, then, are some of the results of British enterprise in Nyassaland during the last twenty-five years. The British "title deeds" to this region may be summed up in the stirring words of the Rev. Horace Waller, himself one of the Nyassa pioneers: "Dotted here and there, from the mangrove swamps at the Kongoné mouth of the Zambesi to the furthest extremity of Lake Nyassa's shore, we pass the graves of naval officers, of brave ladies, of a missionary bishop, of clergymen, doctors, scientific men, engineers, and mechanics. All these were our countrymen; they lie in glorious graves; their careers have been foundation-stones, and already the edifice rises. British mission stations are working nobly and zealously on the Shiré Highlands, and under various auspices, not only upon the shores of Lake Nyassa, but on its islands also. Numbers of native Christians owe their knowledge of the common faith to these efforts; scores of future chiefs are being instructed in the schools spread over hundreds of miles; plantations are being mapped out; commerce is developing by sure and steady steps; a vigorous company is showing to tribes and tribes that there are more valuable commodities in their land than their sons and daughters, for whom the Arabs and half-castes peddle and barter."

An Unbiased Testimony

was given a few days ago to a correspondent of the New York Herald by the distinguished Austrian explorer, Dr. Emil Kobler, whose acquaintance with the district gives him the right to speak authoritatively. He says that if the Portuguese seize and hold the country "the civilization of the people will be retrograded for many years. The work of those who, like myself, have labored in Africa for the advancement of western civilization, and not for the aggrandizement of any particular European nation, will be destroyed. I believe the Portuguese can substantiate that 125 years ago they had a settlement on the Shiré River. They admit that it died in infancy. By African law they failed to perfect their title. England, France, and Germany, who are bent upon eating up Africa, have awakened Portugal, which furishes up eighteenth and nineteenth century charts. This land belongs to Great Britain. She has purchased it with the lives of her missionaries and agents. Since the days of Livingstone England has made a howling wilderness blossom like a rose. When one has visited the Portuguese colony one wishes it had been left a wilderness."

The Press Criticism

of the English Government, which has been so generally read throughout this country, will be estimated at its true value by any Christian reader of the foregoing testimony. Instead of England bullying Portugal, as has been represented, she is standing in defence of Christianity and civilization against the unjust claims of a power whose influence in Africa is uniformly on the side of the slave-stealers against the Protestant missionaries. As a writer in the New York Times forcibly says: "The countries that England now claims by the right of possession and use, Portugal has never undertaken to possess or to use, and has made no endeavor to occupy until they had actually been occupied by a British company. The Portuguese claim to them, whatever its validity may originally have been, has lapsed by non-user, for assuredly to claim a country for four centuries and make no use of it, must work a forfeiture of the claim as against anybody who is able and willing to make use of it. Great Britain is thus able and willing, and Portugal is not, and in resisting the British occupation, after having for all these centuries neglected every opportunity of occupying the country herself, Portugal takes the attitude of a national dog in a colonial manger. The British instinct for expansion sometimes takes strange and questionable forms: but in this instance the case of Great Britain against Portugal is one that ought to command the sympathy of impartial friends of civilization all the world over."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Convict's Question.*

THERE was a Thanksgiving Day service in a State-prison chapel. All the prisoners were gathered there. The writer, then a young layman, had been invited to address them that day. He rose in the chaplain's desk, and as he looked down into the faces of the motley crowd before him, he was overwhelmingly impressed by a sense of the varied life-stories struggling against concealment in those upturned countenances, and he realized as never before the bond of the common humanity which he shared with those whose place, for the hour, was so very different from his own. Moved by this thought, the speaker began his remarks by referring to the often quoted ejaculation of the godly English divine, on seeing a condemned prisoner go by on his way to the gallows, "But for the grace of God, there goes John Bradford," and he added that he came not to speak to those from whom he was far remote, but to say kindly words of greeting and sympathy to those who were his brother men. As he went on with his address, he found that he had before him appreciative and responsive hearers who could feel, and who were not ashamed to show their feeling. One face particularly attracted his attention. It was that of a man of mature years, whose countenance bore signs of intense experiences. His look was now one of searching and longing, and wondering gaze, while deep emotion was showing itself in every quivering feature.

After the chapel service was completed, and the prisoners had returned to their cells, the visitor was told that a convict desired to speak with him, and he accompanied the warden, accordingly, to respond to the call. Behind the bars of the cell at which they stopped the visitor saw the face which had so impressed him in the chapel. The prisoner apologized for having asked this interview, and then went on to say: "It was very kind of you to come down here to talk to us to-day, and we all thank you for it. But, Mr. Trumbull, I'm a plain man, and I want to ask you a plain question, Did you mean what you said?" "Most certainly I did," was the answer; "but why do you ask?" "Why, because I want to know whether you really do feel that only the grace of God makes any difference between you and us, and that you really count us as brothers." "Indeed I do feel that," was the earnest response. "And I constantly thank God for holding me back from the commission of such sin as would bring me into prison as a convict." The prisoner clasped his hands together, and with streaming eyes said: "Thank God for that. I'm in here for life, and I shall stay more contentedly, now that I know I've got one brother in the world."

A Captain's Dilemma.

It is when a man is divided against himself that he cannot stand. There are divisions of self in duty and in feeling, to every strong man, and to every tender-hearted woman, in the soul-conflicts of their earthly experiences. These are the hardest of all to meet and to endure. Take this illustration from the story of such conflicts of feeling on the sea, as it was told to the writer by one who received it from its chief actor: Some years ago one of the ocean steamers was approaching the coast of Nova Scotia, on her way from England to the United States. A dense fog had prevented her getting an observation for more than twenty-four hours, and her bearings were unknown. She was nearer the high granite cliffs of the bold coast than her commander suspected, and her prow was set toward them. Meanwhile the quick ears of some fishermen in an inlet a little to the northward caught the sound of the steamer's engines through the fog and perceived her peril. Three of them pushed out hurriedly in a small boat, and pulled down toward the cliffs she was approaching. No time was to be lost. The steamer was coming on steadily to sure destruction. They made for her, shouting the alarm as they pulled. The steamer's captain, who was anxiously on the watch, caught the sound of their warning voices, and saw their friendly boat through the fog just as the huge gray cliffs loomed before him on his very bow. Not an instant could be spared. The one hope for the steamer was in his mind at the first glance. To go on for another minute was to carry the steamer and all her passengers to certain destruction. To change her course at the instant was to run down the little boat with the brave men who were risking their lives for her safety. What an issue! What a choice!

* From Ourselves and Others. By H. Clay Trumbull. One of six dainty little volumes of essays, bright, sagacious, original, and full of excellent advice, which may help young people to avoid many mistakes, and older people to remedy some that they may have made. The six volumes in box, $2.50. Published by John D. Wattles, Philadelphia.

"Helm a-port! Hard a-port! Quick!" rang the captain's voice. The steamer obeyed her helm, passed over her rescuers, and was herself in safety with all on board. Who supposes that the steamer's captain's conflict of feeling in that moment of soulful struggle was not sorer and more bitter than any which Nelson knew at Trafalgar, or Perry at Lake Erie? In the one case the soul itself was divided; in the other case the soul was at one with itself, and its conflicts were with an outside foe. "If only I could have died for those brave men!" said the heavy-hearted captain, as he told of this supreme struggle of his life on the sea. "But as it was, there was no choice left for me with my responsibility for all my passengers and crew." There has been more than one such conflict of feeling as that, on land as well as on sea. God pity those who have part in such!

THE RISE AND RULE OF ANTICHRIST.

By Rev. Andrew Bonar, D. D.

The Seven Years' Covenant—Antichrist will be Worshipped—The Last Half of the Week—The Unequalled Tribulation—The Raising of the Two Witnesses—The First Napoleon an Illustration—Indications of Antichrist's Programme.

As the times of the Gentiles draw to a close, Scripture indicates the return of the Jews to Palestine as a nation, although in unbelief, and it is then that Antichrist, called the Prince that shall come, will make a seven years' covenant with them according to Daniel 9: 27.

Although it is only with the Jews that this Antichrist will "confirm the covenant for one week," yet ultimately the whole ten kings of the Roman earth will join together in giving their kingdom to him "until the words of God shall be fulfilled," (Rev. 17: 12, 13, 17.) Finally, Antichrist will "plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas" (the Dead Sea and the Mediterranean) "in the glorious holy mountain" (a name given alone to Mount Zion at Jerusalem), "and there shall come to his end, and none shall help him." (See Dan. 11: 44, 45.)

Consummate Depravity.

His coming is declared to be with all "deceivableness of unrighteousness." He will adapt himself, just as the first Napoleon did, to the prevailing system of the godless times he appears in, and especially to the prejudices of the Jewish people, who, replaced by his help in their own land once more as a nation, with their great wealth, will rise into importance there. In this "deceivableness" also, it is that the covenant is made with them for the whole remaining week. All the world will (Rev. 13: 3-8) wonder after him, and not only wonder after, but worship him, and the Dragon too, "who gives him his power and great authority." How fearful to think even of such an apostasy as this! well may it be called "The Apostasy," connected as it is with this prince that shall then have come, and shown himself to be that "Man of sin," for in the midst of the week (although his covenant, such as it was, had been made for the whole) he throws off the mask and shows himself "that he is God," with a false prophet working miracles before Him in the power of Satan himself—the mock Trinity of Hell, the Dragon, Beast, and False Prophet, in opposition to the Trinity of Heaven.

The last half of the seven years, when the covenant has been broken, are the times of

The Unequalled Tribulation

of which so much is said in Scripture. God has mercifully shortened those days, and told His people in every different mode of expressing it what the limit is—viz., "the midst of the week," or hebdomad of seven years, that is, three years and a half; the "1260 days;" the "42 months;" the "time, times, and half a time;" all expressing exactly the same duration, and all, if taken with the context, pointing distinctly to the same dreadful period. During it God will raise up Two Witnesses, doubtless individual men from what is said of them, whom He will miraculously protect during the three and a half years of their testimony.

The Napoleonic Type.

In France, before the Revolution of 1793, a well-known "falling away" or "apostasy" occurred, following upon the doctrines taught by Voltaire, when a national decree was passed that death was a perpetual sleep. The scenes of the Reign of Terror which followed showed what man will dare to do if left to himself, and called forth Napoleon Bonaparte, who showed the features of the Antichrist, flattering at first the system he found prevailing, while using it all the while to establish himself in power. . . . So the Antichrist will not at his first appearance shock the prejudices of those whose faith he at last overthrows, for he is to come in "by flatteries." (Dan. 11: 21.)

In France Napoleon Bonaparte was a Roman Catholic, and in Egypt a worshipper of Mahomet, till finding himself as by and by Antichrist will do, fairly established in power, he dropped the deception under which he had entered, proclaiming himself the monarch, and only source of authority. "La France, c'est moi!" (France, it is me!) was the laconic way in which he announced it. What the successor to his name and authority may be raised up to accomplish is yet to be seen, but already the tendency is clearly toward a still more extensive development of the clay-iron principle of government which is to prevail in both feet of the Image, before the ten toes of it are developed.

Such an instance as this should cause us to ponder well, when we read of a still future and more fearful "falling away," which is to distinguish it from others. In the original it is styled emphatically "the apostasy" (11 Thess. 2: 3), with the revealing after or out of it of "that man of sin, the son of perdition, who will oppose and exalt himself above all that is called God or that is worshipped: so that He as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing Himself that He is God." We are told, in Daniel 7: 24, that out of this kingdom (the Roman Empire) are ten kings that shall arise, and another (the Little Horn) shall rise after them. The ten kingdoms must therefore appear before Antichrist, inasmuch as he rises after them. . . . The remarkable division of the Roman earth into ten kingdoms has not yet taken place, and the Antichrist, who rises after them, is of necessity future also. The limits of the Roman earth are sufficiently known to all, and no division of it, which does not include the whole, can be said to have fulfilled its division into the ten toes or kingdoms predicted at the time of the end. The iron legs of Daniel's prophetic image (Dan. 2: 31-45) mean the Eastern and Western divisions or the Roman Empire, and the Eastern embraces the portion most important in Bible history—namely, the Holy Land, Syria, Egypt, Turkey, and Greece.

The Ten Horns

In Daniel 7 Antichrist is foreshown rising out of the ten kingdoms into which the Roman Empire will then have been divided, while in Daniel 8 he is shown as rising out of the four horns or kingdoms into which the Grecian Empire was divided under Alexander the Great's generals (namely, Greece, Turkey, Syria, and Egypt). In this there is no discrepancy, for the Roman Empire received its most valuable additions from the territories which it wrested from those successors of Alexander; all, therefore, will be accomplished should Antichrist rise out of the Grecian portion of the Roman earth in the latter time of their kingdom (Dan. 8: 23).

THE KNEEL OF NINEVEH.

A Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

"Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown."
Jonah 3:4.

The Splendor of the City—Luxury and Pomp—Open Corruption—A New Arrival—Delivers a Startling Message—Repentance and Humiliation—Execution of Sentence Suspended—I. The Precision of Divine Providence—Running Fearful Risks—An Important Matter in a Small Corner—II. Religious Warning Often Seems Preposterous—Health no Security Against Accident—III. God Gives Every Man a Fair Chance—Warnings of Forty Years—IV. Repentance Followed by Reversal of Judgment—The Terminal Chance—A Girl Silencing the Curfew Bell.

ON the banks of the Tigris there is a great capital, sixty miles in circumference, surrounded by a wall broad enough to allow three chariots to go abreast; fifteen hundred turrets, each two hundred feet high, carrying aloft the grandeur of the city. There are six hundred thousand inhabitants. The metropolis is not like our crowded cities; but gardens wreath the homes of private citizens with tropical blaze of color, wet with the spray of falling waters, and there are pasture fields, on which cattle browse, in the very midst of the city. It is a delicious climate, even in midsummer never rising to more than seventy degrees. Through the gates of that city rolls the commerce of eastern and western Asia. On its throne sits Sardanapalus, his every meal a banquet, his every day a coronation. There are polished walls of jasper and chalcedony, bewildering with arrow-head inscriptions and scenes of exciting chase and victorious battle. There are mansions adorned with bronze and vases and carved statues of ivory, and ceilings with mother-of-pearl, and mantel enamelling, and floors with slabs of alabaster. There are other walls with sculptured flowers, and panelling of Lebanon cedar, and burnished copper, and doorways guarded by lions.

The city roars with chariot wheels, and clatters with swift hoofs, and is all a-rush and ablaze with pomp and fashion and power. The river Tigris bounds the city on one side, and moat and turreted wall bound it on the other sides, and there it stands, defiant of earth and heaven. Fraud in her storehouses. Uncleanliness in her dwellings. Obscene display in her theatres. Iniquity everywhere. Nineveh the magnificent. Nineveh the vile!

Nineveh the Doomed!

One day a plain-looking man comes through the gate into that city. He is sunburned, as though he had been under the browning process of a sea voyage. Indeed, he had been wrecked, and picked up by such a lifeboat as no other man ever rode in—a whale's fins and flukes being to him both oars and rudder. The man had been trying to escape his duty of preaching a disagreeable sermon; but now, at last, his feet strike the street of that city. No sooner has he passed under the shadow of the wall and entered it than, clearing his throat for loud and distinct utterance, he begins; and the water-carrier sets down his jug, and the charioteer reins in the steeds, and the soldiers on the top of the wall break ranks to look and listen, while his voice shivers through the avenue, and reverberates amid the dwelling of potentate and peasant, as he cries out: "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown!" The people rush out of the market-places and to the gates to listen to the strange sound. The king invites the man to tell the story amid the corridors of the palace. The courtiers throng in and out amid the statues and pictures and fountains, listening to

The Startling Message:

"Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." "What is that fellow about?" say some of the people. "Is he a madman escaped from his keepers? He must be an alarmist, who is announcing his morbid fears. He ought to be arrested, and put in the prison of the city." But still the man moves on, and still the cry goes up: "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." There is no madness in his eye, there is no fanaticism in his manner, but only a Divine authority, and a terrible earnestness, which finally seizes the whole city. People rush from place to place and say: "Have you seen that prophet? What does he mean? Is it to be earthquake, or storm, or plague, or besiegement of foreign enemy?"

Sardanapalus puts off his jewelled array and puts on mourning, and the whole city goes down on its knees, and street cries to street, and temple to temple, and the fifteen hundred turrets join the di-ge: "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." A black covering is thrown over the horses and the sheep and the cattle. Forage and water are kept from the dumb brutes so that their distressed lowings may make a dolorous accompaniment to

The Lamentation

of six hundred thousand souls, who wring their hands, and beat their temples, and throw themselves into the dust, and deplore their sin, crying out, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." God heard that cry. He turned aside from the affairs of eternal state, and listened. He said: "Stop! I must go down and save that city. It is repenting, and cries for help, and they shall have it, and Nineveh shall live." Then the people took down the timbrels, and loosened the foot of the dance, and flung new light on the panels of alabaster, and started the suppressed fountains, and the children clapped their hands; and from Sardanapalus on the throne, clear down to the keeper of the city gate, where brown-faced Jonah first went in with his thrilling message, there were song and laughter and congratulation and festivity and jubilee. "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that He had said He would do unto them; and He did it not."

The Limit of Probation.

I learn, in the first place, from this subject the precision and punctuality of the Divine arrangement. You will see that God decided exactly the day when Nineveh's lease of mercy should end. If Jonah preached that sermon on the first day of the month, then the doom was to fall upon Nineveh on the tenth day of the next month. So God decides what shall be the amount of our rebellion. Though there may be no sound in the heavens, He has determined the length of His endurance of our sin. It may be forty days, it may be forty hours, it may be forty minutes, it may be forty seconds. The fact that the affairs of God's government are infinite and multifarious is no reason why He should not attend to the minutiae. God no more certainly decided that on June 15, 1215, England should have her Magna Charta; nor that on the 4th of July, 1776, the Declaration of Independence should go forth; nor that at half-past 11 o'clock at night on the 14th of December, 1799, George Washington should die; nor that forty days after Jonah preached that sermon, Nineveh's chance for mercy should end unless she repented, than He has decided the point between which you and I cannot pass and still obtain the Divine clemency. What careful walking this ought to make for those who are unsaved, lest be almost empty! Men and women do not lose their souls through putting off repentance for ever, but only by putting it off one second after the time is up. They propose to become Christians in mid-life, but they die in youth; or they propose in old age to be Christians, but they die in mid-life; or on the forty-first day they will attend to the matter, but on the fortieth Nineveh is overthrown.

The Hour-glass of Opportunity

Standing on ship's deck amid a coil of chains, sailors roughly tell you to stand back if you do not want your limbs broken, or by the chains be hurled overboard; for they are going to let out the anchor, and when the anchor does go the chains make the deck smoke with their speed. As swiftly our time runs away from us. Now it seems coiled all around us in a pyramid of years and days and minutes, but they are going, and they will take us off with their lightning velocity. If I should by some supernatural revelation to-day tell you just how long or how brief will be your opportunity for repentance and salvation, you would not believe me. You would say: "I shall have tenfold that time; I shall have a hundred-fold that time." But you will not have more: you will have less. You have put off repentance so long that you are going to be very much crowded in this matter of the soul's salvation. The corner of time that is left you is so small that you will hardly have room to turn around in it. You are like an accountant who has to have a certain number of figures added up by 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It is two full, round hours' work, and it is a quarter past 3 o'clock, and yet he has not begun. You are like a man in five miles from the depot, and the train starts in thirty minutes, and you have not harnessed the horse. You are like a man who comes to the bridge across the Naugatuck River in time of a freshet. The circumstances are such that he must go across. The bridge quivers, the abutment begins to give way; but he stands and halts and waits, until the bridge cracks in twain and goes down, hoping then that on the floating timbers he may get over to the other shore. God is not looking inertly and unconcernedly upon the position you occupy. Just as certainly as there is a bank to the East River, just so certainly there is a bank to the river of your opportunity. The margin is fixed. There will be a limit to God's forbearance. "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown."

A Case of Life and Death,

Still further: I learn from this subject that religious warning may seem preposterous. Now, we think that our city is safe from all foreign invasion. We have Fort Hamilton, the Battery, Fort Lafayette, and half a dozen strongholds, but the city of Nineveh had fifteen hundred turrets, and they were all strongholds. Then it had for a natural defence the Tigris, and it was not an easy thing for an army to swim across that river under the shadow of a wall on which stood a defending army; and yet it was through that impregnable city that Jonah went, uttering the warning words of my text. It must at first have seemed preposterous to a great many of the people. So it is now, that religious Warning Seems an Absurdity.

It is more to them a joke than anything else. "Repent? Prepare? Was there ever a man with stronger health than I have? Vision clear, hearing alert, lungs stout, heart steady." Insurance companies tell me I shall have seventy years of life. My father and mother were both long-lived. Feel the muscle in my arm." Ah, my brother, it is not preposterous when I come out to tell you that you need to make preparation for the future. I have noticed that it is the invalids who live on. They take more care of their health, and so they outlive the robust and athletic. I have noticed, in my circle of acquaintances for the last few years, that five robust and athletic men go out of life to one invalid. Death prides himself on the strength of the castle he takes. "Boast not thyself of the morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." Dr. Eddy, the eloquent missionary secretary, died from swallowing a small flake of an oyster shell. Emilius Lepidus lost his life by having his toe wounded. A splinter may be lancet sharp enough to bleed our life away. Look out! The slip of a railway train from the track, the rush of a runaway horse through the street, any one of ten thousand perils, may be upon you. "In such a day and hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Your opportunity for repentance is almost over. "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown."

Still further: I learn from my subject that God gives every man

A Fair Chance For His Life.

The iniquity of Nineveh was accumulating. It had been rolling up and rolling up. There the city lay—blotched, seething, festering under the sun. Why did not God put an end to its iniquity? Why did not God unsheath some sword of lightning from the scabbard of a storm-cloud, and slay it? Why did He not with some pry of an earthquake throw it into the tomb where Caracas and Lisbon now lie? Why did He not submerge it with the scorn of His indignation, as He did Herculaneum and Pompeii? It was because He wanted to give the city a fair chance. You would have thought that thirty days would have been enough to repent in, or twenty days, or ten days. Aye, you would have said: "If that city don't quit its sin in five days it never will." But see the wide margin. Listen to the generosity of time. "Yet forty days!"

Be frank, my brother, and confess to-day that God is giving you a fair chance for safety, a better chance than He gave to Nineveh. They had one prophet. You have heard the voices of fifty. They had one warning. You have had a thousand. They had forty days. Some of you have had forty years. Sometimes the warnings of God have come upon your soul soft as the breath of lilies and frankincense, and then again as though hurled from a catapult of terrific providence. God has sometimes led you to see your unsaved condition while you were walking amid perils, and your hair stood on end, and you stopped breathing; you thought your last moment had come. Or, through protracted illness, He allowed you in many a midnight to think over this subject—when all was still save the ticking of the clock in the hall and the beating of your own anxious heart. Warned that you were a sinner. Warned that you needed a Divine Saviour. Warned of coming retribution. Warned of an eternity crowded with splendor or catastrophe. Warned by the death of those with whom you were familiar.

Warned Day After Day,

and month after month, and year after year—warned, warned, warned! O my dear brother, if your soul is lost, in the day of judgment you will have to acknowledge "no man in Brooklyn ever had a better chance for heaven than I had." I was preached to, and prayed for, and divinely solicited. I was shewn the right, and fully persuaded of it; but I did not act and I did not believe, and now, in the presence of a burning earth and a flying heaven, I take the whole responsibility. Hear me, men! angels! devils!—I took the life of my own soul; and I did it so thoroughly that it is done for ever. And now I trudge off over the hot desert and under the burning sky—a suicide! A suicide! Yes, I think you have all been warned; but if, up until this very hour, you have happened to escape such intimation, to-day I ring it in your ears: "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown!"

Still further: I learn from this subject that when the people repent, the Lord lets them off. While yet Nineveh was on its knees, and Sardanapalus sat in the ashes, and the unfed cattle were yet moaning in the air, and the people were yet deploring their sin, God reversed the judgment, and said: "Those people have repented. Let them live!" And the Jews fled. The gardens saved. The palaces saved. Six hundred thousand people saved. A belt of sixty miles of city saved. Let the news be flung from one wall to the other; from the east wall, clear over to the west wall. Let the bells ring. Let the symbols clap. Let flags be flung out from all the fifteen hundred turrets. Let the king's lamplighters kindle up the throne-room. "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that He had said that He would do unto them; and He did it not." In short,

When a Sinner Repents,

God repents. The one gives up his sins; the other gives up His judgments. The moment that a man turns to God, the relation of the whole universe toward him is changed, and the storms, and the lightnings, and the thunders; and the earthquakes, and the grandeurs of the judgment day, and the realities of the eternal world, all become his coadjutors. God and the angels come over on his side. Repent, give up your sin and turn to God, and you will be saved. "Ah," says some one, "that's a tough thing to do." "I have been drinking," says some one; or, "I have been unchaste," says some one; or, "I have been blasphemous," says another; or, "I have been a Sabbath-breaker," says another; or, "I have a hard heart," says another, "and now you ask me to give up my sin. I cannot do it—and I won't do it." Then you will die. That is settled. But somebody else says: "I will give up my sin, and I will now take the Lord for my portion." You will live. That is just as certainly settled. You will to-day either have to fling away sin or fling away heaven. The one is a husk—the other is a coronet. The one is a groan—the other is an anthem. The one is a sting—the other is an illumination.

Christ's fair complexion, of which his contemporaries wrote, is gone, and his face is red, and His hands are red, and His feet are red with the rushing blood of His own suffering endured to get you out of sin, and death, and hell. Oh, will you to-day implore Him to let His suffering take the place of your ill desert? If you will, all is well, and you may begin to twist garlands for your brow, for you are Already a Victor.

All heaven comes surging upon your soul in the announcement: "There is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." Now, will you do it? I care nothing for a sermon unless it has an application, and this is the application: will you do it? "Ah," says some one, "I believe that is right. I mean some day to surrender the entirety of my nature to God. It is reasonable. I mean to be a Christian, but not now." That is what thousands of you are saying. I am afraid if you do not give your heart to God to-night, you never will. You may have heard of the ship Rebecca Goddard, that came near one of our ports one day in winter. They were all scoured up and ready for the landing, when, coming almost into the harbor, an ice-floe took the ship and pushed it out to sea, and it drifted about two or three days, and there was great suffering, and one was frozen dead at his post. How near they got into the harbor, and yet they did not get in! How many there are here to-day who feel they are almost in the harbor of God's mercy. Why do you not come ashore, lest some ice-floe of sin and worldliness drive you out again to the sea, and you die in the rigging? I throw you this rope to-day. I hurl you this warning. Make fast to heaven now. This moment is vanishing, and with it may go everything; and so I run up and down through this audience with the banner of the cross: Rally, immortal men, rally!

"But," says some one in the house, "I won't take your advice. I'll risk it. I defy God! Here I take my stand, and I ask no odds either of earth or heaven." Let me tell such that you are in a battle where

You Will Be Worst.

"Yet forty days!" Perhaps thirty days. Perhaps ten days. Perhaps three days. Perhaps one day. The horses that drag on that chariot of doom are lathered with the foam of a great speed, and their hoofs clip fire from the flinty road, and their nostrils throb with the hot haste as they dash on. Get out of the way or the wheels will roll over you. You cannot endure the ire of an incensed God. Throw yourselves down on your knees now and pelt the heavens with blood-red cries for mercy. The terminal chance is going; the last chance is going, going. Oh, wake up before you wake up among the lost. May God Almighty, by His Eternal Spirit, wake you up!

There is a story running indistinctly through my mind of a maiden whose love was doomed to be put to death when struck 9 o'clock at night, and she thought that if she could keep that bell from ringing for a little while her lover and friend would be spared. And so under the shadow of the night she crept up into the tower and laid hold of the tongue of the bell. After awhile the sexton came up to the tower and put his hand on the rope, and waited for the right moment to come; and then by the light of his lantern and his watch he found it was 9 o'clock, and he seized the rope and he pulled, and the bell turned, but in silence, and the maiden still held on to the tongue of the bell, swinging back and forth wildly through the belfry, and the curfew bell rang not, and so time was gained and pardon arrived, and a precious life was saved. Oh, it seems to me as if there were those here doomed to death. You have condemned yourselves. It seems to me as if the death-knell of your immortal soul were about to strike. The angel of God's justice has his hand on the rope, and yet I seize the tongue of that bell, and I hold on, hoping to gain a little time, and I cry out: "O God, not yet! not yet!" hoping that time may be gained, and pardon may fly from the throne, and your soul may live. May the God who saved Nineveh save you! But some of you have put it off so long that I fear your time is up.

The Curfew Bell

AN INTERVIEW WITH TIPPOO TIB.

(See illustration on first page.)

THE man who played so important a part in Stanley's arrangements for the rescue of Emin Pasha, and to whom Stanley addressed his pathetic appeal for help in his greatest extremity, is really named Hamed Bin Mahomed Bin Juma Borajib, though more familiarly known to us through Stanley's reports as Tippoo Tib. His consummate tact, and the power he has gained over the native tribes of central Africa by his abilities, have won him the name of the "Bismarck of Africa." He is only half an Arab by race, his father being an Arab and his mother a negress of the Mrima tribe.

Few people who read of him have any conception of the power and wealth this man has acquired during his twenty-five years in Central Africa. On Reclus's map considerable part of the eastern territory of the Congo State is indicated as "The Domain of Tippoo Tib." Some idea of the immense operations of this princely trader may be gathered from the size of the caravan he was taking to Zanzibar when Becker met him at Tabora. Some powerful chiefs were at war in the country through which he had travelled, and he had with him a thousand armed slaves to guard his ivory. His ivory-porters numbered 2,000 slaves, each of whom carried a tusk. The property he was taking to the coast included, therefore, 2,000 tusks of ivory and 3,000 slaves. The procession stretched for miles along the narrow roadway, and no such enormous caravan had ever before been seen in equatorial Africa.

The fact that this same Tippoo Tib is now in the service of the Belgian Government, and subsidized for the express purpose of stopping slave raids and compelling his Arab brethren to submit to the new régime in the Congo Free State, is not so strange as it appears. This powerful person is a consistent Tippoo Tib man every time. His chief interest is ivory, and the great cost of sending tusks by porters from the Congo to Zanzibar has cut sadly into his profits. He needs the Congo route to the sea, and he cannot get it without co-operating with the whites. For this reason he promised to stop slave raiding and to restore order in the Stanley Falls district, and he has done it.

The illustration represents the interview which took place between Tippoo Tib and Major Barttelot and Mr. Jameson. The occasion was a palaver, at the request of Major Barttelot, with a view to obtain some definite understanding as to the providing of the Manyema porters, whom Tippoo Tib had promised Stanley he would supply in order that the rear-guard might follow him up from the Aruwimi River to Wadelai, where Emin Pasha was in peril, and whom he had gone to rescue. How the porters did not come up to time; and how the dreadful business ended in the assassination of Major Barttelot and the breaking up of the camp, has already passed into the history of the times.

THE LATE HON. WALKER BLAINE.

(See Portrait on page 60.)

A DISTINGUISHED victim of the prevailing epidemic is the eldest son of Mr. James G. Blaine, who died on January 15. Mr. Blaine was seized with an attack of grippe on Friday, January 10. He suffered severely, but on Sunday was much better, and on Monday was at a reception of diplomatic guests at his father's house, and went about among them chatting pleasantly. On the following day catarrhal bronchitis developed, and both lungs became congested. The physicians grew alarmed, as Mr. Blaine's system had been so enfeebled by the grippe that he was not in a condition to bear the new complication. On Tuesday he had a high fever and was delirious. From that time he gradually grew worse until Wednesday evening, when he died.

Mr. Walker Blaine was thirty-four years of age, having been born at Augusta, Me., on May 8, 1855. He graduated from Yale in 1876, and from the Columbia Law School, New York in 1878. He then went into a law office in St. Paul, Minn., where he remained until 1881 when President Garfield made him third Assistant Secretary of State. Shortly afterward he and William Henry Trescott were sent, by Secretary Blaine, on a special mission to South America. After the death of Gen. Garfield, and the retirement of James G. Blaine from the Cabinet, President Arthur appointed Walker Blaine assistant counsel for the United States before the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims. He retained that office until the court ceased to exist, January 1, 1886, when he went to Chicago to practice law. A few days after his father entered President Harrison's Cabinet Mr. Blaine was nominated to be Solicitor of the State Department, and the nomination was confirmed.

A LOST TRIBE.

AN extraordinary statement is made in the New York World by F. G. Carpenter, who states that he makes it on personal observation. Its significance will be appreciated by all who have followed the discussion as to the identity of the lost ten tribes. He says:

Thirty thousand out of the forty thousand people of Jerusalem are Hebrews, and the Israelites bid fair to again become the predominant people in Palestine. The Turkish Government, which has for ages prohibited them from living longer than three weeks at a time in the Holy Land, is, under the influence of the foreign governments, relaxing its restrictions, and at present they are coming here by the hundreds. They are engaging in business, and they now control a great part of the trade of Jerusalem. Some of them feel that the day, when the prophecy of the Bible that they shall again inhabit their land shall be fulfilled, is at hand, and one curious tribe from southern Arabia claims to have received a revelation that they must leave their desert country and come back to Palestine. "They have lived in Yemen, Arabia, for the past 2,500 years. They are of the tribe of Gad, and they left Palestine 700 years before Christ was born. They are bringing with them many valuable old documents which prove their origin, and not a few of them are engaged in agriculture near Jerusalem. A half-century ago there were only thirty-two Israelite families in all Jerusalem, and the number in Palestine was only 3,000. Now there are nearly fifty thousand in the Holy Land, and three-fourths of the population of Jerusalem is made up of them."

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

THE steamer by which Dr. Talmage's party made the voyage to Joppa was a model of comfortable, and even luxurious, arrangement, but the preacher was too eager to get his first glimpse of the Holy Land to take the full benefit of the sleeping accommodations. With the first streak of dawn he was on deck watching for the hills of the Promised Land. As Joppa has no harbor, the steamer came to anchor in the bay, and the visitors had the advantage of obtaining from that distance a favorable impression of the town, which was not entirely erased, when, after being rowed ashore in a small boat, they made a closer acquaintance with its dirt and squalor. They found its streets narrow and crooked, as those of Oriental towns usually are. In fact, it was worse in that respect than some other towns, for while in Apostolic times Damascus had one "street which was called Straight" (Acts 9:11), Joppa has not one that any truthful visitor could call by that name. The party searched for the house of Simon, the tanner, where Peter lodged (Acts 10:6), but tradition, which seldom falters at such matters, does not venture to identify any house as the one which sheltered the Apostle. It modestly does the next best thing in identifying the site, which was better fitted to resist the influence of time and weather than the structure built upon it, so that the credulity of the visitors was not too severely taxed. They were assured that the house now standing on the site was like the ancient one, so Dr. Talmage read the tenth chapter of Acts there, and pointed out its lessons. He also registered a vow that, as his heart had learned to take in all mankind, he would endeavor so to break the bread of life that all nations may eat and be nourished.

"When we returned to the hotel to lunch," says the writer of the letter from which the foregoing facts are gleaned, "we saw that our host had outdone himself in the warmth and abundance of his hospitality. The principal dish set before us was a turkey, the symbol of American good fare, and the Stars and Stripes waved above the building. Mr. Landlord expressed himself delighted with the privilege of entertaining Dr. Talmage, many of whose sermons he had read with much interest. At his urgent request the Doctor entered his name on the hotel register, making an addition which had not been expected. It is as follows: 'We last night made our exodus from Egypt, and this morning enter the Promised Land. We came through the sea dry-shod. May our entrance of the heavenly Canaan be as placid and glorious a disembarkation.' The author of this inscription modestly regretted that it was not in verse, saying that he never wrote poetry in his life. To which admission the host replied with the compliment that Dr. Talmage's prose was as good poetry as ever was written. In the assignment of rooms for the party, Dr. Talmage got No. 33, which is known as Chinese Gordon's room, the hero of Khartoum having once occupied it.

The Town of Joppa.

"Strolling along the seaside, my memory recalled the scenes which those shores witnessed when, through the friendship of Hiram, King of Tyre, with David and Solomon, huge rafts of timber came to Joppa for use in the building of the Temple and the palaces of Jerusalem, Joppa being then, as now, the port of the Holy City. It was at Joppa too, that Jonah is represented as taking ship when he made the foolish effort to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord. I suppose what the prophet saw then as he made his way to the vessel was pretty much what I saw by the sea. Huge bales of goods obstruct the way, and a crowd of merchants, sailors, and porters of various race and nationality, with camels and mules in great number, form a diversified and ever-changing picture.

"Many of the houses are built of mud, and there is a great deal of squalor to be seen in the city. The suburbs are beautiful. Many gardens are ornamented with stately trees. I noticed palm-trees, cypresses, pomegranate, orange, and lemon trees. The hedges seem to be exclusively a rich growth of cactus. Everywhere are evidences of fertility.

"The next morning the Talmage party left for Jerusalem, having secured the services of David Jamal, a Nazarene, as dragoman. He boasts of having served in the same capacity Dean Stanley, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and many other persons of distinction in their visits to Palestine. Jamal has been eminent among local dragomen during the past twenty years. It was under his guidance that we inspected the site of the resurrection of Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas. (Acts 9:36.) The festival of Tabitha is celebrated near Joppa, when the women of the neighborhood, dressed all in white, gather round a fountain surrounded by orange-trees, held sacred to the memory of that sainted woman, and called by her name. Our guide took us to under the direction of Baron Rothschild, where Hebrew youths are educated as mechanics, thus giving a practical turn to the hope of every faithful Israelite that Palestine will yet become the country and home of the chosen people. The bright and healthy-looking schoolboys one sees in Joppa and the neighborhood give encouragement to the expectation that the night of the race will be succeeded by a bright morning.

The Jewish Colony

"Well out of Joppa on our pilgrimage Jerusalemward, we looked back on a city presenting a lofty, castellated appearance, as seen from the land side. The city slopes down towards the sea. At this season of the year, the loveliness of Sharon, through which we passed, is less obvious than in the spring-time, but the fig-tree and its supporting vine, the numerous olive-trees, and the general aspect of fertility, brought to the mind passages familiar to the Bible student. On our way we encountered many people going to Joppa, among them women in the blue cotton garb of poverty, and without veils, sad-looking, many of them, but with good features and graceful figures. They carried on their heads burdens of fuel, vegetables, etc., and walked with a proud poise. Turkish soldiers at guardhouses, fine, stalwart fellows, cigarette in mouth, were passed at intervals, and strings of camels loaded with goods. Everywhere along the villages on the road we saw large numbers of Hebrew people. This circumstance deeply interested Dr. Talmage. It seems that they are rapidly increasing in numbers, and the effect is a natural one, of strengthening their confidence that in the future they will again possess the land. We stopped for breakfast. This pretty little town, which boasts of several thousand inhabitants, is claimed to have been Arimathea, the birthplace and residence of the loyal man who begged the body of Jesus and provided for its sepulture. Its most conspicuous feature is its tower, a structure rising 120 feet from the midst of an olive plantation. The history of this building is not known perfectly. At one time it was part of a mosque, and there are traces in the neighborhood that Ramleh, in a remote past, was a far more important place than it is now. If we had had time we should have climbed the winding staircase to its summit, and feasted our eyes with the sight of the country of the ancient Philistines and the scene of so many bloody struggles.

At Ramleh

"After leaving Ramleh we drove through which is about three miles from Latrone, a village named in memory of the penitent thief. The country thereabout is rugged to admiration. Pursuers as well as pursued must have endured great fatigue, after the battle in which the Amorites were defeated by Joshua when he said, 'Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou, Moon, in the Valley of Ajalon.' Our faithful Jamal pointed out Gibeon in the distance as we speeded along on our way. The sun was now very hot, and we found our ordinary clothing exceedingly burdensome. In the early morning, however, our heavy overcoats were necessary to comfort.

The Valley of Ajalon,

"Our horses proved to be marvels of sure-footedness. They sagaciously picked their way over slippery surfaces which seemed to us appallingly dangerous, much of the rock being loose as well as slippery. Sometimes we found a grateful change from the sight of rocky caves and glens, high terraced slopes and rocky ways, in vales dotted with symmetrical olive-trees; but the general character of the country through which we passed is sterility. There was a time, however, when 'the paths dropped fatness,' for the now bare terraces were then covered with fertile soil, and highly cultivated.

"We stopped for luncheon at the gate of the Valley of Ajalon. There too we changed horses and rested about an hour, after which we resumed our journey. Very soon we reached the hills on which David tended his father's flocks, and where he successfully defended his charges from the lion and the bear. Near this place, and at the foot of the hills of Judea, is the village which is pointed out as the birthplace of John the Baptist, where the Virgin Mary paid her cousin Elizabeth, his mother, a visit, and where she 'said' the Magnificat. Here Dr. Talmage spent considerable time in making inquiries, and taking notes of the scene.

"We resume our ride for the last stage, and soon appear, the evidences that we are approaching a great city. Right before us rise the walls of Jerusalem. Our hearts beat faster as we see them, and faster still as our approach becomes nearer. The sun was just setting, gilding the walls and domes of the city, as at 5 o'clock exactly we entered Jerusalem through the Joppa gate."

A GAMBLER'S DOWNWARD COURSE.

THE downfall of a London clerk is described. Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, as a warning to young men who are spending their evenings in places of amusement. Mr. Spurgeon says: "A man, a member of a Christian church, and an earnest worker for the Lord, united himself to an institute for social and so-called innocent amusement. For a time all seemed to go well, until he began to absent himself from the prayer-meetings and week-evening services. This soon led to disinclination for the Sabbath services and all work for the Lord. The young man was a faithful servant to his employers, and much trusted by them. After business hours it became his custom, instead of going home to his young wife, to make his way with his companions to the institute, to while away an hour or two. The games provided were bagatelle, draughts, chess, and the like. Unknown to any but a few, betting was carried on, and it fell to the lot of this young man to be the loser; and, in consequence, he often had little or nothing to take to his wife to provide for the home. Being afraid his Christian wife and godly widowed mother would want to know where his money went, he took goods from his employer's stock, and hoped they would never be missed. The buyer of the department communicated with his principals, and they placed a detective on the watch. One evening he saw this young man go to a cupboard, in which he kept his hat and coat, and take hurriedly from it several valuable articles and put them in his pockets and then leave. He had no sooner got outside the building than he felt a gentle tap on the shoulder, and was told by the detective that he must return to be searched. This was done, and articles of considerable value, belonging to the firm, were found in his possession. He was taken off to the police station. His wife and widowed mother were communicated with, and the next morning they both came to me broken-hearted, and entreated me to go to his employers, and plead with them not to deal harshly with him. I saw the firm, and told them that I had known the young man from a child, that his widowed mother was a Christian woman, and his wife also. For their sakes I pleaded, and touched a tender chord in their hearts, and they promised to be as lenient as possible, and instructed their solicitor accordingly. I went to the prison cell, and told him what I had been doing for him, and urged him to plead guilty, or he would be sent for trial, and get a heavy sentence. He took my advice. The magistrate was able to deal with the case, and passed a sentence of six months' hard labor. At the expiration of the six months I met him at the prison gates, and begged him, in God's name, for the future, to have nothing to do with such places or companions. This advice he took, and I am thankful to say that to-day he is holding a good position, and has returned to God, I trust to go out no more from Him."

THE CONVERTS AT AINTAB, TURKEY.

REFERENCE has been made in these columns from time to time of the remarkable awakening at the mission at Aintab; the following cases of wonderful conversion are reported in the latest letter from Mr. Christie, the American missionary who has been laboring there: "Among the convert one was a notorious gambler; another, a victim of strong drink. This intemperate man had been awakened to a sense of his sins, and had begun the struggle with the enemy. The conflict within was so fierce that he fled from his house one morning early, and spent the whole day, without food, wandering up and down among the tombs to the south of the city. On our way to the evening meeting we encountered him there, and he told us of his desperate condition; we took him with us to the church, where he listened to a rousing discourse of 'Quench not the Spirit,' and at its close he rose for prayers, and is now rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free. A few weeks ago two young men, with a number of others, had been carousing nearly all night; on the way home a drunken brawl ensued, when one of them stabbed the other, and it was of God's mercy that the wound was not fatal. Both of these men are now converts, and are to unite with the First Church next Sabbath. This very day we have talked with four young men (among the twenty-two who came to open their hearts to Pastor Mardiros and myself) who have been well known as 'hard cases,' utterly indifferent to religion, but who are now, we believe, entirely changed in heart and life."

JESUS BROUGHT INTO THE TEMPLE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

3. S. Lesson for February 2, Luke 2:20-35; Golden Text, Luke 2:32.

Jesus Made Like Unto His Brethren—His Mother's Offering—Aged Simeon in God's Confidence—Resting in the Promise—Not Anxious About its Fulfilment—Sure of its Coming in God's Time—How He Recognized the Lord's Christ—Saw Him as the Saviour of the Gentiles—Joseph and Mary Less Enlightened—The Prophetess of the Temple—A Life of Intercession.

"In all things it behooved Him [our blessed Lord] to be made like unto His brethren." (Heb. 2:17.) When God gave Abraham the covenant of circumcision, it was accompanied with the charge, "Walk before me, and be thou perfect." (Gen. 17:1.) Now, for the first time, was this command to be carried out perfectly, in the spirit and in the letter, by a son of Abraham. By His circumcision on the eighth day of His life, Jesus had "been made a minister (i. e., a freewill servant) of the circumcision for the truth of God, that He might confirm the promises given unto the fathers." (Rom. 15:8; R. V.), and then, more truly than Paul, He could say, "I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews." (1 Cor. 9:20.) God's covenant with Abraham was in his flesh. (Gen. 17:13.) His covenant with us is in Christ's flesh, "in whom, also, ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ." (Col. 2:11.) But if we are unwilling to renounce our self-life, i. e., to "put off the old man" (Eph. 4:22; Col. 3:1), the circumcision of Christ will avail us nothing, and we shall find that "the body of the sins of the flesh" is not put off, but is very really in existence still.

Under the law, every woman who had borne a child must be ceremonially purified; the law thus brought to mind continually the uncleanness of man by nature. The angel Gabriel had indeed spoken of Jesus to Mary beforehand, as "that holy thing that shall be born of thee," but as He came "in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin" (Rom. 8:3), He must, even in this thing, "be made like unto His Brethren."

And even His mother must, when the days of her purification were ended, "offer a sacrifice" to "make atonement for her." Her offering should have been a lamb, but the law made this provision for a Jewish mother, "If her means suffice not for a lamb, then she shall take two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons; the one for a burnt offering, and the other for a sin offering; and the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean." (Lev. 12.) This, the poor woman's offering, Mary brought. But far beyond her burnt offering and her sin offering was the great Burnt offering and sin offering which she carried in her arms, to present unto the Lord according to the law of the first born, "For all the first born among the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast; on the day that I smote every first born in the land of Egypt, I sanctified them for myself." (Num. 8:17.) Mary knew little of all which that presentation meant for the whole race of sinful men.

God always has His witnesses; in every age there have been some who could understand the thoughts of God. And Enoch could walk with God, above the world. God could unfold to a Noah the wickedness of the generation of his time, and reveal to him His purposes of coming judgment. He could turn from His inspection of Sodom and say, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" He could find an Elijah, an Elisha, an Isaiah, a Jeremiah, an Ezekiel, or a Daniel in every age, who could count above every earthly thing. There was such a man in Jerusalem at the very time when Mary brought her babe to the temple "to present Him to the Lord." His name was Simeon. We hear nothing of his earthly antecedents, of his family, his business, or his circumstances. The main thing in this man's life was that he was "just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel." While other men were eager about the market prices, quarrelling, and contending about the politics of the day, greedily drinking in the last bits of family or town gossip, etc., etc., he had an eye for greater things, and watched every sign of the times in its indication as to whether the Messiah was at hand! Israel was God's Israel to him. All his national feeling was closely connected with the God of his fathers. "The Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ." This was the ambition of a life far different from that of an Alexander or a Napoleon Bonaparte.

God's Interests

Doubtless he would be acquainted with Zacharias, and may have been one of the very people who were present when the old priest came forth from the temple dumb, after his vision of the angel. Probably he knew of the birth of John, the cure of Zacharias, and, may be, some rumor of the shepherds' tidings had reached him, and his expectancy must have been great that the time was at hand when the Christ of God should appear among men. He knew that God was faithful, and that neither sickness nor accident could deprive him of life "before he had seen

The Lord's Christ."

Did he then desire, for the sake of the prolongation of his life, that the coming of the Lord should be delayed? We shall see: one who knows, as Simeon did, the leading of the Spirit of God, is in no anxiety to perfect his own plans lest he should miss opportunities to which he has looked forward. He "came by the Spirit into the temple." Having God's promise that he should "not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ," he did not attempt to help God to keep His word by doing all he could in the way of inquiry, and of fitting times together, so that if the Messiah were already born he should not by any chance be out of the way when He could be seen. Anxiety is a great waste of time, of God's time; and Simeon could trust God to bring him to the temple at the very moment when the Christ should be there.

When the parents of Jesus brought Him into the temple, the aged believer "took Him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy Word." Here we see that Simeon had no fear of death; he knew that when he departed it would be in peace. He had fulfilled his mission. His life had been a testimony to the last that God was "faithful that promised." For his own soul, for his people, for the generation in which he lived, there was one great need; it was "the Lord's Christ," and now he held Him in his arms. He had been like a quiet finger-post, pointing to the coming One, and now he could "depart in peace;" his vocation was accomplished, "Mine eyes have seen Thy salvation."

But what could Simeon see in that little helpless babe, brought by a poor woman and a humble carpenter, whose very offering testified their poor estate? How should he recognize the Lord's Anointed? By the very same teaching which makes a sinner know his Saviour. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." (1 Cor. 12:3.) It was by the same Holy Ghost that Simeon confessed God's salvation in that feeble infant. Was not His name Jesus—Saviour? Was it not God-given? Had He not declared, "Thou shalt call His name Emmanuel"—"God with us"? He could be none other than incarnate God. Had not the wise men from the East acknowledged Him, and given tokens of His kingship, His priesthood, and His coming sacrifice? Flesh and blood had not revealed it to him, but God the Holy Ghost had been his teacher. What mattered it to Simeon that all the theology of the day was against his simple faith? Simeon was indeed he saw by the eye of faith that which the twelve apostles did not learn after three years' intercourse with Jesus—that the salvation of Christ was not to be confined to the Jews. Peter was so blinded that even the teaching of Jesus in the Scriptures after His resurrection, and even the baptism of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost, had not sufficed to show him what Simeon had learned: "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." The time is coming when Jesus shall indeed be the glory of Israel, meanwhile He has been, since the dispersion of the Church at Jerusalem, "a light to lighten the Gentiles."

Taught of God;

"Joseph and Mary marvelled at those things which were spoken of Him." Honored as they were, yet they had much to learn from the aged Simeon. Any child of God who fears to come in contact with other devoted Christians because he fears they may not understand him, and he is quite sure the Lord has been leading him, is in danger. God has constituted us, not to be so many porcupines to keep one another off, but to be so many members of one body.

Mutually Dependent

one on the other. We each need the light which God has given to our brethren and sisters in the Lord, and they may need some of the light which God has given to us. While in one way no human being was honored as Mary was, yet Simeon had larger views of God's mind than had yet been shewn to her. "And Simeon blessed them ('The less is blessed of the better,' Heb. 7:7), and said unto Mary His mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be spoken against." Had the old man been the recipient of that burden of the Lord that His Christ should be rejected, and so Israel should fall, and that afterward, in time, yet future, they should look on Him whom they have pierced (Zech. 12:10), and "all Israel shall be saved" (Rom. 11:26)? Probably it was so; "and for a sign which shall be spoken against." Perhaps no name has ever stirred up hatred and bitterness, blasphemy and scorning, so much as the name of Jesus. Jews, Mohammedans, infidels, and sinners who glory in their shame, spit upon, blaspheme, and hate with diabolical hatred that one holy, mighty name by which alone they can be saved. ("Yea, a sword shall pierce through thine own soul also.") No doubt, when Jesus was executed as a common criminal, amidst the jeers and scoffs of the priests and of the rabble, Mary knew the fulfilment of this prediction. But all is permitted for a purpose, "that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed." Their thoughts of themselves, and their thoughts of God, can only be rightly analyzed by the test of the crucifixion of Jesus. "What think ye of Christ?" is God's test of man.

There was yet another of God's true witnesses who was brought into the temple, doubtless also by the Spirit, at the same time. It was Anna,

A Prophetess.

There are some, even now, who doubt whether God can ever give the gift of prophecy to a woman. This is chiefly caused by too superficial a consideration of the passage, "Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak." (1 Cor. 14:34.) The same letter to the Corinthians directs how women shall be attired when they pray or prophesy; declares that prophesying is speaking unto men "to edification, and exhortation, and comfort," and twice declares that all may "prophesy." (Comp. 1 Cor. 11:5; 14:3, 5, 31.) Anna was one who spoke "unto men, to edification and exhortation and comfort." Her life as a married woman had been short, and her widowhood of eighty years was entirely devoted to the service of God. She had probably learned a lesson which very few of us know as we might know—that the service of intercession is the highest service to the Lord and to the Church. She "departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day." Fasting has a great charm for some minds: it is something we can do, something we can impose upon ourselves; but whenever it is self-discipline, it always has the corrupting elements of self in it. There is a fasting which is of God, not self-inflicted, but coming distinctly from God. There are a few, oh how few, in each generation, how few in each country, who understand the vocation of a life of intercession, in which their fasting is not only, or principally even, from food, but also, and far more, from all which is of self, all which is of the spirit of the world, all which is of unbelief. There are some such to be found among the most unpretending, unknown children of God, often among the poor and ignorant. When Anna came into the temple, she "gave thanks likewise unto the Lord." She too had been looking for the Saviour; her eyes, like Simeon's, were directed toward God's salvation, and having seen the infant Messiah, He formed the main subject of her conversation and her teaching; "she spake of Him to all them which looked for redemption in Jerusalem."

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

TERMS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Important Extension of the Pension Laws was advanced a stage on January 15, when the Senate Committee on pensions unanimously agreed to favorably report Senator Davis's bill. It provides that all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service during the war, who have been honorably discharged, "and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their labor for support" shall upon due proof of the fact be placed on the list of invalid pensioners at $12 a month; the pension to begin with the date of filing the application in the Pension Office and continue as long as the disability lasts. Persons receiving pensions under existing laws may receive the benefits of this act also. Should this bill pass, it will enormously increase the annual payments, but it will relieve many deserving persons whose cases are not covered by the present law.

The Defalcation of the Cashier of the Sergeant-at-Arms appears likely to be a loss to individual Congressmen. Two ways were suggested for relieving them of the burden. One was a vote from the Treasury, and the other to authorize a suit in the Court of Claims. The House, however, decided on January 15 to reject both methods, and it is to the credit of the members that so many should have voted against their own interest. Mr. Fitch, of New York, made a manly speech on the subject, which doubtless influenced many votes. He said, that as the question in dispute was one of law and fact, and as he was personally interested to the amount of $1,200 in the passage of the bill, he could not consent to decide in his own favor by voting for the appropriation. Besides, the money had been drawn from the Treasury by Silcott on a receipt voluntarily signed by him, and he was unwilling to disown or discredit it. The Government ought not to be made to pay for the loss on account of any negligence or carelessness on his part. The question is to come again before the House for a final vote, but it is expected to result in a confirmation of the decision of last week.

The Australian System of Voting Received the hearty endorsement of a large and influential mass-meeting in Cooper Union, New York, on Thursday last. Mr. Charles S. Fairchild, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Walter M. Ivins, and many other prominent citizens were present and advocated the measure. It was decided to prepare a petition to the Legislature asking it to pass a bill during the present session legalizing the system, and if the Governor continues obstinate, fixing the responsibility upon him. The meeting passed by acclamation resolutions endorsing each feature of the system, and a final resolution that the people of the State of New York owe a debt of gratitude to the people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for their demonstration of the value and entire practicability of the ballot-reform measure.

The Pan-American Conference Has Now Before it a distinct proposal for the submission of all points of dispute to arbitration. It is significant that it has emanated from the representatives of the Argentine Republic and Brazil, the only two countries which are at present disturbed by a dispute likely to involve war. The proposal starts with the declaration that "international arbitration is a principle of American public law, to which the nations in this Conference bind themselves for decisions, not only on their questions on territorial limits, but also on all those in which arbitration may be compatible with sovereignty." It then goes on to prohibit an appeal to arms without a previous submission of the quarrel to arbitration; it provides for the election of one or more arbitrators, and lays down the principle that if, in spite of all these arrangements, war should occur, a victory shall not be held to give the victor any right to the territory of the vanquished, but only to pecuniary indemnity. All who are familiar with the history of the Central and South American States will earnestly hope that the Conference will agree to this proposal. It has in it the promise of a great boon to all the States represented in the Conference.

The Prevalent Epidemic of "La Grippe" Relaxed its energies in New York and neighboring cities last week with the cooler weather, but reports from the West indicate that it is extending its operations to that section. The death-rate in New York, however, continues far above the normal figures and there can be no doubt that the grippe is responsible. It so enfeebles the system of those it attacks that any subsequent illness is apt to prove fatal. The highest mortality figures of the week were those of Tuesday, when 212 persons died. Of these deaths 133 were from disease influenced by the epidemic, such as pneumonia, which caused 60 deaths. Dr. Edson, of the Health Department, says that about two hundred thousand persons have been sick with grippe in New York City since the beginning of the epidemic. This estimate was based on the police sick returns. Deputy Registrar Nagle, however, thought Dr. Edson's figures excessive, and placed the number of sick since the epidemic's inception at 150,000. Mr. Nagle believed that probably between 50,000 and 60,000 persons were sick with grippe at the present time. Dr. H. P. Loomis, who has for some time past been busy investigating the causes of la grippe, says that there can be no doubt that the influenza has its origin in a microbe, but that so far it has been impossible to positively identify this germ, so complicated is it with the microbes of other diseases and the ordinary germs found in the air. Dr. Loomis, however, will continue his investigations, in the hope of finally separating this mysterious germ.

A Destructive Tornado is Among the Latest developments of the extraordinary weather of the present winter. Meteorological authorities say that there is no precedent for such a visitation in the month of January. It had its origin in Texas on January 11. It travelled in a northeastward direction, reaching St. Louis the following afternoon. Thence it diverged to the southeast, striking the town of Clinton, Ky., with terrific ferocity. In that town seventy houses were demolished, ten persons were killed, and over fifty badly injured. It appears to have then divided into two sections, one of which passed over Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, and Wilkesbarre, and so out to the Atlantic, making its presence felt both in Philadelphia and New York. The other section took a northwesterly course through northern Ohio and parts of New York State, causing serious damage at Rochester, Buffalo, and other towns. By the time it reached Niagara Falls it was travelling at the rate of ninety miles an hour. The damage inflicted on St. Louis by the storm was severe. The German Evangelical Church was completely demolished, and the spire was blown off the Second Presbyterian Church, the huge mass of debris crushing one wing of an adjacent residence, and completely blocking the street. Four persons were killed in St. Louis by the storm, and many injured. Wickliffe, Ky., and Olney, Ill., also suffered heavily. In each town there were some fatalities, and many families lost their all in their crushed habitations.

Popular Outbreaks in the Portuguese Capital followed the decision of the Government to concede the demands of England on the African question. The announcement that the Government had yielded was made public on January 12. A mob of about three thousand persons, chiefly students, shouting "Down with the Ministry!" attacked the offices of the British Legation the same night. They demolished the escutcheon on the building and smashed the windows. The police were powerless to control them. They then broke the windows of the residences of various members of the Ministry, after which they dispersed. The Prime-Minister appears to have realized that this mob represented the feeling of the whole nation, for he promptly tendered his resignation. In explaining the step to his colleagues, he expressed his regret that he had been unable to consult the Cortes in consequence of the very rapid and sudden development of events. He declared that he had always sought to maintain an agreeable understanding with England, and hoped that the divergent views of the two countries might yet be reconciled. He had done all that lay in his power to maintain the dignity of Portugal without compromise. The Government has apologized to the British Minister for the attack on the Legation.

Rumors of Revolutionary Plots in Russia were again in circulation last week. It is known that numerous arrests have been made recently. It is no secret, despite the enforced silence of the press, that several officers of the garrison there have committed suicide, notably Colonel Voiekooff, of the Imperial Guards, who shot himself with a revolver on Sunday. It is believed that this distinguished officer and several other unfortunates were implicated in a plot against the Czar's life, which has been recently discovered, but no one dares discuss the matter in public. It is also reported that one of the Czar's brothers is about to be banished forever from the capital, together with his family. It is not suggested that his Imperial Highness had any share in the recent plots, but he is accused of mixing himself up in politics, by which is meant liberal politics.

The Principles Which Have Guided the British Government in the rule of India during the past quarter of a century, were outlined in a speech delivered by Mr. Gladstone last week. He dwelt on the heavy responsibility that Englishmen incurred for the happiness of between two hundred and three hundred millions of the people of India. He rejoiced to think that it is now impossible to hold India by the sword alone. "We are unable," he said, "to dispense with the military power, but we depend upon it only as it aids the constant extension of enlightened principles of Government." Could they hope to make the Indian Government permanent, and the people happy under it? He believed the mass of the people acquiesced in the British dominion, and it is unquestionable that no portion of them would desire to dislodge the British in order to bring in some other Power. Enormous as was the field for enterprise and wealth, it opened a field yet more remarkable for examples of courage, virtue, and development, and application of Christian precepts.

The Ravages of "La Grippe" in Paris are realized in the statistics of deaths published last week. They cover the first week of the year, and show an increase over those of the corresponding week of 1889 of 1,714. The number of deaths for the first week of this year was nearly three times that of the record of the same week last year. The total number of deaths was 2,683, giving an average of 383 deaths a day. This unusually high mortality, says Dr. Jacques Bertillon, who is at the head of the Bureau of Municipal Statistics, is not to be attributed directly to the epidemic of influenza, which has, strictly speaking, caused only 89 deaths during the week, but to the various lung complications following upon that disease. The most fatal in the catalogue of diseases have been the five following: Pneumonia, 500 deaths, against 52 last year; consumption, 465, against 168; bronchial pneumonia, 157, against 32; acute bronchitis, 142, against 23; and chronic bronchitis—most common among aged persons—178, against 48.

Mr. H. M. Stanley Reached Cairo on January 14 on his way to England, and intends to remain there for a time in order to avoid the risk to his health which would ensue from too abrupt a change from the climate of Central Africa to the cold and damp English winter. He had a notable reception at the station from Sir Evelyn Baring, General Sir Francis Grenfell, acting United States Consul-General Grant, and others. He went to the Khedive's palace in state. He made an official call on him lasting half an hour, and was decorated with the grand Cordon of the Medjidieh, a very distinguished honor. He was warmly greeted by the populace. The correspondent of the New York Herald says: "Stanley looks very well, his bronzed face showing below a white German cap. The members of his party are in excellent health and spirits. He thinks Emin will be here in a month. Stanley said the rumors of his death were due to the non-arrival of letters sent by bands of picked messengers, who were stopped by hostile tribes five days from where Bartelot was killed. He himself found two parties there when on his way to the coast."

The Organization of the "Cail" in New York has been commenced with enthusiasm. The word is made up from the initial letters of the proper title of the Association, which is "The Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor." At a meeting recently held in the Annex Hall, New York, many clergymen and workmen met to discuss the best means of promoting the object of the society. One workman, who spoke, said that he recently attended an up-town church, and in the course of the one service he was three times put out into the aisle through entering rented pews. Another time he took a friend up to the second story of a fashionable church, and when the friend asked why they did not remain downstairs the workman told him that the Church was first organized by a few fishermen in an upper room, and that it would end there. Dr. Wilson, of St. George's, and Dr. Huntington, made vigorous speeches in favor of free pews and a more cordial welcome to the poor. "What we want to do," said Dr. Huntington, "is to go back to first principles, and to extend Christ's kingdom in no other lines than those that He Himself chose. If the world and this country are to be saved, it must be through the Church and the brotherhood of mankind. The wage-workers will have to carry the Gospel to the rich, who are surrounded by many temptations from which workmen are free. The rich walk to balls and entertainments over the bodies of their brothers and sisters." Many applications for membership in the "Cail" were made, and a mass meeting is shortly to be held.

The Report of the Young Women's Christian Association of New York for the past year, now issued, should encourage other cities to organize a similar work. How much the Association is doing to help young women in religion and in secular life can scarcely be realized by anyone who has not seen the work. The figures of the report, however, give some idea of it. The Committee on Education had at the end of the term no less than 910 young women under instruction. The classes in needle-work, short-hand, type-writing, etc., were more than usually successful in point of attendance. So large, indeed, was the number of working young women who desired to avail themselves of the privileges extended that the association found that it had not room enough to accommodate them all, nor money enough to supply their wants. Self-supporting young women, without regard to race or religion, are allowed to enter the classes. Besides this, the association has an employment bureau, which, last year, found positions for 1,874 young women. The expenses of the Association last year were $27,518, of which $6,384 was spent in the purchase of material for needle-work, by which employment was given to young women in need of temporary assistance.

A Hermit Digging for Gold in Pennsylvania has been an object of compassionate curiosity for some years. A recent visitor to his hut on the mountains, a few miles north of Williamsport, describes him as looking like a withered leaf, worn and feeble, with hair as white as snow. His cabin, or shanty, as it may be properly termed, is no larger than an ordinary watch-box at a railroad crossing. It is situated on the side of the hill, and is hidden, as it is protected from the winds, by huge trees. A stove and a bench are its contents. Here he has lived for many years, during which time he has been engaged in an unprofitable enterprise—digging for gold. Around his hut there are at least a dozen holes, not one of which is less than fifteen feet in depth. All were dug by the hermit in his vain search for the treasure. He talks rationally, but when people hear how he is spending his life they conclude that he is insane. Not that the seeking of wealth is an evidence of insanity, but because of the hermit's way of seeking it. The time is coming, however, when it will be seen that every man who gives his life to the acquisition of riches, neglecting his eternal interests, gives proof of folly akin to insanity. (Ezek. 7:19.)

A Fortune was Found in a Mirror Recently at Carthage, Ill. A press dispatch from that city to the New York Times states that among its citizens is a laboring man belonging to an old family once very wealthy. The family is scattered now, and its representatives of this generation are poor, but they cherish an honorable pride in the unblemished records of their ancestors, and are themselves noted for their integrity. The family heirlooms have been carefully treasured and handed down from father to son. One of them was an old-fashioned mirror, which was believed by antiquarians to have been made more than two hundred years ago. Its possessor was grievously vexed two weeks ago, when by an accident the old mirror was broken. But behind the fragments of glass a paper yellow with age was found. On being examined, it proved to be a title-deed to a large tract of land in the Mohawk Valley, New York. It was duly attested, and appears to be perfectly genuine. At the time it was drawn up the land was of small value, but is now estimated to be worth millions. The finder reported his discovery to the other members of the family, and they have now placed the matter in the hands of the lawyers for investigation. Should the title prove valid the family will be thankful that the mirror was broken, though the owner did consider it a misfortune at the time. Spiritual riches have often come to men through so-called misfortunes. Numbers have realized their title to heavenly possessions only when some idolized treasure has been shattered, when financial reverses have come, or a beloved child has been taken. (Ps. 78:34.)

A Telegraph Lineman Gave His Blood to Save a girl's life in the New York Hospital on January 12. The girl and a companion were brought to the hospital the previous day. Both were unconscious from asphyxiation, having slept in a room in which there was an escape of gas. One of the two girls died shortly after being admitted into the hospital. The other remained unconscious, and seemed likely to die, too. On Sunday the physicians said that nothing could save her life but the injection of healthy blood into her veins. A telegraph lineman, who was a patient in the hospital, having been treated there for an accidental injury and had recovered, offered his blood for transfusion. His offer was accepted, and on Sunday twenty-seven ounces of blood were transferred from his veins to those of the dying girl. The result was astonishing. She opened her eyes and immediately gave signs of renewed strength. The physicians believe she will recover. She was a complete stranger to the lineman, and has not yet been strong enough to see and thank him for saving her life. It is remarkable that the man should have been willing to give up his blood for one whom he did not know, but as he had the assurance of the physicians that he would not be injured by the loss, his humane disposition prompted him to volunteer. It was far different when Christ shed His blood for the salvation of men. He knew that He must die, yet He did not shrink, though they were not only strangers, but enemies. (Rom. 5:7, 8.)

European Aristocrats Seeking American Heiresses have been victimized by a Californian adventurer. The large number of foreign letters arriving at the San Francisco post-office addressed to a citizen of German birth, recently, excited suspicion. An investigation was commenced which resulted in the discovery that he had been inserting advertisements in the newspapers of France, Germany, England, and Italy, offering to supply men of good birth, especially such as had titles, with wealthy American wives. They were to send photographs and all particulars as to family and station, and to be careful to inclose a fee. The plan succeeded wonderfully. Three letters came from princes, sixteen purported to come from dukes, and a great number from barons. Most of them admitted that they were needy, and all laid greater stress on the amount of fortune required than on the appearance and disposition of the lady. One placed the minimum at a quarter of a million, others would be satisfied with $100,000, and all cheerfully paid the fee of the man who undertook to furnish the fortune and the heiress. It is a surprise to find how many of Europe's nobles, who are supposed to be very particular about marrying only girls of noble blood, are now willing to marry beneath their rank for a money consideration. Any American girl entering upon such a marriage must feel humiliated as she reflects that it is her money and not herself that her titled husband desired. It is not so with the Church—the bride of Christ. She brings Him no wealth, for she is poor and wretched, and she has no grace nor beauty save those which He confers upon her. (Eph. 5:25-27.)

A Narrow Escape From Death by Electricity took place in St. Louis, Mo., on January 13. A number of workmen were engaged in fixing hoods for additional telegraph wires on a pole. One of them laid his hand on an imperfectly insulated wire and immediately gave a loud cry and fell to the ground. He was not permanently injured, but the numerous deaths which have taken place through the overhead wires in New York had been heard of in St. Louis, and in the crowd which collected there were some who made indignant remarks about the carelessness of the companies in having wires which might cause the death of the employees. The foreman of the gang, hearing the remarks, said it was not the carelessness of the company, but of the workman, which had caused the trouble. "I will show you," he said, "that the wire is safe enough when it is properly handled." He mounted the pole, and having adjusted his rubber gloves took hold of the wire. Instantly the crowd saw the man's face contract with pain, and he shouted loudly for help. No one dared approach, and for some moments the man was convulsed from head to foot, and vainly struggled to loose his grasp on the wire. It seemed to all as if he would die; his cries were pitiful. At length, with a strong effort he opened his hand and pitched headlong to the ground. His hand was badly hurt, and he was much shaken by his fall, but will recover. His temerity nearly cost him his life. There are some who display the same hardihood in going into scenes of temptation in which, to their knowledge, others have fallen. The power of liquor or some other evil habit often seizes upon them before they are aware, and they are no more able to free themselves than could the man held by the wire. All such men neglect the warning of the king, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." (Prov. 28:26.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The interdenominational services which are being held every afternoon at the Old John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, are largely attended.

The proceeds of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday collections in New York this year, so far as they have yet been handed over to the committee, amount to $33,809.38.

Among the deaths resulting from La Grippe in England last week was that of the famous Lord Napier of Magdala. He was one of the most able of British generals. He was in his eightieth year.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills is holding services in New Brunswick, N. J. The town is deeply stirred. Business men are closing their stores early to allow clerks to attend the services. At the close of these meetings Mr. Mills will return to Jersey City for meetings.

The Rev. H. Loomis, of Yokohama, Japan, writes requesting us to inform our subscribers that back numbers of this journal would be useful to him in his missionary work in that country. Many Japanese students can read English, and he finds that good has resulted from their perusal of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The New York Society for the Suppression of Vice held its annual meeting last week. Mr. Anthony Comstock's report showed that during the year the society had made 149 arrests and secured 124 convictions. The fines and forfeited bail bonds had put $10,877 into the public treasury. To do all this the society have spent but $7,948.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at Fitchburg, Mass., are having an unprecedented influence on the town and neighborhood. Meetings are held every afternoon and evening. At the service on January 12 the City Hall was densely crowded, and large numbers went away unable to get in. At the close of the service a great number rose to ask for prayer. One hundred and fifty-five gave in their names, avowing their resolve, in Christ's strength, to consecrate their lives to Him.

Mr. D. L. Moody's New Evangelical Institute for the training of Christian workers was opened in Chicago on January 16 with addresses by Mr. Moody and prominent clergymen. Mr. Moody thus describes the object of the Institute: "It is intended to turn out aggressive men to go into gambling dens and slums, to lay their lives alongside the abandoned, and so to save." Accommodations have been provided for 100 students. The training is to be largely through contact with the work.

The railroad branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, which Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt organized for the benefit of the employees on the Vanderbilt roads, celebrated its fourteenth anniversary on January 14. Mr. Charles Francis Adams, President of the Union Pacific Railroad, who spoke at the meeting, said that institutions of this kind formed the missing link between the management and the ranks. Cornelius Vanderbilt, he said, had been the pioneer in this betterment of the men.

The seceders from the Women's National Christian Temperance Union met in Philadelphia on January 16 and organized a new union, which is to have no connection with the Prohibition party in politics, but to be strictly non-partisan. The Committee on Constitution presented a report, which was taken up item by item, and adopted. It recommended that the name of the organization be the "Woman's Christian Temperance Alliance of Pennsylvania," the sole object of which shall be to interest and unite the women of the State in non-partisan, non-sectarian temperance work.

THE SHEPHERD AND THE SHEEP.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish," etc. John 10: 27-30.

The Question of the Jews—Christ's Answer One of Personal Application—I. A Description of His People—A Special Possession—A Special Character—Noted for Attention—Their Intimacy—They Know, and are Known—Marked in the Ear and Foot—II. Their Privilege—Eternal Security—Assured by the Character of the Giver—Inner Dangers Averted—Outer Injuries Prevented—Kept by the Father's Power—A Narrow Door.

THE Jews had said to the Saviour, "If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly." They professed that they wanted to know more certainly concerning Him. This was a vain pretence, for He had told them all they needed to know, and they had not believed Him. Therefore He answered them to a large degree by making them know more about themselves. Sometimes the point in which a man is deficient is not as to the gospel, but as to his own need of it. He may know all of Christ that is needful for his salvation, but he may not know enough about himself and his own lost condition; and therefore he is not in the way in which Christ becomes precious to him, because he is ignorant of his deep and terrible need. So the Saviour began to talk to them, not so much about Himself as about His people, and what they were to be. "My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me."

There are two things in my text which will suffice for our meditation. First, here is a description given of the Lord's people. "My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me." And then, secondly, there is a privilege secured to them, namely, their everlasting, unquestionable safety.

I. First—and all that I can say will be but little, considering the largeness of the subject—let us notice the description here given of

The People of God.

They are first described by a speciality of possession: "My sheep." All men are not sheep, for some are foxes, or ravening wolves, and others are compared to dogs and lions. All persons who might be called sheep are not Christ's sheep. All do not belong to His flock. All are not gathered into His fold. There is a speciality of possession. There may be many sheep, but the Saviour speaks of "My sheep," those whom He chose of old, those who were given Him of the Father, those who have been bought with His blood, redeemed from among men, and in due time have been ransomed by His power, for He has bought them back from the hand of the enemy, and therefore claims them to be His own. "The Lord's portion is His people." Other lords have, their portion, and Christ takes His portion. His people are the lot of His inheritance. He speaks of "My sheep" as a peculiar heritage, whom, as a shepherd, He claims for His own. Of these He is the sole Owner. He is not merely their Keeper, but their Possessor. We read of the hiring shepherd, "whose own the sheep are not"; but, in the case of our good Shepherd, "He putteth forth His own sheep."

There is a speciality of character about them. They are "my sheep." They are dependent, timid, trembling, obedient, teachable; by His own Spirit. They have received a nature which is not that of the doggy world, nor that of the swinish multitude, nor that of the wolfish persecutor; but that of men indwelt of the Spirit of God, who are therefore clean, gentle, loving, gracious. He calls them "My sheep," for they have a special relation to Himself; they are like Jesus. Being His sheep, He has become their Guardian as well as their Proprietor, and they look up to Him as such. They are sheep to Him, and He is a shepherd to them.

They are Made Sheep

We may judge ourselves by considering whether toward Christ we are His sheep. Do we acknowledge ourselves as belonging to Him, spirit, soul, and body? Do we regard ourselves as being, in relation to Him, no wiser, no stronger, than sheep to a shepherd? I know some who are certainly no sheep of Christ's flock, for they will be led by nobody, in heaven or on earth; but must have their own sweet way. They are critics of the Bible, not disciples of it. They might be very good dogs, but they are very queer sheep. They would make very respectable wolves, for they are great in destructive criticism; but they certainly are not sheep:

and their temper and spirit are such that they would disdain the character, if they understood it. "What! to go where I am led?" Yes, it is even so; and hence the modern wise man is indignant, and proudly repudiates the character of a sheep. As for us, we accept all that the name implies.

A chief mark of Christ's people is attention. "My sheep hear." They can hear, because they have had spiritual ears given them. Once the Shepherd might have spoken all day long, and they would not have heard Him; but it is not so now. Even from the cross our Lord's plaintive cries were all unheard by them; but now He has given them spiritual capacity and perception, and they can hear, and they do hear, what His dying love would make them know and understand. Their Lord has spoken to them. They have heard His voice, and have known it to be His; they still hear it, and they distinguish between His voice and other voices. "A stranger will they not follow: for they know not the voice of strangers." You can tell the sheep of Christ by their being Marked in the Ear.

"My sheep hear my voice." They may not hear a good deal that other people hear; they may even be glad to be deaf to it. There are many calls exceedingly musical to carnal ears, which have no charms for them. They try to be deaf to some voices from which they could gather nothing but temptation; but they hear Christ's voice. They are all there when He speaks; their soul sits at the door to hear His softest whisper. They try to hear: they charge themselves to take heed that they lose no sound from heaven. They do hear; but they long to hear yet more completely, and to be more obedient to that voice which rings through the chambers of their soul.

Another mark of the Lord's people is intimacy. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them." "I know them." Yes, the Lord discerns them. He singles them out, for "the Lord knoweth them that are His." Sometimes we do not know them; but He says, "I know them." In cloudy times they do not know themselves; but He says, "I know them." When a child of God does not know whether he is a child of God or not, his Father knows His own children, and the great Shepherd knows His own sheep. His is a discernment which never fails. The hypocrite cannot get into the true fold of Christ. He may get into the visible fold; but not into the real spiritual fold of Christ; for Christ does not know him, and bids him depart. This is the very seal upon the foundation—"The Lord knoweth them that are His." His eyes discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that feareth God and him that feareth Him not; His is a knowledge of quick and Certain Discernment.

Now, beloved, just try a little here, to see whether you come into this number—"I know them." Does the Lord know you as His own? Has He had personal intercourse with you, and you with Him? Or will He have to say to you at the last, "I never knew you"? Why, some of you have made Him know you! Just as some men know right well the importunate beggar who is often at their door, so does the Lord for certain know some of you, for you go every day begging at His gate, and you receive a constant alms at His hand. Besides that, you go every day thanking Him for the mercies you receive. He knows your name: the name of one who is drowned in debt to His infinite bounty.

Here is one more: actual obedience. How does He put it? "I know them, and they follow me." All the Lord's sheep are as well as in the ear. The foot and ear mark must be in every sheep of the Lord's flock. "They follow me." They not only say, "He is my Leader," but they follow Him. Christ's sheep try to follow in the track that the Shepherd marks for them. Christ's people are never so happy as when they can put down their feet where Christ put His feet down. The very marks that He has left by His bleeding footsteps we would desire to follow, all the day, and every day. Beloved, look you carefully to this! Do what Jesus did, according to your measure and power. This is what the people of God try to do. If you do not endeavor to be like Christ, you are not His sheep; for of His sheep it is true, "I know them, and they follow me."

Marked in the Foot,

It is not written, "They follow My commandments," though they do. It is not said, "They follow the route that I have mapped for them," though they do that. But, "they follow me," distinctly. In their individual personality they follow their Lord in His individual personality. They have recognized Himself above His words, above His ways, and even above His salvation. "They follow me," saith he. This is a grand mark of a Christian, not merely a life of morality, a life of integrity, a life of holiness, but a life of all these in connection with Christ. They follow Him, not holiness, nor morality, nor integrity, apart from Christ, but they follow their Lord. A good life is good in any man. We cannot speak evil of virtue, even when we find it in the ordinary moralist; but this is not the complete mark of Christ's sheep. The virtues of Christ's sheep are in connection with Himself. The Christian is holy, and all that, but that is because he follows His perfect Master, and keeps close to Him. This is one of the peculiar and unfailing marks of the child of God.

II. But my main object to-night is to show you The Great Privilege here conferred on the people of God. Christ has secured to them the priceless boon of eternal security in Him. No sheep of Christ shall ever be lost. None that He has purchased with His blood, and made to be His own, shall ever wander away so as to perish at last. This is the doctrine of the verses now before us. At any rate, if I wanted to express that doctrine, I could not find words in which I could set it forth more definitely or more completely than is done by the words before me.

The security of the people of God lies, first of all, in the character of the life which they have received. Listen to this: "And I give unto them eternal life." All the spiritual life which all the sheep in the flock now possess has been given to them by their Shepherd. Never was there another flock of which this could be said. No shepherd but this one can give life to His sheep; but He gave them all the true life that they have. Nay, stop: He not only gave them life, but He sustains that life by a constant gift. Observe, it is not written, "I gave to them eternal life," but "I give unto them eternal life." They are always living by virtue of the life which He is always giving. They are constantly receiving life from Him, according to that assurance, "Because I live, ye shall live also." What He always gives they must receive, and therefore it cannot cease.

Notice the nature of that life. "I give unto my sheep eternal life." Now, you all know what "eternal" means: or say, rather, none of you can form an idea of eternity which can grasp all its length of endurance. Only this, you know it has no end, and cannot therefore close. If anybody said that he had eternal life and lost it, he would be flatly contradicting himself. It could not be eternal, or else he must still have it. If it is eternal, it is eternal, and there is no end to it: and there is an end of further argument about it. If the life that Christ gives us, when we are born again, can die, it is not "eternal" life, or else words have ceased to have any meaning at all.

But, principally, I dwell upon the glorious character of the Giver. "I give unto my sheep eternal life." The life that Christ gives is not that poor, paltry life which lasts the professor for about three weeks, and then dwindles down and dies out; or, say, three months, and then and the convert is spun out and done for, and has to begin again. Such is the religious life which is excited by men; but it is not so with the life which comes from God. He that is born again, according to the Scripture, has received eternal life; and this is the only life worth receiving.

The Revival is Over,

Now, depend upon it, it is what you hold out to people that has much to do with how they behave themselves afterwards. Tell them that if they believe in Christ, they are going to get, not eternal life, but life for a little while, life for as long as they take good care of it, and I fear it will prove to be so. It may do them good to get the poor little change you offer them; but as surely as they are converted to a temporary life, they will die out before long. You told them that they would. You did not propose any more to them. But when you propose to them this—"Here is everlasting life to be had by believing in Christ. It is not temporary, but eternal life"—why, then they grip it as such. They believe in Christ for that, and according to their faith it is unto them; and the Lord, and Giver of life is glorified in giving to them this great and splendid gift, the gift of all gifts. "I give unto my sheep eternal life."

So we take a step farther. The children of God are safe, not only because of the life they receive, but because of the inner dangers which are averted.

Take the next sentence—"And they shall never perish." They have a tendency to spiritual sickness, but their Shepherd will doctor them so that they shall never perish. They are sheep, and have a tendency to wander; but their Shepherd shall keep them so that they shall never perish. Time tries them, and they grow old, and the novelty of religion wears off; but they shall never perish.

Now we must go a step farther. We have no time to urge these arguments at any great length. They are safe, next, by outer injuries being prevented. "Neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." Many will pluck at them, but none shall pluck them away. The devil will give many and pull, to get them away; but out of the great Shepherd's hand he shall never take them. Their old companions, and the memory of their old sins will come, and pluck at them very hard, and very cunningly; but the Saviour says, "None shall pluck them out of my hand." So, first, here is their security: they are in His hand; that is, in His possession, and He grasps them, as a man holds a thing in his hand, and says, "It is mine." Neither shall any take them away from being under His protection. Never shall they be plucked from Christ.

A Horrible Pluck

Now, to make quite sure about it, and to pile on the comfort, the Saviour goes on to add the care and power of God Himself. Our Lord says, "My Father, which gave them me." The saints of God are safe, because the Father gave them to His Son. He did not bestow on Him a something which He might, after all, lose. Will the Lord Christ lose what His Father gave Him? You know how people say, "Oh, I hope that, if a burglar takes anything from my house, he will not take that cup, which is an heirloom. My father gave it to me." If a man had to defend his property, he would be sure to take care of that which was a very special gift, given in his honor, as a Memorial of a Great Work.

So is it with our Lord Jesus; He values that soul which His Father gave Him. I delight in the thought. I picture my blessed Lord looking at each one of His believing people, and saying, "My Father gave you to Me." That poor woman, that struggling young man, that decrepit old lady, that man who is half-starved, but who loves his Lord—Jesus says of each one, "My Father gave this soul to me." He cannot lose what His Father gave Him.

Then He goes on to say that His people are kept by the Father's power; for He says, "My Father, which gave them Me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." Beloved, although God gave us to Christ, He did not cease to care for us Himself. "My Father gave you to Me; yet He takes care of you none the less, but all the more. Because He is determined that what He gave to me shall be mine, the Lord will put forth His wisdom and power to preserve you."

And then the Saviour finishes all by saying that, while He has spoken of the Father and Himself as two—and two they are as persons—yet in their divine essence they are but one. He says, "I and my Father are one;" and especially one in love to His people. "The Father Himself loveth you," even as He loves His Son; and, while you read the love of Christ in His death, you must read the Father's love quite as much in that great sacrifice. It is true of our Lord Jesus that—"He loved the Church, and gave Himself for it;" but it is equally true of the Father—"God so loved the world that He gave His only-begotten Son."

You are safe in Christ's hand. Know it, and feel the joy of it. "Oh," says one, "but if I thought so, I should run into sin!" I am sorry for you; things act very strangely upon you. Nothing like a strong belief in His changeless love. "Oh, but it would be far safer to tell your hearers that they may be overcome by sin, and perish!" I will not tell them what I do not believe. I will not dishonor my Lord by a falsehood. Shall I come home to your house, and tell your children that if they do wrong you will cut their heads off; or that if they disobey you they will cease to be your children? If I were to propound that doctrine, your children would grow angry at such a slander upon their father. They would say, "No, we know better than that!" Far rather would I say to them, "My dear children, your father loves you; he will love you without end, therefore do not grieve him." Under such doctrine true children will say, "We love our ever-loving father. We will not disobey him. We will endeavor to walk in his ways."

Binds Me to My Lord

"Well, but suppose we sin." He will chasten us, and restore us. "If I believed that doctrine, I should live as I like," says one. Then you are not one of His sheep, for and will not love iniquity. The change wrought by the new birth is such that a man will not return to his old ways of sin and folly. This is the doctrine; and how can you make it to be an indulgence to sin? True saints never turn the grace of God into licentiousness, but the very mention of eternal love leads them to careful obedience.

His Sheep Love Holiness

One thing I must say at the end. Some ministers preach a gospel with a very wide door to it, but there is nothing to be had when you get within. I am sometimes told that I make my door a little too narrow. It is not true, for I preach the gospel to every creature under heaven, with all my might; but if the door be narrow, there is something worth having when you enter by it. Even if the way be narrow, if you once get in, you have got in, and you have found eternal life, and you shall never perish, neither shall any pluck you out of Christ's hands. Sinner, come and have an eternal blessing! It is worth having! Come and have it! If thou believest, thou shalt assuredly be saved. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" saved from sin so as never to go back and live in it again; so saved as to be made holy; so saved as to be preserved in holiness. Holiness shall be the set of the main current of thy life, until, made perfectly holy, thou shalt dwell with God above.

Into His hands let us commit our spirits, and we may rest assured that they shall be safe eternally.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Using the Telephone for the First Time.—Dr.

Pentecost said: "I remember the first time I saw a telephone. I was told that through it I could speak to my friend a mile and a half away, and receive an immediate answer. I believed what my scientific friend by my side told me; but it took him about two hours to explain it to me. I used the telephone long before I understood its construction. In a similar way, sinners may believe God's good news of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ, and be saved, though they do not fully understand it. I thank God that the Bible does not say, 'Every one that understandeth shall have eternal life,' but, 'Every one that believeth.'"

Marks of a Disfiguring Disease.—"I saw a great stalwart man in the street the other day, who looked as if he had never been ill an hour in his life; he seemed the picture of perfect physical life, yet I knew that that man only a few days before was at death's door. His face was pitted with small-pox, and though he was now cured, yet he carried the effects of that loathsome disease with him, and would continue to do so throughout his whole life. I think that sin disfigures the soul more terribly than that foul disease does the face, and yet, thank God, we can get rid of all its evil effects. God's salvation cures us, and takes away all marks. Christ saves us, and takes us on from glory to glory, until at last we are presented to the Father spotless, in the immaculate image of the Son of God, our Saviour."

A Shepherd's Story About Sheep.—Mr. Blane (late of South Africa) relates: "I remember a dear old fellow-worker for the Lord, who had long been a shepherd on the Westmoreland Hills. He told me a peculiar thing about a sheep. When it went astray it always went against the storm. Right in the teeth of the wind, blinded by the rain or snow, tearing itself on thorns, stumbling over stones or against jagged rocks, on it would totter until, exhausted, it would sink down to die or be found by its rescuer. Of course the shepherd knew the course the sheep would be likely to take, and throughout all the weary night he would seek it, glad if at last he found it in time to save it. So we, poor sinners, in straying away from Christ, have our faces against the storm. On we struggle through temptation and sin, until, unable to battle longer, we succumb, and let sin gather round us and upon us. We should be utterly lost if Jesus, the Good Shepherd, did not seek us."

A Boy Accidentally Hanged.—Mr. Thomson, an evangelist, relates: "Not very long ago, as I was stepping into a railway train in London I bought a paper to read during the journey. Almost the first words that caught my eyes were 'The Fatal Cord.' Under that heading was the story of a boy in Manchester, the son of a well-to-do merchant, who had accidentally killed himself. He was discovered hanging by the neck to a cord fastened over his father's kitchen door. Near him was found a book entitled The Fatal Cord, and it was turned down at a page where it told how a boy, to show his courage, had suspended himself over a cliff. The Manchester boy had resolved to emulate the performance of which he had read, and had suspended himself over the kitchen door; but the poor lad had made a slip-noose, and the rope had glided up to his neck, and tightening, had caused his death. Unconverted men and women are betraying similar folly and hardihood; but they have a chance of escape. They are perilously playing with the fatal cord of sin, but if they cry to God for deliverance, He will put their feet upon a Rock, even Jesus, the infinitely gracious and omnipotent Saviour."

Nearly a Homicide.—Dr. Pentecost said: "Few people who look at me would think I had almost been a homicide; yet such is the case. About a year after I was converted to Christ, there was a great big burly man, with whom my mother had had some business transaction, and who had taken advantage of my absence from home, and her widowhood, to defraud her of a considerable sum of money. When I saw the fellow, he disturbed me as I never thought I could have been disturbed and when he gave vent to some disagreeable remarks about my mother, I seized a chair, and whirling it round my head, in another moment I should have struck him dead, but my good angel whispered in my ear, 'Thou shalt not kill.' If any one had told me five minutes before that I should have been subjected to such a temptation, I should have replied 'Impossible!' We do not know what powerful temptations Satan is preparing for us; and we can only be safe from them in Jesus, who is able and willing to keep us. (1 Cor. 10: 13.) God will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able."

A Creeper Overgrown with Weeds.—Dr. Pentecost said: "Some years ago, my wife planted a fine little Virginia creeper on the side walk of our garden. We went away to Washington about the beginning of July and did not return until the end of August. One of my wife's first visits on our return home was to the garden. She found it all overgrown with weeds, for they grow very fast in our warm climate, and the little creeper invisible. After some search, however, we discovered it on the ground. It had grown greatly, and sent forth fifty or sixty little tendrils, each one twining itself around some object, here a coarse weed, there a beautiful flower, and again a stone. At once we set it free from all encumbrances, and trained it heavenward, fastening it with pins. How is it that Christians striving to grow heavenward hold on so fast, as many do, to some part of their old nature which hinders their growth in holiness? They lop off vulgar sins, but spare intellectual indulgences, which are often the most insidious and deadly of obstacles in the way of eminent piety because they divert the attention and the aspirations from Christ."

An Officer's Struggle with the Drink Fiend.—

Mr. Hamilton relates: "I knew an army officer who had a terrible struggle to give up strong drink. He started life having promised his mother never to touch intoxicating liquor, and for years, through great temptations, he kept his promise; but he fell ill, and the doctor prescribed cod-liver oil and whisky. The former cured him of his disease, but from the other he contracted a more deadly malady—he became the slave of drink. Once and again he signed the pledge, but the ink was scarcely dry when it was broken. At length he resolved to send for his father and mother, and see if he could not gather strength from the words of her who had directed his childish steps in virtue's path. They came; and with his mother's prayer ringing in his ear he determined to make a final effort. He would sign the pledge again, and if broken this time he would go to the Pacific Coast, and no longer disgrace his wife and children. Almost simultaneously with that resolution came the thought, 'I shall invite a few friends, have one more social glass together, then sign the pledge.' The appointed night came, but the guests did not arrive. The officer waited until a late hour, still no one came. Appetite was asserting itself, and the poor fellow longed to satisfy it. He turned to the Bible and opening it read, 'No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God.' He saw that alone he must meet the temptation. He took up a bottle to unseal; never had wine seemed so enchanting; but a better spirit whispered, 'Now is the decisive hour.' He replaced the bottle, and strode up and down the room. The struggle was a dreadful one. He turned to the Bible again, and read, 'God so loved the world,' etc. With the bottle by his side, and the Bible lying in front of him, he besought God to give him the much-needed strength. He leaped to his feet, shouting, 'Victory! Saved by the grace of God!' He then took the bottles out to the piazza, and dashed them to the pavement, and kneeling down, he gave himself to Christ, and from that hour all desire for strong drink has been absent from him."

The Late Hon. William D. Kelley.

The Late Henry W. Grady.

The Late Walker Blaine. (See page 53.) The Late Empress Augusta of Germany.

A Miser's Death by Starvation.—The Rev. Wm. Ross observes: "Some time ago, a beggar in the Highlands died of starvation. Many commiserated his fate that, in the midst of a wealthy and Christian land, one should die of absolute want. But upon examination of the few foul and tattered rags which the dead man had worn for years, it was discovered that there was sewed between the folds bank notes and deposit receipts to the amount of more than $3,500. He had died of sheer starvation, with the means upon his person of providing for all his wants, and giving him many luxuries besides; and yet he would not take advantage of one coin to relieve his hunger. All condemn that man as foolish. Yet is the sinner not more foolish who, in the face of God's repeated offers of mercy, will not take advantage of them? or the Christian who goes miserably through this life lacking things temporal and things spiritual, though he has in his Bible many exceeding great and precious promises which he has only to present before God?"

THE LATE HENRY W. GRADY.

(See Portrait.)

FEW men in the South would have been mourned more generally and sincerely than the distinguished journalist who died a few weeks ago. He made the whole country his debtor by working persistently to harmonize the sections and to obliterate the prejudices which were a survival of the war. Henry W. Grady was born at Athens, Georgia, thirty-eight years ago. He was educated at the University of Georgia and that of Virginia. While at college he evinced superior ability and a strong liking for athletic sports. His first employment was as correspondent of the Atlanta Constitution. The success of his letters opened the way to his engagement as editor at Rome, Georgia, where he did not remain long. Returning to Atlanta, he worked on the Herald, the rival of the Constitution. The management of the paper was extravagant, and it failed, leaving the Constitution to bloom alone. Grady then acted as correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal and the New York Herald. Having made money enough in this way to buy a one-third interest in the Atlanta Constitution, he set to work on that journal with all his energy, raising its tone and making it a representative journal. Mr. Grady wrote extensively for the leading magazines, and invariably with encouraging acceptance. He was well acquainted with the interests of his State, and was locally very popular. His fame as an orator was national. He was an active and zealous member of the Methodist Church.

THE LATE HON. WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

(See Portrait.)

THE death of the "Father of the House" briefly reported last week in our news columns, occurred on January 9. Mr. Kelley was well known not only in his own State, but in Washington and throughout the country. He was not only the eldest member of Congress, but had sat in the House for more terms than any other member. He was born in Philadelphia on April 12, 1814. He received a thorough English education, and for some time worked as a proof-reader in a printing-office in this city. After a few years' service in this capacity he became an apprentice in a jewelry establishment. Having learned the trade he removed to Boston, where he worked five years as a journeyman jeweler. He then returned to Philadelphia, and began the study of law. He was in due time admitted to the bar, and began practice, devoting himself also to various literary pursuits. Mr. Kelley was twice elected Prosecuting Attorney of the city and county of Philadelphia, and served for ten years as Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of that city. He was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Chicago in 1860, and one of Lincoln's heartiest supporters. His election to the Thirty-seventh Congress was the beginning of a long and useful legislative career.

THE LATE EMPRESS AUGUSTA.

(See Portrait.)

THE widow of Emperor William I. of Germany died on January 7, from pneumonia following an attack of grippe. She was in her seventy-ninth year, having been born on September 30, 1811. She was the daughter of the Grand-Duke Carl Frederick of Saxe-Weimar. In her youth she was an earnest disciple of Goethe, who was befriended by her father. She had become an accomplished scholar at the time of her marriage to Prince William of Prussia, in 1829, and was always a student. Few royal personages have reached her attainments. She was well read in the literature of several countries, including that of England, Italy, and France. In 1861 her husband succeeded to the throne of Prussia, and in 1871 he became German Emperor, as a result of the war then in progress between France and united Germany. The Dowager Empress was left a widow in March, 1888. Of her two children one was the late Emperor Frederick William. The other, the Princess Louise, was married to the Grand-Duke Frederick, of Baden. She was an invalid many years, but was active in attention to the philanthropic duties which she undertook as Queen of Prussia, and later in co-operating with her illustrious daughter-in-law, the Empress Victoria, in the many new enterprises that lady initiated for the benefit of the women and the poorer classes of Germany.

EMILY HENDON'S REMORSE.

(See illustration on page 61.)

"I WISH papa was as rich as Uncle Phillips," said Emily Hendon, as she threw herself on the sofa of a little and not too well furnished room.

The girl had been helping her mother with the Saturday's cleaning-up, and was tired. Saturday was a school holiday, but Emily worked harder on that day than any other day of the week, and besides, the work was not congenial.

"Why does my daughter wish that so earnestly?" Mrs. Hendon inquired.

"Oh, it is so much nicer to have servants to do all this dirty, tiresome work! Cousins Maud and Louisa have their Saturdays for reading or sketching or visiting; they don't have to sweep and dust and scour, as I do."

"And that is the reason you wish papa was rich?" said the sweet-voiced, gentle, gray-haired lady, who was none the less a lady for having her hands soiled with work, and wearing a dress of cheap, rough material. "I thought, perhaps, you were sorry that papa had to go out in all weathers, and work so hard and so long, to keep us all."

"He does not seem to mind it, mamma," said Emily. "He is always cheerful when he comes home. I guess he does not care for pleasure. He seems to like his work, but when one is young it is different."

"Yes, my dear, it is different, as you say, but the difference is not so much in age as in disposition. Some people think of themselves only, while others are chiefly concerned for the happiness of those about them, and gladly sacrifice themselves that others may be happy. That is papa's case, and I think such a life is a very noble one."

"Uncle Phillips has a much happier life though, and it is much better for his children too," said Emily, recurring to the thought with which she began. "While I was staying at Beechcroft we used to go out in the carriage, and were always having good times. It seems very dull at home, here."

"It must be a consolation to you to feel that mamma does not have to work quite so hard, now you are back again. I had to do everything while you were away, you know. When a little girl can help her mother, she must surely be glad that she has that opportunity."

The thought did not seem to comfort the child very much. Her mind was continually running on the life her cousin was leading, and the contrast between that and her own rankled in her spirit, and made her fretful and discontented. Her mother strove to teach her the sanctity of duty, the higher delight that comes from ministering to others, and the superiority of such a life over one spent in ease and self-indulgence. But Emily could not see it, and she eagerly looked forward to the time when another invitation would come for her to visit in her wealthy uncle's household.

She had not long to wait. Her watchful eyes caught a glimpse of a letter with the familiar postmark, but it was addressed in her uncle's handwriting, which puzzled Emily, as former invitations had been sent by her cousin Maud. She was eager to know its contents, but Mrs. Hendon would not satisfy her until she had spoken with her husband. Emily felt sure it was an invitation, but she could not understand why her mother and father should look so serious about it, and spend so much time in consultation, keeping her in suspense. Her anxiety did not escape her mother's eye, and eventually it was that which settled the question.

"You are much happier in your uncle's house than at home, Emily?" her mother asked.

"Oh yes, mamma, it is all so nice and enjoyable."

"And would you like to go on a long visit—to stay always, in fact?"

"They would not want me for always, I expect, but it would be very nice if they did."

"Yes, they do, Emily. Your uncle asks us to let you live with your consins. They are going to be educated at home, and it would not cost any more for you to learn with them, and you would get on better. Your papa and I are sorry to lose you, and we should not let you go if you did not wish it yourself."

"Oh, I do, mamma, I should like it, of all things."

"Then as soon as we can get you fitted out you will go."

Emily kissed her mother and skipped out of the room singing a merry tune. Mrs. Hendon sighed. It was hard, after all the love and kindness she had lavished on her daughter, that she should be so willing to leave her; but it was not that only which depressed her. She grieved over the selfishness that her child manifested. There was no concern about the duties of home, nor any sign of regret that her absence would entail an additional burden on her mother. Emily evidently thought only of her own ease and comfort, and that was a disposition which the truly Christian mother could not but deplore.

"I have a letter of inquiry," said her aunt, some few months after the girl had taken up her new life; "I think you should answer it yourself. Your mother is anxious about you; she says it is a long time since you wrote."

"Yes, aunt, I will write to-day. I meant to have written last week, but I forgot it," Emily answered.

The duty, like all postponed duties, had becomeirksome, and, in spite of her promise, it was again delayed, as it would do just as well to write the next day. But before the letter was written an urgent summons came from Mr. Hendon calling his daughter home on account of her mother's sudden and serious illness. Emily set out immediately, reproaching herself by the way for her long negligence. Two weeks later she returned, wearing mourning garb. Her mother was dead. The end had been so rapid that she had breathed her last before Emily arrived. "Her last thought was of you," her father told her, "and her last words a prayer for you."

The girl's heart was touched at last, and it seemed as if it could not be healed. For the first time she realized what her mother's love for her had been, and as she thought of it, she saw her own conduct in its true light. Her aunt and cousins tried to comfort her, but no words could reconcile her to herself. The bitter, unavailing tears would fall, and she would seek her own room to weep here and bemoan her unutility in solitude.

One day her little cousin Louisa, seeking her through the house, found her seated on her bed pouring out her soul in tears. "You must not cry so, Emily dear," she said. "Aunt is in heaven; mamma says so. She is happy now, and mamma says it is wrong to grieve so much."

"O Louisa, you do not know," Emily said, through her tears. "I cannot be comforted. She loved me so, and I—I thought of myself only. I was glad to leave her when I ought to have stayed with her, to help her and cheer her, and when I was away I forgot her. Oh! if only she had lived for me to see her again to tell her I was sorry; but she died thinking I had forgotten her. Nothing can ever undo that. I can never forgive myself, and she can never forgive me now."

Emily Hendon Refuses to be Comforted.

In after years many had reason to bless Emily Hendon for her ministrations, and all who knew her spoke of her unselfishness and her readiness to sacrifice herself for others; but few knew how painfully she had learned the lesson of her life, nor how bitter was the cup of unavailing sorrow that she had drunk to the dregs.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 48.)

First Bloodshed.

TOWARD the end of February the reckless planters of Weston's settlement began to dread the consequences of their total neglect of the duties of the season, and having wasted their whole seed-corn, they again applied to the Indians to furnish the needful supply; but all their approaches were met with sullen and determined refusal. They would neither sell nor barter to them, nor enter into any friendly interchange of good services; though now, when too late, the new settlers would gladly have won their favor by the most humiliating concessions. Disappointed by such obstinate rejection of all friendly overtures, the most unscrupulous of them resolved to take what they wanted by force.

Fortunately for their more honest neighbors at Plymouth, it was thought advisable to consult with the latter ere committing themselves to so perilous a course. "Some," says Winslow, "more honest-minded, advised John Sanders, their overseer, first to write to Plymouth; and if the Governor advised him the same, he might the better do it. This course was well liked, and an Indian was sent with all speed with a letter to our Governor, the contents whereof were to this effect: that being in great want, and their people daily falling down, he intended to go to Munhiggen, where was a plantation of Sir Ferdinando Gorges, to buy bread from the ships that came thither a-fishing, with the first opportunity of wind, but knew not how the colony would be preserved till his return. He had used all means both to buy and borrow of Indians, whom he knew to be stored, and he thought maliciously withheld it, and therefore was resolved to take it by violence, and only waited the return of the messenger, which he desired should be hastened, craving his advice therein, promising also to make restitution afterward. The Governor, upon the receipt hereof, asked the messenger what store of corn they had, as if he had intended to buy of them; who answered, very little more than that they reserved for seed, having already spared all they could.

"Forthwith the Governor and his assistant sent for many of us to advise with them herein; who, after serious consideration, no way approving of this intended course, the Governor answered his letter, and caused many of us to set our hands thereto; the contents whereof were to this purpose: We altogether disliked their intendment, as being against the law of God and nature, showing how it would cross the worthy ends and proceedings of the King's Majesty, and his honorable Council for this place, both in respect of the peaceable enlarging of his Majesty's dominions, and also of the propagation of the knowledge and law of God, and the glad tidings of salvation, which we and they were bound to seek, and were not to use such means as would breed a distaste in the savages against our persons and professions, assuring them their master would incur much blame hereby, neither could they answer the same.

"For our own parts, our case was almost the same with theirs, having but a small quantity of corn left, and were enforced to live on ground-nuts, clams, muscles, and such other things as naturally the country afforded, and which did and would maintain strength, and were easy to be gotten; all which things they had in great abundance, yea, oysters also, which we wanted; and therefore necessity could not be said to constrain them thereunto. Moreover, that they should consider, if they proceeded therein, all they could so get would maintain them but a small time, and then they must perforce seek their food abroad; which, having made the Indians their enemies, would be very difficult for them, and therefore much better to begin a little the sooner, and so continue their peace; upon which course they might with good conscience desire and expect the blessing of God; whereas on the contrary they could not.

"Also that they should consider their own weakness, being most swelled and diseased in their bodies, and therefore the more unlikely to make their party good against them, and that they should not expect help from us in that or any the like unlawful actions. Lastly, that howsoever some of them might escape, yet the principal agents should expect no better than the gallows, whensoever any special officer should be sent over by his Majesty, or his Council for New England, which we expected, and who would undoubtedly call them to account for the same. These were the contents of our answer, which was directed to their whole colony. Another particular letter our Governor sent to John Sanders, showing how dangerous it would be for him, above all others, seeing he was their leader and commander; and therefore in friendly manner advised him to desist."

The threats, more than the honest warnings of Governor Bradford, induced the unprincipled agents of Weston to abandon their project; but this only delayed without averting the dangers in which their vices had involved the whole English colonists of New England. The exasperated Indians had resolved to drive from their shores the base miscreants who alternately excited their anger and contempt by meanness and faithless dishonesty. Early in March the Governor obtained undoubted intelligence of a widespread conspiracy among the Indians, which was directed indiscriminately against all who bore the hated badge of the Pale Faces.

On the 23d of March, 1623, the whole colonists of Plymouth were assembled in public court, the Governor laid before them the evidence he had received of the Indian conspiracy, and after grave declaration, the unanimous voice of the Pilgrims declared for war.

It was a momentous era in the history of the colony, and the pious Pilgrims keenly felt the necessity which thus compelled them to become the emissaries of death to those whom they had desired to visit as the messengers of eternal life, and the ministers of the Prince of Peace. "This business," says one of the colonists, "was no less troublesome than grievous, especially because we knew no means to deliver our own countrymen and preserve ourselves than by returning the malicious and cruel purposes of these Indians upon their own heads, and causing them to fall into the same pit they had digged for others; though it much grieved us to shed the blood of those whose good we ever intended and aimed at as a principal object in all our proceedings."

It cannot but have added to the grief with which they viewed the dire necessity of war, that they must have felt how much more their own countrymen were the cause of it than the Indians, against whom they now sought to defend them; though probably at that time they had been only very partially informed of the unprincipled dealings of these men with their Indian neighbors. Had not these Pilgrim Fathers forsaken the Old World, parted from many friends, and bade a sorrowful farewell to their native land, under the influence of a "great hope and inward zeal of laying some good foundation for the propagating and advancing the gospel of the kingdom of Christ in these remote parts of the world; yea, though they should be but as stepping-stones unto others for performing of so great a work"—and now in their third year it had come to this. They were to fight with the weapons of this world, and meet the Indian hand to hand in the deadly struggle; not tenderly warning him of an hereafter, and whispering in his ear the name of Him who hath made of one blood all that dwell upon the earth, but hurrying him more swiftly to the dark and hopeless grave, whither he was already hastening—

"No reckoning made, but sent to his account
With all his imperfections on his head."

Well might their good pastor, Robinson, write from Leyden when he learned of the first Indians who had perished by their hands, "How happy a thing had it been that you had converted some before you killed any!"

It must be confessed that this Indian war is the most painful incident recorded in these annals of the Pilgrim Fathers. It is not because these brave pioneers of civilization have taken up arms to defend their hearths against the invasion of the savage that we regard their first warfare with sorrowful regret. We are rather called upon to admire the calm and unchanging courage which this little handful of men displayed when menaced by so merciless and powerful a foe. But there was certainly more of the guile of the serpent in their military tactics than can well be reconciled with the high and holy calling in obedience to which they reared their home near the rude wigwams of the benighted Indian. It was resolved, in the deliberations at New Plymouth, that they should meet guile with guile, and "as it was impossible to deal with the Indians upon open defiance, to take them in such traps as they lay for others."

Captain Standish set out accordingly with eight companions, under the pretence of trading, as at other times. They saw sufficient evidence of the enmity with which the Indians regarded them, and the Indians, in like manner, notwithstanding the friendly guise which Captain Standish still deemed it prudent to assume, soon began to suspect they were discovered. One of them, on his return to the Indian settlement, reported that "he saw by the Captain's eyes he was angry in his heart." Captain Standish, however, still watched his time, until, having got the chief leaders of the threatened conspiracy together in one of the Indian wigwams, he suddenly gave the word to his men, secured the door, and springing upon Pecksuot, one of the fiercest of the Indians, he stabbed him to the heart with his own knife.

Seven Indians in all perished by their hands, but though thus fierce in the deadly struggle to which they felt themselves driven by the stern dictates of necessity, they showed a becoming moderation in what followed. They dismissed the women who had fallen into their hands, refusing to spoil them of their beaver coats, or to meddle with any of the Indian property. The whole party returned safely to Plymouth, to the great joy of the colonists, bringing with them the head of Wituwamat, an Indian sachem who had breathed against them the most deadly vengeance, and spoken of their leaders with open contempt. This barbarous trophy was set up on the fort as a terror to their foes.

One of them who had been seized and kept in irons during the absence of Captain Standish and his party, was released and commanded to bear this message from the Governor to his sachem: "That for our parts it never entered into our hearts to take such a course with them, till their own treachery enforced us thereunto, and therefore they might thank themselves for their own overthrow; yet since he had begun, if again by any the like courses he did provoke him, his country should not hold him; for he would never suffer him or his to rest in peace till he had utterly consumed them; and therefore should take this as a warning; further, that he should send to Patuxet three Englishmen (of Weston's colony) he had, and not kill them; also that he should not spoil the pale and houses at Wichaguscusset; and that this messenger should either bring the English, or an answer, or both; promising his safe return."

"This message was delivered, and the party would have returned with an answer, but was at first dissuaded by them, whom afterward they would, but could not, persuade to come to us. At length, though long, a woman came and told us, that Obatakiest was sorry that the English were killed before he heard from the Governor; otherwise he would have sent them. Also she said, he would fain make his peace again with us, but none of his men durst come to treat about it, having forsaken his dwelling, and daily removed from place to place, expecting when we would take further vengeance on him."

"Concerning those other people that intended to join with the Massacheuseuks against us, though we never went against any of them, yet this sudden and unexpected execution, together with the just judgment of God upon their guilty consciences, hath so terrified and amazed them, as in like manner they forsook their houses, running to and fro like men distracted, living in swamps and other desert places, and so brought manifold diseases amongst themselves, whereof very many are dead; as Canacum, the sachem of Manomet, Aspinet, the sachem of Nauset, and Ianough, sachem of Mat-tachiest."

"This sachem in his life, in the midst of these distractions, said the God of the English was offended with them, and would destroy them in his anger; and certainly it is strange to hear how many of late have died, and still daily die amongst them. Neither is there any likelihood it will easily cease; because through fear they set little or no corn, which is the staff of life, and without which they cannot long preserve health and strength. From one of these places a boat was sent with presents to the Governor, hoping thereby to work their peace; but the boat was cast away, and three of the persons drowned, not far from our plantation. Only one escaped who durst not come to us, but returned; so as none of them dared come amongst us."

Thus complete had been the victory of the Plymouth colonists, accomplished by such slight and seemingly inadequate means. But what, meanwhile, had been the fate of the wretched band of adventurers whose crimes and folly had led to such results? The dishonest speculator—who had faithlessly sought by means of this plantation to secure for himself the gains which he had become bound long before to share with the Pilgrim Fathers who first sailed in the Mayflower—came shortly afterward, disguised, like a guilty coward, to learn of the prosperity of his new colony, "who being all able men, had boasted of their strength and what they would bring to pass, in comparison with the people at Plymouth, who had many women, children, and weak ones with them."

But the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. The weak ones were still there, strong in their honest virtue and their simple trust in the good providence of God; but the settlement of Wessagusset was utterly deserted and desolate. Some had been hanged by their comrades for their crimes, more had perished by the Indian's knife, or fled to escape just vengeance, and the few that survived were indebted for their safety to the hospitable shelter of their despised and cruelly wronged neighbors.

Weston himself reached the shores of America, only to receive good at the hands of those on whom he had been the means of bringing so many evils; and he showed himself the worthy originator of such a band of profligate and faithless adventurers as had been thus speedily cast out from New England. "Shortly after Mr. Weston's people went to the eastward," says Governor Bradford, "he comes there himself with some of the fishermen, under another name and the disguise of a blacksmith; where he hears the ruin of his plantation, and getting a shallop, with a man or two, comes on to see how things are; but in a storm is cast away in the bottom of the bay between Pascataquak and Merrimack River, and hardly escapes with his life. Afterwards he falls into the hands of the Indians, who strip him of his clothes to his shirt. At length he gets to Pascataquak, borrows a suit of clothes, finds means to come to Plymouth, and desires to borrow some beaver of us. Notwithstanding our straits, yet in consideration of his necessity, we let him have one hundred and seventy odd pounds of beaver, with which he goes to the eastward, stays his small ship and some of his men, buys provisions, and fits himself, which is the foundation of his future courses; and yet he never repaid us anything save reproaches, and became our enemy on all occasions."

The entire history of these rival settlements furnishes a most eloquent commentary on the true elements of a nation's strength. It seems as if a great experiment had been tried on the shores of New England, to demonstrate the fact that virtue and true piety are the surest elements of national greatness.

Returning spring once more brought to the Pilgrim colonists of New England fresh privations and sorrows. Their carefully husbanded stores, which would have sufficed for their own frugal housekeeping, had been generously squandered on the thankless settlers of Weston's colony. They had encroached even on the stores for seed, in order to minister to their necessities; and when the month of April arrived, they were compelled to abandon all other labor in order to get the seed into the ground, though at the time they had none left to furnish bread for their present necessities, and were frequently compelled to betake themselves to the seashore, and gather the shell-fish cast up by the tide, as the only means of furnishing their table with a meal. During the previous seasons they had sown from the public stock and gathered in a common harvest, but now it was resolved to adopt a method which should distinguish between the idle and industrious, and leave each family dependent on the exertions of its members. A portion of land was allotted to each individual—land being reserved for the maintenance of public officers, fishermen, and others, whose services were demanded for the general good.

The colonists resumed the labors of the field with renewed energy and zeal. The ground was speedily prepared, and sown with seed; the sun smiled above, and genial showers watered the earth, filling their hearts with thankfulness in the hopes of future plenty. So it continued till the close of May. But new trials awaited them. "It pleased God, for our further chastisement," says Winslow, "to send a great drought; insomuch as in six weeks after the latter setting there scarce fell any rain; so that the stalk of what was first set began to send forth the ear, before it came to half growth, and that which was later was not like to yield any at all, both blade and stalk hanging the head, and changing the color in such manner as we judged it utterly dead. Our beans also ran not up according to their wonted manner, but stood at a stay, many being parched away, as though they had been scorched before the fire. Now were our hopes overthrown, and we discouraged, our joy being turned into mourning."

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for January:

Rev. W. E. Christmas's Prophetic Tour in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick (with portrait).
Characteristics of the 1,000-Year Millennium—A General View: By Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.
Signs of the Last Day. Sermon by Martin Luther.
Directions for the Lord's People. By Henry Meymott.
The Present Truth. By Rev. A. G. Gordon.
Daniel's 2,300 Days. By Mr. McLeod.
The Coming Colossal Conflict.
Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, or very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. L. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

60 SALARY. $10 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment at home or traveling. No soliciting. Despatching and making collections. No Postal fee. Address with stamp, HAFER & CO., Pious, O.

If you have a COLD or COUGH, acute or leading to CONSUMPTION, SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME AND SODA

IS SURE CURE FOR IT.

This preparation contains the stimulating properties of the Hypophosphites and fine Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. Used by physicians all the world over. It is as palatable as milk. Three times as efficacious as plain Cod Liver Oil. A perfect Emulsion, better than all others made. For all forms of Wasting Diseases, Bronchitis, CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, and as a Flesh Producer there is nothing like SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is sold by all Druggists. Let no one by profuse explanation or impudent entreaty induce you to accept a substitute.

SEVERE INFLUENZA, OR "LA GRIPPE" ATTACK OF

ways leaves the System in a -BOVININE- The TONIC and NUTRIENT, will alleviate a weak and Exhausted Condition. e feeling of lassitude and depression and tone up both body and mind to their normal state. Ask your Physician about it. C. M. HURLBURT, M. D., of South Dennis, Mass., writes: I am convinced that for every person requiring a gentle stimulant, combined with food of a highly nutritive quality, I have never found an article so eminently fitted to fill that place as your BOVININE."

We claim to be one of the largest growers and importers of Flower Seeds in America. In order to introduce us as widely as possible we make this UNPRECEDENTED OFFER. For 25c, in postage stamps or money will send by mail one pkt. each of the following Valuable Seeds: New Diamond Aster, very handsome colors; Mixed Balsams, immense size, double as a rose; Calliopis, Golden variety, new, very showy; New Hybrid Gaillardia, unrivaled for beauty; Phlox Drummondii Grandiflora London, 15 distinct shades; GIANT SHOW PANSIES, immense size, rich and velvety; New Mammoth Verbena, 12 choice colors; New Giant Zinnia, largest in the world; 10 Seeds of ANNUAL NUT-BOLT PLANT, great value, never before offered; Amaranthus Gibbosus, highly ornamental; one Beautiful Everlasting Flower, 12 full-size pkts., with directions for culture, for 25c. 5 Collections, $1.00. Catalogue with each order. SAMUEL WILSON, Mechanicsville, Bucks Co., Pa.

SCOTT'S FLOWERS

41 Years' Experience in ROSES and SPECIALTIES in PLANTS, BULBS, growing our strong and reliable Rare Novelties of great beauty. Handsome illustrated Catalogue for 1890, fully describing many Beautiful New Flowers, sent FREE to any address. Send for it now. ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa.

Rev. T. DeWITT TALMAGE'S

THUNDER GEMS, containing 30 of his best Sermons, vices and a full History of his life and Church, including the burning of the Tabernacle, Oct., 1889. 700 pages, 30 full-page illustrations, including a splendid portrait of Talmage. Low price and great value. $1.50. Bound in cloth, $1.50. Russia, $2.00. 50 per cent. discount to live agents, $0.50 cents for Prospectus and package of circulars, go to work. Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY. To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 30 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast, or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest Inducement ever offered to get us for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Soda. For full particulars address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., O. Box 283, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE. A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Persons in position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full particulars address, Central Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill. or Cincinnati, O.

LADIES 100,000 DEMOREST CORSETS FREE 100,000 SHOULDER BRACES FREE YOUR CHOICE. 100,000 STOCKING SUPPORTERS FREE

A MARVELOUS OFFER

By A Reliable House!

Every lady has heard of MME. DEMOREST. Her name is a by word in every house in the land. Her celebrated Patterns have been in use over 40 years. We are the publishers of the well-known publication, MME. DEMOREST'S Illustrated Monthly Fashion Journal and we wish to increase its circulation 200,000 copies during the next 90 days, and to that end we will give away to new subscribers

100,000 Demorest Celeb'd Corsets FREE "Shoulder Braces" FREE "Stocking Supporters" FREE

The MME. DEMOREST ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY FASHION JOURNAL is a 36 page paper, beautifully illustrated, covering every possible field of Fashion: Fancy Work, Home Decorations, Cooking, etc., each department being under the special supervision of the best known contributors. It is besides replete with matters of interest to mothers, and is furthermore filled with illustrations, stories, sketches, humor and matters of general interest.

We know the Demorest Fashion and Sewing Machine Co. to be a thoroughly reliable firm and advise our readers to accept their offer.—EDITOR.

FREE!

FINE AMERICAN JEAN! Beautiful Ornamental Stitching. Perfect Fit.

Every line of reading is carefully guarded by an editor, who receives $5,000 per annum, and nothing is published in its columns but the best and purest reading matter. It may be admitted to any household and your children may read it as well as you. It numbers among its subscribers the wives of thousands of clergymen throughout the country. It is the best Fashion paper published in the world. It tells you "What to Wear." "When and How to Wear It." It gives you all the latest styles in Ladies' Hats, Bonnets, etc. It is always abreast of the times, and everything within its pages is new and original. It also contains the latest Fashion news from abroad by our special London and Paris correspondents.

HOW TO OBTAIN FREE The Mme. Demorest Corset

Send us 50 Cents for one year's subscription to our JOURNAL and 25 cents additional to pay postage and packing, 75 CENTS in all, and we will mail you one of these handsome CORSETS FREE.

How To Obtain A PAIR OF SHOULDER BRACES AND Stocking Supporters FREE

Send us 50 Cents for one year's subscription to our JOURNAL, and 25 Cents additional to pay postage and packing, 75 Cents in all, and we will mail you these two articles, One Pair of SHOULDER BRACES and One Pair of STOCKING SUPPORTERS FREE!

REMEMBER THERE IS NO HUMBUG ABOUT THESE OFFERS.

We do exactly as we guarantee. Our house has been established for over 40 years, and we can refer you to any Commercial Agency, Bank, Express Office or Business Firm in the land. Make all remittances either by Draft, Postal Note, Money Order, or Registered Letter. When postal note is not procurable, send stamps. Address all communications to THE DEMOREST FASHION & SEWING MACHINE CO., 17 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK.

This offer should be taken advantage of at once as we will give away no more than 100,000 of each article. SHOW THIS TO YOUR FRIENDS. IT WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

We know the Demorest Fashion and Sewing Machine Co. to be a thoroughly reliable firm and advise our readers to accept their offer.—EDITOR.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS EFFECTUAL THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blisters on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c. THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES. This is no fiction. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one Box of these Pills, and they will be acknowledged to be a Wonderful Medicine.—"Worth a guinea a box."

BEECHAM'S PILLS, taken as directed, will quickly restore females to complete health. For a WEAK STOMACH; IMPAIRED DIGESTION; DISORDERED LIVER; they ACT LIKE MAGIC:—a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs, Strengthening the muscular System; restoring long-lost Complexion; bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. These are "facts" admitted by thousands, in all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PATENT MEDICINE IN THE WORLD. Full directions with each Box.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England. Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN & CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York. Sole Agents for the United States, who (inquire first), if your druggist does not keep them, WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, 25 CENTS A BOX.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern."—"An effective weapon."—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History facts and data.—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every faithful preacher and Christian worker needs one. 316 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Twenty-Seventh Edition now Ready.

THE KING'S SON;

OR, A MEMOIR OF BILLY BRAY.

By F. W. BOURNE.

The New York Christian Advocate says: "Of Billy Bray, the famous Methodist preacher of Cornwall, Eng., it may be truly said 'he yet speaketh,' although he has been dead more than twenty years." It is reported that at least six hundred persons are known to have been led to Christ by reading his biography. These converts are found in all parts of the world, and come from almost every position in life. Noted infidels, eminent Unitarians, and cultivated scientists, as well as obscure and unlearned men, have been drawn into the kingdom of grace by this fascinating story. The most noted preacher of the age frequently finds the striking illustrations which enrich his sermons in the Life of Billy Bray."

18mo., Cloth. 119 pp. Price, 50 Cents.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE BLESSING OF SONG.

"What a friend we have in Jesus,"
Sang a little child one day;
And a weary woman listened
To the darlings happy lay.

All her life seemed dark and gloomy,
And her heart was sad with care;
Sweetly rang out baby's treble,
"All our sins and griefs to bear."

She was pointing out the Saviour,
Who could carry every woe;
And the one who sadly listened Needed that dear Helper so!

Sin and grief were heavy burdens
For a fainting soul to bear;
But the baby, singing, bade her
"Take it to the Lord in prayer."

With a simple, trusting spirit,
Weak and worn she turned to God,
Asking Christ to take her burden,
As He was the sinner's Lord.

Jesus was the only refuge,
He could take her sin and care,
And He blessed the weary woman
When she came to Him in prayer.

And the happy child, still singing,
Little knew she had a part
In God's wondrous work of bringing Peace unto a troubled heart.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Rheumatism usually attacks the back and shoulders; and the joints at the knees, ankles, and hips are sometimes affected. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures rheumatism by purifying the blood.

CHRISTIAN WORK —IN— MEXICO.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the address of Bishop H. C. RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE
AUTOGRAF OF
OF
THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN'S
HARTSHORN'S

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shots at Sunday Targets, by J. A. M. 25c. Quick sales. Big pay. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors & 100 best poems, 10c. 102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.

WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell "The Christian's Legacy." One young man started on the 19th of December and ordered 59 copies before the 31st of December. 102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.

SHORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught by mail or personally. Situations procured all pupils when competent. Send for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you. Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all. We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS, for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only. Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime-Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT we send to all parts of the U. S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Laid to bind bottom of dress.

THE GOODS are delivered to you all carrying charges PREPAID

ENNIS

CALIFORNIA EXCURSIONS

In Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars, via IRON MOUNTAIN ROUTE, Texas and Pacific and Southern Pacific Rys., leave Chicago and St. Louis Jan. 15th and 29th, Feb. 12th and 26th, March 12th and 26th, and April 9th, 1890. One way rate from Chicago, $17.50. St. Louis, $12.50. These sleepers are provided with complete berth outfits and separate wash rooms for ladies and gentlemen at very small extra cost. Porter in charge of each car and a special agent of the company with each excursion. Tickets on sale at all principal points in U. S. and Canada. For full particulars address any of the company's agents, or J. E. ENNIS, Exc. Mgr., 199 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL
AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

Almost as palatable as cream. It can be taken with pleasure by delicate persons and children, who, after using it, are very fond of it. It assimilates with the food, increases the flesh and appetite, builds up the nervous system, restores energy to mind and body, creates new, rich, and pure blood,—in fact, rejuvenates the whole system.

FLESH, NERVE, BLOOD, BRAIN.

This preparation is far superior to all other preparations of Cod-liver Oil; it has many imitators, but no equals. The results following its use are its best recommendations. Be sure, as you value your health, and get the genuine. Manufactured only by Dr. A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Druggists.

PRICE We Sell DIRECT to FAMILIES
PIANOS ORGANS
$150 to $1500 $35 to $500.
Absolutely Perfect!
Sent for trial in your own home before you buy. Local Agents must sell inferior instruments or charge double what we ask. Catalogue free. MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO., 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

Parturition Without Pain.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godley's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1. HOLBROOK CO., 25 Bond St., New York.

A Gem For The Little Folks.

THE STORY OF JESUS

For Little Children.
By MRS. G. E. MORTON.
Fully Illustrated.

12mo, 316 Pages,
Cloth, Printed in Colors,
$1.00, post-paid.

"Told in simple words and a very handsome book. How wonderful that the biography of the Son of the Highest is better adapted than any other to be told to little children. Angels study it; devils dive into it; babes love it. Blessed be the Story of Jesus."—C. H. SPURGEON.

"The demand for a fourth edition of this pleasant and instructive work shows that it has already met with considerable favor. Planned something on the same lines as the 'Peep of Day,' several illustrations and an attractive binding add to its value as a Sunday-school prize or children's reward book."—The Book-seller.

"A difficult task well executed in simple, but not childish language, the 'old story' is told once more. The holiness of our Lord, and the great object of His life are kept in prominence, while his intercourse with all classes is described in a life-like way. We heartily recommend the book, which is improved by neat wood-cuts."—The Christian.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

Silks and Velvets, 18

We have commenced our Janu Sale of Silks and Velvets by offer 5,000 yards of Rich Fancy Velvets $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, and $3.00 yard. The original prices were $2.40, $5.00, and $7.00.

Also, 20,000 yards of Novelty S from $1.00 to $2.50 per yard; t are reduced to less than one-half regular prices.

James McCreery & C
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stom FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS

Books—NEW ISSUE

every week. Catalogue, 96 pag sent free; lowest prices ever kno Alden's Ideal Revolving Book Case (the two si are alike), prices $6.00 to $10.00; holds 125 to 150 volumes the average size. No other article of furniture of equal c will equally adorn a cultured home.

CYCLOPEDIAS

The following is an interesting comparison of Contents a Price of leading Cyclopedias:

	No. of Vols.	Pages.	Words.	Cost.	Agent Wanted
Appleton's	16	13,108	15,928,000	$90.00
Johnson's	8	6,983	10,962,310	48.00
Britannica	24	29,940	26,006,100	120.00
Alden's Manifold	40	25,600	14,080,000	30.00

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA is the BEST for popu use, as well as cheapest. Specimen pages free. Cycloped taken in exchange. Mention this paper when you write.

JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New Yo 212 Wabash Ave., Chicago; 73 Whitehall St., ATLANTA.

SEE SAMPLE BOOKS at the office of this paper, where you can, if you wish, le your order. By clubbing many orders cost of transportation may be partially save

THE NATIONAL STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA. A Volume for Universal Reference

THE NATIONAL STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA is a valuable book for popular use, compiled by competent editors, after consultation of the best authorities, printed from new, large, clear type, and is bound in cloth. It contains information on every conceivable subject, and its reliability has been assured by the most careful preparation. It is of greatest use in answering the ten thousand questions that constantly arise in regard to dates, places, persons, incidents, statistics, etc., etc. It contains

700 Pages and 20,000 Articles

Pertaining to questions of—

Agriculture, Astronomy, Architecture, Geography, Botany, Chemistry, Engineering, Geography, Geology, History, Horticulture, Literature, Mechanics, Medicine, Mythology, Natural History, Physiology, and the various Arts and Sciences.

Complete in One Volume, With Over 1,000 Illustrations

This is an entirely new work, unlike any of the old and the only ENCYCLOPEDIA ever published sold for less than five dollars: it is indispensable to all who desire a work of reference for every department of human knowledge.

This ENCYCLOPEDIA will be sent, postpaid, for $1.00. Five books for $4.00. Get four friends to order one each, and you will get your book free. J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

STENOGRAPHY.

TYPE-WRITING.
The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching: long established: hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlet free. Write or call. VERMILYER'S COLLEGE, 816 Broadway, New York.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AND THE HOLY WAR.

A New Large Type Edition, Illustrated with Marginal Notes and References, printed from new plates, and beautifully bound in rich English muslin, with bevelled edges and gilt back and side. This is the complete edition of the Pilgrim's Progress, The Holy War, and a Memoir of John Bunyan, all bound in one volume of over 1000 pages. Price, $1.50, sent postpaid to address on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, N. Y.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern."—An effective weapon.—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History, facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities reached. Every family, preacher and Christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XIII., No. 5. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. GEORGE M. GORDON, Pioneer Itinerant Missionary in the Punjab.
WHAT IS IN A NAME? A Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH OF JESUS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

DANIEL'S 2,300 DAYS. By Dr. McLeod.
 Heaven-Sent Partridges—The Message of Peace and Goodwill—A Discharged Clerk's Refuge.
DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE: On Sacred Ground—A Visit to Calvary—The Site of Joseph's Sepulchre—Bethlehem—Absalom's Tomb.
PORTRAIT OF RT. REV. RICHARD YOUNG, Bishop of Athabasca.

THE KEY-NOTE OF LIFE. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
 Gems from New Books: A Little Chinese Evangelist—A Girl's Momentous Question.
PICTURE OF A SAMOAN NATIONAL COUNCIL.
HENRY WESTON'S DISCOVERY. (With Illustration.)
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: Their Perils, Pains, and Privations. (Continued.)

THE LATE REV. GEORGE MAXWELL GORDON PIONEER ITINERANT MISSIONARY IN THE PUNJAB—SCENES IN HIS LIFE.

THE LATE REV. G. M. GORDON, M. A., Pilgrim Missionary of the Punjab, India.

Born in 1839—Early School-life—Enters Trinity College in 1857—Death of His Sister, and Its Momentous Result—Ordained in 1862—Serves as Curate to Dr. Marsh—Journey to the East in 1864—Appointed to a London Curacy in 1865—Kindness to Artisans and Aged People—Enters the Foreign Mission Field in 1866—Subsequent Experience and Services—Death in the Afghan Campaign of 1880.

THE story of a singularly beautiful and consecrated life has recently been published, making known to the world a man of true heroism, yet who labored so unostentatiously that but few knew of him while he lived. The characters of such men as he well repay study, and serve as a stimulus to others to engage in the same service. We therefore this week publish a brief sketch of his life, and on the preceding page his portrait and pictures of some incidents in his work.

George Maxwell Gordon was the son of an English sea-captain, and was born August 19, 1839. After a life of service as a missionary in Christ's cause, he died in Afghanistan on August 16, 1880, having nearly completed his forty-first year. In his early youth he frequently expressed the hope that he might be a missionary, but at that time the desire was prompted, not by love of but by the idea that the missionary had opportunities of visiting strange lands, and of seeing birds and beasts in their native freedom, which are seen in other lands only in captivity. When his wish was fulfilled, and he really did go out as a missionary the Holy Spirit had given him new thoughts and motives, and had made the proclamation of the gospel the one business of his life.

The Essence of all Missionary Labor,

Until Gordon was thirteen years old he studied at home with his only sister, and made considerable progress in general and classical knowledge. He then went to a private school, kept by the Rev. Henry Moule, whose sons are the well-known pioneer missionaries of the Church Missionary Society in China. In 1857, when he was eighteen, he entered Trinity College, Cambridge. During the last year of his academical course, he was prostrated by fever, and deprived by death of his much-loved sister, Barbara. The reference he makes to this event is very pathetic. He says: "When I look back at that first and great sorrow I seem to be able, by God's infinite mercy, to date from it a starting-point towards the apprehension of pardon and acceptance through Christ." A year later his mother died.

Gordon had the pleasure early in 1862 of being introduced to the Rev. Dr. Marsh and his gifted daughter, at Beddington. In the following winter by the Bishop of Winchester. This is his own account of it: "To this step I was led by the guiding hand of God in a remarkable way. It seemed that door after door was closed which I would have opened. My desire, first to be a sailor, then a soldier (up to the age of twenty), then a civilian in India, anything, in short, but a clergyman, was overruled by a wise and watchful providence. My acquaintance with Dr. Marsh and his daughter was a great blessing to me. The heavenly calmness of the one, and the bright, ardent faith and the comprehensive love of the other, are pictures which will long live in my recollection. It was no ordinary privilege to see the close of such a life as this dear old patriarch had pursued. Throughout the year and a half which I served as his curate, my interviews with him, which were often at his bed or sofa side, were a refreshment and blessing.

He was Ordained

Very shortly after the death of his friend Dr. Marsh, in 1864, Mr. Gordon took a journey, in company with the present Bishop of Rochester, Dr. Thorold, and the late esteemed Mr. Robert Hanbury, M. P., to the lands of the Bible, which, to a great extent, colored the whole of his after life.

The Missionary Spirit,

it is certain, was developed within him at this time, to a greater extent than ever before, by following in the footsteps of the Divine Missionary to the human race. In 1865 he became curate in the parish of St. Thomas's, London, and here he was associated with an enthusiastic advocate of the Church Missionary Society, the Rev. H. T. Lumsden, and found a many-sided and magnificent field of labor, and a training-ground of the right sort to fit the valiant young soldier of the Cross of Christ, for the still more dangerous and difficult fields of foreign lands, for which God had designed him.

One of Mr. Gordon's first acts in going to London was to invite a score of workmen from his old district of Beddington to spend an afternoon and evening with him at the South Kensington Museum, free of all expense to themselves. He had the great natural gift of making men of all ranks feel at home with him, and humble workmen loved him as a brother. Perhaps the most beautiful trait in his London life was his thoughtful consideration and tender regard for the aged poor.

His Parting Gift

to the aged men and women in the poorhouse was a comfortable arm-chair. "He dragged me," says his fellow-curate and biographer, the Rev. A. Lewis, "to all the furniture and brokers' shops in Marylebone, and would give five or six dollars for a chair. No chair was purchased until both of us had 'proved it' by squatting down, and being unanimous in our opinion that it was perfectly easy, slightly, and not rickety." Many a poor child of God in that almshouse found the comfort of their last days increased by Gordon's thoughtful gift. (See Illustration No. 1.)

In the year 1866 Mr. Gordon offered himself to the Church Missionary Society as an honorary worker, and was accepted. He sailed in the autumn of the same year, and reached Ceylon in December, proceeding thence to Madras, where he devoted himself to the study of the Tamil language. In June, 1867, he was laid low with fever, and the only chance of restored health appeared to lie in a thorough change. Accordingly a sea voyage to Australia was resolved on.

On his return from Australia in January, 1868, Gordon again took up work in the South Indian itinerancy, giving himself with renewed ardor to the study of Tamil, in which he made satisfactory progress, and was soon able to preach the gospel of salvation to the heathen in a very simple manner.

On August 17, 1868, Mr. Gordon was at Masulipatam, when took place. He and his colleague, Mr. Fenn, wishing to visit Kondapilli, they made an excursion thither the previous afternoon on horseback. It was dark before they arrived there, and the road was covered by the overflow of the Kistna, which was in flood after some recent very heavy rains. However, by means of a lantern, carried by a native (see illustration No. 2), they were guided safely to their quarters in the veranda of a deserted barrack, where they spread their mattresses and were soon asleep. Next morning they climbed the heights and awaited the eclipse. Mr. Gordon says in a letter: "About 9 A. M. it began to be manifest that the moon was edging upon the sun. As the shadows deepened on mountain and river, the landscape began to take a strange and unnatural color, as though nature refused to be deceived into the belief that night was approaching. The stars came out (a few of them), the wind fell, and the birds, which had been in anxious consultation about the departing light, hushed their notes, and probably went to roost. When the darkness had lasted about five minutes, there was an almost instantaneous effulgence, which resembled nothing so much as the bursting of a rocket, although far surpassing a rocket in brilliancy. Instantaneous also was the response from mountain, wood, and valley. In another half-hour the sun had resumed his sovereignty as a giant coming out of his chamber and rejoicing as a strong man to run a race. Hundreds of people took occasion to bathe and recite their incantations, but either the suddenness or the darkness frightened them so much that they rushed from the river into the streets in the most headlong terror."

A Total Eclipse of the Sun

A Tour of the Travancore Missions was made by Mr. Gordon and Mr. Fenn in the latter portion of the year 1869. During the winter Gordon's health seriously gave way, inasmuch that he was assured that work in South India was no longer a possibility for him. At this crisis the Bishop of Sydney asked him to become the first Bishop of the new diocese of Rockhampton, in the north of Queensland, but, after prayer for God's guidance in the matter, he determined not to accept it, feeling convinced that God had called him "to be a missionary to the heathen still." The autumn of the year saw him on the voyage home via Hong Kong and San Francisco, he having chosen this long route for the benefit of his health, as well as for the pleasure of travel.

While the missionary was in Travancore he visited the mission station at Trichur, in which ancient place he was much interested, as a stronghold of Papists on the one hand, and of Brahmins on the other. He thus describes in one of his letters home

The Mode of Travelling.

most of his journeys through Travancore being taken in boats. He says: "There are large inland lagoons, called 'back-waters,' running parallel with the sea, and here and there uniting with it along the coast. They are very convenient for traffic, as the primeval forests are dense, and there are no roads. Boats of various kinds ply along these lagoons, from the full-sailed barge down to the little canoe just big enough for one or two men. As our journey was long, and it was an object to get through it quickly, we engaged a cabin-boat with eight or ten rowers, reminding one very much of the Nile 'dahabieh' on a small scale.

"It is a characteristic of sailors of every clime to be tuneful, and those of Travancore form no exception to the rule. They are a good-natured set, and much astonished me by their power of rowing. They seem to think very little of going on for twelve hours at a stretch, with a single very short interval for food. At one point of our route we passed a large Roman Catholic church and convent, and it was curious to see our sailors (who were Roman Catholics) stop their rowing, steer up to the landing-place, and pay their toll to a fat native priest, who was waiting to receive it. (See illustration No. 3.)

By the end of 1870 Mr. Gordon was in England once more, only, however, to remain a short time, the Committee of the Church Missionary Society having accepted an offer which he had made, to join the Rev. T. V. French in his training work at Lahore, in the Punjab. Accordingly the autumn of 1871 again saw him setting his face eastward en route for India via Persia. He also visited Bagdad and Babylon on his way; and having arrived at Bussorah, he embarked on board the Kashmir for Bombay, which was reached on November 17, 1872, and the traveller pursued his way to the Punjab,

His New Field of Labor.

The city of Lahore has become famous in the annals of Christian enterprise in connection with St. John's Divinity School, erected in 1869 in a garden of a Sikh chief, by the Rev. T. V. French. Here young native Christians are trained for evangelistic service, and here Gordon now set himself earnestly to work giving practical expression to the lessons he and Mr. French imparted to the students by going forth into the highways and hedges of the Punjab, accompanied by a native band, himself enduring, and teaching to endure, hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. Preaching to the heathen in the bazaars was carried on regularly; and in spite of much and sometimes violent opposition on the part of Hindus, Brahmins, and Mussulmans much good was done. In 1874 Mr. Gordon renounced the comparative comfort of this home and adopted an itinerant life, becoming that by which he is best known, both to Europeans and natives.

An Anglo-Indian Fakir.

He often wandered on foot, without a single companion, and, like his Divine Master, he frequently did not know where at night he would lay his head. The new work which Gordon had undertaken was named by him the Jhilam Itinerancy. The Jhilam is one of the five great rivers of the Punjab, and it is from this, and not from the town of the same name upon its banks, that the new mission was called. The river wanders through the country at the foot of the Salt Range of mountains, until it joins, and is lost in, the Indus, which swallows up all the five rivers of the country. There are five important towns upon its banks. Jhilam, Pind Dádan Khán, Bhera, Sháhpur and Jhang. Gordon's plan was to place native Christian evangelists in each one of these, making Pind Dádan Khán, the central mission station from which all the work would be supervised. Since his death no attempt has been made to carry out the excellent scheme.

The Afghan Campaign of 1880

still lives vividly in the memory of those who followed the course of events. In that year Ayub Khan marched in the direction of Kandahar with a large force. He was met by the British with inferior numbers about forty miles from the city, and the battle of Maiwand was fought, and the British defeated. Those who escaped slaughter fled to Kandahar, and, with the garrison, were shut up and besieged until General Roberts retrieved the prestige of the British name by one of the most dashing marches that history records, at length gaining a brilliant victory with his travel-worn men, capturing all the guns of the Afghan troops, and setting free the besieged.

in the morning of August 16, before Roberts and the beleaguered troops in Kandahar deterred to make a sortie to the neighboring village Jehi Khwaja. The Afghans had planted some there, which caused great annoyance to the British, and it was felt that they must be silenced. Gordon was acting as chaplain of the British troops and did not go out with the party, but was living the wounded as they were brought in off the field. Whilst there he heard that there were wounded men lying in a ziyarat or shrine, some two hundred or three hundred yards outside the gate. He got a dooly and bearers, and went to this spot for the purpose of bringing them in. On arrival at this ziyarat he found that there were wounded there, but that they were lying at a distance of thirty yards further on. Another man was with him, and he told Gordon that it was quite impossible to go on as the fire was too hot. He was not, however, to be dissuaded from his humane purpose. He was about to set out when he was struck by a bullet, which passed through his side and entered his side.

In the Hospital Within the Walls,

Fatally Injuring Him.
Illustration No. 4.) The dooly which he took for others brought him in. The Rev. A. G. Talmage, who was also in Kandahar, writes: "I soon saw his case was hopeless. At first he said, 'I am so badly wounded as some, and they have not consolation in Christ and His promises that I need.' A little later he knew that he could not recover; but he was perfectly resigned and contented. Several times asked him if he had any messages, he said nothing, beyond a few instructions to his servants. He lived such a God-fearing life that was quite prepared to meet death. He passed quietly the same afternoon about 3:30, and we buried him in the evening with the other officers."

Illustration No. 5.) On that sad day we lost many brave men; but there was not one so universally regretted as Gordon. When the siege began he was a wounded colonel, "How fortunate I am to be here, where I can be of some use." And all that he was giving up his life in the performance of his voluntary duty. He and I had become firm friends, and his loss I now feel keenly—and I am not only I, but the wounded too, miss him."

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

On Sacred Ground.

Dr. Talmage and his party issued from their hotel in Jerusalem, on the morning after their arrival, to look upon the scenes identified with the life of the Saviour, and to go over the very ground which His red feet had trodden. The first place visited was the hill pointed out as the scene of His cruel death.

"We stayed there until afternoon," says the historian of the party, "deeply moved by the awful associations of the spot. Before leaving, Dr. Talmage said the hours he had spent on the hill Calvary were to him the most solemn and overwhelming of all his life. There was the centre from which the continents had been touched, and from which the world would yet be moved. To him it was the most sacred place on earth."

"The reader is aware that within the medley of buildings known as the Church of the Holy Sepulchre are shown what are claimed to be the scenes of the death of Jesus, His burial, and resurrection. Here we visited is called sometimes the new Golgotha. It is situated without the city walls. After a careful examination and mature consideration, many eminent men, among them the late General Gordon, believe it to be the real

Site of the Crucifixion.

Dr. Talmage evidently concurred in the opinion. It stands immediately opposite the Damascus Gate. No other place in or near Jerusalem fully answers to the description in the Bible as the place of Jesus' execution. Its shape unquestionably resembles that of a skull. As Dr. Talmage said: "A man need but feel the shape of his ownanium to be fully satisfied that this hill is the place of the skull." A rough outline sketch of the hill shows that it resembles the outline of a skull as one goes another. Standing on the hill, one is excited to the view of all passers-by. "Look yonder," said Dr. Talmage, pointing to some huge cracks that seemed as if they had been torn asunder by an earthquake; "there are the seams in the very rocks that may have been rent at the Crucifixion, and there is the very road along which the people passed 'wagging their heads.'" Nearly all the archaeologists in Jerusalem now agree in the opinion that this is the exact place of the Crucifixion.

The Sepulchre.

"After leaving Golgotha we went to the cave which is supposed to have been the tomb which Joseph of Arimathea gave for the burial of the Saviour. It is situated in a garden near by, and almost at the foot of Golgotha. This tomb was uncovered in the course of some excavations about three years ago. It was recognized immediately, by people capable of forming an opinion on the subject, as fulfilling the conditions of the narrative given in the gospels of the temporary resting-place of the Saviour's body. The tomb is the only one in or near Jerusalem to enter which it is necessary to stoop, and in this respect also it corresponds with the description of the evangelists. Dr. Talmage read the narrative from his Bible, and piecing together the details there given respecting the tomb, came to the conclusion that the archaeologists were right in identifying this as the spot in which the body of Jesus was laid. Dr. Talmage inquired whether it was possible to buy ground so hallowed, and consecrate it to the Christian Church at large, but was informed that as part of the land had been used by the Mussulmans as a burial-ground it would never be sold."

"During our stay in Jerusalem we noticed that though it is a city of forty thousand inhabitants, it has not a well within its walls, and the water used is either rain-water kept from the last rainy season, some six months ago, or water carried in skins of animals by men or women, donkeys or camels, from wells more or less distant. Another peculiarity is that with thousands of houses Jerusalem has not one chimney, and the traveller who, chilled by exposure or the humidity of its vault-like dwellings, needs artificial heat, must be content with the poor comfort afforded by a brazier of live coals, the substitute for stoves in the city. Our next point of interest in this most interesting journey was which may be reached in two hours from Jerusalem, when the journey is made without deviation. Our guide, however, thought it better to show us Solomon's Pools than to pursue a direct course to the place of our Lord's nativity. Accordingly we visited these wonderful specimens of skilful engineering, which are even at this day the admiration of the world. Probably no other specimen of all the other architectural creations referred in the Old Testament is so well preserved as these gigantic pools, which the wisest of the Hebrew monarchs built for the purpose of insuring a bountiful supply of water for his gardens. They are now nearly three thousand years old, and in their grandeur still attest in silent eloquence the great resources and consummate skill of the man who built them."

Bethlehem,

"On our way to Solomon's Pools we saw what is known as the Hill of Evil Counsel, where Judas Iscariot hanged himself; also the Potter's Field, which was bought as a burial-ground for strangers, with the thirty pieces of silver that the chief priests refused to take back from the repentant betrayer of his Lord, when he brought them back with the confession, 'I have sinned, in that I have betrayed innocent blood.' (Matt. 27:3-8.)

"After returning from the Pools we proceeded directly to Bethlehem, the city of David. Unlike the other cities of Palestine, we found that it is inhabited mostly by Christians, with few Mohammedans and no Jews. Its streets are barely admitting a wagon of average width. We had hardly passed the gates leading into the city when our horses stopped suddenly. The street was blocked by a camel, which, being frightened at the noise made by our wagons, refused to stir an inch. After a good deal of effort his head was turned in the opposite direction from where it had been, and he was then led around the block to make room for us to pass on. While the commotion about the beast was in progress, Dr. Talmage and the writer left the vehicle to walk, by way of change, but the slush and filth of the streets were so great as to compel us to return to our canvas-covered barouche. Thanks in great part to the demonstrativeness of our driver, who was a Turk evidently in the habit of making his way in the world, we managed to pass through the throngs of people crowding the streets, and reached the Church of the Nativity."

Narrow Lanes,

"We were received very politely by a monk, who undertook to act as our guide. He spoke English fairly well, and did his best to explain every nook and corner of the structure. Before taking us downstairs to see the receptacle which they show as in which the infant Saviour was laid, he handed each of us a lighted candle. He then led the way down to a series of natural grottoes, which present the appearance of a khan, or inn, such as are still seen in Palestine. At the head of one of these rooms, formed in the solid rock, is a brilliantly lighted representation of the Saviour's birth. This the monk declared, on the authority of his Church, was the exact spot occupied by the manger in which reposed the Holy Child. After he had reverently surveyed the place, Dr. Talmage remarked: "The gate through which our Lord entered this world was a gate of rock—a hard, cold gate—and the gate through which He departed was a swing gate of sharpened spears."

The Manger

Absalom's Tomb.

"On our way back to Jerusalem we passed a Jewish cemetery which lies under the shadow of the Temple hill. The Hebrew believes that there will be the scene of the great Judgment. Four tombs hewn out of the solid rock attract observation by their superior size and imposing appearance. Of these the Tomb of Absalom is the largest. It stands apparently nearly fifty feet high, and is certainly not less than twenty feet square. Accounting for the large amount of rubbish about the base of this monument is the fact, as I was informed, that the faithful Israelite does not pass it without throwing at it a stone to indicate his contempt for David's disobedient and wayward son. The stones thus thrown have made a ragged-edged opening in the tomb of about fifteen inches in diameter, and about eight feet from the ground. I was further told that it is necessary to clear the monument once a year of the accumulation of stones, which, often accompanied with curses, are hurled at the supposed tomb of King David's recreant son."

HEAVEN-SENT PARTRIDGES.

In the current number of the Church the Rev. H. Lyman relates his own experience of the providential supply of his table while serving God in home mission work. He says: "While pondering the question of entering home missionary service, my sister encouraged me by citing this promise: 'Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.' In the days following, after I had found my field of labor, I often had occasion to test that promise in its specific application. I was fed. Provision for supply of my table came again and again in the very crisis of my necessity. Though many times the things needed for the proper supply of the table were exhausted, I was never left hungry, never intermitted a meal. Here are the cases:

"We had used all supplies, and saw before us no way out of the straits except to force the sale of furniture to procure needed supplies. So very privately I loaded a bureau and other things upon a dray and sent it to the auction-room. Very soon back came the furniture, and with it a plentiful supply of food. How my secret transpired, and through whose agency came the supplies, I never knew."

"Upon two separate occasions, when my family was in need, we were furnished with food as mysteriously as Elijah's experience when his purveyors were the ravens. The shades of night were thickening around us, and we had no material for the breakfast on the next morning. At this juncture our superstitious maid, trembling and affrighted, hastened in and reported that the devil was in the wash-tub. I went to the door and found a fat partridge entangled in the suds, and fastened upon it as our breakfast supply."

"Another partridge was sent us when a similar occasion made the demand. I was building the fire to cook the potatoes when I heard a loud bang high up against the house. Our breakfast was dashed against the upper story. The thick fog had blinded a migrating partridge, and so a benefit came from the wilderness. Verily we were fed."

"Just as our want became imperative we were supplied with fuel. We were burning our last stick of wood. I was, by sickness, disabled from domestic duty. The want was immediate and perplexing. In the emergency, looking out of my window, I spied a man from an adjoining town, against whom, outside of parish dues, I had a right to ask the requisite disbursement, which he was ready to render. All circumstances taken into account made the case, to my view, a special providence."

WHAT IS IN A NAME?

A Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

"The name which is above every name." Phil. 2:9.

The Influence of a Name—Thoughtless Parents Perpetuating an Objectionable Name—Persons Hampered by their Names—The Name of Jesus Above All—I. An Easy Name—The Aged and the Infantile Use It—II. A Beautiful Name—Its Associations—What it Stands For—Lovingly Spoken in the Last Hours—III. A Mighty Name—Its Spell Over the Millions—Its Power Over Reprobates—Will Make the Earth Tremble and Sing—IV. An Enduring Name—All the Arts Subject—How Jesus will be Greeted—A Warrior's Dying Acknowledgment of Jesus' Supremacy.

By common proverb we have come to believe that there is nothing in a name, and so parents sometimes present their children for baptism regardless of the title given them, and not thinking that that particular title will be either a hindrance or a help. Strange mistake. You have no right to give to your child a name that is lacking either in euphony or in moral meaning. It is a sin for you to call your child Jehoiakim or Tiglath-Pileser. Because you yourself may have an exasperating name is no reason why you should give it to those who come after you. But how often we have seen some name, filled with jargon, rattling down from generation to generation, simply because some one a long while ago happened to be afflicted with it! Institutions and enterprises have sometimes without sufficient deliberation taken their nomenclature. Mighty destinies have been decided by

The Significance of a Name.

There are men who all their life long toil and tussle to get over the influence of some unfortunate name. While we may, through right behavior and Christian demeanor, outlive the fact that we were baptized by the name of a despot, or an infidel, or a cheat, how much better it would have been if we all could have started life without any such incumbrance. When I find the apostle, in my text and in other parts of his writing, breaking out in ascriptions of admiration in regard to the name of Jesus, I want to inquire what are some of the characteristics of that appellation. And oh that the Saviour Himself, while I speak, might fill me with His own presence, for we never can tell to others that which we have not ourselves felt.

First, this name of Jesus is An Easy Name.

Sometimes we are introduced to people whose name is so long and unpronounceable that we have sharply to listen, and to have the name given to us two or three times, before we venture to speak it. But within the first two years the little child claps its hands, and looks up, and says "Jesus." Can it be, amid all the families represented here to-day, there is one household where the little ones speak of "father," and "mother," and "brother," and "sister," and not of "the name which is above every name"? Sometimes we forget the titles of our very best friends, and we have to pause and think before we can recall the name. But can you imagine any freak of intellect in which you could forget the Saviour's designation? That word "Jesus" seems to fit the tongue in every dialect. When the voice in old age gets feeble and tremulous and indistinct, still this regal word has potent utterance.

Jesus, I love Thy charming name,

'Tis music to my ear;

Fain would I sound it out so loud

That heaven and earth might hear.

Still further, I remark it is a beautiful name. You have noticed that it is impossible to dissociate a name from the person who has the name. So there are names that are to me repulsive—I do not want to hear them at all—while those very names are attractive to you. Why the difference? It is because I happen to know persons by those names who are cross, and sour, and snappish, and queer, while the persons you used to know by those names were pleasant and attractive. As we cannot dissociate a name from the person who holds the name, that consideration makes Christ's name so Unspeakably Beautiful.

No sooner is it pronounced in your presence than you think of Bethlehem and Gethsemane and Golgotha, and you see the loving face, and hear the tender voice, and feel the gentle touch. You see Jesus, the one who, though banquetting with heavenly hierarchs, came down to breakfast on the fish that rough men had just hauled out of Gennesaret; Jesus, the one who, though the clouds are the dust of His feet, walked footsore on to the road to Emmaus. Just as soon as that name is pronounced in your presence you think of how the Shining One gave back the centurion's daughter, and how He helped the blind man to the sunlight, and how He made the cripple's crutches useless, and how He looked down into the babe's laughing eyes, and, as the little one struggled to go to Him, flung out His arms around it and impressed a kiss on its brow, and said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Beautiful name—Jesus! It stands for love, for patience, for kindness, for forbearance, for self-sacrifice, for magnanimity. It is aromatic with all odors and accordant with all harmonies. Sometimes I see that name, and the letters seem to be made out of tears, and then, again, they look like gleaming crowns. Sometimes they seem to me as though twisted out of the straw on which He lay, and then as though built out of the thrones on which His people shall reign. Sometimes I sound that word "Jesus," and I hear coming through the two syllables the sigh of Gethsemane and the groan of Calvary; and again I sound it, and it is all a-ripple with gladness and a-ring with hosanna.

Dear to Old and Young.

Let it drip from harp's string and thunder out in organ's diapason. Sound it often, sound it well, until every star shall seem to shine it, and every flower shall seem to breathe it, and mountain and sea, and day and night, and earth and heaven, acclaim in full chant: "Blessed be His glorious name forever. The name that is above every name."

Jesus, the name high over all,
In heaven and earth and sky.

To the repenting soul, to the exhausted invalid, to the Sunday-school girl, to the snow-white octogenarian, it is beautiful. The old man comes in from a long walk, and tremblingly opens the doors, and hangs his hat on the old nail, and sets his cane in the usual corner, and lies down on a couch, and says to his children and grandchildren: "My dears, I am going to leave you." They say: "Why, where are you going, grandfather?" "I am going to Jesus." And so the old man faints away into heaven. The little child comes in from play and throws herself on your lap, and says: "Mamma, I am so sick, I am so sick!" And you put her to bed, and the fever is worse, until in some midnight she looks up into your face and says: "Mamma, kiss me good-by, I am going away from you." And you say: "My dear, where are you going to?" And she says: "I am going to Jesus." And the red cheek which you thought was the mark of the fever only turns out to be the carnation bloom of heaven! Oh, yes; it is a sweet name spoken by the lips of childhood, spoken by the old man.

A Mighty Name!

Still further; it is a mighty name. Rothschild is a potent name in the commercial world, Cuvier in the scientific world, Irving a powerful name in the literary world, Washington an influential name in the political world, Wellington a mighty name in the military world; but tell me any name in all the earth so potent to awe, and lift, and thrill, and rouse, and agitate, and bless, as this name of Jesus. That one word unhorsed Saul, and flung Newton on his face on ship's deck, and to-day holds 400,000,000 of the race with omnipotent spell. That name in England to-day means more than Victoria; in Germany, means more than Emperor William; in France, means more than Carnot; in Italy, means more than Humbert of the present or Garibaldi of the past.

I have seen a man bound hand and foot in sin, Satan his hard task-master, in a bondage from which no human power could deliver him, and yet at the pronunciation of that one word he dashed down his chains and marched out forever free. I have seen a man overwhelmed with disaster, the last hope fled, the last light gone out; that name pronounced in his hearing, the sea dropped, the clouds scattered, and a sunburst of eternal gladness poured into his soul. I have seen a man hardened in infidelity, defiant of God, full of scoff and jeer, jocosely of the judgment, reckless of an unending eternity, at the mere pronunciation of that name blanch, and cower, and quake, and pray, and sob, and groan, and believe, and rejoice. Oh, it is a mighty name! At its utterance the last wall of sin will fall, the last temple of superstition crumble, the juggernaut of cruelty crush to pieces. That name

Will Make All The Earth Tremble,

and then it will make all the nations sing. It is to be the password at every gate of honor, the insignia on every flag, the battle-shout in every conflict. All the millions of the earth are to know it. The red horse of carnage seen in apocalyptic vision, and the black horse of death, are to fall back on their haunches, and the white horse of victory will go forth, mounted by Him who hath the moon under His feet, and the stars of heaven for His tunic. Other dominions seem to be giving out; this seems to be enlarging. Spain has had to give up much of its dominion. Austria has been wonderfully depleted in power. France had to surrender some of her favorite provinces. Most of the thrones of the world are being lowered, and most of the sceptres of the world are being shortened; but every Bible printed, every tract distributed, every Sunday-school class taught, every school founded, every church established, is extending the power of Christ's name. That name has already been spoken under the Chinese wall, and in Siberian snow castle, in Brazilian grove, and in eastern pagoda. That name is to swallow up all other names. That crown is to cover up all other crowns. That empire is to absorb all other dominations.

All crimes shall cease, and ancient frauds shall fail,
Returning Justice lift aloft her scale;
Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-robed Innocence from heaven descend.

An Enduring Name.

Still further: it is an enduring name. You climb over the fence of the graveyard and pull aside the weeds, and you see the faded inscription on the tombstone. That was the name of a man who once ruled all that town. The mightiest names of the world have either perished or are perishing. Gregory VI., Sancho of Spain, Conrad I. of Germany, Richard I. of England, Louis XVI. of France, Catharine of Russia—mighty names once, that made the world tremble; but now, none so poor as to do them reverence, and to the great mass of the people they mean absolutely nothing; they never heard of them. But the name of Christ is to endure forever. It will be perpetuated in art, for there will be other Bellinis to depict the Madonna; there will be other Ghirlandajos to represent Christ's baptism; there will be other Bronzinos to show us Christ visiting the spirits in prison; other Giotto to appal our sight with the crucifixion. The name will be preserved in song, for there will be other Alexander Popes to write the "Messiah," other Dr. Youngs to portray His triumph, other Cowpers to sing His love. It will be preserved in costly and magnificent architecture, for Protestantism, as well as Catholicism, is yet to have its St. Mark's and its St. Peter's. That name will be of the world, for already it has been embalmed in the best books, and there will be other Dr. Paleys to write the Evidences of Christianity, and other Richard Baxters to describe the Saviour's coming to judgment. But above all, and more than all that name will be embalmed in the memory of all the good of earth, and all the great ones of heaven. Will the delivered bondman of earth ever forget who freed him? Will the blind man of earth forget who gave him sight? Will the outcast of earth forget who brought him home? No! No!

Preserved in the Literature

To destroy the memory of that name of Christ you would have to burn up all the Bibles, and all the churches on earth, and then in a spirit of universal arson go through the gate of heaven, and put a torch to the temples and the towers and the palaces, and after all that city was wrapped in awful conflagration, and the citizens came out and gazed on the ruin—even then, they would hear that name in the thunder of falling tower and the crash of crumbling wall, and see it inwrought in the flying banners of flame, and the redeemed of the Lord of high would be happy yet, and cry out, "Let the palaces and the temples burn, we have Jesus left!" "Blessed be His glorious name for ever and ever. The name that is above every name."

Symbolic Names.

Have you ever made up your mind by what name you will call Christ when you meet Him in heaven? You know He has many names. Will you call Him Jesus, or the Anointed One, or the Messiah, or will you take some of the symbolical names which on earth you learned from your Bible?

Wandering some day in the garden of God of high, the place a-bloom with eternal springtide, in finite luxuriance of rose and lily and amaranth, you may look up into His face and say, "My Lord, thou art the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley."

Some day, as a soul comes up from earth to take its place in the firmament, and shine as a star for ever and ever, and the lustre of a useful life shall beam forth tremulous and beautiful, you may look p into the face of Christ and say: "My Lord, thou art the morning star—a star forever."

Wandering some day amid the fountains of life that toss in the sunlight and fall in crash of pearl and amethyst in golden and crystalline urn, and you stand up the round-banked river to where it first angles its silver on the rock, and out of the chalices of love you drink to honor and everlasting joy, you may look up into the face of Christ and say: "My Lord, thou art the fountain of living water."

Some day, wandering amid the lambs and sheep in the heavenly pastures, feeding by the rock, rejoicing in the presence of Him who brought you out of the wolfish wilderness to the sheepfold above, you may look up into His loving and watchful eye and say: "My Lord, thou art the shepherd of the everlasting hills."

A Name of Glory.

But there is another name you may select. I will imagine that heaven is done. Every throne has its king. Every harp has its harper. Heaven has gathered up everything that is worth having. The treasures of the whole universe have poured into it. The song full. The ranks full. The mansions full. The heaven full. The sun shall set afire with splendor as the domes of the temples, and burnish the golden streets into a blaze, and be reflected back from the blid pearl of the twelve gates, and it shall be noon in heaven, noon on the river, noon on the hills, noon in all the valleys—high noon. Then the soul may look up, gradually accustoming itself to the vision, shading the eyes as from the almost insufferable splendor of the noonday light, until the vision can endure it, then crying out: "Thou art the one in that never sets!"

At this point I am staggered with the thought that, notwithstanding all the charm in the name of Jesus, and the fact that it is so easy a name, and so beautiful a name, and so potent a name, and so ensuring a name, there are people who find no charm in those two syllables. O come this day and see whether there is anything in Jesus. I challenge those of you who are farther from God to come at the close of this service and test with me whether God is good, and Christ is gracious, and the Holy Spirit is omnipotent. I challenge you to come and kneel down with me at the altar of mercy. I will kneel on one side of the altar and you kneel on the other side of it, and neither of us will rise up until our sins are forgiven, and we ascribe, in the words of the text, all honor to the name of Jesus—pronouncing it, I pronouncing it—the name that is above every name.

His worth, if all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love Him too.

O that God to-day, by the power of His holy Spirit, might roll over you a vision of that blessed Christ, and you would begin to weep and pray and believe and rejoice. You have heard of the warrior who went out to fight against Christ. He knew he was in the wrong, and while waging the war against the kingdom of Christ, an arrow struck him and he fell. It pierced him in the heart, and lying there, his face to the sun, his life blood running away, he caught a handful of the blood that was rushing out of his right hand, and held it up before the sun and cried out, "O Jesus, thou hast conquered!" And to-day, the arrow of God's Spirit piercing your soul, you felt the truth of what I have been trying to proclaim, you would surrender now and forever to the Lord who bought you. Glorious name! I know not whether you will accept it or not; but I will tell you one thing here and now: in the presence of angels and men I take Him to be my Lord, my God, my pardon, my peace, my life, my joy, my salvation, my heaven! "Blessed be His glorious name forever. The name that is above every name." Hallelujah! unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Amen and men and amen."

A SAMOAN COUNCIL.

(See illustration on page 76.)

THE group of islands to which the name of Samoa is now given, but which were formerly known as the Navigators Islands, is distant about 4,200 miles from San Francisco, about 1,650 from Auckland, 1,100 from New Zealand, and 2,800 from Sydney, in New South Wales. The most important of the islands are: Savaii, which is 150 miles in circumference; Upolu, 130 miles; and Tutuila, about eighty miles. A group of three small islands, very close together, is situated some sixty miles to the east of Tutuila, and known by the name of Manua. The distance from Tutuila from Upolu is forty miles, and of Upolu from Savaii about ten miles. In the whole group there is an area of 1,650 square miles, and the population is about 37,000.

In its days of heathenism Samoa was not so degraded as some other Pacific islands. Compared with Fiji, Tonga, and other groups, this may almost be said to have been civilized. Cannibalism, infanticide, and human sacrifices were so rare as almost to justify the assertion that they were unknown. The position of women also was so nearly equal to that of men as to make the islands an exception, in this respect, to most heathen countries. Yet, after making these allowances, it would be difficult to exaggerate their fearfully degraded condition. The one great occupation of the people was fighting. Intertribal strife was in their heathen days incessant. At the very time that John Williams approached the islands in 1830, in the ship he himself had built, the people were at war. Looking from the east coast of Savaii across some dozen miles of sea to the west coast of Upolu, he saw the smoke of a great fire ascending to heaven. "When we inquired the cause of it," he says, "we were informed that a battle had been fought that very morning, and that the flames which we saw were consuming the houses, the plantations, and the bodies of the women, children, and infirm people who had fallen into the hands of their conquerors. Thus, while we were landing the messengers of the Gospel of Peace on the one shore, the flames of a devastating war were blazing on the opposite."

Fifty years afterward, when the people were celebrating the jubilee of the introduction of the gospel into Samoa, an old deacon in Tutuila, who is still living, informed the Rev. C. Phillips that he was present on that occasion. To the missionary's question as to how they were celebrating their victory, he replied that they bound the captives hand and foot and threw them upon the blazing fire.

That the intertribal quarrels still exist, though they are less fierce and sanguinary under the influence of Christianity, reports of the recent troubles show. Thanks to the interference of our own Government, a better form of government is now established. The recent Berlin Conference assured for the people freedom from the domineering intrigues of Germany, which provoked quarrels and encouraged rioting and bloodshed. The illustration is a picture of an interval in the deliberations of a national council when the assembly of chiefs separated into groups and sat down under the trees to partake of the food which the women had prepared and were bringing in.

A DISCHARGED CLERK'S REFUGE.

IN the prayer-meeting for business men, held every day in the old John Street Church, testimonies are frequently given of the faithfulness of God in His dealings with men who put their trust in Him for temporal as well as spiritual affairs. One of these was given a few days ago by a middle-aged man of bright, intelligent appearance. He said: "About the middle of December I received an intimation from the manager of the company in whose office I was employed that a reduction in the staff would surely be ordered, to take effect at the beginning of the year, and that it was probable I should be one of those whose services would be dispensed with. He advised me to be prepared for such an event, as at that time of year it might be difficult to obtain immediate employment elsewhere. I thanked him for his friendly warning, but although the prospect of being out of a position would mean serious consequences to me and my family, I did not allow it to distress me. For many years past I have been accustomed to leave everything in the hands of God, and to commit all my ways to His keeping. He had never failed me, and I was sure He would not do so in this crisis. When I went home that night I told my family of my approaching discharge, and we all knelt down, and laid the matter before our heavenly Father, thanking Him for His loving care in the past, and declaring our unwavering confidence in His provision for the future. The next day I went to business as cheerfully as usual, and I can honestly say that I had no anxiety about getting employment. I felt convinced that God would see to it. Without my making any effort, or a single application, there came to me inside of ten days three offers of positions, each of which was better in all respects than the one I then occupied. I sought God's guidance, and was led to accept one of them, and when I was discharged on January 1 I went right into it, and have found it congenial, and well within my capacity. I am doing well in it, with satisfaction to my employers and myself, and am confirmed in my belief that God will honor the trust that any of His children place in Him. I recommend every one to do as I did in that crisis; it gives peace of mind, and results in practical benefit."

A GOVERNOR'S MAGNANIMITY.

THE forgiveness of injuries, which our Saviour so forcibly enjoined in His parable of the unmerciful servant (Matt. 18:21-35), is a duty which unregenerated human nature finds it peculiarly hard to perform, but to the Christian, who can readily perceive and appreciate the reason Jesus gave for performing it, it should never be difficult. Besides this we have apostolic assurance (Rom. 12:20) that forgiveness is often the most effective, as it is the most Christian, form of retaliation. A case in point is related by a correspondent of the New York Sun, whose informant was the Attorney-General of Missouri. It appears that a convict who was in the State's Prison petitioned the governor for a pardon. The governor had the man brought into his presence, and when he entered the room, looked at him with a close scrutiny. He seemed to have settled in his mind some doubt he had as to the prisoner's identity, and then he signed the document which restored him to liberty. Before handing it to the grateful convict he said:

"You will commit some other crime, I fear, and soon be back in the penitentiary."

The man protested solemnly that such a thing should never happen. The governor looked doubtful, and after a few moments said:

"You will go back on the river and be a mate again, I suppose?"

The man said yes, that was his intention.

"Well, I want you to promise me one thing," continued the governor. "I want you to pledge me your word that when you are a mate again you will never take a billet of wood and drive a poor sick boy out of his bunk to help you load your boat on a stormy night."

The man answered that he never would, but seemed surprised and inquired why the governor requested such a pledge.

"Because," answered Governor Stewart, "some day that boy may become governor, and you may want him to pardon you for some crime. One black, stormy night, many years ago, you stopped your boat on the Mississippi River to take on a load of wood. There was a boy on board working his passage from New Orleans to St. Louis, but he was very sick of a fever, and was lying in his bunk. You had men enough to do the work, but you went to that boy with a stick of wood in your hand, drove him on deck with blows and curses, and kept him toiling like a slave till the load was completed. I was that boy. Here is your pardon. Never again be guilty of so brutal an act."

The prisoner took the pardon, covered his face, and went out.

RELIGION REJECTED BY VOTE.

THE difficulty of reaching the Indians and leading them to the Saviour are much greater than most Christians suppose. In a letter just received from the Rev. W. F. Re Qua, who has given his life to this work, some of these are mentioned. During his recent visit to the Kiowas he was told of the sad issue of a council which had been held by the tribe some time before he went to them. It appears that a missionary had visited them and had solemnly warned them that unless they accepted Christ they would be eternally lost. The Indians listened attentively, and, after the missionary's departure, they held a council of their leaders for the express purpose of discussing the new religion, and its merits over their own kind of religion. After a considerable debate on the subject, one of the Indians arose and said that if what the white man said was true, then their forefathers—who never heard of this new religion, this white man's religion—if it is true, have gone to the bad place, to hell, and now if we accept this new religion and go to the white man's heaven he tells about we will never see our forefathers again, and, said the speaker, "I can't give up seeing them again." After these remarks it was put to a vote how many wanted to adopt the white man's religion, and all voted against it.

City Missionaries, Christian Workers, and others may obtain miscellaneous back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for mission, hospital, and prison work and for general distribution, at $1 per 100. Address The Manager, 45 Bible House, New York.

DANIEL'S 2,300 DAYS.*

THE date of this vision (Daniel 8 : 14) is thus fixed by Mr. Mason: "Beginning this number from the time of the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem at Ezra's commission in the year Before Christ, 457, we are clearly brought to the year eighteen hundred and forty-three." In this Mr. Mason follows Mr. Davies, of South Carolina. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." (Chap. 12 : 11.) The language of this passage is also the language of the prophecy in the eighth chapter, respecting "the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation." And what is the number of the years from the commencement of the sixty-two weeks, when the former desolation fully ended, until the expiry of the twelve hundred and ninety years, as mentioned in the twelfth chapter, when subsequent desolations shall end? It is just two thousand three hundred years.

If this calculation should be found as correct as the writer believes it to be, one most important proposition is already established by it, namely, the accuracy of the commonly received opinion that the year six hundred and six, when Phocas confirmed the Romish bishop as the head of all the churches—the time when the transgressions came to the full, and when Mahomet, the king of fierce countenance, began his career of imposture in Mecca—is the true commencement of

The Twelve Hundred and Sixty Years.

For, counting forward from the end of the seven weeks, or forty-nine years, when the city should be built again, or four hundred and four years from that time till the birth of Christ, there are, till the year eighteen hundred and ninety-six, exactly two thousand three hundred years. Again, counting backwards from the year eighteen hundred and ninety-six, when the two thousand three hundred, and the twelve hundred and ninety years end, there are thirty years till the year eighteen hundred and sixty-six; and from this epoch till the year six hundred and six, there are twelve hundred and sixty years, which put together make twelve hundred and ninety years. This, by the express authority of Scripture, makes the year six hundred and six the beginning, and consequently the year eighteen hundred and sixty-six the end of the forty-two months, or the three years and a half, or the twelve hundred and sixty days of Daniel and John.

Now, though the period of twelve hundred and sixty years measures the duration of the reign both of the beast and his little horn, and also of the little horn of Mecca, it does not measure the duration of

The Judgments of God.

Only the commencement of these—"the beginning of the end"—will be seen at the termination of the time, times, and a half. And, moreover, the awful oath of the angel, which is, as it were, repeated in the Apocalypse (chap. 10 : 5-7), imports that there shall be no delay, no prolongation of this time, which has seemed so long to the suffering witnesses of Christ. (Rev. 6 : 10.) Among the things noted in the Scripture, the sounding of the seventh trumpet at the end of the forty-two months is not the least remarkable.

In the eleventh verse of Daniel's last chapter, thirty years are added to the time, times, and a half, in language confirmatory of the view adopted of this number, as being in this chapter designed to point out the duration of the Moslem imposture. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there should be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." The epoch of the predicted rise of the king of fierce countenance (his successors not excluded), is evidently assigned in the passage; for of him alone is the language descriptive. An host or army (not an army of monks, but of soldiers) was given him (chap. 8). And hence, as when the Romans besieged Jerusalem, and the abomination of desolation—their military standard was seen "standing where it ought not;" so now this other enemy would set up "the abomination that maketh desolate"—the banner of the Moslem, who delighted to shed blood and to collect the spoils of war, and who was particularly zealous "to destroy the mighty and the holy people." It is evident,

The Oriental Little Horn,

* From Mr. McLeod's valuable article in the January number of the Prophetic News. For sale, price six cents, at this office, 45 Bible House, New York.

then, the angel here speaks of the eastern Antichrist, who is distinguished by his military character and achievements from his western contemporary, "sitting in the temple of God, and there changing times and laws."

It is likewise of consequence to remember that, as the deeds of the eastern adversary are here connected with this period of twelve hundred and ninety years, so they are first mentioned in the vision of the two thousand three hundred days. Does not this establish a peculiar connection between the time of this vision of the two thousand and three hundred years, of which the twelve hundred and ninety days are the termination; and the existence of Islam, the evil spoken of as the latter end of this protracted indignation, the removal of which is pointed out as the termination of the vision, when

The Sanctuary Shall be Cleansed?

To these thirty years, when the sanctuary shall be cleansed, a period of forty-five years is to succeed, as preliminary to the abiding settlement and happiness of "the mighty and the holy people" in the pleasant land.

The relative position of events and times in this chapter of Daniel seems well to accord with the relative position of the events and periods of the Revelation. In this book the seventh angel sounds the trumpet at the end of twelve hundred and sixty years. And then the seven vials are poured out, and great Babylon is overthrown. What time these events shall require is not shown in the Apocalypse; but as Daniel, from the end of the twelve hundred and sixty years, reckons thirty years and forty-five years to the era of felicity, it is not unnatural to suppose that, during these seventy-five years, the prophecies of the seven vials, the war of Armageddon, and the fall of Babylon are fulfilled.

The War of Armageddon Arises,

Now the narrative of these things in the Revelation is placed between the sounding of the seventh trumpet at the end of the forty-two months, and the introduction of the millennium. In like manner, as we have seen, Daniel has placed the thirty years and the forty-five years between the end of the twelve hundred and sixty years, and the era of

The Church's Blessedness.

It seems, therefore, a fair inference that the thousand years do not begin when the forty-two prophetic months terminate. On the contrary, we are constrained to count the great epoch of the millennial rest from the marriage supper of the Lamb and the descent of the New Jerusalem, which, being placed after the judgments of God on His enemies, may be supposed to happen, though not fixed by dates as in Daniel, at the era of blessedness which is mentioned by him as to be enjoyed after all the other wonders and mysteries of providence have been fulfilled.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Little Chinese Evangelist.*

"We had a boy in the school converted when he was thirteen years of age," said Mrs. Stott, who has spent many years in mission work in China. "He was a bright, intelligent lad, and after his conversion he was the means, in the hand of God, of beginning work in another part of the country, just proving that God takes up the weak things of the world, the things that are not, to bring to nought the things that are. At the age of fourteen he went to a city forty miles away, to attend on a native preacher. One day he strolled into a Buddhist temple, and there found an old man worshipping idols. He waited until the old man had finished his devotions, then, seating himself by the side of the devotee, he said: 'Venerable grandfather, do the idols see and hear you when you worship?' 'Yes.' 'But, you see, they are made of clay: how can they answer your prayers?' Said the man, 'I do not worship the clay; but inside the idol there is a spirit that can see and hear.'

"The boy, who had often heard Mr. Stott answer such arguments as these, said: 'You say there is a spirit in the god; but look at this one—it has a dirty face; it has not been washed for ever so long. There is another whose nose is broken off; and it has not had the sense to have it mended. The other one has had part of its moustache taken away; yet it has not been able to protect itself. What is the use of a spirit inhabiting a body that cannot protect it better than this? We have a spirit within our bodies: but rats do not run away with our moustache. I can speak to you, and you can hear because of the spirit within. Let the spirit leave our bodies, and we are dead, like the idols, and we cannot protect ourselves.' The old man was struck with the wisdom of the boy, and asked where he had learned such wonderful things. He replied, 'In the school at Wun-chau. But I can tell very little. If you go to the preacher, I can tell you more.' The old man went, and told his wife with him. They learned of the Saviour and at last believed. That was the beginning of good work in the city, where there are now about a hundred professed Christians."

A Girl's Momentous Question.

It is no vain thing to teach the children the truths of God. They are the wisest missionaries, having the modesty of faith, and very often great deal of tact, knowing just where to come at the right time. One of the girls in our school was a Christian, and had gone through remarkable experiences in her conversion. There came a woman to us on one occasion who wanted to be baptized. We had spoken to her, and were not convinced that she was born of the Spirit of God. We are not at all anxious to perpetuate in China a kind of Christianity we often see here—a form of godliness without power. As we were not sure the woman was converted, we would not baptize her, but asked her to wait. Her husband was a Christian, and wished her to be a Christian. She strolled into the school, and, sitting down beside the girl referred to, said, "You know I came here before, and wanted to be baptized, and they would not have me then. I do hope they will baptize me now, for I want to be a Christian."

The girl said to her, "But are you born again?" She said: "I do not know. I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. All the house is cleared of idolatry. There is not a shred left. I pray morning and evening, and ask a blessing three times on my meals. What more is there to do?" The girl said: "You must be born again. 'Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God.' " "I do not understand you." "Then," said the girl, "if you do not understand it, I am very much afraid I have not been born again. I have been born again, and it has made such a wonderful difference in my life, and wrought such a wonderful change in my heart! I am quite sure if you were born again you would know it." The woman went away to her room, and, kneeling before her couch, she cried: "God, they tell me if I would go to heaven, I must be born again. Let me be born again to-night! They tell me I must be washed in the blood of Christ and have my sins cleansed. If I have never been washed, oh, wash me to-night!"

Then came the prayer-meeting, and at that time there were about sixteen or seventeen candidates to be examined for baptism, and she took her seat beside them. My dear husband said to her, "Have you been born again?" It is very strange he should have used the same question. Never shall I forget the sight of that face as the tears ran down. "Yes, teacher," she said, "I have, but only to-night." Then she repeated what the girl had told her, and how she had gone to her room; how the light had entered her heart; and how she thanked God that she had been born again. This was the work of a little girl.

THE MESSAGE OF PEACE AND GOOD-WILL

THE following interesting communication comes from Rev. G. A. Shaw, the missionary of Madagascar, who, as will be seen, is practically giving to the people the message proclaimed by the angels to the shepherds: "Here in the southeast of Madagascar week's journey from our next white neighbor, we have been endeavoring to commence new work for the Master's glory. For many months success seemed very doubtful, and the frequent intertribal wars gave promise of barring our work altogether. All our small beginnings appeared to be doomed, and utter lawlessness prevailed, with fear on every side. With the burning villages close at hand, and war news and rumors constantly coming to us, there seemed little prospect of winning our way to these people. Two or three times we were ourselves in imminent danger from the foe. But here short-sighted we were proved by the event, inasmuch as these wars did more to make us known, far and wide, to the people than anything we could have done in double the time by preaching, itinerating and teaching.

It soon became known that medical and surgical treatment could be had here, and so after the war I had quite a host of patients from both sides, who came to have bones set and bullets extracted, &c. They would all, we trust, carry home with them some, if only a slight, impression of the motives which had constrained us to come and settle among such lawless tribes. From that time the work, though slow, has been steadily progressing. Another threatened war I was able by timely and prayerful mediation to avert altogether, and, though all angry feeling was not banished, no bloodshed resulted.

* From The World's Sunday-school Convention. A report of the proceedings of the famous convention held in London in July, 1889. Pp. 417; published by Fleming H. Revell, 143 Madison Street, Chicago, and 12 Bible House, New York.

A week or two since we had the first baptism of an adult. She is the wife of one of the chief men in a distant village, which I have frequently visited in my itinerating journeys. She had for some time professed to me her desire for baptism, and showed a considerable knowledge of the things she had been taught. After appointing a term of probation, and finding her still in the same mind, the rite was performed before all the villagers, and for the first time in this hitherto almost unknown quarter of Madagascar.

CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH OF JESUS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for February 9, Luke 2:40-52; Golden Text, Luke 2:52.

Various Kinds of Growth—Responsibility for the Growth of Evil in Children—Christ's Absolute Dependence on His Father—Inferences as to His Boyhood—The Family Gathering at the Feast—Jesus Missing—The Search—Jesus in the Temple—Asking Questions, not Teaching—Where Jesus is to be Found.

"AND the child grew." Every healthy child grows and waxes strong, but with how many it is the flesh rather than the spirit which is developed! Many a child is strong in muscle, strong in self-will, strong in pride, strong in temper, but not "strong in spirit." With Jesus it was otherwise. Even as a child His spirit, the part of our being which can take in God, developed more rapidly than His soul, the seat of the affections and passions, or His body. He "was filled with wisdom," and so fulfilled the prophecy, "There shall come forth a Rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots, and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge of the fear of the Lord." (Is. 11:1, 2.)

It is a law of development, in all living things, that growth is in proportion to exercise; food, air, and light being also present. Let us beware in our children that which, by and by, we shall be powerless to suppress. How often is a child brought forward to sing or to recite before strangers, in a way which attracts attention to the young performer, developing largely the passion for admiration, which may prove a bane for life! How often does an unthinking parent develop emulation, and an inordinate estimate of himself in her child, when she contrasts him with another boy to the disparagement of the latter! "My Johnnie will never do as Charlie Smith does," she will say. And Johnnie immediately adopts the flattering conclusion that he is essentially superior to Charlie, and takes care always to appear so, that such remarks may be repeated, and thus both self-righteousness and untruth of character may be developed in Johnnie. If the mother had said, "Well, Charlie, you would have been just as bad as Johnnie, if God had not kept you; God has been very good to you, let us ask Him to raise up poor Charlie again," the Spirit of Christ might have been developed in Johnnie, and he might have been made a blessing to the other boy.

How We Develop

"And the Grace of God was Upon Him."

If Jesus had not "emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of man" (Phil. 2:7, R. V.), it could never have been said of Him, "the grace of God was upon Him." He brought Himself down to our level in everything but sin. Again and again He declared His own weakness and nothingness apart from His Father. "The Son can do nothing of Himself;" "I can of mine own self do nothing;" "The Father that dwelleth in me, He doeth the works." (John 5:19, 30; 14:10.) He made Himself as dependent on His Father as we are; "In all things it behooved Him to be made like unto His brethren." (Heb. 2:17.) Some think it must have been easy for Jesus to obey and to resist temptation, although He was "in all points tempted like as we are" (Heb. 4:15), because he was God. But although He was

God, and He and the Father One, yet, in the days of His life on earth He suspended the exercise of His divine power in the combat which men find so hard, receiving the grace of God by the anointing of the Holy Ghost, as we do. This He did in the wondrous considerateness of His love, and there is justice as well as power in His call that we should follow Him.

We have no record of Jesus from the time of His presentation in the temple till He was twelve years of age. Therefore we infer that the wisdom with which He was filled must have found its exercise in the common events of daily life, and that the grace of God found scope in the learning of lessons, in the rendering of obedience, in His intercourse with other boys, and in the learning of Joseph's trade. And therefore we may be sure that it was as a scholar and as a carpenter, as a son in the family, and as a companion at school, that Jesus of Nazareth, filled with wisdom, and with the grace of God upon Him, must have excelled. Wisdom does not mean inattention; the grace of God does not mean disobedience. Some boys may say, "I have no special gift of wisdom, and I cannot help being dull and inattentive." "What saith the Scripture?" "If any of you [a schoolboy as much as any other] lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering." (James 1:17, 18.) Some say, "If I only could have more of the grace of God!" But "the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men," therefore to you. Look out for it, dear seeker, where it is to be found; look unto Jesus. The source of grace and its storehouse are in Christ, and not in you. In Him you have all you need. Let Him continue to be the Repository, and then there shall be grace in all you do and all you suffer, and the atmosphere of God shall manifest itself in your life. Jesus "increased in wisdom and stature (or age), and in favor with God and man." Thus we may be quite sure that there was nothing in Him which would repulse or hurt another. The grace of God does not make men stand off from one another, and render its possessors unapproachable; it fills men with love and compassion and friendliness of heart.

Joseph and Mary were obedient to the law of God; they went to Jerusalem every year at

The Feast of the Passover,

as was ordained in Scripture, "Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place which He shall choose: in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of meats, and in the feast of tabernacles." (Deut. 16:16.) When Jesus "was twelve years old (the age when Jewish boys attain their majority), they went up to Jerusalem, after the custom of the feast." Jesus may have been present at a previous Passover, but it is not recorded; neither are we told of anything remarkable in the Passover itself on this occasion. There would be, of necessity, the slaying of the lamb for Joseph's home, probably in conjunction with some branch of the family, which also went up to Jerusalem. There would be the blood sprinkled on the lintel and the two side posts of the door; and He whose blood was afterward to be shed for the very kindred around Him, as well as for other men, sat within the blood-sprinkled door, and ate of the Passover lamb, the type of His coming sacrifice. (Ex. 12:3-13.) When the seven days of the feast were over, the congregation, gathered not from Judea alone, but also from Galilee and Samaria in part, dispersed, each to their several homes. Joseph and Mary had started with a caravan, or company of travellers, with their baggage, as was usual in those times, when wild beasts were still to be met with (Mark 1:13), and robbers still infested the country. (Luke 10:30.) They were well on their way when they made a discovery:

Jesus was Missing.

How came it that He could be absent one hour without their finding it out? Dear reader, do you ever make a plan about something you are going to do? the arrangements are perfect, the means are provided, and you expect it to work well, but it does not; something is wanting. What is it? Just this: Jesus is missing. Energy is in it, talent, time, money; and you feel that, having spent so much upon it, somehow it ought to be blest. And yet, in all the arrangements, Jesus was missing. You thought, somebody advised, this one and that one devoted himself to the work, and yet it did not answer. Jesus was not first in it, and He in all things must "have the pre-eminence." (Col. 1:8.)

"But," you say, "I have done it all for Him." True, but He needs none of your patronage. "Of Him, and through Him" first of all, and then "to Him, are all things." (Rom. 11:36.) If anything is begun by man, it is not first of Him, and Jesus is missing at the start.

Joseph and Mary, when they first missed Jesus, judged Him by themselves, and thinking His tendencies were the same as theirs, to profit by the opportunity of social, family intercourse, "they sought Him among their kinsfolk and acquaintances." It was in vain; God never ignores family claims, but that which had drawn the people together at this season was the Passover lamb, the most striking type of man's redemption. This might be a light matter to others, but it could not be to Jesus, "the Lamb of God." It takes longer to find Jesus than to lose Him; way must be retraced; they must come back to the Father's house to find Him. They had supposed "Him to have been in the company," but suppositions do not help any one in finding Jesus; they must come to facts. Where did they last see Him? Sure y, in the temple; then they saw Him absorbed in the worship of His Father. Did not Mary's heart smite her where she recognized her carelessness about the holy Charge which had been committed to her?

After three days' searching; they found Him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors." What then? Had He been there all the time? Where had He slept? Who had given Him food? Curiosity is not to be satisfied here. It is enough to know that the Son of man, boy as He was, found Himself in His element in the Scriptures of truth, "hearing" the theologians of the day, and "asking them questions." What about? Probably the subject was the Passover lamb, and the Jews' Messiah. It may be that many of those deeply read scribes had never heard their Scriptures so understood and so handled as by Him who was the living Word, although unknown to them, that lad who stood in their midst. Surely now, as on the road to Emmaus, hearts must have burned within them; surely, as at Nazareth, they must have borne Him witness, and "wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." (Luke 4:22; 24:32.) Yet He took the child's place, "hearing them," and when He spoke, it was as became the younger, in answer to their questions, or by asking questions Himself. He knew what it was to be "swift to hear, slow to speak." (James 1:19.) No wonder that all who heard Him were "astonished at His understanding and answers." Jesus was a Bible student. He might have said, with the Psalmist, "I have more understanding than all My teachers; for thy testimonies are my meditation. I understand more than the ancients, because I keep Thy precepts" (Ps. 119:99, 100), but He did not therefore assume any superiority. He passed even through His childhood as "God manifest in the flesh;" and the first lesson of a child is subjection.

Its Coming Antitype,

His parents, "when they saw Him," were amazed, and his mother said unto Him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? Behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. And He said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? as though to say, "Was it likely you would find me deep in family gossip?" How do we seek Jesus whenever we have missed Him? "Wist ye not," He says, as though He expected them to understand Him, "that I must be about my Father's business?" [for the things of my Father]. Do we seek Jesus in our own things? in the little world of which we are the centre, our feelings, our hopes, our plans, our work? Jesus is not there to be found, but in the things of His Father.

"They understood not the saying which He spake unto them." Do we understand it? Jesus had no business of His own in life; His Father's business was His occupation, and, thank God, it is our high privilege and calling to have no object in life for ourselves. "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again." (11 Cor. 5:15.) Had Jesus sought His own, He might have been found in the company, pleading for recreation, amusement, etc. But he could not turn from the temple services to these things. And he found his Father's business, no doubt, in wakening up the doctors in the Temple to a real personal grasp of the subjects of which they treated, and it may be that the ingenuous questions and answers of the child Jesus sowed in many hearts the inquiry, "Are these things realities to me?"

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Samoan Treaty Negotiated at Berlin Last summer has at last been given to the public by permission of the Senate. The letter of the Secretary of State to the President explaining the treaty says that the subjects as to which the American Commissioners were instructed fell under five heads: First—They were directed to ask the restoration of the status quo in order to remove the disturbance caused by the forcible intervention of Germany and the deportation of Malietoa. Second—The organization of a stable governmental system for the islands whereby native independence and autonomy should be preserved free from the control or preponderating influence of any foreign government. Third—The adjustment of land claims. Fourth—The prohibition of the sale of firearms and alcoholic liquors. Fifth—The question of municipal administration of Apia as a foreign settlement under due reservation of extra territorial rights. Mr. Blaine considers that "the result is, in the main, entirely in accord with the instructions under which the American plenipotentiaries acted." There are obvious defects in the Treaty, but, considering the difficulties with which our commissioners had to contend, they were more successful in securing the protection of Samoa from foreign interference than might have been expected. The chief objection to the Treaty is that it establishes a precedent for joint action with European Powers, which has hitherto been carefully avoided.

The Much-Needed Bankruptcy Legislation, which has so often been urged upon Congress, has now a better prospect of being effected. The proposals of all who have studied the question carefully have been thoroughly examined, and the result, which is embodied in the bill introduced by Mr. Taylor, of Ohio, promises a really practicable measure. It provides for voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy. It provides for referees instead of registers, as formerly, such referees to be paid a salary instead of fees. The referees also perform the duties which, under the old law, were performed by marshals, such as notifying creditors, publishing notices, &c. It is thus practically on the lines of the Lowell Bill, but the referees have general charge and supervision, subject to the direction of the court, of the management of the estate, while the actual assets pass into the hands of the trustees, who are clothed with the same general power as an assignee under the former bill. The provisions as to the management of the estate are much more rigidly guarded than in any other former bill. Another important change is that a percentage of the estate is to be paid to the Government to form a fund for the payment of bankruptcy officials. The bill exempts from the operations of the involuntary feature agriculturists and charitable and religious associations.

The Claims of Wyoming for Admission to Statehood are being urged by Judge Carey, who represents the Territory in Congress. He is sanguine of having those claims recognized during the present session of Congress. He contends that there is an injustice to the Territory in the fact that the President appoints the officers of the Territory, yet the United States contributes for government therein not more than four per cent. of the amount raised in the Territory for territorial school and municipal purposes. He said that the people of the Territory are intelligent, progressive and enterprising; that the Territory is rich in agricultural resources, and that her iron, coal, petroleum, and soda alone would make her a very wealthy and populous State. He said there could be no such thing as retrogression in Wyoming; that sufficient development had been made to show that her mineral resources would never be exhausted; that $15,000,000 had already been expended in the reclamation of arid lands in the Territory, and that the coal mines now being worked would pay a good interest on $12,000,000. Judge Carey says that Wyoming has made and adopted as good a constitution as has yet been ratified by any people. It was framed by Democrats and Republicans. No party question was raised, and the convention did not divide on political grounds. Both political parties of the Territory are asking that Congress admit Wyoming as a State with the constitution adopted.

An Argument in Favor of Unrestricted Reciprocity with Canada was made on January 24, before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, by Mr. J. S. Ritchie, of Ohio, who is an acknowledged authority on our traffic with the Dominion. He said that in Canada there was a considerable sentiment in favor of reciprocity, and by taking the proper course the United States could increase the sentiment. In reply to a question by Mr. Payne as to the feeling toward the Butterworth Reciprocity bill, Mr. Ritchie said that the opposition in the Canadian Parliament, numbering about one-third of its members, had adopted the Butterworth bill as its platform. He stated that the American interests in Canada were very large. Mr. Carlisle asked whether Canada would give the United States free coal if the United States gave her free iron. Mr. Ritchie replied in the affirmative.

The Action of New York in Cutting Down the overhead wires will probably be followed throughout the country. A fatality on January 20, at Newburgh, N. Y., where exceptional care is taken to insure perfect safety, will convince the most sceptical of the danger to life which these wires involve. On that day a horse was hitched to an iron pillar supporting an awning in front of a store. An electric light was suspended over the store door, and the wire sagged on the awning. The horse rubbed its nose against the pillar, and received a shock which prostrated it. A man who went to help the horse to rise, accidentally touched the pillar, and he was killed instantly. A second man, who went to his assistance received a very severe shock by touching him, though he did not touch the pillar. It was found that the insulating material on the wire had become saturated with the rain, and in rubbing against the pillar had frayed away, leaving the wire bare. The current passed from the wire to the pillar, and might have done even more harm than it did.

The Discovery of the Bacillus which Produces the Russian influenza is announced by two Austrian physicians. They state that they discovered the creature while searching for a different microbe which causes kidney disease. "During the microscopic examination we found," says one of the physicians, "a bacillus which, owing to the peculiar cassock formation of the head, we called 'the bishop bacilli.' It was a bacillus we had never seen before, nor had it ever been signalled by any bacteriologist. We immediately set at work with a whole staff upon an examination of the defecation of influenza patients in the general hospital and in private practice, and in every case the bishop bacilli were found in great numbers, while in excretions from various other maladies examined at the same time, bacilli could not be found." The bacillus bears no resemblance to the cholera microbe, but is very similar to that which causes pneumonia.

Prognostications of War are Sent by the Constantinople correspondent of the New York Herald to that journal. He states that they are based on information received from a high official and are thoroughly reliable. He states that it is the object of Bismarck to secure the co-operation of England with the triple alliance of Germany, Austria, and Italy, and to precipitate war. Bismarck is aware that the new military organization in France and Russia will make both those nations more formidable two years hence than now, while Germany cannot be stronger in 1892, relatively to these two Powers, than she is to-day. "If war there must be," says the correspondent, "Germany and Italy would infinitely rather have it this year than two years hence. In fact, Italy cannot possibly keep up the present strain upon her resources more than another year. Something must happen to release her from the burden under which she has so long been staggering. But Italy dare not go to war with France unless she is assured greater protection for her coasts than the Italian fleet can afford. Can she rely upon English interposition in case of need? If she can find reason to answer that question in the affirmative she would, without doubt, find occasion to quarrel with France, but unless she can find this reason she will be forced to abandon the triple alliance and come to a good understanding with the French. It is utterly impossible that the present situation can be maintained so far as she is concerned. At present Italy is a ready instrument by which war may be brought about, without even the shadow of Bismarck being thrown on the screen. If Great Britain keeps absolutely free from the triple alliance, war may be still further postponed, although the Portuguese difficulty is in the way. If she enters into that alliance, war will be the inevitable consequence."

The Difficulty Between England and Portugal continues to excite the public in the latter country. Mobs are frequent, and do considerable damage. Any storekeeper in Lisbon having goods of English manufacture in stock is liable to have them taken out, and publicly burned by the mob. The appeal of Portugal for the intervention of the Powers which signed the Treaty of Berlin has failed. Russia alone gave a favorable hearing to the appeal, and that was evidently prompted by her inveterate antagonism to England rather than by the African question. Negotiations are proceeding with Lord Salisbury, but it is understood that the latter, having settled the limit of the concessions which he regards as absolutely necessary on the part of Portugal, the weaker Power, reserving her rights, will, to this extent, have to submit. The Portuguese Ministry will use their utmost exertions to appease public opinion in Portugal, in order that the Secretary of Foreign Affairs may bring about a reconciliation between England and the Cabinet in Lisbon. Meantime the hostility of the Portuguese to their government which this question has aroused, has developed into the demand for a Republic, which is a serious danger to the dynasty.

Terrible Storms on the Atlantic Were Reported last week by the transatlantic steamers. The Gallia, of the Cunard line, which did not reach Queenstown until January 22, though she left New York on January 11, had a trying experience. The captain stated that it was the worst weather he had ever met with on the North Atlantic during his seafaring experiences. On January 17 the steamer shipped tremendous seas, and all the rails on the port side, from the stern to the bridge on the starboard side, were washed away. Five lifeboats were smashed on the davits, two being wrecked to pieces and the davits snapped in two, while the others were bent and twisted into all shapes. The water made its way into the staterooms of the first-class passengers as they were asleep, creating no small alarm among them. In the distance a large steamer was sighted with only one of her masts standing. High seas seemed to wash over her, and she seemed entirely at the mercy of the elements. The Gallia could render no help. Other steamers report similar experiences.

A Boulangist Demonstration in the French Chambers on January 20 shows that the adherents of the General have not abandoned his cause. The Legislature, it will be remembered, pronounced General Boulanger's election void, and seated his opponent, M. Joffrin. That gentleman rose to speak on January 20, on a question before the Chamber, and was immediately saluted with tremendous uproar. He could not make himself heard, and the President was unable to obtain a hearing for him. M. Déroulède, the leader of the Boulangists, was prominent in the demonstration, and the President publicly censured him and requested him to leave the Chamber. He refused to obey, and the sitting was suspended. The military was then called upon, and the soldiers forcibly removed Déroulède from the Chamber. M. Joffrin, who had remained in the tribune, now endeavored to resume his remarks. The Boulangists renewed their protests. The Boulangist Millevoie violently denounced the admission of Joffrin to the Chamber as a violation of the sovereignty of the people. Millevoie was called to order and commanded to withdraw. He also refused to withdraw, when the sitting was suspended for half an hour. Upon the resumption M. Laguerre, another Boulangist, declined to permit M. Joffrin to speak. He met the fate of Millevoie, and there was a third suspension of the session. Finally the Boulangists all left the Chamber in a body. M. Joffrin then proceeded. The Boulangist leaders were excluded from the Chamber for two weeks.

Dr. Talmage Intended to Sail for this Country in the Aurania, which left Liverpool on Saturday last. A correspondent of the New York Herald had an interview with him in London last week, and cables that he has recovered from his attack of the grippe, and is in fine health and full of enthusiasm. Speaking of his visit to Calvary, mentioned on another page, he said: "As I stood looking down the slope of Calvary I saw a reddish rock below me. I rolled it down the hill with my own hands, and had it carried on the backs of camels to Joppa, where it was put on shipboard, and it is now on its way to Brooklyn. That stone is to be the corner-stone in the new Tabernacle I am building to replace the one recently destroyed by fire." Last week the sittings in the new structure were offered for sale. A diagram was exhibited showing the plan of what the floor will be, and an opportunity was given to any who chose to select pews. There was no sale by auction, but each pew had a rental of from $20 to $75 without premium. There were a large number of applications, and about $18,000 was received.

A New Remedy for Human Weakness and physical suffering is prescribed by a citizen of St. Louis, Mo. He holds that health and longevity may be secured by wearing shoes which have copper nails driven in the soles. The object to be achieved by this device is to establish a connection between the electricity in the earth and the human body. The idea was suggested by his travelling for some years among the Indians in the far West. He found that the strongest and healthiest among them went barefoot, and that they were free from headachess, neuralgia, and rheumatism which made his life a burden to him. He reasoned that the secret of the Indian's health was in his bare feet, which exposed his whole body to the vitalizing influence of the electrical earth currents; while his ill health was attributed to his feet being insulated from these currents. Acting on this hypothesis, he sought to restore the broken connection by inserting the copper brads in the soles of his shoes, and claims that his health has been completely established by the device. His strong faith in his theory has probably more to do with the improvement in his health than has his connection with the electricity in the earth. The theory, however, may illustrate the only method of acquiring spiritual health. They alone who maintain a close connection with heaven by prayer and faith receive continuous supplies of grace which nourish and strengthen the divine life in the soul. (Isa. 40: 29-31.)

A Marriage Ended a Feud in Kentucky Recently. The Commercial, of Louisville, Ky., reports the arrival in that city of two excited young people, who rode in swiftly on horseback and went to Jeffersonville. They came from Meade county, where their families had been friends and neighbors for several generations. They had played together as boy and girl, and as they grew older became engaged to be married. Four years ago the young man was sent to college, and soon after his departure the heads of the families quarrelled. The cause of the trouble was at first only the location of a division fence, but in the course of the dispute hot words were spoken and a fierce feeling of hatred engendered. The feud grew so deadly that the neighbors expected every day to hear of shooting. The absent young man was notified by his family of the quarrel, and the girl also wrote him, offering to release him from the engagement if he wished it. He replied that he did not wish it, and meant to marry her when his college course was over. But when he returned, a week or two ago, the girl's father sent him a message that if he came to the house he would be shot, and the old man did go about his arm armed with a gun, for some days, prepared to carry out his threat. He managed, however, to communicate with the girl and arranged a flight. Two swift horses were secured, and in the dead of night the young people rode to Louisville. The girl's father armed himself and followed. He met them as they came out of the house of the Methodist minister, who had just married them. The young man was in peril for a few minutes, but was saved by restrained the irate father and expostulated with him. A better feeling was finally brought out, and the father forgave them. He went back to them, and his first business was to go to the parents of his new son-in-law and make friends. The two families, after years of strife and bitterness, were now at peace, and cordially joined in the wedding festivities. The day is coming when a reconciliation which countless numbers are interested will be celebrated at a marriage supper. Not until the marriage supper of the Lamb will the joy and glory of the reconciliation between God and man, which Christ purchased by His death, be fully realized. (Eph. 2: 14-16.)

The Son of a German Noble was Taken to Bellevue Hospital, New York, on January 15. He represented himself as a poor friendless sailor in need of medical assistance. The man was evidently in a critical condition from pulmonary disease, and he was absolutely penniless. When the attendants at the hospital were putting him to bed they noticed a dark metal cross suspended about his neck. It was pointed out to one of the doctors, who recognized it as the "Iron Cross" of the German army, the most coveted military decoration in Germany, if not in Europe. The man was questioned, and finally told his story, the truth of which there appears no reason to doubt. He said he was the son of the German noble Von Puttkamer; that he had served in the German army during the Franco-German War, and had been gazetted for personal bravery and awarded the "Iron Cross." After the close of the war he killed a man in a duel, and had to make his escape secretly from Germany. He entered the Mexican army, but in 1879 had to fly the country for participating in a plot against the Government. Then he went to Peru, and fought on the war ship Huascar in the war between Peru and Chili. Afterward he came to the United States and served as steward on whaling vessels. He was in a shipwreck last year, and suffered many hardships. On January 10 he arrived in New York on a vessel from San Francisco. He was robbed by another sailor of $60, which was all he possessed. Then, being penniless and very sick, he applied for admission to Bellevue. In all his troubles and privations he had never sent to his father for help, though had he done so it would doubtless have been promptly given. One would have expected that his father would have been the first person a man in so dire a strait would apply to, especially as that father is a noble, high in the Emperor's favor. He acts as some Christians do, who, though sons of the King of kings, do not go to Him for help in their temporal difficulties. (Ps. 18: 6.)

A Mysterious Life is Being Lived by a Chinaman in Mott Street, New York. Seven years ago an unknown Chinaman, over sixty years of age, came to the city and hired a room in 17 Mott Street. The new-comer secluded himself there, holding no communication with the other members of the Chinese colony except his landlord, and one or two fellow-countrymen from whom he had to purchase food. Lately he has broken through this seclusion to some extent. He now seeks out any Chinaman who may be in sickness or poverty and relieves his wants with money, but he seldom speaks even to them, but simply lays down his gift and departs. He has been known to give as much as $100 in this way to one man. Some who have been allowed to enter his room say that he has a Joss shrine there, before which he seems to be always kneeling when not absent on his charitable visits. He even eats his meals in the same posture, and offers to the idol every morsel before putting it into his own mouth. He has never been seen to do anything for a living, but takes such money as he needs from a store which he brought with him from China. In some way the rumor was started a few days ago that the old man's life was one of penance for some terrible crime, but no one knew what he had done. Last week a reporter succeeded in getting speech with him. Mentioning the rumor, he asked the Chinaman if it was true. The old man practically admitted it, and the reporter told him that if he would see a Christian clergyman he might learn of a better way of getting forgiveness for his crimes. "No," he replied, "no one can save me, nothing but my own repentance. What I have done is more than sufficient to require me to beg the gods for pardon all the days of my life." It is not surprising that a man who has never heard of Christ should hold this idea, for many persons who should know better think there is some saving virtue in repentance and self-mortification; but justification does not come that way. (Rom. 4: 5.)

Misery and Dread of Starvation Drove a woman to suicide in New York last week. A short time ago she lived with her husband in Hartford, Conn., where he kept a book and music store. He failed, and he and his wife came to New York to look for employment. The husband fell sick, and was taken to the New York Hospital. The wife was out every day from early morning till night seeking work. She was an educated, refined woman, but she would have been glad to get work at scrubbing or washing, but could not get even that. At every place she was asked for references, but she had none, as she had never earned her own living. She disposed of everything of value she possessed, and finally all her clothes but those she wore. In the bitter rain of January 16 and 17 she continued her quest with no better success, and came to her dreary room drenched at night. She was ill on January 18, but again went out on the same business. She had no food all day, but when she returned at night a woman in the house took compassion upon her, and gave her some of her own supper. On Sunday it was useless to try for work, so she stayed all day in her room sick and hungry. At night she wrote an account of her terrible experience, declaring that she had found it impossible to obtain employment of any kind in the city, and seeing nothing but starvation before her she had determined to kill herself. She then climbed to the roof of the house, and flung herself over. The Secretary of the Charity Organization Society, on being told of the case, said that either his society or the Young Women's Christian Association would have taken charge of the woman, and supported her until employment could have been found for her, if she had applied to them. It appears, however, that she was too proud to seek charity; she asked only for work, and failing that, took her own life in her despair. It was inexpressibly sad that no one would employ her, and still more sad that she allowed her pride to keep her from getting relief. There are some who miss salvation in the same way. They want to get it through good works or large gifts of money, and cannot understand that they can get it only as a free gift. (Eph. 2: 8, 9.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A tobacco dealer in New York City states that last year his firm alone manufactured 825,000,000 cigarettes.

Rev. C. H. Yatman's services at Canton, Ohio, are being much blessed. There have been many conversions, and the meetings are thronged by hundreds of anxious inquirers.

Rev. M. Baxter and Rev. W. Christmas gave Second Advent Discourses recently in Darlington, England. Mr. Christmas is now on his way to Australia to give discourses on prophecy there.

Edward Bellamy, author of Looking Backward, is the son of the late Rev. R. K. Bellamy, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., and a nephew of the Rev. David Bellamy, first pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church, New York City.

Two thousand one hundred and twenty-nine converts were received into the churches of the American Congregational Board in Japan during the year ending April 30. Forty-three of the forty-nine churches are self-supporting.

A niece of Dr. John Scudder, the well-known missionary in India, died suddenly on January 12 at Schenectady, N. Y. Her name was Theodosia Cornelia Fonda. She was the daughter of the late Rev. J. D. Fonda. Many of our readers were acquainted with this eminently pious lady and mourn her loss.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, has been addressing large audiences in the west of Scotland, and pleading the claims of the foreign mission field. During this month he has been preaching in Westminster Chapel, London, on Sundays, and on week-days visiting many of the principal centres of population in England, resuming his work in Scotland next month.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at Fitchburg, Mass., are growing in interest. The local journal says that such gatherings of men were never seen there at religious services before. At the meeting for men only, on Sunday afternoon, over 800 were present. The meetings are being held now in the City Hall, which is densely crowded. On Sunday they were held in the large Opera House which the proprietor has lent free of charge.

Rev. B. Fay Mills expects to commence services in Jersey City, N. J., on February 6. Fourteen churches are uniting in the invitation and will co-operate in the work. At New Brunswick, on January 19, Mr. Mill's preached to the largest congregation he has yet had there. The church would not contain near all who sought admission. During Mr. Mills's visit to New Brunswick over five hundred persons have made profession of faith.

A Home for Fallen Women has been dedicated at Manchester, N. H. It is named the Mercy Home, and is under the charge of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. The Legislature appropriated $5,000 for its establishment, on condition that the New Hampshire Women's Christian Temperance Union raise an equal amount, and the city appropriated $500. It is designed to make the home self-supporting after a time, through the establishment of a laundry wherein the inmates may be employed.

THE KEY-NOTE OF LIFE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name." Ps. 103: 1.

The Psalmist's Key-note.—The Alpha and Omega of the Christian's Life—I. A Blessed Occupation—How Man Can Bless God—By Thinking Well of Him—By Good Wishes—By Speaking Well of Him—By Acting Well—II. The Manner of It—Very Spiritual—Intense—A Difference in Photographs—III. The Sacred Object—Not the New God of this Century—The Jehovah of Revelation—The Holiness which Involved Calvary—IV. The Monitor—Always at Home—His Duty—A Preparation for Heaven.

BEFORE our friend who leads us in singing begins, we sometimes hear his tuning-fork. He is getting the key-note into his ear. When he comes forward, he often sounds out that key-note before he begins to sing. This is what David does in this wonderful psalm. He sounds the tuning-fork with this clear note, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." It is well for all to be ready to sing harmoniously: it is a pity when those who gather to worship do not know what they are at. I wish I could always have you spiritually in tune, and keep in tune myself. Alas! I fear we are often half a note too flat. The words before us are the key-note of this psalm, and all the music is set to it, and closes with it. Notice that the psalm begins, "Bless the Lord, O my soul," and it ends in the same way, "Bless the Lord, O my soul," as if to show us that praise is the Alpha and the Omega of a Christian life.

I. I call your attention, then, first, to the Blessed Occupation,

"Bless the Lord, O my soul." A truly wonderful word this! How can we bless the Lord? For God to bless me I can understand and enjoy; but that I ever should be mentioned in Scripture that I can bless God is one of those incomprehensible things, which are certainly true, but are not to be explained. For man to bless God is a sort of incarnation—God in human flesh. God blessing me—that is divine; but myself blessing Him, there is something of the human, but also somewhat of the divine. The divine blesses the human, or the human could not bless the divine. God is with us, or we could not be thus with God: our blessing Him can only be the echo of His blessing us. The more you turn it over, the more you will wonder at it. If it had said, "Praise the Lord, O my soul," that would have been reasonable; but "Bless the Lord, O my soul," rises out of the region of reason into a still higher and more spiritual atmosphere. These are heavenly words—"Bless the Lord, O my soul."

But how can we bless God? We cannot add to His happiness, or increase His greatness, or enlarge His goodness. "O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, Thou art my Lord: my goodness extendeth not unto Thee!" What can our poor drops contribute to the ocean? What can our nothingness bring to His all-sufficiency? What can our darkness contribute to His light? And yet, if the Bible says so, it must be so, for it never speaks in vain. Idle words are in the speech of man, not in the writings of Jehovah. If the Scripture teaches us to say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul," then it is a correct word. We may wonder at it, but we may not dispute over it.

How Can We Bless God?

I answer, first, God blesses us by thinking well of us, and we bless God by thinking well of Him. When the Lord says in His heart, "This people shall be blessed," before ever He has stretched out His hand to give anything, we are blessed by His favorable regard for us. I beg you, in the same respect, to bless God by sweet, holy, adoring, loving, grateful thoughts of Him. Think well of Him who thinks so graciously of you. This, surely, is no task, no burden. Such thinking is the happiest exercise of the mental powers. Some of the best moments of devotion I have ever been able to enjoy I have spent in entire silence, looking up. I sat still, and wondered that God should ever love me, and I found a dew gathering about my eyes. I thought of how He loved me, and what that love had wrought in me and for me; till, not venturing to speak, I have been content to be silent before the Lord in rapture inexpressible. To think well of God is one of the ways in which we can bless Him.

We also bless God when we wish Him well. You can do a great deal in this way of wishing well, and desiring great things for the Lord's honor and glory. God's wishes are all practically carried out. We cannot carry out ours; but, at the same time, we ought to indulge them freely. He that taught us to pray, bade us begin, "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Pray for yourself certainly, "Give us this day our daily bread;" but this comes after, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done." When you see this truth dishonored, and His Word itself defamed and despised, be grieved; for this is a way of blessing Him, when you abhor all that dishonors Him. Pray without ceasing, "Father, glorify thy Son." Turn your wishes into prayer; and, as the first stage of thinking well is a blessing of God by meditation, so this second stage of wishing well will be a blessing of God by supplication. "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

Think Well, Wish Well.

Then, next, you can bless God by speaking well of Him. Perhaps you say very little about Him. Chide yourself for your reticence. Perhaps you have even spoken against Him, though you are His child. I mean that you have fallen into such a state of heart that you imagine that He deals hardly with you. Ah! this is the opposite of blessing Him. Perhaps you have lost your husband or child, or in health or property you are a sufferer; and it may be that the devil says to you, "Curse God and die." Surely, you will not listen to this vile suggestion. No, no. A thousand times "No." Away with every rebellious thought. "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

"I have nothing to say," says one. Do not say it, then; but some of us have a great deal to say, and we dare not be silent about it. The wicked speak loudly enough against God. You cannot quiet them. Why should we be silent in any company? We have as much right to speak for God as they have to speak against Him. If they ever complain of singing hymns in the street, they have little cause to find fault, for they sing in the street quite enough; and some of them at very unseemly hours. If they say that we obtrude our religion, some of them obtrude their blasphemies, and assuredly we may take as much liberty as they take. We shall not be muzzled like dogs either to please the world or its master. "Bless the Lord, O my soul." Speak well of His name, and let men know that thou hast a good God, who is gracious to thee.

Once more: be not satisfied with thinking well, and wishing well, and speaking well, but act well for God. "Bless the Lord, O my soul," and as he blesses thee with real gifts, with gifts unspeakably precious, bless His name by acts and deeds of holy service and consecration. Sometimes indulge thyself with the delight of breaking an alabaster box, very precious, and pouring its fragrance on thy Lord Jesus. Fetch out something rare and costly from thy store, and give to His cause, and bless His name. "Bless the Lord, O my soul," and do it with hand and purse and substance and sacrifice.

I cannot enlarge farther. I have given you hints, bare hints, but they may show you how you may bless the Lord after the manner in which He blesses you, though the measure be far below what He doeth. As the whole heavens may be reflected in a drop of water, so may infinite love be mirrored in our affections.

II. And now, secondly, let us consider

The Commendable Manner

mentioned. Half the virtue of a thing lies in the way in which it is done. Indeed, there is usually a good deal more in the manner of an action than in the action itself. One person would relieve a poor man in such a way as to break his heart, and another will give him nothing, and yet cheer him up. You can praise a man till he loathes you, and censure him till he loves you. Now, in the service of God, it is not only what you bring, but in what spirit you bring it.

That mode of blessing God to which we are called is very spiritual—a matter of soul and spirit. I am not to bless God with my voice only, nor merely with the help of a fine organ or a trained choir, but I am to do it after a far more difficult manner. "Bless the Lord, O my soul." Soul music is the soul of music. The music of the soul is that which pleases the ear of God: the great Spirit is delighted with that which comes from our spirit. A heart that loves Him makes music to Him. A heart that praises Him has within itself all the harmonies that He delights in. The sigh of love is to Him a lyric, the sob of repentance is melody, the inward cries of His own children are an oratorio, and their heart-songs are true hallelujahs.

You can go to a very fine church, where there is a very grand service, and there may be spiritual service there; but, alas! it is more than probable that there will be no trace of it. You may go to a Quaker's room, where there are four bare white-washed walls, and a window with a holland blind drawn down, and there may be spiritual worship there; and, on the other hand, there may be stolid indifference, and a formalism as fatal as the gorgeous ceremonial. It is neither the outward sumptuousness nor the plainness that will ensure spirituality, and yet this is the life of all worship. If one man feels that he can worship God best in one way, another feels that he can worship Him best in another way, it is not for his brother to judge him; let each have his own way: only let each see to it that he worships God, who is a Spirit, in spirit and in truth. The right note is, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." It is spiritual worship: it is worship not from the teeth outward, but from the heart throes deep within the man.

When we bless God, the sacred exercise

Should be Intense.

"All that is within me, bless His holy name." We ought not to worship God in a half-hearted sort of way; as if it were now our duty to bless God, but we felt it to be a weary business, and would get it through as quickly as we could, and have done with it; and the sooner the better. No; "All that is within me, bless His holy name." Mechanical worship is easy, but worthless. Com-rouse yourself, my brother! Rouse thyself. O my own soul! "All that is within me, bless His holy name." What we need is a universal suffrage of praise from every member of our manhood's commonwealth. Every faculty within our nature is to praise God—our memory, our hope, our fear, our desire; all our capacities, and all our graces.

What a difference there is between a man unconcerned, and a man really awakened! In your own case, I can believe you to be bright and intelligent, but your portrait—I will say nothing about it. When the photographer fits that iron rest at the back of your head, and keeps you waiting ten minutes, while he gets his plates ready, why, your soul goes out of town, and nothing remains but the heavy look! When the work of art is finished, it is you, and yet it is not you. You were driven out by the touch of that iron. Another time, perhaps your portrait is taken instantaneously, while you are in an animated attitude, while your whole soul is there; and your friends say, "Ay, that is your very self!" I want you to bless the Lord as in that last portrait. I saw a book to-day where in the writer says in the preface, "We have given a portrait of our mother, but there was a kind of sacred twinkle about her eyes which no photograph could reproduce." Now, it is my heart's desire that you do praise God with that sacred twinkle, with that feature or faculty which is most characteristic of you. Let your eyes praise Him. Let your brow praise Him. Let every part of your manhood be aroused, and so aroused as to be in fine form. I would have your soul rise to high-water mark. Give me a man on fire when God is to be praised. Let "all that is within me bless His holy name."

With Your Soul at Home

How you have looked at that dear child at time you loving mother! You have pressed him to your bosom, and you have said, "Bless him, and bless him, and bless him again." Shall our children have joy such affectionate repetitions, and will we not bless God, and bless Him, and bless Him, and bless Him again? Begin your days with blessing Him. Begin your meals with blessing Him. Go not to your beds without blessing Him. Wake not in the morning without blessing Him. Even at the end of night, if you lie sleepless, still bless Him. What happy lives we should live if we were always blessing Him!

III. But I ask your attention earnestly for a minute to a third point, and that is of this blessing. The text is, in the original, "Bless Jehovah, O my soul." In the reading of the Psalms, as a rule, I frequently put the word "Jehovah" before you instead of "the Lord," for you know that wherever we get "THE LORD" in capital letters, it is Jehovah in the original; and why should we not know that the sacred name used by the inspired writer? I am afraid that great many so-called Christians do not worship Jehovah at all. The god of the present period is a new god, newly sprung up. The Old Testament is looked upon by some as if it were a worn-out book, and the God of Israel is regarded as a deity of the olden time, and not the only living and true God. "Ah!" they say, "He is a very imperfect revelation;" and then they go on to reverence their own effeminate version of the Godhead. For own part I know nothing of a new God. I adore the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God that made the heavens and the earth. "This God is our God for ever and ever. He shall be our guide, even unto death."

The Sacred Object

But the text says, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless His holy name." What is meant by blessing His name? The name of God is that by which He reveals Himself, so that the God we have to worship is the Jehovah of revelation. Here, again, we fall foul of many. They worship the god of reason, the conception of the cultured mind, the god whom they have invented for themselves by their great wisdom. The God whom men find out for themselves is not the true God. I trow that this day it is true, as in Paul's day, "The world by wisdom knew not God." I often hear people say, "They go from nature up to nature's God." It is too far for human strength. Stand on the highest Alp, and you will perceive that you will never step into heaven from thence. It is far easier to go from nature's God to nature, and far safer to believe in Him who stoops out of the heavens, and reveals Himself to you. However, let me say to all believers, "Bless His holy name," that is, bless the God who is revealed to us, and bless Him as He is revealed to us. Do not look around you after another god. Keep you to revelation. There is God's name spelled out in capitals. Believe the inspired Word, for it will never mislead you. O friends, if I did not believe in the infallibility of Scripture—the absolute infallibility of it from cover to cover, I would never enter this pulpit again! If it is left to me to discriminate, and to judge how much of this Book is true, and how much false, then I must myself become infallible, or what guide have I? If my compass always points to the north, I know how to use it; but if it veers to other points of the compass, and I am to judge out of my own mind whether it is right or not, I am as well without the thing as with it. If my Bible is right always, it will lead me right; and as I believe it is so, I shall follow it, God helping me. I will not judge the Book; the Book judges me.

A Very Long Step—

But then, notice that the psalm dwells especially upon one point. "Bless His holy name." Now, a babe in grace can bless God for His goodness, but only a grown believer will bless God for His holiness. His holiness is an august attribute, an attribute which comprehends all the rest, for it means His wholeness, His perfection; His holiness. It is an attribute which looks darkly on sinful men. Apart from the Lord Jesus Christ, it seems to thunder and lighten against the sinner; but as for those of us who are reconciled to God by the death of His Son, it smiles upon them. Beloved, do you love a holy God? Do you bless a holy God? While you bless Him for His mercy, do you equally bless Him for His holiness? You bless Him for His bounty, but do you feel that you could not thus bless Him if you were not fully aware that He is perfectly righteous? "Bless His holy name."

IV. I have done when I add this fourth point, Let us remember

The Suitable Monitor.

In the text a suitable monitor appears. A Christian man who wants somebody to look after him is a very imperfect Christian man; for he who has the love of God in his soul will look after himself. Some of you go out preaching, or you teach a class in a Sunday-school. Keep on with that; but do not forget to look after one pupil of yours who needs your care very greatly. I mean, look to yourself: and every now and then say, "My soul, bless the Lord." What are you at? You have been grumbling of late. Wake up, and say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." You have been dull and cold-hearted of late. Chide yourself, for this will not do.

If you have this monitor, you will have one that is always at home. You will not have to send across the road for a minister. Here is a spiritual chaplain who will be resident with you, and always ready with His personal advice. Will you not try to practice your ministry upon yourself, and begin at once to apply to yourself all that you would say to another whom you would excite to bless the Lord?

Ought you not to do it? Are you not afraid of growing cold in this holy service? "No," say you, "I am not." Then I am afraid that you are cold already. "No," say you, "I am full of life." Will you always be so? Man's security is the devil's opportunity. Whenever you say to yourself, "All is well with me," I fear for you. A foul fiend is watching for your halting, and he laughs as he sees how you delude yourself. You are not all you think you are. Bestir yourself, and praise the Lord." Say to yourself, "Bless the Lord, O my soul. I dwell amongst lions. But none the less for their roaring, bless the Lord, O my soul." That will stop the lions' mouths. What if you are in prison, like Paul and Silas? bless the Lord. Nothing shakes prison walls and breaks jailers' hearts like the praises of the Lord. Here I am the holy God. Bless the Lord, O my soul; and be all the firmer, and all the bolder. If everybody sneers at divine truth, bless the Lord, O my soul. Let all men know that there is one in the world who does not sneer at revelation. This, dear friends, is how it ought to be from me personally. If I do not praise the Lord, the stone in the wall will cry out against me; and it will complain of you also if you be silent. You owe Him more than many. If all forget, yet do you remember.

Where Everybody Doubts

Lastly, to bless God will prepare us for heaven. Praise is the rehearsal of our eternal song. By grace we learn to sing, and in glory we continue to sing. What will some of you do when you get to heaven, if you go on grumbling all the way? Do not hope to get to heaven in that style. But now begin to bless the name of the Lord.

I have not spoken thus to all of you. Some of you cannot bless the Lord as yet. Will you try? Think how sad it is to be in a state of mind in which you cannot render acceptable praise. You must be born again before you can bless the Lord. May the Lord convince you of the necessity that He should bless you before you can bless Him! May you receive His blessing in a moment by faith in the Lord Jesus! The Lord grant it, for Jesus' sake! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessings of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Father Pleads For His Son.—Mr. Wells says:

"A gentleman once visited me who wished me to speak to his son: 'My father died a drunkard,' he said, 'and I am going to die a drunkard, as many of my relations have done.' I protested, but he insisted, 'Nothing is more sure; we need talk no more about it. But you have some influence over my son, and I wish you could persuade him to be a total abstainer. He is beginning to take wine, very little just now, but that is just how I began at his age, and I know that with the hereditary bias towards intemperance which he has, nothing can save him but total abstinence.' Some may make an excuse of heredity, but it is a most mighty and solemn fact. Medical men affirm that the hereditary taint may overleap a generation and concentrate itself in one or two of a family, and at your table where you only take wine moderately, the dormant tendency may be aroused which may cause your beloved child to join the great army of drunkards. Total abstinence is the only safeguard for the young."

The Stain on the Pinafore.—Mr. Wm. Thomson relates: "I knew a Sunday-school teacher who had a class of little children. One Sunday she said to them, 'Would you like to come and have tea with me on Saturday afternoon?' Every little face was lighted up with joy, for they knew what tea at the 'big house' meant. 'Very well,' continued the lady, 'I shall be glad to see you all at my house on Saturday; but there is one condition. You must all come with perfectly clean pinafores. If there be one speck on a pinafore the child with it cannot be admitted.' Saturday afternoon came and the thirteen little ones, all arrayed in spotless pinafores started on their walk of two miles to the 'big house.' On the road they passed a spot where there were some very fine blackberries, and two little fellows, unable to pass the enticing fruit, climbed up and gathered some. They got them quite safely, and were busy eating them, when their sister came to look for them, and noticing what they had, she said, 'Watch, or you will soil your pinafore.' But her warning came too late, for on looking down she saw that a berry had dropped upon the pinafore of one of them, and had left a large spot. The little unfortunate boy thought that if he kept his hand on the mark it might not be noticed. But as they were going in, the man at the door saw from the child's guilty appearance that he was hiding something, and asked, 'What is that you have there?' and the stain was uncovered. That afternoon while twelve children were enjoying themselves, one little fellow with tear-stained face was slowly returning to the village. After tea, the teacher said, 'Do you know why I seemed so harsh to-day? It was to teach you a lesson. Some day you will stand before God, and if you have a single spot on your soul you will never enter heaven.' Then she showed them the only way by which they could be made pure: by coming to Jesus, and being washed in His blood, they would be whiter than snow."

A Feverish Thirst Assuaged.—A Worker for

Christ says: "A little fellow lay on his sick-bed. The fever had created a dreadful thirst. He was constantly crying, 'Mother, give me a drink! oh, mother, give me a drink!' But she dare not, for the doctor had told her that her boy's illness was at a very critical point, and she must not give him anything to drink. So she could only listen and try to soothe him, that he might better bear the terrible thirst that was torturing him. One day, when the doctor came in, he said, 'You can give him as much water as he wants, now.' The mother was not slow to avail herself of the permission. With a glass in her hand she went to the bed, and said, 'Johnny, do you want a drink?' 'No, mother,' was all he said. All that day he never asked for water, and next day, when his mother again approached him and asked, 'Johnny, would you like a drink?' he replied, 'No, mother; I have a well of my own, here,' and he placed his hand over his heart. Yes, he had a well within him, the well Christ gives to His own, and they who drink of it shall never thirst again."

A Surgeon Prevented from Regicide.—Mr. H.

K. Wood tells the "interesting story of a certain king of Tartary who, one day while out riding came upon a dervish proclaiming at the top of his voice, 'Whoever will pay me a hundred dinars shall receive some good advice in exchange.' The king stopped, and calling the dervish to him, inquired, 'What advice is this you have to give?' 'That I shall tell your majesty as soon as you order the money to be paid to me,' was the reply. A hundred dinars were handed to him, and the dervish said, 'My advice, sire, is, begin nothing without considering what the end may be.' The courtiers were amused with what they considered a clever piece of roguery, but the monarch reproved them, saying he considered the advice well worth its cost. So much did those words of wisdom affect him that he had them engraved on all his gold and silver plate. Some years afterward, a Tartar noble conspired to usurp the throne. Just as the royal surgeon, who was bribed by the noble, was about to apply a poisoned lancet, his eye caught, written on the bottom of the vessel that was to catch the blood, the words, 'Begin nothing without considering what the end may be.' He became agitated, and hurriedly changed his lancet for another. The king noticed his confusion, and demanded its cause; then, under a promise of pardon, the surgeon confessed the whole plot, adding that but for the words at the bottom of the plate he would have performed his part in the tragedy. Before you enter into evil count the cost. The road may seem fascinating and alluring, but the end is death. The right way may seem harder, but it leads to life everlasting."

In the Coils of a Deadly Monster.—The Rev.

James Wells relates: "As I speak there rises before me the image of a man who seemed a rock of strength, physically and mentally, a good citizen and father, devoted to his wife and children. Ere he reached the age of forty he found himself meshed in the fatal coils of strong drink. He frequently resolved to give it up, but always without success. It made one tremble to hear the curses he called down upon himself if ever he should taste it again. He knelt before his wife, asked her pardon for his past behavior, and in her presence signed the pledge. Next morning, when he arose, he implored God to keep him from his besetting sin, and a few minutes afterwards was in his wine-cellar drinking, and at the same time weeping that he did so. A fit of delirium tremens frightened him, and for a few days he abstained. But by-and-by he said, 'A little light wine can do no harm.' From light wine he went to stronger wine, then brandy, and soon he was in delirium tremens again. Though he knew he was breaking the heart of the wife whom he loved, he continued in his favorite indulgence day after day with a nameless infatuation, until ultimately he drank himself into madness, and died in an asylum. Yet apart from that one thing, he was a most respectable man, but that drop in the cup poisoned the whole. One cannot draw, in word-pictures, a true representation of the many miseries and crimes against God and man which are due to the influence of strong drink, but we can confidently point you to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

Dr. Young, Bishop of Athabasca.

A Samoan National Council Preparing for Refreshment. (See page 69.)

The Two Parrots.—At Bethany Hall Mr. W. Thomson observed: "I knew two men, each of whom possessed a very fine parrot. One was a swearing parrot, and the other always repeating parts of Scripture which it had heard. Both parrots had contracted these habits before they had become the property of their then owners; and the gentleman who had the swearing parrot was much annoyed by its frequent outbursts of profanity. He wondered how he could cure it. 'Ah,' he thought, 'if I shut it up with my friend's praying parrot, it will improve, and may even learn to recite Scripture.' The two birds were caged together for some time. Did the swearing one learn from the other? Not a bit of it; but the praying one learned to swear. It is not wise for a good person to keep company with bad companions, no matter how good may be the end in view. They will do you more harm than you will do them good. It is right to go to them with God's message, but having delivered that message, come away. Be not unequally yoked together, for what fellowship hath light with darkness?"

THE RT. REV. RICHARD YOUNG, D. D., Bishop of Athabasca.

THE earnest, evangelical bishop whose portrait is here given has charge of a diocese covering 200,000 square miles. It was created in 1884 by the division of a larger diocese, the other part, known as the Mackenzie River Diocese, being chosen by the former Bishop, the Rt. Rev. William C. Bompas, and the Athabasca section being placed under the care of Bishop Young. He is about fifty years of age, and had labored in the diocese for nine years before being consecrated its bishop. From the beginning of his work the blessing of God followed his labors, and marked him out as the right man to take charge of the new diocese. He was consecrated at St. John's College, Winnipeg, on October 18, 1884.

The diocese was originally part of the district known as the Red River settlement, extending from the borders of the United States to the extreme north, and from Canada to the Pacific Ocean. In 1811 no Protestant missionary was known to be seeking to introduce Christianity among the aboriginal Indians, who formed the bulk of its inhabitants. Their religion, a terror of spiritual powers supposed by them to inhabit or pervade everything, was in itself sufficient to account for any degree of barbarity. They believed in one Great Spirit, or Manito, the Maker of the world, but who dwelt at an infinite distance, was inactive, and troubled himself but little with the administration of earthly affairs. On the other hand, there was an evil Manito, inferior to the former, active and administrative, filling the world and everything with legions of evil Manitoes, whose delight was to disquiet and trouble men upon the earth.

It was such a people, under such conditions, living besides a life of perpetual struggle for existence, which, in 1821 or 1822, excited the deep compassion of John West, a devout and earnest chaplain in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company, and led him, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society, to select two lads, whom he took into his own care, under solemn covenant with their parents. He taught them to pray, "Great Father, give me Thy Spirit, for Jesus Christ's sake." One of these two boys afterward became the Rev. Henry Budd, who died in 1875, after a faithful ministry of twenty-two years, in the course of which he translated the Bible and Prayer-Book, &c., into the Cree language, and was the father of another native minister, who died in 1863; and the second boy, the Rev. James Settee, has labored for thirty-four years in the gospel at Sandy Lake, Saskatchewan. From this small beginning the work has grown to what we see to-day, when from the United States borderland to the Arctic Ocean, and from Hudson's Bay to the Rocky Mountains, the praises of the Redeemer are sung by thousands of Indians, and in eleven different languages. The chief tribes in the Athabasca Diocese are the Beavers, Wood Crees, and Chipewyans.

AN INDIAN PHILOSOPHER'S ADMISSION.

It will be in the recollection of many of our readers that the Buddhists of America, the Theosophists, and others who spend their time as did the Athenians of Paul's day "in nothing else but to tell or to hear some new thing," were much interested some five or six years ago in the lectures of Mr. P. C. Mozoomdar, a visitor from India. He was a representative of the Brahmo Somaj, a scholarly man, a profound philosopher, and a very eloquent speaker. He not only lectured in our large cities, but sold a large number of copies of his book entitled The Oriental Christ. Since his return to India he has edited a paper as an organ of the Brahmo Somaj, which he is now compelled to discontinue, owing to the decline, if not the collapse, of that movement. The idea of a regenerator suited to India could hardly have been worked up more plausibly than that which appeared in Mr. Mozoomdar's book; but this failure, like so many others, is an evidence that a religious system having real vitality and power cannot be elaborated by human ingenuity, and that although there may be "lords many," a Christ who is not divine must be evanescent as the vapors of the morning.

It is significant that Mr. Mozoomdar, in taking leave of the public, feels compelled to say, "Christ (the Christ) is a tremendous reality. The destiny of India hangs upon the solution of His nature and function, and our relation to Him. Let us not hide in darkness and rest contented with random streaks, but place ourselves in the open light, and solve the problem, 'Who and what is Christ?'"

HENRY WESTON'S DISCOVERY.

(See illustration on page 77.)

"YOU cannot guess who was the most favored guest," said Julia Epstein, as she described to her mother over a late breakfast a reception which she had attended the previous evening. "Miss Dacre made her welcome of one young man quite conspicuous, and she talked with him more than with any one else, and when she was obliged to leave him she introduced him to the most distinguished gentlemen there."

"I have no idea," said Mrs. Epstein. "Some new luminary in the social firmament?"

"Yes, new to such a circle, but not new to us. It was Cousin Henry. He looked so queer. He wore a suit of clothes which must have been his best suit when he was on the farm. I don't believe he could have bought them anywhere in New York, unless it was in some second-hand store in Chatham Street. He looked so countrified and out of place among so many well-dressed men. But Miss Dacre did not seem to mind a bit. I wonder how she knew him. It was very evident that she not only knows him well, but likes him."

"How strange! And I remember she took scarcely any notice of poor Reginald, though he dressed well, and had the manners of a gentleman."

"Yes, and as my brother, too, he had some title to her respect. He had done nothing, then, to disgrace himself. There was no hint of any scandal then, yet she quite snubbed him when he tried to be friendly with her. Henry seems to have made his way into her good graces by some merit of his own; I don't think she knew he was my cousin."

"Well," said Mrs. Epstein, "Miss Dacre is rather eccentric, though there is no question about her position in society. Henry may go anywhere, now that Miss Dacre has endorsed him. I wish she had shown some favor to poor Reginald; perhaps if she had he might have been weaned from the company that brought him to ruin. I wonder where the poor boy is now!"

"Oh, it is of no use wondering; the best thing we can do is to forget him. He never did us any good; he was always a source of anxiety. He went wrong from the start. I am glad he escaped being arrested, and I hope, for my part, he will never come back."

"Yet how handsome and gentlemanly he was!" said Mrs. Epstein, the tears gathering in her eyes. "I cannot forget him. Oh, if he would only repent and reform! That is my prayer day and night. Why was it he should turn out so bad, and Henry get on so well without half his advantages?"

"Is Henry getting on well? He did not look it, if one might judge by his dress."

"Oh, yes, he is. His mother wrote me that he was doing very well, and was rising in the office; getting more money than he ever expected. She thought we should look after his comfort, but he never gives us an opportunity. Why does he never call?"

"That is what I asked him last night," said Julia.

"He said his evenings were always occupied. I judge he does not spend many in such places as Miss Dacre's, or he would have acquired more style. But he promised me he would come soon."

The two ladies gave Henry Weston a very cordial reception when he kept the promise he had made to his cousin Julia. They had been disposed to patronize him when he called soon after his arrival in New York from the country about a year before. Reginald was at home then, and was barely civil to him, though he did offer to introduce him to his tailor and hair-dresser, openly intimating that Henry stood in need of their attentions. The young man had not availed himself of the offer, and his appearance still showed that if he ever visited the establishments of those artists he had not profited by them. The fact, however, of his acquaintance with so fashionable a lady as Miss Dacre had its effect on his aunt and cousin, and inspired them with respect, though they could not account for it.

"We hoped we should have seen more of you, Henry," said Mrs. Epstein, "now that you are living in New York. You have neglected us. Has Miss Dacre monopolized you?"

"Oh, no; I never was at her receptions until the other evening. I am very much interested in a mission that a friend of mine has opened on the East side, and I go there nearly every evening. It is doing a great work among the poor and outcast. You have no idea how much want and suffering there is over there. The sin and sorrow in those tenement houses is appalling. It is so little one can do to alleviate it, that no opportunity should be missed."

"What can you do?" Julia asked, in surprise. "It would need a millionaire's fortune to relieve those wretched creatures."

"Money is not the only or the best remedy," Henry answered. "If it were, I should be useless. I give what I can, but it is not much, of course. Sympathy and kindness, interest in the troubles they have to bear, and advice in cases when through ignorance or prejudice they are bent on some evil course does much more. Living among them, and winning their confidence as a friend, and teaching their children is a much more hopeful course than giving them money. Still, money is very useful. Miss Dacre did a great deal of good last summer in sending some sick women and children to the seaside for a few weeks."

"Oh, that is how you came to know her," Julia said.

"Yes, she is very well known on the East side. I do not know how we would get on without her help sometimes. I have seen wayward girls who were impervious to all other influences melted by her sympathy and kindness. And then her money—that is very useful."

"I never heard of Miss Dacre in the character of a philanthropist," said Mrs. Epstein, after Henry Weston had departed. "It is curious work for a society lady. I wonder she is not afraid of contagious diseases—and the dirt and squalor! I should have thought that would be enough to disgust her."

"Well," said Julia, "I suppose Henry has satisfied his conscience by making this call, and we shall not see him again unless we go to some East side tenement house to look for him. He said he lived there, did he not? Ugh!"

The expectation was not verified. Some three months later Henry Weston was again in his aunt's house. "Aunt," he said, "I want you to come over to our mission with me. There is a poor sick man there I want you to see."

"I, Henry? oh no! what can I do? I am perfectly helpless in such cases, and besides, I have a repugnance to scenes of misery," and the delicate, refined lady shrugged her shoulders.

Henry Weston Explaining His Work to His Aunt and Cousin.

"But you can do good there, Aunt. This man has been a great sinner; he has been a fugitive from justice, and he has suffered terrible hardships. He is thoroughly contrite now, and has made his peace with God. He is very ill, but if he could be taken out of his close room and well nursed he would recover. He has been in the city more than a month, and we have been caring for him amongst us, but we cannot do much. I did not learn his history until to-night, and I came to you at once. Oh, do not refuse, aunt!" Henry pleaded. "It is Reginald."

"Reginald, my lost boy!" Mrs. Epstein almost screamed. "Ill, and in poverty. O Henry! take me to him at once. God bless you for the news! Oh, yes, I will go to him immediately. Really repentant, is he? Thank God!"

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 62.)

The Day of Fasting and Prayer.

GOVERNOR BRADFORD furnishes a most touching picture of the destitution of the colony at this period. The men were divided into companies of six or seven each, who by turns went out with their boat and nets, and returned not, says he, though five or six days out; knowing there was nothing at home. To add to their sorrow, the colonists learned of abundant supplies that had been shipped for them many months before, and now the shattered remnants of a wreck which were drifted into the bay seemed to the desponding Pilgrims to furnish undoubted evidence that their friends and their long-expected stores had perished together in the storm.

"God," says Winslow, "seemed to deprive us of all future hopes. The most courageous were discouraged, because He who had hitherto been our shield and supporter now seemed in His anger to arm Himself against us; and who can withstand the fierceness of His wrath?" But though thus cast down and despairing, they did not abandon the ancient stronghold of faith. Privately and unitedly they offered up earnest prayers to God, with solemn confessions of sin. A day of fasting and humiliation was appointed by public authority, and especially set apart for casting themselves as a people on the mercy and long-suffering goodness of God, who had so often proved Himself a very present help in time of trouble.

Such incidents as this prove, more than anything else could do, the nature of that vital principle by which the weak and apparently helpless band of exiles, cast on the desolate shores of New England, took root and established themselves until they grew into a powerful state, which the Old World now regards with wonder and admiration; while numerous and powerful bodies of emigrants, sustained by the wealth of England, and furnished with annual supplies by her fleets, failed to leave behind them any enduring traces of the settlements they went forth to establish. The spirit of religious faith and humble trust in the overruling providence of God never forsook the Pilgrim Fathers, and was most strongly present in their minds as a vital principle of sustaining power in those dark hours of trial when all other hope seemed vain. This it was which enabled them to surmount the difficulties and dangers before which the bands of England's most daring adventurers had quailed; and we shall best understand its nature by recording its manifestations in the language of the old Pilgrim's narrative:

"These and the like considerations," says Winslow, "moved not only every good man to enter into examination with his own estate between God and his conscience, and so to humiliation before Him, but also more solemnly to humble ourselves together before the Lord by fasting and prayer. To that end a day was appointed by public authority, and set apart from all other employments; hoping that the same God which had stirred us up hereunto, would be moved hereby in mercy to look down upon us, and grant the request of our dejected souls, if our continuance there might any way stand with His glory and our good."

"But oh, the mercy of our God! who was as ready to hear as we to ask; for though in the morning, when we assembled together, the heavens were as clear, and the drought as like to continue as ever it was, yet (our exercise continuing some eight or nine hours), before our departure, the weather was overcast, the clouds gathered together on all sides, and on the next morning distilled such soft, sweet, and moderate showers of rain, continuing some fourteen days, and mixed with such seasonable weather, as it was hard to say whether our withered corn or drooping affections were most quickened or revived; such was the bounty and goodness of our God."

The Pilgrim Fathers were no superstitious visionaries who looked for miraculous interpositions of Providence on their behalf in every emergency. In Robert Cushman's Reasons and Considerations, he shows this most clearly, discriminating between God's extraordinary dealings with His chosen people of old, and the overruling providence by which alone He now manifests His care over all His works. "God of old," says he, "did so guide His people, but now He doth not, but speaks in another manner, and so we must apply ourselves to God's present dealing, and not to His wonted dealing; and as the miracle of giving manna ceased when the fruits of the land became plenty, so God, having such a plentiful storehouse of directions in His Holy Word, there must not now any extraordinary revelations be expected." So did the old Pilgrims reason, free from the slightest tincture of fanaticism or superstition; but they did not the less surely believe that the eye of the Lord is still upon all His works, and His ear is still ready to hear the prayer of the destitute, and Himself to be the help and the refuge of His people.

The Indians had not failed to note, in their frequent intercourse with the colonists, that on each returning seventh day they rested from all worldly labor, however pressing their necessities might be, and devoted their Sabbath to the worship of the Great Spirit, whose overruling providence was dimly shadowed forth in the traditional faith of the rude children of the forest. It chanced, at the period appointed for this solemn fast, that a number of Indians had assembled, from various causes, at the settlement, among whom was Hobbamock, the friendly Indian who, to a great extent, supplied the loss of Squanto, their former interpreter. The Indians gazed with their silent but observant habits on the colonists, wondering to see them gathering together for worship, and no signs of their wonted industry, although it was only three days since the Sunday of the Pale Faces.

By a happy union of apparently very diverse uses, the fort they had reared as their stronghold on Burial Hill served in like manner as the place of public worship. To this indeed it owes its latter designation, the colonists having naturally reverted after a time to the custom of their English forefathers, and chosen the site of their burial-ground around the sacred place of their Sabbath assemblies. Not now to the warrior's fort and citadel, but to the Christian's stronghold, were they betaking themselves. The Indians strove in vain to conceive what this could mean, and at length Hobbamock demanded of a boy the reason of such unwonted procedure. The effect on the minds of the wondering Indians may readily be conceived when, as at the prayer of the prophet Elijah, "the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain."

The virtues of Hobbamock, their Indian friend and interpreter, appear to have been held in high estimation by the colonists. His services to the settlement had proved of great value, and his hearty sympathy and co-operation with them in all their proceedings seem completely to have overcome the feelings of distrust which their ordinary intercourse with their Indian neighbors must have induced in the minds of the Pilgrims. In the following year he was completely adopted into their number as a member of the colony of New Plymouth. In the allotment of the lands of the settlement in 1624, a portion was set apart as "Hobbamock's ground;" and in a work published in London about twenty years later, entitled New England's First Fruits, the following touching record of his fidelity occurs:—"As he increased in knowledge, so in affection, and also in his practice, reforming and conforming himself accordingly; and though he was much tempted by enticements, scoffs, and scorn from the Indians, yet could he never be gotten from the English, nor from seeking after their God, but died amongst them, leaving some good hopes in their hearts that his soul went to rest."

It is curious, and not unworthy of note in passing, that the name of this Indian, whom the pious Pilgrims thus regarded as probably the first fruits of their missionary zeal, is the same which Winslow notes as that applied by the natives to the spirit of evil. The coincidence seems to have escaped their observation, or they would hardly have failed to notice the deliverance of the plighted bondman of Satan, to become the first freedman of the gospel among the natives of New England.

It may not be unmeet to glance for a moment at the Indian's creed—a faith not devoid of some sublimity in its most prominent features, though deformed by many degrading superstitions. "A few things," writes Winslow, in a narrative appended to his historic relation, "I have observed amongst the Indians, both touching their religion and sundry other customs amongst them. And first, whereas myself and others, in former letters, wrote that the Indians about us are a people without any religion, or knowledge of any God, therein I erred, though we could then gather no better; for as they conceive of many divine powers, so of one, whom they call Kiehtan, to be the principal and maker of all the rest, and to be made by none. He, they say, created the heavens, earth, sea, and all creatures contained therein; also that he made one man and one woman, of whom they and we and all mankind came; but how they became so far dispersed, that know they not.

"At first, they say, there was no sachem or king, but Kiehtan, who dwelleth above in the heavens, whither all good men go when they die, to see their friends, and have their fill of all things. This his habitation lieth far westward in the heavens, they say; thither the bad men go also, and knock at his door, but he bids them quatchet, that is to say, walk abroad, for there is no place for such; so that they wander in restless want and penury. Never man saw this Kiehtan; only old men tell them of him, and bid them tell their children, yea, to charge them to teach their posterities the same, and lay the like charge upon them. This power they acknowledge to be good; and when they would obtain any great matter, they meet together and cry unto him; and so likewise for plenty, victory, &c., sing, dance, feast, give thanks, and hang up garlands and other things in memory of the same.

"Another power they worship, whom they call Hobbamock, and to the northward of us, Hobbamockui; this, as far as we can conceive, is the devil. Him they call upon to cure their wounds and diseases. When they are curable, he persuades them he sends the same for some conceived anger against them, but upon their calling upon him, he can and doth help them. But when they are mortal and not curable in nature, then he persuades them Kiehtan is angry, and sends them, whom none can cure; insomuch as in that respect only they somewhat doubt whether he be simply good, and therefore in sickness never call upon him."

As the apprehensions of the colonists were dispelled in so remarkable a manner, they learned soon after that their sorrow at the supposed loss of the vessel freighted with their expected stores had been no less premature. The ship was safe, and on its way to New England with the needful supplies, while the dangers and long delays it had experienced were fruitful to them in unlooked-for blessings. While the colonists were mourning over the wreck flung on their coast, not as the evidence of ruined hopes, but of friends intombed amid the raging billows of the Atlantic, God in His good providence was watching over them, and working out for them a great deliverance.

The good prospects of the New England colonists, which were probably exaggerated in the eyes of the English adventurers by their unwearied patience and contentment, had excited the covetous longings of others besides Mr. Thomas Weston. Mr. John Pierce, with shrewder foresight than Weston, resolved to secure to himself the first fruits of their success, not by entering into competition with them, but by rendering them completely subservient to his interests.

"We received," says Bradford, "letters from the adventurers in England of December 22 and April 9 last, wherein they say, 'It rejoiceth us much to hear those good reports that divers have brought home of you,' and give an account that last fall a ship, the Paragon, sailed from London with passengers for New Plymouth; being fitted out by Mr. John Pierce, in whose name our first patent was taken, his name being only used in trust; but when he saw we were here hopefully seated, and, by the success God gave us, had obtained favor with the Council of New England, he gets another patent of a larger extent, meaning to keep it to himself, allow us only what he pleased, hold us as his tenants and sue to his courts as chief lord. But meeting with tempestuous storms in the Downs, the ship is so bruised and leaky that in fourteen days she returned to London, was forced to be put into the dock, five hundred dollars laid out to mend her, and lay six or seven weeks, to December 22, before she sailed a second time; but being half-way over, met with extreme tempestuous weather about the middle of February which held fourteen days, beat off the round-house, with all her upper works, obliged them to cut her mast and return to Portsmouth, having 109 souls aboard, with Mr. Pierce himself. Upon which great and repeated loss and disappointment, he is prevailed upon for $2,500 to resign his patent to the Company, which cost him but $250; and the goods, with charge of passengers in this ship, cost the Company $3,200, for which they were forced to hire another ship, the Anne, of 140 tons, to transport them, namely, sixty passengers with sixty tons of goods, hoping to sail by the end of April."

Every step secured by the founders of New England was slowly and hardly won. Their growth was like that of the hardy oak, which gains strength cradled by the storms of winter, and roots itself the more firmly by contending with its rudest gales.

Just as the colonists were beginning to look with pleasing anticipations on the ripening of the golden grain, which they had sowed under such severe privations, and tended amid many fears, the outlookers on Burial Hill were cheered with the sight of a sail on the distant horizon. In the latter end of July the ship Anne arrived, followed soon after by the Little James, a small vessel of forty-four tons, built expressly for trading with the colony. In addition to the acceptable supplies which they brought, about sixty passengers landed at Plymouth, most of whom were welcome to the Pilgrims as dear and long-expected friends. Some of them were the wives and children of those who had been the foremost to face the dangers and difficulties of the infant settlement. They found not one sick person in the settlement, notwithstanding all the want and privations they had endured.

Imagination must be left to picture the joyful meeting of husband and wife, parents and children, after so long a separation, and the tedious hopes and fears attendant on the circumstances in which both parties had been placed. In the quaint Christian names mingling among the common Georges, Thomases, and Edwards, familiar to modern ears, which appear in the list of these new emigrants, we detect one of the peculiar characteristics which at a later period, become so general among the Puritans both of England and America. There are Fear and Patience, daughters of Elder Brewster, Manasseh Faunce, Christian Penn, and Experience Mitchell. Jonathan and Love were in like manner the sons of the venerable Elder, whom Governor Bradford speaks of as the father of many children. Another of his children bore the name of Wrestling; and the history of the colony in later times affords evidence that the example was not lost on their descendants.

Among those undistinguished by their names there unhappily proved to be some but little welcome as members of that virtuous community, and whose peculiarities had anything but a Puritan tendency. So vicious and troublesome, indeed, did they prove, that the colonists were compelled to ship them home the following year, being glad to secure their absence at any cost.

The arrival of the Anne and Little James with their new band of emigrants casting in their lot with the founders of Plymouth marks a period of peculiar interest in the annals of the Pilgrim Fathers. By all the historians of New England these later pilgrims are reckoned with those who came in the Mayflower and Fortune, as the Old Comers or Forefathers. It was the completion of the band of Pilgrims, the aristocracy of the New World, from whom, as from a fount of honor, its titles and its privileges were to be derived to all after ages; and a nobler ancestry could not be desired, amid all the pomp and blazonry of old heraldic trees.

In the welcome which the colonists gave to their friends, kindness and love had to make up for the absence of much else at the homely board. "When they see our poor and low condition," writes one of them, "they are much dismayed and full of sadness; only our old friends rejoice to see us, and that it is no worse, and now hope we shall enjoy better days together. The best dish we could present them with is a lobster or piece of fish, without bread, or anything else but a cup of fair spring water; and the long continuance of this diet, with our labors abroad, has somewhat abated the freshness of our complexion, but God gives us health."

The severest hardships of the colonists were now over, and they could venture to welcome the reunion of long-dissevered family circles, and to sympathize with the salutation of their faithful counselor, Mr. Robert Cushman, who had returned to England, and wrote from thence, "Your old friends come dropping to you, and by degrees I hope ere long you shall enjoy them all."

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for January:

Rev. W. E. Chrismas's Prophetic Tour in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick (with portrait).

Characteristics of the 1,000-Year Millennium—A General View. By Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

Signs of the Last Day. Sermon by Martin Luther. Directions for the Lord's People. By Henry Meymott.

The Present Truth. By Rev. A. G. Gordon.

Daniel's 2,300 Days. By Mr. McLeod.

The Coming Colossal Conflict.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

Dyspepsia

Many lives miserable, and often leads to destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, are caused by this very common and aging disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the system, creates an appetite, promotes healthy action, relieves sick headache, clears the blood, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me. It did me little good. In an hour after eating I experienced a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food was enjoyed and satisfied the craving I had previously felt. It relieved me of that faint, tired, sick feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to commend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Be sure to get only

Hood's Sarsaparilla

At all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by L. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

30 Doses One Dollar

Work of Large Worth for Christian Workers.

FEED CORN;

OR,
 A Series of Themes and Illustrations for Pulpit and Platform and for Home Reading.

By Rev. C. PERRIN, Ph. D.,

of the Society of Science, Letters & Art, London.

A new and exceedingly helpful volume will be sent by all who have occasion to prepare for PULPIT, THE PRAYER-MEETING, OR OTHER OCCASION OF PUBLIC ADDRESS.

More than two hundred authors have drawn upon to supply the material for this it is believed that the great mass of illustrative material will be found entirely new and fresh—embracing 300 and 400 pages of original and carefully selected illustrative excerpts covering a wide range of subjects.

Each speaker need be reminded of the effective use of an apt illustration or simile, or the difficulty of finding such as are both fresh and to the point.

FEED CORN consists of the material from a pastor's note book, gathered during a ministry over a quarter of a century, and is issued with confidence that it will be found to meet, to a large extent, a felt need.

Attractive 12mo vol., fine cloth, price, $1.50. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico most pressing need—and can be mailed to the address of HOP H. C. RILEY, Care of J. P. HEATH 43 Bible House, New York.

CHANCE FOR ALL
 To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 84 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $3.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get for our celebrated Tea, Coffee and Baking Powder. For full particulars address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., Box 289, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

3rd Edition Just Published.

Spurgeon's New Book.

WITH A PAGE OF PRECIOUS PROMISES EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR.

CHEQUE BOOK OF THE BANK OF FAITH. BEING PRECIOUS PROMISES ARRANGED FOR DAILY USE. With brief explanatory Comments. Nearly 400 pages, 12mo. Price $1.50.

Mr. Spurgeon's Preface he says: "I believe all promises of God, but many of them I have never tried and proved. I have seen that they are for they have been fulfilled to me. I composed these daily portions when I was wading in the sea of controversy. Since then I have been cast into the sea, which, but for God's upholding would have proved me a drowning man. I do mention this to exact sympathy, but simply to let all see that I am no dry-land sailor—I know all of the billows, and the rush of the winds. These are the promises of Jehovah so precious to me this hour."

Jewett, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

MUM (Morphine Habit, Opium Smoking) cured, Book Free, Dr. J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wisconsin.

FOR BABY AND MOTHER. BOVININE WILL cause baby to gain in weight. WILL build up the bones and teeth. WILL give color to the cheeks and lips by creating new blood. WILL make the flesh firm and rosy. WILL nourish perfectly the most nervous system, thus removing fretfulness and crying. WILL lay the foundation for a vigorous and healthy childhood by supplying the necessary elements to sustain the body. BOVININE contains the salts of meats so necessary for the proper growth of the organs of the body. It will sustain life for weeks by injection, and has saved many a child suffering from diphtheria and unable to swallow even liquids. BOVININE is prepared by a new process without cooking, therefore requires no effort of the system to absorb it. When the nursing mother is run down and her appetite fails, when the milk diminishes in both quantity and quality, BOVININE is of the greatest service, causing by its tonic properties an increase of appetite and a greater supply of those elements for the production of rich milk for the little ones, building up the weak and worn-down mother, and, in consequence, benefiting the child.

TORENIA FOURNIERI

BURPEE'S GEM COLLECTION FOR 1890

Contains one regular size packet each of the rare and lovely blue Torenia Fournieri,—the gorgeous new Shirley Poppies,—the fragrant Little Gem Sweet Alyssum,—many varieties mixed of Choice Double Asters,—the unequalled strain of Burpee's Superb Camellia-Flowered Balsams,—Finest Mixed Chinese and Japanese Pinks,—Extra fine Mixed New and Beautiful Ipomoeas,—Choice Mixed Pansies,—Fordhook strain of Superfine Petunia Hybrid,—and twelve grand New Sweet Peas Mixed, in all TEN VARIETIES best new and popular ANNUALS for 25 cts. or FIVE GEM COLLECTIONS mailed for $1.00. Try to get up a Club. Illustration and directions for growing printed upon each packet. Purchased separately at retail the ten packets in our 25 cent Gem Collection would cost 85 cents, and this SPECIAL OFFER is made to induce all to try.

BURPEE'S SEEDS. ORDER NOW BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1890, handsomely illustrated with all about THE BEST SEEDS! including NEW VEGETABLES and FLOWERS of real merit, which cannot be obtained elsewhere. W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Dingee & Conard Co's ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, BULBS and SEEDS.
 Largest Rose Growers in America.

OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., elegantly illustrated, is sent FREE to ALL who write for it. It describes and tells HOW TO GROW over TWO THOUSAND FINEST varieties of ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, BULBS and SEEDS. NEW ROSES, NEW SHRUBBERY, NEW CLEMATIS and Climbing Vines, NEW SUMMER FLOWERING BULBS, JAPAN LILIES, GLADIOLUS, TUBEROSES, CARNATIONS, New JAPAN CHRYSANTHEMUMS, New MOON FLOWERS, and the choicest 65 Large Rose Houses.

 Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. Safe arrival guaranteed. If you wish Roses, Plants, or Seeds of any kind, it will pay you to see our New Guide before buying. Send for it—free. Address THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., ROSE GROWERS and SEEDSMEN, West Grove, Pa.

BEYOND
 BY HERVEY NEWTON.

The author, widely known for his newspaper articles and sketches, has for years made a study of facts concerning the "other world," and finds the known facts respecting the country "Beyond," are full enough to show it superior to the most favored bits of Eden of which this world knows, a real land, with many of the conditions that give this world its charm, with many added features and enjoyable conditions.

An author widely known in the old world and the New, says:
 "Those who long for a realizing sense of the joys and occupations of dear ones gone before should read BEYOND. This book is a gem in clearness, purity and brilliancy, a book of fervent devotion, of holy love, and of the comfort of the Holy Ghost."
 "Intensely interesting, the style is direct, terse, vivid."—Westlyan Methodist, Syracuse.
 "Will help the Christian citizen on his way to his new Country."—The Evangelist, New York.
 "A healthy book on the future life."—Christian Intelligencer, New York.
 "Superb 16mo, silk cloth, 60 cents; two copies, $1.00, postpaid."

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.
 THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS has a pad different from all others, is cup shape, with self-adjusting ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

BAILEY'S
 Compound light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS.
 A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price list free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 118 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

BEECHAM'S PILLS set like magic on a weak stomach, FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

SAFE INVESTMENT FARRAND & VOTY ORGAN'S
 DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

A CUP OF BLESSING
 FOR Every Day in the Year,
 Being a Birthday Book of Cheering and Consolatory Texts, selected from Scripture and other sources, with a verse of selected poetry for each day. Beautifully bound in padded silk covers, and gilt edge, 250 pages and index. Sent by mail, in box, post-paid, for 50 cents, by J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

INDIAN RELICS, FOSSILS,
 Minerals for Cabinets, Schools, Museums and Dealers. AGATE GOODS. Send stamp for large Illustrated Catalogue. L. W. STILLWELL, DEADWOOD, S. DAK.

GAIN ONE POUND A Day.

A GAIN OF A POUND A DAY IN THE CASE OF A MAN WHO HAS BECOME "ALL RUN DOWN," AND HAS BEGUN TO TAKE THAT REMARKABLE FLESH PRODUCER,

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL WITH Hypophosphites of Lime & Soda IS NOTHING UNUSUAL. THIS FEAT HAS BEEN PERFORMED OVER AND OVER AGAIN. PALATABLE AS MILK. ENDORSED BY PHYSICIANS. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. AVOID SUBSTITUTIONS AND IMITATIONS.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE.
 If you are thinking about building a house you should send 25 cents for my new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up, costing from $300 to $5000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house, and will suit you almost as well as if you paid $5 for a book. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address J. S. OGILVIE, publisher, 67 ROSE ST., New York.

$60 SALARY. $40 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment at home or traveling. No soliciting. Duties plying and making collections. No Postal Cards. Address with stamp, HAFFER & CO., Ploua, O.

WHY DO I SUFFER SO?

Do you feel generally miserable or suffer with a thousand and one indescribable bad feelings, both mental and physical? Among them low spirits, nervousness, weariness, listlessness, weakness, dizziness, feelings of fullness or bloating after eating, or sense of "goneness" or emptiness of stomach in the morning, flesh soft and lacking firmness, headache, blurring of eyesight, specks floating before the eyes, nervous irritability, poor memory, chilliness, alternating with hot flushes, lassitude, throbbing, gurgling or rumbling sensations in bowels, with heat and burning pains occasionally, palmitation of heart, short breath on exertion, slow circulation of blood, cold feet, pain and oppression in chest and back, pain around the joints, aching and weariness of the lower limbs, drowsiness after meals but nervous wakefulness at night, languor in the morning and a constant feeling of dread as if something awful was about to happen.

If you have any or all of these symptoms send 40 cents to GEORGE N. STODDARD, druggist, 1226 Niagara Street, BUFFALO, N. Y. who will send you, postpaid, some simple and harmless powders, pleasant to take and easy directions, which if you follow, will positively and effectually cure in from one to three weeks' time, no matter how bad you may be. Few have suffered from these causes more than I, and fewer still at my age (51) are in more perfect health than I am now. The same means will cure you.

"Mr. Stoddard is an honest man."—Publisher The Golden Argo, N. Y.

The Christian at Work, New York, says: "We are personally acquainted with Mr. Stoddard, and know that any communication to him will receive prompt and careful attention." Say where you saw this adv.

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY. Beecham's Pills
 For Bilious and Nervous Disorders.
 "Worth a Guinea a Box"—but sold for 25 cents, BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.—A new good man to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertisement, etc. For full terms address, Centennial Bldg., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

RIDGE'S FOOD
 The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Made from purest ingredients, specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes can. Pamphlet free. Write to H. & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

ASTHMA CURED
 DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE Address, we will mail you a FREE DR. TAFT BROS., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

A PETITION.

BY LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

Like as a Father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. For He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust.—PSALMS ciii: 13-14.

I love Thee, Lord, and so I seek
To know and do Thy will;
But if through blindness I should err
Forgive and love me still.

I boast no righteousness, nor yet
Is holiness my plea;
For ah! my heart knows none save His,
Who bled and died for me.

Nor am I perfect yet! this heart
Is human, not divine,
And still must bear the taint of sin,
Till it becomes like Thine.

For but one perfect, faultless life,
This earth has ever known;
One spotless heart untouched by sin—
And that, dear Lord, Thine own.

But blameless, through Thy grace bestowed,
I strive to live each day,
Listening to hear Thy faintest call,
And waiting to obey.

And if sometimes, amid the strife,
Thy voice I fail to hear,
Lord, speak again, and make me know,
What Thy commandments are.

Or if my feet should chance to stray,
O! Holy One and just,
Look from Thy throne of perfectness,
Remembering I am dust.

And throw the mantle of Thy love
Around me as I roam,
Till warmed beneath its folds, my heart
Shall turn again toward Home.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

"Where were you yesterday?" "O, I was laid up with rheumatism." "Poor fellow! why don't you take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured?" It is sold by all druggists.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also Imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

STENOGRAPHY.

AND

TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally or by mail in your own home by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching; long established; hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free. Write or call. VERMILYER'S COLLEGE, 816 Broadway, New York.

PRICE $180

We Sell DIRECT to FAMILIES

PIANOS ORGANS

$150 to $1500 $350 to $500.

Absolutely Perfect!

Sent for trial in your own home before you buy. Local Agents must sell inferior instruments or charge double what we ask. Catalogue free. MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO., 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

Parturition Without Pain.

By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

God's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1. HOLBROOK CO., 25 Bond St., New York.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shown at SUNDAY Tracts, by Talmage $2.50. Quick sale. Big. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors E. ited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75. 192,000 sold. 5000 Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail. E. B. TREAT, N. Y.

WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell "The Christian's Legacy." One young man started on the 13th of December and ordered 50 copies before the 31st of December. 102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.

SHORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught by mail or personally. Situations procured all pupils when competent. Send for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE FOR FEBRUARY

was published at nine o'clock Saturday, with a great variety of illustrated articles of timely interest. It contains;
LIFE AMONG THE CONGO SAVAGES. By HERBERT WARD, the Explorer. With many striking illustrations from original material.
JOHN ERICSSON, THE ENGINEER. By W. C. CHURCH. Illustrated.
A DAY IN LITERARY MADRID. By W. H. BISHOP. Illustrated.
HUNGARIAN CASTLE LIFE. By W. H. MALLOCK. Illustrated.
SERIALS: "IN THE VALLEY," by HAROLD FREDERIC, illustrated by HOWARD PYLE; "EXPIATION," by OCTAVE THANET, illustrated by A. B. FROST.
AN ARCHÆOLOGICAL DISCOVERY IN IDAHO. By Dr. G. FREDERICK WRIGHT. Illustrated.
THE MINNESOTA HEIR TO A SERBIAN KING. A Consular Experience. By Hon. EUGENE SCHUYLER.
THROUGH THE GATE OF DREAMS (Story). By T. R. SULLIVAN.
THE POINT OF VIEW (Department)—"BROWNING—MEN'S WOMEN—FIRST LOVES—COLLEGE MEN IN THE WORLD."
POEMS by JOHN HAY, GRAHAM R. TOMSOM, C. P. CRANCH, A. LAMP-MAN, E. S. MARTIN.

25 Cents a Number; $3.00 a Year.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, Publishers, NEW YORK.

Just Published. One of the best Books for Christian Workers.

GOLD FROM OPHIR.

A NEW BOOK OF BIBLE READINGS, ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

By J. E. WOLFE, Evangelist.

With introduction by DR. JAMES H. BROOKES. In addition to original readings by the author, there are many articles and readings by

REV. JAMES INGLIS,
REV. A. B. MACKAY,
DR. W. S. PLUMMER,
PASTOR F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
REV. G. S. BOWES,
DR. JAMES H. BROOKES,
J. N. DABBY,
DR. EBERSHEIM,
DR. L. W. MUNHALL,
PASTOR A. J. GORDON,
DR. HORATIUS BONAR,

PROF. G. W. MOREHEAD,
DR. ANDERSON,
REV. C. H. SPURGEON,
THOMAS NEWBERRY,
LADY DENT,
REV. W. P. MACKAY,
DR. NATHANIEL WEST,
REV. E. P. MARVIN,
PROF. BLAIRIE,
MR. & MRS. G. C. NEEDHAM,
DR. G. F. PENTECOST,

GEORGE MULLER,
REV. W. F. CRAFTS,
REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD,
GEORGE SOLTAN,
DR. H. M. PARSONS,
W. FLINT JONES,
LORD RADSTOCK,
F. E. MARSH,
REV. W. J. ERDMAN,
ALF. SANDHAM,
DR. ALEX. WHYTE,

C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, and many others.

The book is also enhanced in value by a very full Index.

"The best book of Bible Readings out."—Hon. D. N. ROBB, U. S. Commissioner.
"These Bible Readings, these nuggets of gold, are arranged under the heads, Ruin, Redemption, Regeneration, and Resurrection. The headings are brief, lively, full of the marrow of the gospel. This book would be helpfully suggestive to our catechists, and to inexperienced preachers. Eminent writers in the 'old country,' as well as on this side the ocean, are drawn upon. We recommend the volume to the reader as eminently Scriptural and practical."—Presbyterian Witness.
"One of the best books I have ever seen. Every Pastor, every Evangelist, yea, every Christian Worker should have a copy."—EVANGELIST BISCHOFF.
"It is excellent in matter, material and make up."—REV. E. P. MARVIN.

Royal Octavo, 303 pages, strongly bound in cloth, $1.25. Mailed free on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE CONVERTED CATHOLIC.

A Monthly Magazine, now in its Seventh Year.

EDITED BY FATHER O'CONNOR.

For many years a Roman Catholic Priest. This magazine is especially designed for the conversion of Roman Catholics to Evangelical Christianity. Its special features are testimonies of recent converts from Rome (twelve hundred of which have been already published); the irrepressible conflict between the religion of Christ and the religion of the Pope; the Jesuit conspiracy against American institutions, notably the public schools; and general enlightenment on the Roman Catholic question. Rev. George C. Needham, the beloved Evangelist, will contribute a series of articles of special interest during the year 1890.

Subscription $1.00 a year. Sample copies sent on application.

JAMES A. O'CONNOR, Publisher,
72 Bible House, New York

THE CHARACTER OF JESUS.

By HORACE BUSINELL, D.D.

This book is beyond all question superior to anything on the subject heretofore written.

"The delineation of the character of Jesus is in our view the finest upon its theme in English literature."—New Englander.

"A sincere contribution to the cause of Christian truth, in a day when the foundations are assailed, and every man is bound to stand by the faith."—N. Y. Observer.

New Edition, Cloth, Price 60 cts. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST AT HAND.

We live in those days wherein the Lord will gather His Israel out of both Jew and Christian Churches, that their spirit, soul and body may be preserved blameless to receive the Lord at His coming. Rom. ix, 4; Isa. xl, 1, 12; Rev. vii, 4; Rom. viii, 29; Rev. xiv, 1; 1 Thess. v, 20, 21, 23; 1 Cor. xv, 52, 53; Phil. iii, 21; Mark xii, 20. Math. xxiv, 14; Rom. viii, 11, 23, 23; Rev. xxi, 1, 4, 5; John xiv, 16, 17, 26. Further information can be obtained in two different books, both in German and English, at 12c. each.

J. WEILE, 143 N. Sixth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Demonology or Spiritualism.

Ancient and Modern." "An effective weapon." "A sword of fire." "Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Starting disclosures.—History facts and data.—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address: J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

SEEDS.

My Annual PRICED CATALOGUE is now ready and mailed free to all applicants. It contains all the leading and most popular sorts of VEGETABLE, FARM AND FLOWER SEEDS. Besides all the desirable novelties of last season, and nearly every thing else in my line of business.

ALFRED BRIDGEMAN,
37 East 19th St., New York City.

A NEW BOOK.

THE SALT CELLARS;

A Collection of 3,300 Proverbs and Quaint Sayings, Together with Homely Notes Thereon.

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Very handsomely bound in 12mo, illuminated cloth, $1.50.

"The placing of a proverb for every day for 20 years has cost me great labor, and I feel that I cannot afford to lose the large collection of sentences which I have thus brought together. There are many proverb books, but none exactly like these. Some of my sentences are quite new, and more are put into a fresh form."—From the Author's Preface.

The London Literary World says: "There is not a page that is not brightened with genuine wit and enriched with wisdom."

"Few books contain more wit and wisdom to the cubic inch than this, and the man who can read it without profit must either be too virtuous for this world or too hardened in wickedness to be helped."—New York Examiner.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

IF YOU WANT AN
"OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE,
OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

DIAMOND FLOWER

A new flower of fascinating beauty, adapted to pot culture, and will BLOOM WITHIN THIRTY DAYS after sowing the seed. It grows two inches high, and is a perfect mass of white and lilac blossoms, glistening like diamonds. In the garden it will form a soft carpet of bloom, while for small pots or saucers in the house, either summer or winter, its beauty is unsurpassed. For only 15 cents we will mail a packet of seed together with our new Catalogue and four colored plates, and a packet of the great CYCLONE PLANT FIVE. Catalogue will not be sent unless asked for as you may already possess it. It is the finest ever issued—profusely illustrated with cuts and colored plates. We offer all sorts of FLOWER and VEGETABLE SEEDS, BULBS, PLANTS, NEW FRUIT, RARE SHRUBS, CACTI, ETC., including many GRAND NOVELTIES never before offered. Price 10 cents per copy. None sent free, except to those who order the above seed. Send at once, as this offer may not appear again. Address

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

DAILY COMFORT

IN FOUR FOLD LINKS.

PRAYER.

A promise being left us of entering into His rest, . . . whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it. Heb. iv, 1. Gen. xv, 8.

PROMISE.

Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him and He shall bring it to pass. Ps. cxli, 4.

PRECEPT.

In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength. Is. xxx, 15.

PRAISE.

Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. Ps. cxi, 7.

This beautiful New Wall Roll of Scripture Texts is commended for use in Homes, Hospitals, Halls, Sunday-school Rooms and other places where striking Scripture Texts arranged with much careful thought, are apt to give comfort, or awaken interest in sacred truth. Particular attention is called to the arrangement of the texts and to the very clear type in which they are printed. Size of sheet, 14x20. Can be read from opposite side of a large room.

Dr. T. S. RUBEY, Secretary Mo. State S. S. Association, says: "I must thank you, and I do so over and over each day, as I look up from my desk to the precious words of God on the Wall Roll. I had known of Wall Rolls before, but never had one and knew not the real comfort to be enjoyed in using one. It is grand treasure. I am going to put one in every home I can, for I know I shall thereby be doing a good that may tell for eternity."

31 sheets, for a full month, Mounted on Roller, price 75 cents. Sent by mail, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

BOOKS HELPFUL

IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM. by Lucy J. Rider and Nellie M. Carman. With complete directions of plan, methods and outline talks to children by nearly forty others, including the best-known and most successful workers among children in this country. 208 pages, fine cloth, $1.00.

THE PRAYER MEETING AND ITS IMPROVEMENT. by Rev. L. O. Thompson. 12mo, 256 pages, cloth, $1.25.

"This is so good a book that we wish we could give a copy to every young minister."—C. H. Spurgeon. "A very suggestive book."—Sunday-School Times.

THUS SAITH THE LORD, by Major L. W. Whittle. A handbook for Christian workers. 134 pages, flexible cloth, 50 cts.

"A manual of Scripture texts arranged to present the leading subjects met with in dealing with enquirers."

SECRET POWER; or, the Secret of Success in Christian Life and Work, by D. L. Moody. 11 pages, 12mo, cloth, 60 cts.; paper, 30 cts. "Every page is full of stimulating thought."—Christian Commonwealth.

 Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT,

77 Bible House, New York

A Chance to Earn Money in your Spare Time

Ministers, their wives, Divinity, High School and Academy Students, Teachers, and intelligent Protestant Ladies desiring to add to their incomes in their spare time, in their own vicinity, address W. H. NICHOLS, Bellows Falls, Vt.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XIII., No. 6. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MAJOR GEORGE A. HILTON, the Successful Evangelist.
THE CAPTIVE STUDENT. A Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
THE MINISTRY OF JOHN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
A LETTER FROM DR. TALMAGE to Readers of his Sermons.
Gems from New Books: A Message of Death.
PROPHETIC PHOTOGRAPH OF OUR DAY.

A STRAIGHT TALK. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
PORTRAIT OF SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD.
MR. BATHURST'S DISAPPOINTMENT. (With Illustration.)
PICTURE OF MR. MACKAY'S SCHOOL IN UGANDA.
DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE: The Good Samaritan's Inn—Ancient Jericho—Mount Pisgah—The Dead Sea—Elisha's Well—Bethany.
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: Their Perils, Pains, and Privations. (Continued.)

Major George A. Hilton, the Successful Evangelist—His Service in the U. S. Jail at Washington, D. C.

MAJOR GEORGE A. HILTON.

Early Life in New York—A Volunteer in the War—Promoted to the Rank of Major—An Appointment in Washington—Years of Dissipation—A Wife's Request for Prayer—Remarkable Conversion—Schemes for Systematic Work—Services in the United States Jail—Consecration Meetings at His House—The True Life-Insurance—The Central Union Mission—Work Among the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Men—Revival Services—Resigns His Position for Evangelistic Work—A Testing Time—A Promise in a Watch—Work on the Pacific Slope.

NOTICES have appeared from time to time in these columns of the valuable work being done in various parts of the country by the earnest, consecrated man whose portrait appears on the first page this week. As there are many Christian men engaged in business pursuits who regret that in their youth they did not give themselves and their future lives to the work of God, and are apt to conclude that, the opportunity having passed, a life of Christian usefulness is not now within their reach, it may be useful to tell in detail the life of Major Hilton. It may encourage them to seize the opportunities still left to them, and if those are faithfully used, God will, as in Major Hilton's case, open wider spheres, and give them still more extended fields to occupy for Him. God has work for all, and there are multitudes who, though deaf to the appeals of men trained in our theological institutions, and not to be drawn by the logic of scholars, and the eloquence of able clergymen, may be won for Christ by the simple testimony of a man who has been himself a slave of Satan, and can tell them how he was delivered by the Power which can deliver them, and hold them safe to the end. This is what Major Hilton has done in our jails, in our slums, and in the degraded homes and haunts of our beloved land. The of Major Hilton was passed in New York, where he was born October 14, 1836. He entered commercial life in his boyhood, and by his fine natural abilities and assiduous habits worked his way up to an honored and lucrative position in the business world of the metropolis. He was twenty-five years old when the great national convulsion thrilled his heart as it did the hearts of thousands of his age in that day. He resigned his position and enlisted as a volunteer. His regiment was the old 12th New York Volunteers, under Major-General Daniel Butterfield. On the expiration of his six months' term of service he re-enlisted, and rose to the rank of adjutant, and then of major. His military career was, however, cut short at Harper's Ferry in 1862, where he was among the Union forces which surrendered to "Stonewall" Jackson at its capture.

Early Life

After the War

Major Hilton went into business in Charleston, S. C., but owing to the disturbed and depressed condition of the South he was not successful. Subsequently he obtained a clerkship in the Internal Revenue Department in Washington. He entered this position in 1875, and for the next ten years occupied it with satisfaction to his superior officers and credit to himself. The earlier years of his residence in Washington were years of gradual moral decline. His sanguine temperament, his social qualities, and his bright, genial disposition insured him a hearty welcome in circles of gaiety, and Major Hilton soon became known as a thorough good fellow, who could enliven a company, and drink with the best. It was a sad time, if it was a brilliant one. He sank lower and lower in the vices of the set which was the fastest set in the Capital.

His Conversion

seemed as improbable as that of any man in the city, when in January, 1880, some special services were held with the view of reaching just such men as he. Major Hilton's pious wife went to one of those services and timidly responded when Christians were invited to send in the names of any unconverted relatives for whom they desired the prayers of God's people. Major Hilton's name was well known, and when it was read out in meeting there was a sad smile of hopelessness on many faces, as if such a case was beyond the reach of God's power. Probably none there knew as Mrs. Hilton did that the Major's downward course had not been altogether an easy one. He had made many good resolutions and many vain attempts to reform. The good wife had faith, and she placed it in Him who hears and answers prayer. To her delight, and to the astonishment of all, the prayers were answered, and before the meetings closed Major George A. Hilton was numbered among those who had passed from darkness to light, and from the service of Satan into the army under Christ's banner. It is not in Major Hilton's nature to be half-hearted about anything. As the persecutor, Saul, lost none of his zeal and energy when he was converted, but, as Paul, the Apostle, became the most active propagator of the faith, so the new convert set himself to work for Christ as earnestly as he had before engaged in Satan's service. He began to speak for the Master and to seek for Aggressive Christian Work.

Nor was he content with simple personal labor. He gave his mind to the work, and was constantly meditating on the best means of organizing systematic efforts to combine other Christian workers in onslaughts on the strongholds of the enemy. His sad personal experience gave him a knowledge of these, and he could help his co-laborers by telling them where the weak points of those fortresses were. The schemes devised by Major Hilton astonished the Christian workers, whom he stimulated and led, by their boldness and sagacity, and they were still more astonished by the success with which God crowned their campaign. One of these efforts is the subject of the illustration on the first page. In the United States jail in Washington some two thousand persons are confined annually. Major Hilton determined to try to reach these, and organized a work there under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. This work, which is still continued, consists of a public service every Sabbath afternoon for one hour, followed by personal work with the prisoners from cell to cell, distribution of testaments, tracts, and other religious literature, visiting the homes and families of the prisoners, and it has been greatly blessed of God to the salvation of many. The Mizpah Band, composed of men who had been redeemed from dissipated and vicious lives, was another organization that owed its existence to Major Hilton, and it has done good service in rescuing fallen men.

In former years Washington had had a daily

Noon-Day Meeting

at the Young Men's Christian Association, but in the general slackening of religious effort it had been discontinued, so the Major distributed a paper among the Christian people of his acquaintance for their signatures stating that if set agoing they would support a noon-day meeting. In a few days a notice was published that such services would be held daily, stating place, etc., and then people came, and sinners were attracted, and some conversions have occurred. These meetings are still continued at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Another valuable means of blessing adopted by Major Hilton was the outcome of his belief that workers themselves become more effective by the stimulus of personal contact and consultation. He threw open his own home for this purpose and every Saturday night a band of men engaged in various forms of Christian service met there and spent an hour in converse, prayer, and renewed personal consecration. "Those," says one who participated in them, "were truly times of refreshing."

In the winter of 1881 and 1882 Miss Jennie Smith, assisted by Miss Addie Herman, as representatives of the Evangelistic work of the W. C. T. U.

Among Railroad Men, started a work along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio R. R., commencing at Baltimore. The Spirit of the Lord had preceded them and they found the fields white for a harvest which they had not the physical ability to reap alone. Being acquainted with Mr. Hilton and knowing something of his consecrated powers they called upon him for aid, and he spent several weeks in the work, going first to Baltimore, then to Martinsburg, then to Cumberland, then to Piedmont, and then to Keyser at the base of the Alleghany mountains. In the course of 3 months 1,200 men and women forsook their sinful lives and, accepting Jesus, commenced to live Christian lives. It was a wonderful revival and the Major proved a valuable helper to the ladies in charge of the work.

From that time on calls began to come to him from every direction, "Come over and help us," and during the following two years he held services somewhere almost nightly, either in Washington or some of the outlying towns or villages in Maryland and Virginia.

Called to Queenstown to speak, a revival broke out there; boarding at Herndon, Va., for a few weeks one summer, and speaking at a church, a revival commenced there; Mt. Pleasant, a suburb of Washington, was the scene of another work of grace, and so the months and years passed that were preparing him for the work of an evangelist.

Some of the incidents occurring while yet pursuing his daily secular duties, but giving all his leisure hours to his Master's business were exceedingly amusing. One of these was an Address on Life-Insurance.

He was a member of a Mutual Life-Insurance Society which held fortnightly sessions for mutual entertainment. Previous to one of these meetings, the Major, who had become generally known as a bright speaker, received a written invitation to make an address at the next session, and to indicate what the subject would be. He accepted the invitation, and announced the subject to be "Life-Insurance." The evening came, and in due time the entertainment commenced. Funny speeches and comic songs appeared first on the programme, and finally the Major was announced to address the audience. He commenced by stating that as this was a Life-Insurance Society, he had been led to select this topic, and had given it considerable study. He reminded them how large a number of men now made provision for their families by insuring their lives. He then gave the figures, showing how many insurance companies there were, how many people insured, how much was paid annually in premiums, and how much the people were insured for. But, said the Major, as a result of my investigation, I have found that "Life-Insurance," so-called, is a misnomer. It should rather be called "Death-Insurance," for no one can realize until the insured dies. I have also made another discovery, viz: that there is a life-insurance system by which a man can realize at once—not the value of his life, as expressed in a "policy," but secure life itself. "The gift of God is eternal life." "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

His Own Policy.

The audience, composed of a mixture of nominal Christians, careless and worldly, and actual unbelievers, saw his point, and the effect was varied according to their several views. Some smiled and nodded in approval; some frowned, some began to murmur. The Major then stated that in years gone by he had found himself a dying man; he had sought for help in every direction where there seemed to be any promise whatever, but it was all in vain until he came to the only source of life, Jesus Christ; "and," said he, "when I received your kind invitation to address you, I felt a desire to give you the benefit of my experience as to life-insurance. God's promises are reliable, and when He promises you life, eternal, everlasting life, you may know you can have it. No premiums to pay, either. None rejected, however bad their physical or spiritual condition. I speak to you as an immortal spirit addressing my fellow-men. Come to Jesus." The address was full of incidents, full of pathos, and some heard the gospel who never go to the house of God.

In response to an invitation of the W. C. T. U., who were holding an all day's meeting

At Washington Grove Camp

(twenty miles from Washington), Major Hilton made the closing speech upon "Intemperance, its Causes and its Cure." The previous speakers had introduced a good deal of fun and tried to make sport for the amusement of the people, but it was serious business when the Major got to work, and as he charged home a portion of the responsibility for the liquor traffic upon the temporizing policy of the clergy and the time-serving laity, some of both classes left in anger, not able to stand the fire. Said a local paper referring to Major Hilton and his speech: "He is a man who does not see anything to laugh at in the awful curse of rum. He does not tickle the ground with a hoe, but assaults the giant rocks with dynamite. He makes no funny hits except as they fly off by accident in the ponderous blows that make the hearts of the fearful and unbelieving quail before him. It is impossible to report his speech here. But it was a magnificent and powerful arraignment of the liquor traffic and the Judas-like methods of political parties in dealing with it. His scorching words as they fell from his lips ought to have burned up all party prejudice and truckling fear and welded the hearts before him into a glowing union of sentiment. No one else would have done what Major Hilton did in just the way he did it, but he did what he believed the Lord wanted him to do in the way he believed it ought to and we applaud his Christian courage in it."

The Central Union Mission.

Those engaged in evangelistic work all over the world, were led to think seriously of the need of a more thorough system of reaching neglected classes of society in Washington, and appointed a committee to consider the subject, and report a plan to meet the emergency. Major was a member of that committee, and a spirit thereon, and shortly they called the friends of the work together, and reported in favor of a permanent gospel mission to be located in the very midst of the drinking saloons, gambling dens, houses of prostitution, low theatres, and other kindred resorts. This recommendation was adopted, and a board of managers elected, with the purpose to raise funds, and put the mission in operation. This was the birth of the Central Union Mission, with its main hall on Pennsylvania Avenue, its seven permanent branches, its gospel work, its two paid missionaries constantly at work, its Weekly Bulletin of 4,000 copies, its thirty-fourty-five gospel meetings weekly, and its list of about one hundred Christian workers out among various churches and denominations, is now known all through the country.

A Life of Faith.

As this Mission was fairly started Major Hilgert, of Washington and entered upon the work of evangelist. He resigned his lucrative position in the Government and amid the fears and rebuffs of his friends went forth to preach the everlasting gospel of Jesus. Some thought he was gone; he says it was only his man-fear that was gone. "Fear not, I uphold thee with the right hand of my almighty arm," was the promise that upheld and sustained him, a promise that has never failed. Great success attended the labors of the evangelist from the very first. Calls came in abundance during the fall of 1884 and winter and spring of 1885, and God richly blessed his work. But a testing time came in the summer. Sickness at home, his own physical weakness, and no work. One friend writes the day when the Major dropped in and said, "Well, we're having a testing of our faith, but all right," and upon taking out and opening his case watch he disclosed the text pasted on the inside: "Hold thou me up and I shall be safe." The promise of the Eternal One, carried with him, seen every time he looked at his watch, source of inspiration and faith that no circumstance however adverse could destroy, and so it was that the Lord for the testing and waiting calls came again and he has been a busy man for the past 4 years, having as much to do as he would permit. His labors on the Pacific coast in the winter and spring of 1889 resulted in many engagements for the winter, and he is now holding successful meetings in Southern California to crowded churches and enjoying the blessings which God gives who rely only on Him.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

History of the tour of Dr. Talmage and his family to the Holy Land is continued in a letter received from Mr. Louis Klopsch, who accompanied him, and who writes from Nazareth. The extracts from his letter will interest all readers.

The Good Samaritan's Inn.

As we made from Jerusalem to the Jordan our pleasant realization as a fairy tale is in actuality. We left Jerusalem by the Jaffa railway, our first stop, that for lunch, at the Samaritan's Inn. This is now called the old Khan. It is situated about half way between Jerusalem and Jericho, and is in a ruinous condition. There is no reason to doubt that on the site on which it stands was situated the inn to which the neighboring Samaritan conveyed the poor man who had fallen among thieves. The region is desolate, and the way affords opportunity for ambush convenient to the operations of robbers. Our Lord must have known the site, for it was on the road taken by Galilean messengers to and from Jerusalem. It was enough to find in the ruinous khan an opportunity for refreshment, and to reflect that it was in all probability the site of the inn existing in the time of our Lord, to which He made reference in the beautiful narrative of the Good Samaritan, and where He also, perhaps, often rested awhile in His errands of good-will to men.

Remounting, we continued our course, visiting next the Brook Cherith, where Elijah was sustained with the bread and meat supplied by ravens. At the present time large numbers of these birds frequent the steep declivity in the mountain range through which the stream marks its course.

By nightfall we had reached what is supposed to be the site of where we encamped for the night, and of which no trace remains. If not here, certainly near it, stood the ancient city, the walls of which fell at the blasts of Hebrew trumpets. Our camp was almost at the foot of what is now called the Mount of Temptation, on which, it is claimed, Christ was tempted of the devil. The Jericho of the time of our Lord was near. It was a splendid city, of which many remains exist. The hill above its site seems to consist largely of the rubbish of the houses, temples, and palaces in which Herod the Great took pride. Fragments of ancient pottery and glass still reward the labor of the searcher.

Old Jericho,

Our night at Jericho was the first one on which we camped out. The new experience was a pleasant one, disappointing agreeably the anticipation we had formed of it. Early the next morning we resumed our journey. The first point of interest that attracted our attention was the peaks known as Mounts Pisgah and Nebo.

There is no certainty that the peaks pointed out to us under these names are the exact ones on which, respectively, Moses "viewed the landscape of his native land," and ended his mortal life, but the probability is that Pisgah is rightly identified, because on a clear day a large portion of Palestine is visible to the eye, even when not miraculously aided, from its summit. We were next shown the house of Zacharias, which is a remarkably well preserved edifice. That earnest little man who climbed into a sycamore tree to see Jesus, because he was little of stature, took the best means of accomplishing this purpose. The tree named grows branches in a horizontal direction and near the ground, thus affording a capital place of observation.

An hour's delightful ride brought us to "the clear blue waters" of a calm and beautiful expanse nearly fifty miles long and about ten miles wide. It receives the waters of the Jordan at its northern end, but has no outlet at the south. We sat down on its shingly beach and read its history. Then we bathed our hands and faces in its waters, which, as soon as the moisture dried off, we found covered with a white, salty incrustation. The air on its shores was pure and refreshing, and we should have liked to loiter longer by it. Dr. Talmage tried a mouthful of the water of the sea, which he found to be exceedingly disagreeable to the taste. The so-called apples of Sodom we found by actual experience are not filled with ashes, as we had been told, but with seeds. We collected many beautiful pebbles before we left this interesting place, from a variety of every conceivable shape and color, which brightens up the beach and renders it a temptation to stay long.

The Dead Sea,

I must return here to something that happened earlier in the day. On our way to the Dead Sea, shortly after we had started out in the morning, and while at modern Jericho—a wretched village consisting of mud houses, and hedged about with thorns—Dr. Talmage was greeted warmly by a group of gentlemen, some of them Americans, who were making a protracted stay in the Holy Land. One of them, who was from Boston, introduced himself as the author of a volume which criticises severely some of Dr. Talmage's sermons. He hoped, however, that this fact would not prevent the Doctor from permitting him to make one of the party as far as the Jordan. Dr. Talmage consented cordially to this arrangement, which included an invitation to the companionship of all the Bostonian's friends. Our new friends proved themselves to be men of considerable attainments, well acquainted with the country through which we were travelling, and thoroughly well up in its Biblical associations. Their entertaining conversation added much to the interest of the trip. After awhile, one of them, who is a resident of Manhattan, Kansas, inquired of Dr. Talmage whether he would consent to baptize him by An Immersion in the River Jordan.

The desired consent was given and 3 P. M. appointed as the time for the ceremony. Dr. Talmage was filled with solemn joy on beholding Jordan's sweet and crystal flood. It seemed as if Sabbath reigns perpetually in the valley through which the sacred river runs, so calm and peaceful was the scene. While waiting for the lunch tent to be raised, several of our party washed in the river, remembering as they did so, how Naaman dipped seven times in its waters and the rich reward of his faith. The day was superbly fine, as were all its predecessors while we were in Palestine.

After lunch we rested awhile and then preparations were made for the coming baptism. Copies of the hymn beginning, "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," were prepared by the ladies of the party; the toga of our Arab sheik was borrowed to serve as a baptismal robe for Dr. Talmage, while the candidate secured for his own use an outfit from one of the servants. Everything being in readiness, the clergyman and the candidate advanced to the water's edge, the other members of the party forming a semicircle about them. Dr. Talmage made an invocation, and then read the story of the baptism of Jesus in the Jordan by John, from the third chapter of the Gospel of St. Matthew. Afterward all present joined in singing the hymn selected and copied as above related. Dr. Talmage then said: "In this historic river, which parted three times to let God's people pass dry-shod, in which Naaman plunged seven times for healing from dire disease, and from the banks of which Elijah ascended in equipage of fire, and in which Christ was baptized and which for ages has been the symbol of the division between earth and heaven, I baptize thee."

Then taking the candidate by the hand he led him into the water, quoting the authority for baptism as found in Matthew 28:19. Reaching the sufficient depth he immersed the candidate, repeating the usual formula: "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," after which he pronounced the benediction. At the close of the ceremony Dr. Talmage said: "As the ordinance was observed under the direction of no particular denomination of Christians, and no particular church could be responsible for it, I feel it my duty to report what I did to the church universal."

Soon after the service we mounted our horses and began the return trip, passing on the way Gilgal, where Saul, the first King of Israel, was crowned, and paying a visit of inspection to the huts which are inhabited by the poverty-stricken Arabs of modern Jericho. Upon reaching our encampment, which had not been moved, we found an excellent dinner awaiting us. We enjoyed it heartily, having appetites sharpened by pure air and exercise. A large bonfire gave us abundant warmth and light after the evening meal.

Elisha's Well.

During our encampment at Jericho we drank water from the well which tradition says was the one the waters of which were miraculously sweetened by the prophet Elisha. On the morning of our departure for Jerusalem we visited the well itself, which was pouring forth an inexhaustible supply of the purest water in all Palestine. We lunched the second time at the Good Samaritan's Inn, after which we pushed on to situated about two miles from Jerusalem. The name means "The House of Poverty," which aptly describes it as it is now. There are perhaps forty mud-houses in the village, lying sleepily four hundred feet below the summit of the Mount of Olives. The house said to stand on the site of the one once lived in by Mary and Martha and Lazarus, was visited by us as a matter of course. There Dr. Talmage read those passages in the Gospel of St. John, relating to the home of the people who were Jesus' closest friends. We then descended to the tomb reputed to be that whence Lazarus came at the command of Him "who is the Resurrection and the Life." The house of Simon, the leper, is said to have stood near the tomb we visited, and many stones are pointed out as actually having been part of the structure, the principal room in which was once filled with the odor of precious ointment poured on the Saviour's head.

Bethany,

We also visited the Garden of Gethsemane, or what is now known by that title. It is an enclosure laid out in flower-beds, with olive-trees here and there. Seven trees within a railing are said to have been the exact ones under which our Lord "sweat as it were great drops of blood," but as Titus had all trees surrounding Jerusalem cut down, the Franciscan monks who first made the claim for the aged trees I have mentioned, were probably mistaken.

THE CAPTIVE STUDENT.

A Sermon By Dr. Talmage.

"And the king appointed them a daily provision of the king's meat, and of the wine which he drank; so nourishing them three years, that at the end thereof they might stand before the king." Dan. 1:5.

The Student's Depression—His Diploma—I. The Young Man Carried into Captivity—The Thralldom of Evil Habit—More Merciless than Cyrus or Pharaoh—II. The Permanence of Early Impressions—A Grand Structure Needs Substantial Foundation—III. The Value of Christian Sobriety—Daniel's Motive for Abstinence—Religious Not Physiological—A Young Man's Temptations to Dissipation—Charles Lamb's Impressive Warning—A Mother's Reproach—A Crying Motherless Child in a Car—IV. The Young Man Free From Home Restraint—The Country Youth's Sunday in the City.

My text opens the door of a college in Babylon, and introduces you to a young student seventeen years of age, Daniel by name. Be not surprised if in the college you find many hilarities. Put a hundred young men together and they are sure to have a good time. There is no harm in that. God does not write out the trees and the grass and the blossoms in dull prose. The old robin does not sit moping in the nest because of the chirpings and the lively adventures of the fledgelings that have just begun to fly. Do not come into an orchard looking for winter apples on a May morning.

But Daniel of the text is far from being gay. What oppressive thoughts must have come over him as he remembered that in a strange land! The music that came into his study window was not the song of Zion, but the sound of flute, sackbut, and dulcimer in the worship of the heathen god. Moreover, he had no hope of ever getting back home again, and meeting those who had missed him long and missed him bitterly, wondering if he were still alive, and finding many a luxury tasteless because they did not know but Daniel might be lacking bread.

He Was a Captive

When you and I were in school or college, and the vacation approached, we were all full of bright anticipation, and we could not study the last day, and we could not sleep the last night. The lexicon and the philosophical apparatus were transparent, so we could see right through them into the meadows and the orchards. Not so with poor Daniel. He did not know that he should ever escape from captivity, or, escaping, he did not know but when he got home the loved ones would be dead, and he would go wandering and weeping among the sepulchres of his fathers.

Besides that, the king tried to make him forget his home and forget his country; for that purpose, actually changed his name. The king wanted him to be a prodigy in personal appearance, and so he ordered meat and wine sent from his own table to Daniel; but Daniel refuses all, and puts himself upon the poorest of all herbs, called pulse, and plain water. His attendants cry out against this, and tell him he will perish under such a diet. "No," he says, "you try us for ten days, and if, at the end of that time, we are not full-cheeked and robust as any, it will be surprising." Ten days pass along and the students come up for examination, and all declare that none are so ruddy and robust as Daniel and his fellow-captives. The days of industrious pupilage and the years pass by, and the day of graduation has come, and Daniel gets his diploma, signed by the king, and reading as follows: "In all matters of wisdom and understanding that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the astrologers that were in all his realm."

The Humblest Diet,

And so Daniel took the first honor, and here the story ends, for Daniel the student hereafter will be Daniel the prime-minister.

The Captivity of Evil Habit.

The first thought suggested to me by this subject is that young men may be carried into captivity by their enemies. There is a captivity more galling than the one in which Daniel was transported; it is the captivity of evil habit. Men do not go into that wittingly. Slyly and imperceptibly are the chains forged upon them, and one day they wake up to find themselves away down in Babylon. Cyrus consented that some of his captives should go, and fifty thousand of them accepted the opportunity; but tell me, what evil habit ever consented to let a man go? Ten plagues made Pharaoh consent to the departure of God's people; but tell me, what Pharaoh of evil habit ever cheerfully consented to let any of his victims go?

Men talk of evil habits as though they were light and trivial; but they are scorpion whips that tear the flesh; they are spikes more bloody than the path of a Brahmin; they make the poisonous robe of Nessus; they are the sepulchres in which millions are buried alive. The young are in more peril because they are unsuspecting. The lions are asleep in their soul, and

Their Power is Not Suspected.

The time when a ship's company makes mutiny is when the watchman is off his guard. When a spider meets a fly, it does not say, "Go down with me to the place where I murder insects." No; it says, "Come and take a walk with me on this bridge of gossamer." Oh! there is a difference between the sparkle of a serpent's eye and the crush of its slimy folds. There is a difference between the bear's paw toying with a kid, and the crackling of the bones in the terrific hug. Pike's Peak looks beautiful in the distance, but ask the starved travelers by the roadside what they think of Pike's Peak.

Oh! are there those around whom suspicious companions are gathering? Do their jests and their entertainments make the hours go blithely by when you are with them? Have you taken a sip from their cup of sin, or gone with them in one path of unrighteousness? Turn back. From Babylon they came, and to Babylon they would carry you. If so many plague-stricken men would like to enter your companionship, before any one is allowed to pass into the intimacy of your heart put on them severest quarantine.

My subject also impresses me with the fact that are almost ineffaceable. Daniel had a religious bringing-up. From the good meaning of his name I know he had pious parentage. But as soon as he comes into the possession of the king, his name is changed, all his surroundings are changed, and now, you say, will begin the demoralization of his character. Before, his name was Daniel, which means "God my judge;" now, his name is to be Belteshazzar, which means "the treasurer of the god Bel." Now you expect to see him overthrown amid all these changed circumstances. Oh, no! Daniel started right, and he keeps on right. When I find what Daniel is in Jerusalem, I am not surprised to find what he is in Babylon.

Early Impressions

I wish I could write upon all parents' hearts the fact that early impressions are well-nigh ineffaceable. When I see Joseph a pious lad in the house of his father Jacob, I am not surprised to see him acting so nobly down in Egypt. When I find Samuel a pious lad in the house of his mother Hannah, I am not surprised that he gives a terrible smiting to idolatry as soon as he comes to manhood. David planned the Temple at Jerusalem, and gathered the materials for its building; but Solomon, the son, came and put up the structure, and that Goes on in all Ages.

The father plans the character of the child, and its destiny for time and eternity; then the son completes the structure. You might as well put down a foundation ten feet by five, and expect to rear on it a great cathedral, as to put down a contracted character in a child's soul and yet rear upon it something extensively grand and extensively useful. Let me say to those Christian parents who are doing their best in the education of their children: Take good heart; your sons this morning may be far away from you and in a distant city, but God to whom you dedicated them will look after them. The God of Daniel will take care of them far away in Babylon.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." He may wander away for a while, and fall into sin, and break your heart; but before he is done with this life, you having commended him to God, he will come back again; for I put the emphasis in the right place, and on the word "old," when I repeat that passage and say, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." May you all have the glorious satisfaction of seeing your children walk in paths of righteousness and peace! One with them on earth, may you be one with them in heaven!

"Though parents may in covenant be,
And have their trust in view,
They are not happy till they see
Their children happy, too."

But I learn also from this subject the beauty of Christian sobriety. The meat and the wine that were to come from Daniel's table were to come from the king's table. Well, Daniel had no right to that food. The king was a heathen, and, like the heathens, was accustomed to ask a blessing before he partook of food, and in that blessing always dedicated the food to the gods. So if Daniel had taken this food he would have broken the law which forbade the taking of food dedicated to idols.

He chose pulse. It was a miracle that he did not dwindle away. There is nothing in pulse, or poor herb, to make a man ruddy and healthy. Some people talk as though that were a kind of diet which would make a man swarthy and content to do the duties of this life. That is no lesson at all. But for a positive miracle, Daniel would have dwindled away, and when God himself-denial puts upon him this benediction, He sends a benediction upon all Christian sobriety.

I would not have you class your preacher with those who would put upon lawful appetites. There are those in the world who dispute the grant which God gave to man of animal food, and they make a religion of hunger, as the Pharisees expected heaven for fasting. Daniel did not always live on pulse. He was not a Grahamite, he was not a vegetarian. He went through that self-denial because the king offered him was idolatrous food. When I see the earth filling with all varieties of food I have much confidence in the teaching of those who would put us on severe regimen.

Unnecessary Restraints

There are parents who, with a wrong view in this respect, deny their children all harmless pleasures, and without sufficient inquiry send them to boarding-schools where their intellects are cultivated to the disadvantage of their starved bodies; and from many a boarding-school a class of twenty graduates, nineteen of them ghosts! Now, when I see the three angels eating the calf which Abimelech slew, and when I find Christ eating broiled fish even after His resurrection, I come to the conclusion that the theories of the vegetarian are not founded. But oh, how many Temptations to Dissipation!

With so many things to tempt the appetite, many temptations to gluttony! With so many sparkling beverages, how much temptation to drunkenness! Could I bring before you this morning the mothers and the wives and the sisters who have wept at the graves of the inebriate, you would be overpowered with the spectacle. Could I show you the manly forms robbed of their life by the eye-flashings quenched in the wine-cup, the ruddy cheek from which rum has wormed the life, your souls would recoil with horror, and you would rise up and cry, "Begone, thou dream of drunkenness!"

Charles Lamb, who made all the world laugh at his humor, and then afterward made all the world weep at his fate, who outwitted everybody, and at last outwitted of his own appetites, wrote: "The waters have gone over me; but out of the depths, could I be heard, I would cry out to those who have but set a foot in the perilous path. Could the youth to whom the flavor of the wine is delicious as the opening scenes of a play, or the entering upon some newly discovered disease—could he look into my desolation, and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is to a man shall feel himself with open eyes and a passive will; to see destruction, and have no power to stop it, yet all the way emanating from himself; to see himself empty out of him, and yet not able to stop the time when it was otherwise; to bear a pitiable spectacle of his own ruin—could he see the feverish eye, feverish with last night's drink, feverishly looking for to-night's repetition of folly—could he but feel the body of the destroyer of which I cry hourly with feeble outcry, delivered, it were enough to make him drop the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the agony of its mantling temptation."

Going Down a Precipice

Are you fond of pictures? Here is one of Solomon: "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? They that stay at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, it moveth itself aright in the cup. At the biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." (Prov. 23:29-32.)

"Do you know what you are doing?" said a mother who had broken into a restaurant, to against her, her son inside. She came up counter, and saw the man of the restaurant holding the intoxicating cup for her own son. He told the man behind the counter: "Do you know what you are doing?" "No," said he, "I don't." Says she: "You are Fattening Graveyards."

is told at Des Moines some time ago of a train going through a very stormy night over one Western prairie. The young man who was told us the story. In the night there was a child in the sleeping-car, fretful and worried crying hour after hour. A man on the opposite side of the car lost his patience, and said: "I'll make that child shut up, or take it to its rest!" Then another man on the opposite side of the sleeping-car—a man with a broken heart—pulled back the curtain, and looked out, and said: "I'll make that child's mother is dead in the sleeping-car, and the little thing is wailing for her." The man who had committed the affront rose, offered his services for the night, and took care of the child until the morning, and all the passengers in the car were broken down with emotion. The cry of one child could arouse so many sympathies, what ought to be the effect of the tenfold-voiced shriek of orphanage and widowhood from the inebriate's grave. God save this world from the perils of strong drink!

The Young Man Away From Home.

This subject also impresses me with the beauty of our character remaining incorrupt away from home. If Daniel had plunged into every wickedness of the city of Babylon, the old folks at home would never have heard of it. If he had gone through all the rounds of iniquity, it would have no shadow on his early home. But Daniel, that God's eye was on him. That was enough. He is young men not so good away from home as at home. Frederick, tending his father's sheep among the hills, or threshing rye in the field is different perhaps from Frederick on the Exchange. Instead of the retiring disposition here is bold effrontery; instead of an obliging spirit, there is perhaps oppressive selfishness; instead of open-handed charity, there is tight-fistedness; instead of reasonable hours, there is no rest or sleep.

And before many young men this morning may have left your father's house, and you who, though still under the parental roof, looking forward to the time when you will go to conflict, alone in this world, with its temptations and its sorrows, and when you will up to your own character. Oh that the God of Israel might be with you in Babylon! Link the most thrilling passage of a young man's life when he leaves home to make his fortune. The novelty and the romance of the thing may charm him from any keen sorrow, but the old people, who have seen the destruction of so many who start with high hope, cannot help but be anxious. As he was in his father's house his waywardness was kindly chided, and although sometimes he thought the restraint rather bitter and severe, in his calmer moments he acknowledged it was salutary and righteous.

Sunday in the City.

Through the influence of metropolitan friends, he has obtained a situation for his son in the city. The comrades of the young man come right before his departure to bid farewell to the wanderer. The morning of his going away he is around the place to take a last look at things. Happens comes upon some object that starts a memory of some old familiar place, but no one sees the trunk is put upon the wagon. The young man is off for the city. He is set down in the excitement and amid associates who are ever careful about their words, and thoughts, and actions. Morning comes. No family altar. Sabbath comes. No rural quiet. The sanctuary is full, but all the faces are strange, and no one knows whether he comes to church or does not. On his way home from the store he sees a card announcing a rare and vicious amusement. He has no greeting at the door of the boarding-house. He has no appetite for the food. No one cares whether he eats or does not eat—rather he would not eat—it is cheaper! After the tea, he goes into the parlor, takes up a book, finds it no sister to look over with him. Goes up to his room in the third story, finds it cold and uninviting, and in despair he rushes out, caring nothing but to get something to make him stop thinking. He is caught in the first whirl of sin. He has started out on the dark sea where the gleam of the joy is the flashing of the pit, and the laughter is the creaking of the gate of the lost.

Oh, how many graves there are in the country churchyard which, if they could speak, would tell of young men who went off with high hopes, and came back blasted and crushed, to disgrace the sepulchre of their fathers!

And yet this exodus must go on. As from distant hills the rivers are poured down through tunnels to slake the thirst of our great cities, so from distant country places the streams of incorrupt population must pour down to purify our great cities. To-morrow morning, on all the thoroughfares, in every steamboat, and in every rail-car will be young men going forth to seek their fortune in our great towns. O Lord God of Daniel! help them to be as faithful in Babylon as they were at Jerusalem.

Forget not in the great seaports the moral and religious principles inculcated by parental solicitude; and if to-day, O my young friend, seated in the house of God, you feel the advantage of early Christian culture, forget not those to whom you are most indebted, and pray God that as old age comes upon them and the shadow of death, the hope of heaven may beam through the darkness. God forbid that any of us through our misconduct should bring disgrace upon a father's name or prove recreant to the love of a mother! The poet made no exaggeration when he exclaimed, "How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child!"

Oh that God would help you as parents and as young people to take to heart the lessons of this important subject! and if we shall learn that there is danger of being carried into captivity, and that early impressions are almost ineffaceable, and that there is something beautiful in Christian sobriety, and that there is great attractiveness in piety away from home—then it will be to you and to me a matter of everlasting congratulation that Daniel ever became a captive student at Babylon.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Message of Death.*

A CHRISTIAN business-man, who was yet in the prime of life, and had seemed indeed to be the very personification of vigorous and bounding health, was taken with annoying and distressing symptoms of disease which did not yield to treatment, as he and his skilled physician had anticipated. After a time his physician expressed a wish for consultation with eminent medical practitioners, and a council to consider the case was held accordingly. The result of that consultation was a conviction on the part of the physicians that the patient was already death-smitten, that an internal tumor had even then made such progress in its mastery over all his vital forces, as to forbid hope of prolonged life—even in case, as it was suggested, the tumor itself were to be removed by a miracle; that in fact the strong man who had hope of long years of life, was at that moment, all unconsciously to himself, a dying man; and that now there was nothing left for him to do but to face death and to prepare for it.

The sad conclusion of the physicians was yet to be made known to the unsuspecting patient, and at the request of the heart-broken wife a friend of the husband essayed its communication to him. Already the languor of death was slowly creeping over the man, who had no thought of dying, but was cheerful and sanguine. After a few general words about the state of health of the sick man, the friend asked the question directly: "If you knew that you were not to recover from this illness, is there any business matter you would like to attend to, or any parting word that you would like to speak to others?"

"Why, of course, there are a good many things that I should like to attend to in such a case," was the natural answer to this. "Well, from what your physician tells me," said the friend, "I think you had better attend to those things at once." "Perhaps that would be the course of prudence," was the still unsuspecting response. "It is more than a matter of prudence; it is a matter of necessity," pressed the friend seriously. "If you really think so, I will sit up and talk over my business affairs after I have had a little nap," said the sick man. "My friend," responded the bearer of the sad message, "you must not take another nap, nor wait another hour before attending to your last duties here." And he added seriously, and in measured tones, "I mean just what I say; for I speak at the request of your physician, and he assures me that what you would do here you must do very quickly."

* From Practical Paradoxes, one of six excellent little volumes of essays, by Dr. H. Clay Trumbull. The six volumes in box, price $2.50. Published by John D. Wattles, Philadelphia.

"I understand you now," was the untremulous response of the surprised, but not unready man—"I understand you now. You mean that I am already dying. I understand it now, and it does not disturb me; I will rouse right up and look after matters that need my attention."

Then began the busy preparation of the now consciously dying man. He was a bank president, a railroad president, a Sunday-school superintendent. He had large and varied interests in other directions, also. There was much to be done, and brief time for its doing. Calmly and seriously, but in cheerfulness, and without anxiety, he gave directions for the disposition of his worldly affairs. Then he called his loved ones around him, and talked with them in cheery tenderness. And so his dying hours were passed. His room was a place of brightness to the end of his earthly course. The fact that he was dying, and that he knew that he was dying, only gave new seriousness and new efficiency to his living, while he still was living. So far, that Christian man was an example in his living and in his dying.

MR. MACKAY'S SCHOOL IN UGANDA.

(See illustration on page 92.)

THE work in Uganda now being carried on by Mr. Mackay has one of the most romantic histories in the record of foreign missions. The picture accompanying this notice shows how humble and prosaic is its character, but its existence is an evidence of heroic qualities in the work. Writing recently to Mr. Bruce, the son-in-law of the great Dr. Livingstone, Mr. H. M. Stanley says: "Mwanga, while king, after he had murdered Bishop Hannington, expelled the missionaries, both French and English, from Uganda; expelled them in the most shameful and humiliating manner; robbed their stations of every article, and their persons of every upper garment—even their hats were taken, and they were pushed adrift on the lake, but the missionaries, after incredible dangers, had arrived at the south end of the lake, the French party settling at Ukumbi, the English, with the brave missionary Mackay, at Usambiro. It was not long, however, before an avenging Nemesis drove the King to seek refuge at the new homes of the poor missionaries whom he has so cruelly treated."

Mr. Stanley then gives details of several revolutions which have occurred in Uganda, and concludes: "Some time after the last revolution the Christians of Uddu heard that Mwanga had embraced the Christian faith, and, convinced that his conversion was real, sent and tendered their allegiance to him. Mwanga then came to Uddu with an English trader named Stokes and took possession of an island east of Sesse, and there he remains with about 250 guns; while Stokes, it is said, has gone back to the coast to purchase more guns and a large supply of ammunition—upon a promise that Mwanga would recoup him with ivory, eventually. Meantime Marema is king of the mainland, and Mwanga gathering to him all the Christians and disaffected, with natives of the Sesse and the islands, has assumed absolute kingly authority over the islands of the lake."

"If the narrative is true—and I have now no reason to doubt it—what would have pleased Livingstone so much is that a body of Christians can become in twelve years so numerous and formidable as to depose the most absolute and powerful king in Africa, and hold their own against any number of combinations hostile to them. What can a man wish better for a proof that Christianity is possible in Africa? Some of these African Christians that I met possessed a prayer-book and the Gospel of Matthew printed in Kiganda, and as soon as they retired from my presence they went to study their books. Five of their following accompanied us for the purpose of pursuing their studies on the coast."

"I take this powerful body of native Christians in the heart of Africa—who prefer exile for the sake of their faith to serving a monarch indifferent or hostile to their faith—as more substantial evidence of the work of Mackay than any number of imposing structures clustered together and called a mission station would be. These native Africans have endured the most deadly persecution—the stake and the fire, the cord and the club, the sharp knife and the rifle bullet have all been tried to cause them to reject the teachings they have absorbed. Staunch in their beliefs, firm in their convictions, they have held together stoutly and resolutely, and Mackay and Ashe may point to these with righteous pride."

PROPHETIC PHOTOGRAPH OF OUR TIME.

By Rev. E. Cornwell.

It is not one great public change, nor any remarkable public events, by themselves, which stamp the special character of awful importance or prophetic import on our time, so much as the singular and simultaneous combinations of the changes and events which are now passing before us. Neither is it these remarkable

Coincident Events

by themselves which constitute the emphatic crisis of our time, though these combinations are indeed adapted to awaken and astonish the world; but it is the extraordinary—almost photographic resemblance—between these concurrent great changes and events before us, and the signs predicted by the ancient prophets, and especially of those announced by Jesus Christ, which were to precede immediately the awful close of the Christian dispensation, and the opening grandeur of the coming one. It is this marvellous correspondence, widening and intensifying from year to year, which is designed to arrest our deepest attention to the urgent inquiries—Are we, or are we not, living in the great era predicted and designated by Daniel—"The time of the end"?

Let us then inquire, What are some of the clearly predicted signs of "the time of the end," by which we may ascertain, beyond a doubt, whether or not we have arrived at this period? Let us consider each of them of colossal magnitude, which are distinguished by the Spirit of God, in the prophecy of Daniel, from several others, seeing that from their great prominence they must be distinctly and universally known when they appear. These are now patent to the whole world.

Three Signs,

Two of these three special signs, which have already for many years, as facts, arrested the minds and excited the astonishment of all, are thus described by the angel to Daniel: "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words and seal the book, even to the time of the end; (at which time) many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." In other words, when a period has actually begun which shall be distinguished above all preceding eras for the rapid travelling to and fro of multitudes, and for the no less speedy diffusion of knowledge, both natural and spiritual, over the world, then know that that period has come—"the time of the end." These prophetic words have indeed been amply fulfilled during the present century. Never before have they been accomplished on so mighty a scale, and with such marvellous rapidity over the world.

But while these predicted signs show to all that we are living in the "time of the end," the following sign shows no less clearly that the exact period when that time actually arrived was of the true Church of God from her lengthened obscurity, sufferings, and depression, and the sudden commencing descent of Roman Catholic political dominion or kingly power to destruction. These contemporaneous events are predicted in the closing part of the seventh chapter of Daniel, where the turning of the captivity of the Church of God is described as taking place at the very time when their long-continued oppressors are consigned by the awful sentence of the "Ancient of Days" to absolute, though progressive destruction. The same deliverance of the Church of Christ at the termination of the long period of her oppression is again predicted in the eleventh chapter of the prophecy (verse thirty-five) as distinctly marking the commencement of the "time of the end"—"And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge them, and to make them white, even to the time of the end."

The Commencing Liberation

If, then, the predicted sign of the arrival of the long-looked-for time of the end and of the commencing emancipation of the Church of Christ is most clearly declared to be the commencing destruction of Popish dominion, which was to be consumed and destroyed to the end, the decisive question at once presents itself—Has that foredoomed destruction of Popish power really begun?

The First Fatal Stroke, was given to the civil power of the Pope of Rome at the French Revolution in 1792, followed, as it was, by the successful invasion of his territories, and by the taking of himself once and again a prisoner. It was the appointed death-knell of his kingly dominion, and was also the first jubilee sound that the year of commencing deliverance had come to the true Church of the Redeemer.

That deadly stroke at Popish dominion was the signal of the speedy coming of a new life, new energy, and a new career of glorious prosperity to the people of the living God.

More than half a century has now elapsed since the civil dominion of the sovereign of Rome began to pass away. Have the general aspects of the cause of God during that interval corresponded in some degree to this glorious anticipation? Have they presented additional and striking evidence that we are really living in the "time of the end," and that God quickly began, after the close of the long period of His people's captivity and fearful oppression, to act on a great scale, for the speedy regeneration of the Church and of the world? Undoubtedly they have. Abundant evidence may be adduced, not only to attest this marvellous change, but also to establish our confidence in the joyful expectation of the most glorious interposition of Christ ere long, for His cause and people, till at length "He shall see of the travail of His soul, and be satisfied."

A LETTER FROM DR. TALMAGE

To the Readers of His Sermons.

CONSTANTINOPLE, January, 1890.—On leaving America I addressed some words of farewell to my sermonic readers, and now, on my way home, I write this letter of salutation which will probably reach you about the Monday that will find me on the Atlantic Ocean, from which I cannot reach you with the usual sermon. I have completed the journey of inspection for which I came. I have visited all the scenery connected with our Lord's history. The whole journey has been to me a surprise, an amazement; a grand rapture or a deep solemnity. I have already sent to America my Holy Land observations for my Life of Christ, and they were written on horseback, on muleback, on camelback, on ship's deck, by dim candle in tent, in mud hovel of Arab village, amid the ruins of old cities, on Mount of Beatitudes, on beach of Genesareth, but it will take twenty years of sermons to tell what I have seen and felt on this journey through Palestine and Syria.

All things have combined to make our tour instructive and advantageous. The Atlantic, and Mediterranean, and Adriatic, and Aegean, and Dardanelles, and Marmora seas have treated us well. Since we left New York we have had but a half-day and one night of storm, and that while crossing Mount Hermon. But let only those in robust health attempt to go the length of Palestine and Syria on horseback. I do not think it is because of the unhealth of the climate in the Holy Land that so many have sickened and died here or after as a result of visiting these lands, but because of

The Fatigues of Travel.

The number of miles gives no indication of the exhaustions of the way. A hundred and fifty miles in Palestine and Syria on horseback demand as much physical strength as four hundred miles on horseback in regions of easy journey. Because of the near two months of bright sunlight by day and bright moonlight or starlight by night, the half-day of storm was to us the more memorable. It was about noon of Dec. 18 that the tempest struck us and drenched the mountains. One of the horses falls and we halt amid a blinding rain. It is freezing cold. Fingers and feet like ice. Two hours and three-quarters before encampment. We ride on in silence, longing for the terminus of to-day's pilgrimage. It is, through the awful inclemency of the weather, the only dangerous day of the journey. Slip and slide and stumble and climb and descend we must, sometimes on the horse and sometimes off, until at last we halt in the hovel of a village, and instead of entering camp for the night we are glad of this retreat from the storm.

It is a house of one story, built out of mud. My room is covered with a roof of goats' hair. A feeble fire mid-floor, but no chimney. It is the best house of the village. Arabs, young and old, stand around in wonderment as to why we come. There is no window in the room, but two little openings, one over the door, the other in the wall, through which latter opening I occasionally find an Arab face thrust to see how I am progressing. But the door is open, so I have some light. This is an afternoon and for its exposures and acquaintance with the hardships of what an Arab considers a luxurious apartment. I sat that night by a fire the smoke of which finding no appropriate place of exit took lodgment in my nostrils and eyes. For the first time in my life I realized that chimneys were a luxury, but a necessity. The only adornments in this were representations of two tree branches in mud of the wall, a circle supposed to mean a bottle hung from the ceiling, and about ten indentations in the wall to be used as mantel anything that may be placed there. This was not a surprise. Through pessimistic prop we had expected that at this season we should have rain and snow and hail throughout our journey. For the most part it has been sunshine and atmosphere, and not a moment has our journey been hindered. Gratitude to God is with us a dominant emotion.

A Night Never to be Forgotten,

Having visited the scenery connected with Christ's life, I was glad to close my journey by passing through the

Apostolic Lands

and seas. You can hardly imagine our feelings as we came in sight of Damascus, and on the very road where Saul was unhorsed at the foot of the supernal light. We did not want, him, to be flung to the earth, but we did want for some great spiritual blessing, brighter than any noonday sun, and a new preparation for fullness. Strange and unique Damascus! It is worth while to cross the Atlantic and Europe to it. Though it has been the place of battle, massacre, and of ancient affluence and splendour well as it is of present prosperity, to me its chief attraction arises from the fact that here the scales from Paul's eyes, and that chief of apostles I began that mission which will not end until heaven is peopled with ransomed spirits. So also I day before yesterday, Patmos, where John heard trumpets, and the waves of the sea dash to his feet, reminding him of the songs of heaven, "like the voice of many waters."

But this letter can only give a hint of the Things We Mean to Tell You about when we get home, where we expect to be before this month is ended. I baptized by immersion in the Jordan an American whom we met and who desired the solemn ordinance administered to him in the sacred waters. I rolled down from Mount Calvary or "place of a skull" a stone for the corner-stone of our new Brooklyn Tabernacle. We bathed in the "Dead Sea" and "Gideon's Fountain," where his three hundred men lapped the water from their hands as it passed through; and we sailed on Lake Galilee, stood on Mount Zion, and Mount Moriah, Mount Hermon, and I saw the place where shepherds heard the Christmas anthem the Messiah was born; and have been at Nazareth and Capernaum, and sat by "Jacob's Well," saw Tel-el-Kebir of modern battle, and Megiddo of ancient battle, and where the Israelites crossed the desert; and slept at Bethel where one ladder let down into Jacob's dream; but the night I was there the heavens were full of ladders, first a ladder of clouds, then a ladder of stars, and all up down the heavens were the angels of beauty, and of consolation, angels of God, ascending and descending; and I was on nearly all the fields of Herod's, and Solomon's, and David's, and Moses' and Abraham's history. I took Rome and Naples and Athens, and Alexandria and Cairo on the way out, and take the Greek Archipelago, and Constantinople, and Vienna on the way back. What can God in His goodness grant me in the way of natural scenery, and classic association, and spiritual opportunity? Ah yes! I can think of something gladder than that He can grant me. Safe return to the people of my beloved flock, the field of work, and the land where my fathers died, and the dust of whose valleys I pray God I may be buried.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE

A REMARKABLE MEETING IN JAPAN.

THE journey around the world of Mr. L. D. Wishard, the accredited representative of the Y. M. Men's Christian Association, has brought him much fruit. In a recent letter he describes his visit to Doshisha College, at Kioto, in Japan. At one-half of its students were already Christians. As a result of two weeks' work among them, one hundred others became converted. Of these, Joseph Neesima, president of the college, said, "This is the largest number of Christians ever baptized in Japan at one time." Says Wishard of the last of a series of meetings at Osaka where even professors of the Government Preparatory College were so interested as to throw open Government room for a service:

"The last day in Osaka was enriched by such an outpouring of the Spirit as I have never before witnessed in Japan, and seldom in America. Notwithstanding the heavy rain, the building was filled Sunday morning. The subject was the sin of rejecting Christ. Many were in tears, and an awful stillness reigned in the meeting. At the close of the address, over one hundred rose to accept Christ, including many Government students."

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for February 16, Luke 3: 1-22; Golden Text, Luke 3: 2.

John's Preparation for His Mission—Commenced at His Birth—Consisted in Listening to God—A Distinct Call to Preach—Its Effect—Public Curiosity—John's Own Definition of His Vocation—Self Abnegation Proving Fitness—John's Message—Demanding Personal Change—The Day of Ritualistic Satisfaction Past—Neither Abrahamic Descendant nor Temple Observance to Avail Henceforth—The Use of the Axe—Pointing out Jesus the Necessary Culmination of John's Ministry.

"FILLED with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb," the pupil and the instrument of the Holy Ghost, his theological training conducted by God Himself, what would the ministry of such a man be? Man had not ordained John to his office; "there was a man sent from God, whose name was John." (John 1: 6.) As one of God's true prophets, he spoke not "by the will of man," either his own will, or that of any other man, but as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost." (II Pet. 1: 21.) His training must have consisted far more of that listening to God and that reverent attention to the unfolding of His divine thoughts than of mere book learning; he had had more to do with God than with man, and drew his views of men and things from God's thoughts concerning them. The world and half-hearted Christians would conceive that it was a very monotonous life to be in the desert, and only rarely to exchange words or thoughts with other men. But to one who truly knows God, the monotony is found rather in the things of this perishing world; he is in his element when he spreads his wings and finds himself at large in things eternal.

John, taught as he was of God, did not attempt to exercise his ministry until he had a distinct and unmistakable call from God. "In the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar . . . the Word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness."

"Sent From God,"

speaking as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost," that word which came to him from God without intermediate agency, can we wonder that his preaching emptied Jerusalem, and that "there went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan"? (Matt. 3: 5.) No preaching can carry with it real and lasting power unless the preacher knows in himself, and carries evidence to others that he is a man sent from God unto them. How often we hear preaching in which the doctrine is sound, and the preacher a converted man, and yet there is such a sameness in all he says, such a kind of staleness, such a sense of strain and weariness about the whole thing, such a grievous lack of power, that one cannot believe he was sent out from the sanctuary of God to preach that sermon. One cannot resist the conviction that, instead of speaking as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost," and lending himself as servant to his message, he has been attempting to master his message, and so has robbed it of its power; or perhaps it was a self-devised message, with which God had not charged him.

John had learned in the wilderness the relative positions of his message and himself. When his incomparable popularity stirred up the wonder of the ecclesiastical authorities of his day, and "the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou? . . . What sayest thou of thyself?" he took the place of servant to his message. After he had simply disclaimed the suggestions whether he was the Christ, Elijah, or the prophet who was to come, he said, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias." (John 1: 19.)

Only a Voice,

but a voice subject to God. A voice, but giving no "uncertain sound" (I Cor. 14: 8); the humble but the certain means of conveying a message from God. Let preachers learn to be only "a voice," and the Holy Ghost will have room to move again.

John the Baptist well understood the mission which had been committed to him. He was making ready for Another, of whom he testified, "There standeth One among you whom ye know not; He it is who, coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose."

(John 1: 26, 27.) It was his joy and his vocation to retire, that he might give place to Jesus. When his disciples came, in their jealousy for him, to complain that Jesus baptized, and that all men came to Him, he answered, "A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. Ye yourselves bear me witness that I said I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before Him," and then, calling himself only "the friend of the Bridegroom," he added, "He must increase, but I must decrease." (John 3: 26-30.) In the preparation for the Lord which John was to make, Isaiah had foretold, "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God." In his own spirit this work had already commenced, and made headway, or he could never have learned such self-abnegation, and therefore God could make him a power to others.

John "came into all the country about Jordan. (or "the wilderness of Judea" Matt. 3: 1), preaching the baptism of repentance unto remission of sins." (R. V.) His preaching filled his own soul, and the authority of Him who sent him was in it when he proclaimed his text, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." When God speaks, there is power. "The voice of the Lord is powerful; the voice of the Lord is full of majesty." (Ps. 29: 4.)

God Spoke

through his faithful witness, and every hearer felt he must either consciously repent, or, with his eyes open, refuse to repent, and, with a high hand, sin against his God; there was no middle course. The effect of such preaching was at once observable. Awakened souls, returning from the wilderness, poured into Jerusalem, and the change in their lives was such that curiosity was awakened. A spirit of confession was aroused (Matt. 3: 6), and sins which had long remained hidden came to light under the searching words of the preacher of the desert. Multitudes from Jerusalem, some earnestly seeking for real contact with God, some superficial souls ready for any novelty, some eager critics, went out into the wilderness to hear him.

But they were unprepared for that which they met with. Familiar with the forms and ceremonies of the temple worship, many of them, most of them, were wont to consider that in the performance of these they had done their duty, and no more could be expected of them. Many, perhaps, had been accustomed to sit in the synagogues, as people do now in churches, listlessly, with respectful endurance, or in a spirit of amused criticism, but holding themselves as altogether on the outside of the subjects dealt with. Some, perhaps, may have eagerly, but in vain, sought for truth which would satisfy the craving of a consciously unsaved soul. But here in the wilderness hearts were broken, consciences aroused, and men forgot every presence but that of God as they poured out their agonized confessions. As new arrivals came, some of these God-conquered souls would acknowledge wrong done by them years before, and many unsuspected sins came to light; restitution followed confession; and the inquiry was abroad, "What power on earth could induce these proud men, and men of position, to humble themselves like this?" And when the name of the preacher in the desert was mentioned, and the wondrous force of the words he uttered was the universally acknowledged source of this awakening, the questioners would go out, in their turn, to hear a man whose preaching wrought such wonders.

All Was Real;

The best fruit of a revival is always in its first days; the fablest souls, like the Ethiopian eunuch, Saul of Tarsus, and Cornelius, are always the first fruits. After a time, men begin to question, to criticise, and to talk away the power of a religious awakening. The time came, only three years later, when Jesus asked the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders, "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? Answer me. And they reasoned with themselves [not in order to come at the truth, but that they might get out of a dilemma without compromising themselves], If we shall say, From heaven, He will say, Why, then, did ye not believe him? But if we shall say, Of men, they feared the people, for all men counted John that he was a prophet, indeed." So these dishonest and dishonorable men said, "We cannot tell." (Mark 11: 27-35). Such people were to be found among John's hearers. Those who decide for Christ while the work of God is unpopular, those who have apparently all to lose and nothing earthly to gain by accepting Christ, are always the best converts. They are hardy souls, believing in God against wind and tide. Those who wait to see what men in high positions will do, so that they may not lose ground with their friends by their faith in God, never make noble Christians. To such the stern preacher of the desert spoke in the most scathing terms. "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth, therefore, fruits worthy of repentance." Some of them pleaded, "We have Abraham to our father," and they would fain enter heaven clinging to Abraham's skirts; but John was sent of God to fell to the earth all such claims on God. He said, "Now is laid unto the root of the trees, therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." It may have been that God had opened His heart to him concerning His people Israel; when He looked that His vine should bring forth grapes, it brought forth wild grapes, "He looked for judgment, but, behold, oppression; for righteousness, and, behold, a cry." (Isa. 5: 4-7.)

The Axe

John was sent to call men to decision and reality, to a living union with Him, or to a cutting-off from Him altogether. He came with the axe of God to carry away dead branches for the fire of God, and he did real work. He was personal in his appeals, and his hearers became personal in the questions which they anxiously asked him. Their tone was changed. Perhaps in answer to their hitherto unanswerable argument, "We have Abraham to our father," He may have spoken as Jesus did later on, "If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham." (John 8: 39.) And the people began to say, "What shall we do, then? His first answer was a clear cut of the axe at the root of selfishness, "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none, and he that hath meat, let him do likewise." The publicans put the same question, and with another cut of his axe he struck at the root of extortion, "Exact no more than that which is appointed you." The soldiers came with the same question, and with another cut of his axe he cut at the root of oppression and discontent, "Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages." We want John the Baptist to come and in many of our churches, missions, and institutions. If all the selfishness, exaction, oppression, and discontent were cleared away, and every plant which our heavenly Father hath not planted were rooted up, then men would see that there is reality in God's truth, and God's people still. The expectation which John had aroused in men's hearts about the coming Messiah was not left unsatisfied; the very day after he had testified, "One mightier than I cometh," "John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold, the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." (John 1: 29.) How far God had revealed to John beforehand the mission of the Saviour we know not, but the moment he saw Jesus he could speak of the taking away of sin. The Holy Ghost had used him beforehand to make sinners uneasy by arousing them, convincing them that their lives were not right in the sight of God, and he had cut from under them all false hopes. But how could they who were sinners by nature cease to sin, and how could they escape the just judgment of God? All John's former teaching did not solve these questions; he could point to righteousness of life, but he could not take away sin, or provide power to keep men from sinning. But now light broke in, "Behold"—and every eye must turn to look, to look away from himself to another; away from his sins to his Saviour—"Behold, the Lamb of God," the sin offering of sin offerings, "which beareth away the sin of the world." The Jewish mind would turn to the great Day of Atonement, when the sins of all the people were confessed, and put upon the head of the scape-goat, who bore them away "unto a land not inhabited." And now it would burst in on prepared minds: This is He, it is our Messiah, and "the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." Oh how many awakened souls must have found pardon, and been filled with joy in the sense that they were free!

Cut Away the Undergrowth

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Formal Recognition by our Government of the new Republic of Brazil took place on Thursday last, when President Harrison received the new credentials of the Brazilian Minister and the Brazilian Delegate to the Pan-American Conference. The President took occasion to congratulate the Minister on the peaceful character of the revolution, thereby taking the Christian and graceful attitude of a lover of peace and goodwill. He said, in reply to the address of Senhor Valente: "The peaceful course of events that has transformed the Empire of Brazil into the United States of Brazil has been observed with deep interest by the Government and people of this country. It is a source of profound satisfaction to the American people that the Provisional Government of the Brazilian Republic came into power without bloodshed and without violence. I trust this circumstance may prove a happy augury of peace, progress, and prosperity in the career which now opens to the United States of Brazil. Speaking for the people of this country, it will be my constant aim to cultivate the most friendly relations with your Government; to increase the personal intercourse and to enlarge the commercial exchanges between the two republics."

An Enormous Increase to our Navy is Advocated by the Board of Naval officers appointed by Secretary Tracy to recommend a ship-building policy. The Board advises the building of one hundred and one torpedo boats, costing $6,565,000; eighty-two cruisers and gunboats, costing $140,450,000; forty-four battle-ships, costing $202,490,000; total, $349,505,000. This would give us a fighting fleet capable of contending with any Power in the world. It would be more effective than that of Great Britain which, though larger in number, contains many antiquated vessels. The cost would also be relatively much larger, as our officers receive double the pay of British officers of the same rank. It appears to be the policy of nations to go to extremes. We have had a navy ridiculously inadequate for our need; this proposal is for a navy ridiculously in excess of our need. We have not a number of outlying dependencies to protect, as Great Britain has, nor have we so many and powerful enemies to attack us as she has. It is therefore folly for us to compete with her in naval strength, when all that we require is a sufficient number of vessels to protect our ports.

The Difficulty of Transacting Business in the House, which was foreseen when it was known how small a majority the Republicans had in that branch of Congress, made itself evident last week. No code of rules has yet been adopted, and this fact alone was an omission certain to lead to discord. On Wednesday, on a question being put to the vote, 161 votes were recorded in the affirmative and two in the negative. The 163 votes did not constitute a majority of the House, and the Constitution requires that a quorum to do business shall consist of a majority of the members; the Democrats consequently declared that there was no quorum. Mr. Reed, however, could see that a majority of the House was present, though the fact was not in evidence by the voting. He therefore ordered the names of certain Democrats who were present, but did not vote, to be added to the list. This evoked an emphatic protest, and the ruling of previous Republican Speakers—Mr. Blaine among them—was quoted against him. He insisted, however, on the physical fact of the presence of the Democrats in question, and humorously challenged them to deny that they were present. Apart from the question whether Mr. Reed is right or not in his ruling, it is to be regretted that in the absence of rules he should have taken up a position antagonistic to nearly half the House, and one that has not heretofore been admitted. He occupies so delicate a position in presiding over an assembly nearly equally divided that conciliation and urbanity are imperatively demanded of the Speaker, if any business is to be done. It looks now as if the session was likely to be wasted in unseemly squabbles over questions of order, and not to be spent in the transaction of national business.

A New Extradition Treaty with England has been negotiated by Mr. Blaine and Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Minister to the United States, and has been sent to the Senate. It is practically the same treaty as that arranged by Mr. Bayard and Lord West, with the exception of the dynamite clauses, which were the chief objection raised by the Senate to the former treaty. It may be hoped that this new instrument will go into effect, as it remedies many defects in the treaty of 1842, under which we are now working, and which has protected many criminals who ought to be in our jails, instead of living at ease in Canada on their ill-gotten gains. The offences which the new treaty adds to the number of those now extraditable are: Embezzlement; obtaining or receiving money under false pretenses; fraud by a bailee, banker, agent, Trustee, Director, or officer of any company, and counterfeiting. Mr. Blaine points out in his letter accompanying the treaty, that it contains a stipulation against surrender or trial for political offences, and an article providing that a person surrendered shall not be tried for any offence other than that for which the extradition was granted. Another article provides that the convention shall not apply to any crimes committed prior to the date at which the convention shall come into force.

The Closing of Three Banks in New York last week resulted from a bold scheme of robbery. The banks were the Sixth National, the Lenox Hill, and the Equitable. The last two were State institutions. The Equitable Bank was organized only two months ago and it and the Lenox Hill Bank appear to have been the agencies used to obtain control of the Sixth National Bank which was a wealthy and strong institution. More than half its shares were held by Mr. Charles H. Leland, its president. He sold them to an agent who, as he believed, represented an English syndicate. The price he received was considerably above the market rate, and when the figure was known several other directors sold out at the same price. The real purchasers were the men who controlled the two State banks. They took possession on Jan. 20, and at once began clearing out the safe of its contents and making large and suspicious loans. The intention to wreck the bank was so evident that the cashier gave the alarm and the Bank Examiner was notified. He took immediate charge, and, on discovering the withdrawal of the property of the bank, closed the doors, which involved the suspension of the two State banks. The premature detection of the plot through the sagacity and fidelity of the cashier has probably saved much of the property, which would have disappeared in a few days. The depositors will it is thought lose nothing, but the stock is gone. The broker who transacted the purchase has been arrested, and a warrant is out for the arrest of P. J. Claassen, the president of the bank.

The Emperor of Germany Made a Remarkable speech at the close of the session of the Reichstag. Its significance was not diminished by the fact that the last act of the legislators was to reject the Socialists' bill by a decisive majority. The Emperor in his speech from the throne said that it was with special satisfaction that he hailed the continuous application of the recommendations embodied in the imperial message to Parliament in the year 1881, especially the law for the insurance of invalid and aged workmen. Those measures were guarantees for the welfare of the poor. He felt that in the future they would be attended with good results and would contribute to the domestic peace of the Fatherland. Although much still remained to be done in this field, he was convinced the people would not forget what had been done. On the ground already gained there must be further building that the people might come to understand that the legislative power had a warm heart for their just interests, and that a satisfactory improvement in their position could be attained only by the preservation of order, and upon the path of peaceful and lawful progress. The idea of which we hear so much in this country, that the best government is that which governs least, evidently does not find favor with the Emperor. Perhaps he has begun to perceive that one of the functions of government is to interpose between the rich and the poor for the protection of the latter.

The Difficulty Between England and Portugal is to be the subject of another appeal by the latter Government to the other courts of Europe. The Cologne Gazette publishes an interview with the Prime Minister of Portugal, in the course of which that statesman said that Portugal was preparing an appeal to the Powers, based on the provisions of the Berlin Congo treaty. The Powers, he said, have not directly declined to accede to the proposal made by Portugal that an international conference be held to decide the Anglo-Portugal dispute. Above everything, Portugal would endeavor to arrive at an agreement with England. She will prove that all the British demands have been conceded. Senhor Pimental declared that he earnestly desired to enter into negotiations with England for the delimitation of the frontier of the territory claimed by both the Powers in Africa, and that, until such negotiations were possible, Portugal would act with the greatest prudence, and try to remove any cause for complaint on the part of Great Britain.

Rival Projects for Opening up Asia by Railroads are occupying the attention of European financiers and statesmen. The Russian Government has decided to construct a railroad from Lake Baikal, in Southern Siberia, to Stretinsk, on the Chinese frontier and on the Amoor River. This is to be an important link in the great through-Siberian railway, the ultimate end of which is to be at Vladivostock, on the Japan Sea. It was intended last year that the whole line should be finished in three years, but this is the first section of the Trans-Baikal part of the line that has been determined upon. French engineers have projected a line uniting Western India with Constantinople. An English company is said to be in process of formation for the construction of a road from the Persian Gulf through the valley of the Euphrates to the Sea of Cyprus. The importance of any one of those projects is seen by a glance at the map. Either of them would result in putting in communication with each other regions which nature has separated and peoples who are ignorant of each other.

The English Liberals are Preparing for Energetic action in the approaching session of Parliament. Mr. Gladstone issued a circular, on January 28, to all his supporters, urging them to be early in their places in the House. He informs them that the condition of public affairs is not without some peculiar features, and that the questions to be considered at the opening of the session may be of pressing interest. The wording of the circular is unusual, and is taken to indicate an early discussion of the Pigott letters and other matters of vital importance to the liberal and home rule members. That the Irish Land question is likely to be debated is inferred from a speech by Sir George Otto Trevelyan, in the course of which he denounced the land purchase scheme, because it was altogether at the risk of the British taxpayer. He also denounced Lord Ashbourne's act because it was mainly applied in prosperous districts, and corruptly, in buying out wealthy peers or others who wished to be rid of their land, instead of being applied, as it was intended, to solve difficulties in distressed districts. He said he would support any land bill that was framed on the lines of the bill introduced by himself in 1884.

Religious Liberty in the United States of Brazil has been decreed by the new Government. The decree was issued on January 7, and a summary of its provisions reached this country last week. It announces that "The federal authorities as well as the Confederate States are prohibited from making laws, establishing any religion, or stopping any body of men from coming together to worship according to their conscience. To all religious beliefs is given alike the privilege to exercise or keep up a religious cult in accordance with their faith, and not be interrupted in service, either public or private. This liberty does not only protect individuals in individual acts, but also churches, associations, and institutions in which any religious acts may be performed. They also have the right to unite themselves and live collectively, in accordance with their creed and discipline, without interference from the public powers. Other clauses of the decree limit the support which the Government gives to professors in Roman Catholic colleges.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored Ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $25.25. They are from: Norwood Park, Ill., $5; Parsons, Kans., $3; Omaha, Neb., $2; Boston, Mass., $2; Troy, N. H., $1; Burlington Junction, Mo., $1; Southport, N. Y., 50 cts.; Pompey, N. Y., 50 cts.; Kinderhook, N. Y., $1; Woodde, N. Y., 50 cts.; Norwood, Ill., $1; Doyer, N. Y., $1; Glenfield, Pa., 50 cts.; Olean, N. Y., $1; Smith's Falls, Ont., Can., $1; Pingree Grove, Ill., $1; Toledo, Ohio, 25 cts.; Archer City, Texas, $1; Cross Hill, S. C., $1; Nichols, N. Y., $1. On behalf of the beneficiaries of this fund we sincerely thank our friends who are so liberally supporting it. It is doing much good at very small cost. Every copy of the paper sent to a minister helps him directly, and his congregation through him. Those who best know the condition of the colored preacher are aware how limited are his means, and how sorely he needs the aid of aid which God uses this journal to supply. Testimonies to the benefit derived from its perusal are continually coming in. We hope that this year the fund may so increase that we may be able to send the journal to every colored minister who has applied for it.

A Remarkable Hebrew Tradition is Quoted by a writer in a New York journal, who heard it among the orthodox Jews of the city. It is in effect that when the railway goes to Jerusalem the Messiah will come. Their reason for this belief turns upon a reading of Isaiah 66: 20. The restoration of the Hebrews to Palestine is there touched upon, and incidentally it is mentioned that they shall travel there, sent by the nations to Jerusalem, on horses, in carriages, on mules, in litters, and on swift beasts. This last term, we were told, in the Hebrew contained two roots, meaning "swaying motion" and "a furnace." "Now," said our informant, "if the prophet in his vision saw the restoration of our people thus effected, or thus in course of taking place, what is more natural that he should describe a to him unknown vehicle or mode of conveyance by its most striking characteristic, a swaying motion, accompanied with the evidence of a fire or furnace in connection with it, a very suggestive description of the railway cars in rapid motion?"

The Chastisement of a Guest at a Wedding in St. Louis, Mo., on January 26, caused some excitement in the party. It was a Jewish wedding, and was solemnized in a large hall which was thronged with the friends of the contracting families. The ceremony had been concluded and the festivities were commencing, when the Rabbi who had officiated noticed among the guests a young man who had recently made profession of Christianity. The Rabbi called attention to the presence of the young man whom he denounced as an apostate. Several persons went to him and roughly ordered him to depart. The young man said he was a friend of the bridegroom, who had invited him to come. The bride's father on hearing this grew furious, and going to the young abused him coarsely, and finally set upon him and gave him a severe beating. The young Christian appears to have so learned of Christ as not to retaliate, or the old man might have suffered at his hands. As it was, the young man was much bruised and was ejected with great violence from the hall. He has the consolation of knowing that he is not the first whom the Jews have cast out for believing in Jesus. For him and all others on whom the profession of Christ brings social ostracism, there will be ample compensation on the day of the marriage supper of the Lamb. (John 8: 34-38.)

Nine Years on a Desert Island Have Been passed by a sailor who was recently rescued by an Argentine revenue-cutter. A steamer from Costa Rica, which arrived at New York on January 27, brought news of a strange discovery. It appears that in returning from a cruise around Patagonia the revenue-cutter San Juan sighted an island not marked on any of the charts. The captain had the anchor dropped and went ashore. He found the island to be about three miles long and one mile broad, well wooded, and apparently uninhabited. He noticed, in the course of his exploration of the island, a spring of sparkling, clear water. To his astonishment he saw on the soft soil near the spring the print of a human foot. Search was made for the man whose presence in the desolate spot was thus indicated. He was found fast asleep under a tree. His aspect was startling. He had no clothing, his hair was white as snow, and he had a long white beard reaching below his waist. When awakened he was almost wild with terror, and tried to escape to the woods. He was calmed with difficulty, and gradually recovered his speech. He proved to be a Spaniard, who was the only survivor of the crew of a ship which had been wrecked on the island nine years before. He had lived on raw shell-fish and birds' eggs which he had found in abundance. He had not seen a ship nor a human being in all the nine years of his life on the island. He was taken to Costa Rica and thence was sent to his native country. The man was probably almost crazed by long solitude, or he would have welcomed his rescuers, instead of running away from them. So men sometimes try to escape from those who go to rescue them from lives of estrangement from God, and who have no desire but that of doing them good. (Jer. 7: 24.)

A Brakeman Was Held Prisoner by the Hand at Olean, N. Y., for three hours on January 23. He was engaged late at night in coupling the cars of a freight-train which was to start the next morning. He had finished his work with the exception of the last car. The engineer backed the others down upon it, but the brakeman miscalculated, and his hand was caught between the bumpers. The engineer, concluding all was right, pulled away his locomotive, and went to the yard, his work being done for the night. The brakeman was pinned fast between the two bumpers, and to extricate his hand was impossible. He shouted for help, but no one heard him. The night was intensely cold, and the man was thinly clad. For three hours he was held between the cars, when he became unconscious from the effects of his injury and exposure to the cold. Soon after midnight a night track-laborer, who was returning home from his work, passed near the cars where the brakeman was a prisoner, and, hearing moans, discovered the freezing man. The laborer summoned help, and the cars were pried apart and the sufferer released. It is feared, however, that he will never recover from the injury, and long exposure to the bitter wind. Serious as the loss of his hand would have been to the man, it would have been better for him that the cars had taken it off completely, rather than holding him by it to his death. Jesus taught that there were spiritual crises when a man was so caught and held by evil connection that the sacrifice of something as precious to him as a right hand, or a right eye, might wisely be made to escape death eternal. (Matt. 5: 30.)

A Sect of Blood-Drinkers has been Organized in Missouri. A letter sent recently to the Secretary of the Humane Society in Kansas City, Mo., asked his intervention for the rescue of two children from revolting practices. It stated that the father of the children was draining them of blood, which he used as a medicine for the cure of his own ailments. On January 27 an officer was sent to the house where the man lived, and the allegations in the letter were found to be true. The children were in an emaciated condition, and had marks on their bodies showing that blood had been taken from them. The man confessed that he had drank their blood, but said that the children had willingly consented to give it to restore him to health. It appears that he belongs to a sect called "The Samaritans," which was founded about a year ago by a man who preached that, as the Bible taught that blood was life, it was the duty of the healthy to give it to the unhealthy. The preacher claimed to have been restored to health by the blood given to him by two of his converts from their own veins. Weekly meetings are now held by the sect, at which any who are sick report their sickness, and others volunteer to supply the remedy for their recovery. This is one of many instances of a grossly material perversion of a glorious spiritual truth. In another form—that of the doctrine of transubstantiation—the same principle has deceived many. Healing and life do indeed come by blood, but it is not the blood of man, but the blood of Christ shed for the redemption of the world, and the life it gives is not of the body, but eternal life of the soul. (John 6: 52-58.)

A Vendetta Over a Child is Agitating a Town in New Jersey. Some years ago a little girl was left practically an orphan. Her mother deserted her and her father died shortly afterward. A sister of the child's father cared for the little waif for a time, but, either growing tired of the burden, or from some other cause, she took the girl to the mother's relatives and intimated that they were the proper parties to maintain her. The child was temporarily placed with her mother's brother, who appears to have treated her well and won her affections. Two weeks ago the aunt repented of having surrendered the child and went to the house where she was and demanded her back again. The uncle refused to give her up, whereupon the disappointed woman became violent and threatened to smash the furniture if her request was not complied with. She partially carried out her threat before she could be ejected from the house. Last week she went there again, and, being refused again, did more damage. Bitter enmity has ensued between the two branches of the family and the end is not yet. The motive for the suddenly developed desire for the possession of the child is said to be that she has become the heiress of her grandmother's property, which is considerable. The difference between caring for a penniless orphan and a girl who will one day be enormously rich is evidently appreciated on both sides. It is a pity that the possibility of a still higher heirship, which is open to every child, is not fully realized by the men and women who have the privilege of training them. The careless and perfunctory manner in which one who may become an heir of God is often trained would be no more seen, (Psalm 78: 5.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. Phillips Brooks will preach in Trinity Church, New York, every day at noon during the first week of Lent, February 24 to March 1.

An organized effort is being made in Philadelphia to compel cigar dealers to close their stores on Sunday. Two-thirds of them have done so voluntarily.

Five hundred women in Tokio and Yokohama have subscribed to a fund for the purchase of a handsome Bible, to be presented to the Empress of Japan.

Mr. McAll, of Paris, has commenced an afternoon evangelistic service at Rue Royale, where meetings were so long held by the venerable Armand de Delille.

Mrs. E. J. Phinney has been elected president of the seceders from the Women's National Christian Temperance Union, who have taken the title of National Crusaders.

The Rev. F. E. Clark, who has been attending Christian Endeavor Conventions in seven or eight Western States, reports unexampled growth and enthusiasm for the work everywhere.

The New England Conference of College Young Men's Christian Associations closed its sessions at Middletown, Conn., on January 26. About twenty institutions of learning were represented in the Conference.

Rev. Jacob Freshman recently received a cheque of $1,000 toward the fund for the extinction of the debt on the Hebrew-Christian Church in St. Mark's Place, New York. Only $1,500 is now needed to wipe out the whole amount of $20,000.

The Rt. Rev. O. Whitaker, Bishop of Pennsylvania, was shot at on January 26, while conducting a confirmation service in St. John's Church, Philadelphia. Happily the Bishop was not hurt. The would-be assassin was crazed by Prohibition.

Evangelist D. L. Moody commenced a series of meetings at the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A., on Sunday last to continue through the week. Admission is by tickets, which may be obtained at the Y. M. C. A. office. Mr. Stebbins has charge of the musical arrangements.

The Battery Park Mission of the New York City Church Extension and Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has started a new work in the interest of telegraph and messenger boys. There will hereafter be a weekly meeting for these boys at the mission, under the auspices of the International Postal and Telegraph Christian Association.

At the meeting of the American Institute of Philosophy, on February 3, Dr. Amory H. Bradford, of Montclair, N. J., read a paper on "Half-Truths and the Truth." On March 3, Dr. C. D. W. Bridgman will read a paper on "The Future State in the Old Testament." The Institute now holds its meetings on the first Monday of every month in Association Hall, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, New York.

Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea is holding services in Guelph, Canada, in the Norfolk Street Methodist Church. There is a very large attendance. A secular journal, published in the town, bears witness to the fact that those who were converted at Mr. Schiverea's meetings there last year have been leading very different lives since their conversion; and it most cordially welcomes the evangelist this year, and hopes that similar success will attend his labors this year.

The superintendent of the Gospel Union Mission desires to hold meetings for non-church-goers, with the object of interesting them by bright, cheerful addresses and gospel songs, and leading them to Christ. Converts will be urged to join one of the Evangelical Churches of the neighborhood. Any reader who may believe there is an opening for such work in his locality is invited to write to the superintendent, care of manager of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York, giving particulars as to suitable building, etc.

A STRAIGHT TALK.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"I cannot come." Luke 14: 20.

Different Ways of Replying to the Invitation—The Courteous and the Snappish Answer—The Man Went Back on His Promise—Had Made up His Mind Finally—The Various Excuses—I. The Man had Married a Wife—Adam's Bad Precedent—Should Have Brought His Wife with Him—A Dismissed Servant Reinstated—II. The Man who had no Time to Come—Had Time to Dress—Wasted a Good Deal of Time—Had Time for Business—A Painting in an Italian Church—III. Cannot afford to Come—A Journey with Sporting Men—A Mean Business—IV. Men Who Cannot Understand It.

THERE are different ways of replying to the invitation of the gospel when you mean to refuse it. They are all, at bottom, bad, and they may all be classed under one head; for "they all with one consent began to make excuse;" but yet some are more decently worded than others, and have a greater show of reason about them. The first two sets of people, who were invited to the supper, said to the servant, apologetically, with some appearance of courtesy, "I pray thee have me excused." But the third man did not beat about the bush at all, or pray to be excused; but he said tersely, bluntly, sharply, "I cannot come." This was a final reply; he did not intend, nor wish, to come to the supper. "I cannot come," was but as he had married a wife, he thought the idea of his coming was utterly unreasonable, and he needed no sort of excuse. It also showed that he had a very low opinion of the supper itself. It might be a respectable meal, but he did not want it; he could have quite as good a supper at home. He was better off than those people in the streets. Those hedge-birds might be glad enough of a supper for nothing; but he was not dependent upon anybody, and he could do very well for himself. Do you not know many in this world who have no opinion of Christ, no love to God? Religion is to them mere nonsense—an impractical, dreamy matter, about which they have no time to concern themselves. Thousands are proudly independent of the free grace of God; they are good enough, and virtuous enough, and need not cry for mercy, like the wicked and profane. In their own judgment, they are quite able to fight their own way to heaven. They want not the charities of the gospel.

A Snappish Word;

But there was more than common pride in this brief, brusque speech, for this man had, at the first, made a promise to come. He had been bidden, and it is implied in the parable that he had at that time accepted the invitation. He had accepted the cards of invitation to the supper; and, though he had done so, he now flies in the face of his own self, and says, "I cannot come." I think that I am addressing some here who have pledged themselves many a time to come to Christ. Your resolutions may be still read in God's eternal book of record; but they are there as witnesses to your falseness and changeableness.

The Counterfoils

are there; but there is no fulfilment of any of the resolutions. God remembers them, although you have forgotten to carry them out. You accepted the invitation on the spur of the moment; but when worldliness had got the upper hand with you, you went back to your own obstinacy, and said, "I cannot come."

I suppose that this man, after he had made that positive declaration, felt that there was truth in what he had stated. He said, "Therefore I cannot come." He had reason to support him in what he said, and he went home, sat down, and enjoyed himself, and felt that he was a righteous man, quite as good as those who had gone to the supper, and perhaps rather better. He could not blame himself, for when a man cannot do it, why, of course, he cannot do it; and why should he be censured for an impossibility? "I cannot come"; how can I help that? So he sat down with a cool indifference to eat his own supper. I have no doubt that many, who have never come to Christ, have made themselves content to be without Him by the belief that they cannot come. Although the impossibility, if it did exist, would involve the greatest of all calamities, yet they speak of it with very little concern. Practically, they say, "I cannot be saved. I must remain an unbeliever." What an awful thing for any mortal to say! Yet you have said it till you almost believe it; and you wish us now to leave you quite alone for this dreadful reason. I shall endeavor, if I can, to pull away those downy pillows from your sleepy head, and wake you up to immediate anxiety, lest you perish in your sins. With kindly importunity I would plead with you, and try to show you that this little speech of yours, "I cannot come," is a wretched speech. You must throw it to the winds, and prove that you can come by coming at once, and receiving of the great feast of love, and honoring Him that spreads it for hungry souls.

Having said so much by way of preface, I am now going to take these words, "I cannot come," and handle them a little with the hope that you may grow ashamed of them.

I. First, this man declared, "I cannot come," because he said, "I have married a wife." He had promised to come to the supper, and he was bound to fulfil his promise. Why did he want to get married just then? Surely, he had not been compelled to marry all in a hurry, so that he could not keep engagements already made. He was bound to keep his promise to the maker of the feast; and that promise was claimed of him by the messenger. He could not say that

His Wife Would Not Let Him Come.

Such a declaration might be true in England; but in the East the men are always masters of the situation, and women seldom bear rule in the family. No Oriental would say that his wife would not let him come. Nor in these Western regions, where the woman more nearly gains her rights, can any man truthfully say that his wife will not allow him to be a Christian. I do not believe that any of you will be able to say, when you come to die, that your wife was responsible for your not being a Christian. Most men would be angry if we told them that they were hen-pecked, and could not call their souls their own. He must be a fool, indeed, who would let a woman lead him down to hell against his will. The fact is, a man is a mean creature when he tries to throw the blame of his sin upon his wife. I know that Father Adam set us a bad example in that respect; but the fact that this was a part of the sin which caused the ruin of our race should act as a beacon to us. You certainly, as a man, ought not to demean yourself to say, "I cannot come, for my wife will not let me."

If one of you, however, continues to whine "My wife is my ruin. I am unable to be a Christian because of my wife," I must ask you a question or two before I believe your pitiable story. Do you let her rule you in everything else? Does she keep you at home of an evening? Does she pick all your companions for you? It is more than probable that the very best thing that could happen to you would be to have your wife on the throne for the next few years. Upon such a solemn matter as this do not talk nonsense. You know that the blame lies with yourself alone; if you wished the best things, the little woman at home would be no hindrance to you.

This man said, "I cannot come." Why? Because he had a wife! Strange plea! for surely that was a reason why he should come, and Bring Her With Him.

If any man, unhappily, has a wife opposed to the things of God, instead of saying, "I cannot be a Christian, for I have an unconverted wife," he should seek for double grace that he may win his wife to Christ. If a woman laments that she has an unconverted husband, let her live the nearer to God that she may save her husband. If a servant has an unconverted master, let him labor with double diligence to glorify God, that he may win his master. Thus you see there are two reasons why you should come to the gospel banquet; not only for your own sake, but for the sake of your unconverted relatives.

I remember hearing Mr. Jay tell a story about a Non-conformist servant-girl, who went to live in a family of worldly people who attended the Church of England, although they were not real believers. They were outside buttresses of the Church, and they had very little to do with the inside of it; and outsiders are generally the most bigoted. They were very angry with their servant for going to the little meeting-house, and threatened to discharge her if she went again. But she went all the same, and very kindly but firmly assured them that she must continue to do so. At last she received notice to go: they could not, as good Church-people, have a Dissenter living with them. She took their rough dismissal very patiently; and it came to pass that, the day before she was to leave her situation, a conversation took place somewhat of this sort. The master said, "It is a pity, after all, that Jane should go. We never had such a good girl. She is very industrious, truthful, and attentive." The wife said, "Well, I have thought that it is hardly the thing to send her away for going to her chapel. You always speak up for religious liberty, and she does not look quite like religious liberty to turn one girl away for worshipping God according to her conscience. I am sure she is a deal more careful about her religion than we are about ours."

So they talked it over, and they said, "She has never answered us perty, nor found fault with us about our going to church. Her religion is a greater comfort to her than ours is to us. We had better let her stay with us, and go where she likes." "Yes," said the husband, "and I think we had better go and hear the minister that she goes to hear. Evidently she has got something that we have not got. Instead of sending her away for going to chapel, we will go with her next Sunday, and judge the matter for ourselves." And they did, and the master and mistress were not long before they were members of that same church. Do not say, therefore, "I cannot come, because my master and mistress object to it."

II. A second reason is even more common. It is not everybody who can say, "I have married a wife;" but everywhere you can meet with a person who pleads,

"I Have No Time."

You say, "Sir, I cannot attend to religion, for I have no time." I remember hearing an old lady say to a man who said that he had no time, "Well, you have got all the time there is." "I thought that it was a very conclusive answer. You have had the time, and you still have all the time there is—why do you not use it? Nobody has more than twenty-four hours in a day, and you have no less. You have no time? That is very singular! What have you done with it; you certainly have had it? Time flies with you, I know, but so it does with me, and with everybody. What do you do with it?"

You have time enough for common things. See here, I never meet any of you, in the middle of the day, in the street in your shirt-sleeves. I do not find you going up and down Cheapside half-dressed. "Oh, no, of course we have time to put on our clothes." You have time to dress your bodies, and no time to dress your souls with the robe of Christ's righteousness? Do not tell me that! I do not meet any one of our friends saying, toward evening, "I am ready to faint, for I have had nothing to eat since I got up. I have had no time to get a morsel of meat." No, no, they have had their breakfast, and they have had their dinner, and so on. "Oh, yes, we have time to eat," says one. Do you tell me that you have time to feed your bodies, and that God has not given you time to feed your souls? Why, it is not common-sense.

You have no time, and yet you undertake more secular work. You keep a shop, do you not? "Yes, I have a large shop." You are going to enlarge it, are you not? Will you have time, do you think, to attend to it when the business grows? "Oh, yes, I dare say that I shall find time; at any rate, I must make time, somehow or other." You are going to take a second shop, are you not? How will you manage it?

"Oh, I Shall Find Time."

Yes, my dear sirs, you can find time for all those enlargements, and speculations, and engagements, let me be plain with you, and say that you could find time for thought about your soul if you had a mind to do so. To plead that you have no time for religion is a fraud. It will not do! It is lying unto God to say that you have no time.

Besides, time is not the great matter. Did the Lord demand of you, a month's retirement from business? Did we command you to spend two days in a week in prayer? Did we tell you that you could not be saved unless you shut yourself up an hour every morning for meditation? I would to God you could have an hour for meditation; but, if you cannot, who has demanded it of you? The command is that you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and forsake your sin; and this is a matter that will not interfere with your daily work. It is not a matter in which time comes in so much as to interfere with any of the ordinary duties of life. Therefore throw away that excuse, and do not say any longer "I cannot come, because I have no time." At once repent of sin, and believe in the Lord Jesus; and then all your time will be free for the service of the Lord, and yet you will have not a moment the less for the needful duties of your calling.

In a little church on the Italian mountains I saw, amongst many absurd daubings, one picture which struck me. There was a ploughman who had turned aside at a certain hour to pray. The rustic artist drew him upon his knees before the opened heavens; and, lest there should be any waste of time occasioned by his devotion, an angel was going on with the ploughing for him. I like the idea. I do not think an angel ever did go on with a man's ploughing while he was praying, but I think that the same result often comes to pass, and that when we give our hearts to God, and seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, all these things are added unto us.

III. I have heard some use the excuse "I Cannot Afford to be a Christian."

Well, my friend, let us have a talk about that. Cost you more than you can afford? What do you mean? What cost? Cost you money? It need not. It will cost you no more than you like to spend upon it with a glad heart. God will give you a generous spirit, which will make you love to support His cause, and to help the poor, and contribute your share to all Christian mission work. But in the kingdom of Christ there is no taxation. Giving becomes a gratification, liberality a luxury. Nothing will be dragged from you by force. Surely, our God abhors money that comes into His exchequer by anything but the freewill offerings of loving hearts. It will not cost you much in that way, I am sure, for you are only to give as God has prospered you.

"Oh, but I meant that I could not afford it, for I should have to lose several friends." Is that friend worth keeping who is an enemy to God? The woman who would lead you away from God, or the man who would keep you out of heaven—are friends of that sort worth having? Be brave, and end a connection which will otherwise endlessly connect you with the bottomless pit.

"Oh," says one, "but I mean that I should lose so much in trade." Ah, well! I will not ask you to explain what you mean by that; for there is an ugly look about that statement. You know more about your trade than I do. No doubt there are trades which pander to the vices of men, and become all the more profitable in proportion to the growth of drunkenness and impurity.

These Must be Given Up.

Moreover, there are traders who live by puffery, and lying, and cheating; and I do not recommend you to profess to be a Christian if that is your line of things. It is better to give up all profession of religion when you go in for unrighteous gain. What? Did I hear a hint about adulteration? Did I also hear that you do not give full weight and true measure? Ah, my dear fellow! give up that game at once, whether you become a Christian or not; but certainly, if that is what you mean, the loss of dishonest profits will be a great gain to you, both for this life and the next.

"Well," says one, "I should have to give up a good many pleasures." Pleasures which block the road to heaven ought to be given up at once. You may think me a very melancholy sort of person; but I fancy that I am about as happy as any man in England. I appreciate a merry thought and a cheerful speech as much as anybody. I can laugh, and I can enjoy good, clean, humorous remarks as well as most people; and, having now served the Lord for nearly forty years, I bear my witness that I have never had to relinquish a single pleasure for which I have felt a deliberate desire. As soon as you are renewed in heart, you are changed in your pleasures; and that which might have been a pleasure once to you would then be a misery.

A Painful Journey.

If I had to sit in some people's company, and hear what some people talk about, it would be hell to me. One night, having to preach up in the North of England, this unfortunate circumstance occurred to me. When I got down to the railway, I was put into a carriage with five racing gentlemen, who were going to Doncaster races. Happily they did not know me, but from the beginning to the end the conversation of these gentlemen was garnished with expressions which tortured me, and at last they fell upon a subject which was unutterably loathsome. I pray God that I may not be condemned to dwell with such people for ever, for it would be hell to me. The pleasures of this world are so full of dust, dirt, and grit, that he who has once washed his mouth clean of them, declines another meal of such druff. You will lose no pleasure if you come to Christ.

You want to see a little "life," do you not? "Life" in London means death. "But I have associations just now, that render it difficult." That is to say, God must wait your convenience. You mean that God is not worthy of your strength and health; but when you are old, and worn out, then you mean to sneak into heaven, and cheat the devil. It is dirt mean of you! I can say no better.

IV. I hear people say, "I cannot come, sir, for I Cannot Understand It."

I am a poor man, I never had any education." What is it that you cannot understand? Can you not understand that you have broken God's law, and that the just God must punish you for it? You can understand that. Can you not understand that, if you trust the Lord Jesus Christ, then it is certain that He took your sin, and bore it in His own body on the tree, and put your sin away, for His name is the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"? Can you not understand that, if you trust in Him, you have Him to stand in your room, and place, and stead; for the Scripture says, "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." You can understand it if you wish to do so.

If there is any man here present who says, "I cannot come," I beg him to express himself properly, and speak out the sad fact as it ought to be spoken. Here is the style: "Unhappy wretch, I cannot come to Christ! Millions in heaven have come, but I cannot come. My mother died in a good hope; but 'mother, I cannot come.' My father has gone home to be with Jesus; but I cannot come." I thank God that this statement is not true; but if you say it, and believe it, you ought never to rest any more; for if you cannot come to Christ, you are the unhappiest person in the world.

Will you now, instead of refusing to come, resolve to come at once? Say, "I will come to Jesus. Tell me how." You can only come to Christ by trusting Him. Trust yourself with Him, and He will save you. Never did anyone trust Jesus in vain. Trust has a powerful influence over the Lord Jesus. He comes to the rescue of a soul that leans wholly upon Him. He will do all things for you: He will change your nature as well as forgive your sin; and your nature being changed, you shall lead a new life from this time forth, and grow in grace until you become like Him in whom you trust; and then He will take you to be forever with Him. Washed in the blood of the Lamb, you shall walk with Him in white amidst the glorified. I pray that you may get the double blessing, and may remember this gloomy, dark, evening by the blessing that God shall put upon you through Jesus Christ, His Son. Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Minister's Grafting.—Mr. Wm. Thomson, the evangelist, observes: "I once accompanied a minister into his garden, and saw him do some grafting. I watched him approach a branch, and with his knife cut off a tiny slip. Then going to another tree, he cut off a piece of the bark, exposing the bleeding stem, and put upon it the little slip, covering it up with the bark; and turning to me, he said, 'You see, there must be contact; then the bark must cover it all up.' 'Ah,' I thought, 'how like a sinner being engrafted into Christ. He is cut off the barren tree of the world, and brought into contact with Christ, with the bleeding side of Christ, and covered over with the bark of the covenant, the agreement between God and man; then into the grafted one flows the strength and life of Christ, enabling him to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit.'"

A Chief's Pilgrimage and Prayer.—Mr. J. G. Forbes relates: "An African chief lived at a considerable distance from the nearest mission-station, when rumors of a new religion reached him, and he was very anxious to know more about it, for he was tired of his idols of wood and stone. He saw they could do nothing for him, but this new religion told of a living God, all-powerful to keep his worshippers. At great inconvenience this chief left his country and made his way to the nearest mission-station, at which at that time there were meetings being held, conducted in the English language. He could not speak English, but he thought if he could just catch a word or two of this new religion, remember them, and pray them to this great God, he would be heard. At the meeting he listened, and taking two or three words, kept repeating them, but, listening to what was going on, the words slipped from his memory. Just as the people were about to go, the minister read a notice that another mission would be held there next year in the months January and February. At once he caught the last words, January, February, and repeating them over and over again, fixed them upon his memory. He set out for his own country, praying, January, February, and God saw the earnestness of his spirit, and that he wanted to know Him, and answering his prayers in the spirit in which they were offered, sent him peace. When a missionary passed that chief's country some years afterward, he found him still trusting in the true God, and still praying, January, February. The missionary stayed some time with him, giving him instruction; then that convert, having a reason for the faith that was within him, became a burning and shining light, carrying the Gospel news to his brethren. We who have such privileges and knowledge, how little we make of them. Are we not ashamed when we see those who have obtained but a glimmering doing such great and noble work for the Master?"

"Nothing in Particular."—The Rev. Mr. Wells relates: "I knew a young fellow of manly bearing who once asked a minister to fill up a schedule for him. One of the questions upon it was about religion. 'What answer am I to give to this?' said the minister, pointing to the question. 'Oh, anything you like,' answered the young man, carelessly. 'No,' was the reply, 'it must be what you like.' 'Well, just put down the religion that's going.' 'That won't do,' said the minister, 'the answer must be specific. What are you?' 'Well, I am nothing in particular,' answered the young man, looking bored. I fear there are too many religious nothings amongst us. They give their countenance to religion, and, even themselves, would admit they give little else. They accept their religion as a man accepts his nationality, without personal choice, by the mere accident of birth; but 'except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.'"

A Night Watchman's Work for Christ.—A minister remarks: "I remember well an enthusiastic Christian worker, in the Blochairn district, just outside of Glasgow. His occupation was that of night-watchman, and during the cold winter nights the youths of the district were allured to go into his wooden hut and stand by his great roaring fire which constantly burned there. At first their talk was principally of gambling, dog-fighting, and such like things; but gradually the Christian watchman introduced better subjects, until, by the power of the Holy Spirit, these young fellows were transformed from servants of the devil into servants of God, his little hut becoming a church in which he held meetings for sixteen weeks in continuity. When the work at which the watchman had been employed was finished, and the hut about to be sold, these young men bought it, re-erected it against the gable of the nearest house, and furnishing it with rude benches and ruder pulpit, carried on the mission. This work sprang from the simple efforts of one devoted night-watchman."

From the Slums to a Happy Home.—Mr. Thomson observes: "A man lay dying in one of the slums of London. He was once rich and respected. As he lay there his chief thought was, 'What will become of my boy when I am gone?' Suddenly he remembered a friend in brighter days, and who had gone gradually up the ladder of worldly success, while he had slowly descended. He sent for his old companion, who gently chided him for not sending word before, and then asked what he could do for him. 'Will you do well for my boy when I am gone?' he asked. A gentle pressure of the hand conveyed all the answer that was required, and the dying man, having his only wish satisfied, passed away. A few days afterward the son and friend were the sole mourners at the grave of the dead man. As the friend turned to come away he looked for the boy, but to his surprise he was gone. He went to the house, but he was not there. He had returned from the funeral, gathered his few things together, and gone off. The gentleman searched everywhere for the boy; but for four years his search was unsuccessful. At last one day as he was going homeward, he saw a poor, ragged boy, with a gaunt, hungry face, standing at a shop window and recognized him as the son of his dead friend. Going up to the lad, he said, 'Are you hungry?' 'That I am, sir,' was the answer. 'Then come in and have something to eat,' said the gentleman. When they came out, the gentleman took him to a shop, where he had him washed and dressed in new clothes. 'Now that will do,' said the gentleman. 'You had better go home.' 'I have no home,' replied the boy. 'Would you like a home?' he asked. 'I would, sir,' he answered. A cab was hailed, they got inside, and soon arrived at a splendid house. As the boy looked round at all the splendor he burst out, 'Oh, sir, why do you do all this for me?' 'My boy, do you not remember how, four years ago, I promised your father to look after you? You ran away from me, but I have found you. Will you be my son?' was the reply. To you who have tasted the bitterness of the world's Dead Sea fruit, Jesus renews His invitation. Will you become sons and daughters of the King of kings?"

Sir Arthur Blackwood.

Mr. Mackay Teaching His Native School in Uganda. (See page 85.)

Cutting Up New Boots to Mend Old Ones.—"There was a poor Scotch idiot boy who went about the country side, trusting to charity for both food and clothing. He had a pair of new boots, and in his senselessness, he was actually about to cut up his new boots to mend his old tattered ones. Some persons are, in spiritual intelligence, very much like that boy in intelligence. God offers to them a new nature. They accept it, but they do not understand the true value of the gift. Instead of entering into the fulness of their spiritual life they would take bits of it here and there to patch up their old nature. Do not be so foolish. If you attempt to mend an old garment with new cloth the rent will be only made greater."

SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD.

(See Portrait.)

THOUGH Sir Arthur Blackwood is best known in this country as the president of the Christian conventions at Mildmay, London, and though Americans who have met him have usually done so at some religious gathering, he has many other important duties. More than any other man now living, perhaps, he illustrates the possibility of combining high office in the State with signal usefulness in the Church. After serving for twenty-two years in the English Treasury, during two of which he was attached as commissariat officer to the Brigade of Guards in the Crimean War, in 1854-5, he was appointed, in 1874, to the occupancy of the then newly created and most responsible post of Financial Secretary to the Post-Office. Six years later he became permanent head of that great department of State which controls the Post-Office and Telegraph system, and recently the Parcel Post. Such a position of responsibility, involving the chief oversight of about 100,000 workers throughout the United Kingdom, would fully engross the time and tax the energies of most officials.

Early in his life, Sir Arthur was led to realize the claims of God on his active allegiance, and to these claims he has responded in no half-hearted way. Immediately after his conversion, his gifts of earnest and effective speech were turned to account in the conduct of evangelistic services in the West End of London. This kind of work, which then seemed, and may still seem, "irregular" to some who lay great stress on form and precedent in religious matters, is more difficult when attempted among the higher social ranks of the community, than among those in humble life; but the praiseworthy effort Sir Arthur made was most successful, and was ardently followed up by endeavors of a more private nature.

Since then his labors as an evangelist have been constant and unrelenting, so far as fidelity to public duty would allow. For several years weekly gospel meetings were regularly held by him in his own house at Streatham, Surrey—meetings still thankfully remembered by many, and at which a series of addresses were delivered. But though specially qualified to address cultured audiences, he has by no means confined his preaching to those of his own rank in the social scale. In the pretty Kentish village of Crayford, near which he resided for some ten years, he had a mission hall erected, and there his voice was often heard, speaking on righteousness, temperance, and the judgment to come. For several years he convened a Spring Conference of Christians at Crayford, but on his removal to another part of the county, it ceased to be held. He still devotes what time is at his disposal to gospel work.

In his official connection with the Young Abstinents' Union (which seeks specially to reach young people of the upper classes), the Band of Hope Union, and other temperance organizations, he has thrown all the weight of influential position and enlightened conviction into the scale of sobriety and social happiness. At Crayford, with the sympathetic assistance of his wife, the Dowager Duchess of Manchester, he opened a restaurant in connection with the mission hall there, and has sought in many other ways to help the poor to help themselves.

MR. BATHURST'S DISAPPOINTMENT.

(See illustration on page 93.)

THE observant visitor would not need to be told that Bathurst Hall was the residence of a bachelor. Every room showed the fact in its extreme neatness and the almost painful order of its contents. Many lands had contributed to enrich it, for Mr. Edgar Bathurst had been a great traveller. Left an orphan in boyhood and inheriting an ample fortune, he had wandered in desultory fashion over the earth, caring only for his own amusement. After leaving college, he had spent a few years in Germany studying in the Universities. Afterward he had made long solitary journeys in countries far away from the beaten tracks of travel. In Farther India, Afghanistan, Japan, and later in Africa, he had plodded alone for months at a time. Then he went back to Europe and wandered through Italy and the Tyrol, living a week or two in a village when the fancy moved him. It was an idle, vagabond life, but it satisfied him. One passion alone really held dominion over him. He was passionately fond of music, and wherever he went, no matter how rigorously he dispensed with baggage, the case that held his "Stradivarius" was always a part of it, and, whether surrounded with Arctic snow or ice, or sweltering in a tent on an African desert, its strains were sure to be heard sometime during his waking hours.

Edgar Bathurst was well into middle life before Bathurst Hall, the home of his ancestors, saw him again. He had left it a slight, handsome young man; he returned to it a grizzled, robust, substantial-looking man of mature years. He did not intend to remain long in America. He hated the noise and turmoil of its cities and the intensity of its life. More than all he abominated its plutocratic society. The talk of the men who measured everything by a money standard and who were interested in nothing but dollars, and schemes for getting them, was hateful to him and the continual rush and hurry bewildered him. But he had sent home at intervals in his wanderings a multitude of cases which contained the treasures he had collected, and these he wished to set in order in the old home. He promised himself that, having spent a few months in that congenial occupation, he would resume his travels. But the months passed and he was still there. He read no newspapers, cared nothing for political or social life, but spent his days peacefully and pleasantly among his books and his treasures.

The only family with which he held social relation was that of his widowed sister, Mrs. Pelham, who lived within half an hour's walk of his house. She had three daughters, and in intercourse with them Bathurst learned for the first time in his life the delights of a home sanctified and beautified by feminine influence. To Annie, the youngest of the three, he became particularly attached. Her attraction for him chiefly lay in her love of music; her accurate ear and her skilful touch. It was a new pleasure to him to have an appreciative listener, and a still greater pleasure to impart instruction to so intelligent a pupil. The attractions of solitary travel grew less potent with him as this new occupation developed, and though he insisted that his stay was only temporary, and that he might leave any day for South America, which was the land he had chosen for his next exploration, he allowed the months to pass without starting. He had always started on these journeys on an impulse, but now the impulse did not come.

One day, however, going over to his sister's house he missed his favorite niece from the family gathering. Annie was busy packing, he was told. An old school-friend who was married and living in a southern State was sick, and had begged Annie to come to her. She was preparing to leave the next morning, and expected to be away several weeks. Bathurst was sorry. Why should Annie recognize a claim like that? She was happy at home; why should she go into an invalid's house to witness suffering, to be annoyed by the smell of drugs, and to do all kinds of disagreeable duties? It was Quixotic in his opinion, and he chafed under the deprivation of her company.

The impulse for which he had been waiting came soon after Annie's departure, and twenty-four hours afterward Bathurst was on his way to the land of the Incas. Of all his journeys this was the most disappointing. He could not concentrate his attention on the subjects he had promised himself to investigate. He was restless and lonely. For the first time solitude was irksome to him, and after wandering aimlessly for some three months he suddenly returned home. Annie Pelham had returned a few days before him, and when he heard that, he promised himself a renewal of the pleasant times of the previous winter when, hour after hour they would play over the works of the old masters, and he would lead her to higher proficiency. He would teach her the violin now; she had asked him to do so, but he had declined because his stay would be so short. Now he meant to remain and be happy at home.

Annie, however, when he saw her the first day after his return, did not seem so eager about it as he expected. Her friend whom she had been visiting was dead, and she was much depressed. Music was Bathurst's prescription for depression—an unfailing remedy. Annie must come to his house the next morning, and to this she consented. He felt sure that he could charm away her depression and before she came his violin was in his hand and he was drawing sweet strains from it. He greeted her warmly when she entered, and seating her near the door placed his violin in her hands and told her that her desire should be fulfilled. She should be mistress of "the only instrument worth studying."

Annie laid it tenderly on her lap and looking up earnestly into his face said: "Uncle, I am afraid I am going to disappoint you sadly. I am not the girl I was when I went away. I have looked on death, and life seems to me now a more serious matter. I cannot live for myself and my own enjoyment any longer. I have given myself to the Saviour and I am going to give my life to work for Him. He died for me; it is not much for me to give. All the time I can spare from my duty to mamma I shall give to telling others of Christ's love and trying to ease the burdens of the sorrowing. I know it grieves you, Uncle, but I can do no other. I belong to Christ."

Mr. Bathurst's face might have served a painter as a model for consternation. He protested, he argued, he pleaded, but to no purpose. Annie was firm. The next day Bathurst Hall was untenanted again. Its master had gone away on another of his long journeys.

Two years later—years which Annie Pelham had spent in ministration among the poor and in active service for her Master—she received another summons from her uncle. He had returned home unexpectedly, as usual, but this time in sickness. He had caught a fever in Africa and had been near death. He had suffered a relapse and had reached Europe with difficulty. There a physician told him that his days would be short and he had hurried home to prepare for death.

"Tell me your secret, Annie," he said when she came in response to his summons. The once stalwart form looked weak and shrunken in the big arm-chair where he sat, and Annie saw how wasted and aged he was. "You spoke that day of not being able to live for yourself; I have done that all my life. Now I am going to die; what must I do?"

Annie had refused once to give her time to her uncle, but this was a different matter. To open his blind eyes, to show him the evil of a life of selfish enjoyment, to lead him to the Saviour, was a work of love. He could command her services now.

Mr. Bathurst's Disappointment.

"You were right, Annie," he said, near the last. "I could not understand it then. I thought you were crazy or fanatical, but you chose the better part. Thank God you did, or I should have died in my sins."

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 78.)

The Death of the Pastor.

SOME dear friends there were, whom the Pilgrims had longed and hoped for, but whom they were never destined to see join them in their far-distant home, and foremost among these was their beloved pastor Robinson. He had been their guide through all their earlier wanderings. He had held sweet converse with them, and ministered kindly consolation to many there in years long gone by, that seemed to them now as a shadowy but pleasant dream of childhood, when they wandered together among the green lanes, or watched the heron or wild duck in the quiet fens of Lincolnshire in England. He had stood by them in perilous hours, and borne persecution for them and with them, when the dear ties of their native land were rudely severed.

He was the last to leave the post of danger when the exiled families were escaping to a foreign land and, with self-sacrificing devotion, he was content to go or to stay, according as the wants of his severed flock should seem most to need his presence in the old city of Leyden, or in the land of hope and promise beyond the billows of the Atlantic. Few men of nobler spirit have ever lived; perhaps none that could compare with this humble and little-noticed pastor of the exiled flock were left behind him in those early years of the seventeenth century, when he bade farewell to his native shores.

He was a man of refined intellect and great natural powers of mind. He had studied and taken high degrees at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and had held a living in the Church of England. But the pedant king had taken into his head that the minds and creeds of all Englishmen should be moulded into an exact resemblance to his own; and, unhappily for England, there were not wanting abundant tools—knaves and bigots, with some honest but dim-sighted men to boot—who were willing to strive for the accomplishment of this impossibility. Robinson accordingly found that his benefice in the neighborhood of Yarmouth could not long be held in peace with a clear conscience. He was frequently molested with bishop's officers, and his friends prosecuted, fined, imprisoned, and nearly ruined in the ecclesiastical courts.

They escaped to Holland at last, after many difficulties, having resolved not to purchase peace or worldly honors by sinful compliance with the restraints imposed on conscientious belief. There we have already followed them to Amsterdam, and from thence to Leyden, and to Delft Haven, where the good pastor knelt upon the shore, and with tearful eyes implored the blessings of Heaven upon his severed flock, as he watched the Speedwell receding from his gaze, till lost in the distant meeting of the sea and sky. Neither he nor his flock ever gave up the hope of reunion in their new home. But it was not so to be. They were to see the face of their loved pastor no more.

John Robinson was only thirty-two years of age when the exiled Church was re-formed at Amsterdam. Nevertheless he had left behind him a reputation for learning, as well as for simple piety and devoted zeal; and even some of his enemies acknowledged him to be "the most learned, polished, and modest spirit that ever separated from the Church of England." He appears to have possessed the rare virtues of courage and prudence in a singular degree. He was remarkable as a lover of peace; and when threatened to be involved in the dissensions which originated in another body of English Nonconformist exiles at Antwerp, he at once removed with his flock to Leyden, to escape so dreaded a danger, although both he and they were well aware that their worldly cares and difficulties would be greatly increased by removing to an inland town. Nevertheless, when he conceived the great interests of religion were at stake, in consequence of the teaching of the Arminians, he boldly stepped forward as the champion of what he believed to be the truth.

The period was a critical one in the state of the controversy at Leyden. Episcopius, one of the divinity professors, maintained the doctrine of the Arminians; while Polyander, his colleague in the university, was the champion of the Calvinists. It is sufficient evidence of his great abilities that, though a young man and a foreigner so recently come amongst them, his appearance in the controversy was hailed with delight by Polyander, and won him great honor, without any appearance of enmity or ill-will being shown by his opponents. His learning and piety attracted many English Nonconformists to Leyden; and he published several works, particularly his Justification of Separation from the Church of England, which were long held in high estimation.

His character is thus briefly but lovingly drawn by Governor Bradford in his Dialogue between some young men born in New England, and sundry ancient men that came out of Holland and Old England: "Mr. John Robinson was pastor of that famous church of Leyden, in Holland; a man not easily to be paralleled for all things, whose singular virtues we shall not take upon us here to describe. Neither need we, for they so well are known both by friends and enemies. As he was a man learned and of solid judgment, and of a quick and sharp wit, so was he also of a tender conscience, and very sincere in all his ways, a hater of hypocrisy and dissimulation; and would be very plain with his best friends. He was very courteous, affable, and sociable in his conversation, and towards his own people especially.

"He was an acute and expert disputant, very quick and ready, and had much bickering with the Arminians, who stood more in fear of him than any of the university. He was never satisfied in himself until he had searched any cause or argument he had to deal in thoroughly and to the bottom; and we have heard him sometimes say to his familiars, that many times, both in writing and disputation, he knew he had sufficiently answered others, but many times not himself; and was ever desirous of any light, and the more able, learned, and holy the persons were, the more he desired to confer and reason with them. He was very profitable in his ministry, and comfortable to his people. He was much beloved of them, and as loving was he unto them, and entirely sought their good for soul and body. In a word, he was much esteemed and revered of all that knew him, and his abilities were acknowledged both of friends and strangers."

The testimony of Bradford has already been referred to as to the sagacity and wisdom with which their pastor guided them, no less in temporal than in spiritual things. "His love," says he, "was great toward them, and his care was always bent for their best good, both for soul and body. For, besides his singular abilities in divine things, wherein he excelled, he was able also to give direction in civil affairs, and to foresee dangers and inconveniences; by which means he was very helpful to their outward estates, and so was every way as a common father unto them. And none did more offend him than those that were close and cleaving to themselves, and retired from the good; as also such as would be stiff and rigid in matters of outward order, and inveigh against the evils of others, and yet be remiss in themselves, and not so careful to express a virtuous conversation."

"They, in like manner, have ever a reverent regard unto him, and had him in precious estimation, as his worth and wisdom did deserve; and although they esteemed him highly whilst he lived and labored amongst them, yet much more after his death, when they came to feel the want of his help, and saw by woeful experience what a treasure they had lost, to the grief of their hearts and wounding of their souls; yea, such a loss as they saw could not be repaired, for it was hard for them to find such another leader and feeder in all respects."

The life of Robinson was one of many trials; and it must have been no slight addition to these to see one after another of his flock escaping to the settlement they had established in New England, while he strove in vain to accomplish his long-cherished wish of being united to his people. Poverty during the first years, and the opposition of some of the merchant adventurers afterward, prevented this; and when the colonists had just triumphed over their greatest difficulties, and would gladly have removed all these obstacles, death put his final fiat on the step. On the 1st of March, 1625, little more than five years from the date of that sad yet hopeful parting at Delit Haven, Robinson's pilgrimage was over, and he had entered into his rest.

Unwonted funeral honors were paid to the good man's memory, as they laid him in his grave in the and of the stranger. His death was looked on as a public loss. The University and the ministers of the city, with many of the citizens, followed his remains to the place of interment, under the pavement in the aisle of St. Peter's, the oldest church in the city of Leyden. No stone marks the spot where he is laid, for his friends were mostly gone to their farthest settlement of Plymouth, in New England, and the few that remained—exiles like himself—were too poor to spare the costs of such a memorial.

"If either prayers, tears, or means," said one of them, in writing to Governor Bradford, "would have saved his life, he had not gone hence. But he having faithfully finished his work which the Lord had appointed him here to perform, he now rests with the Lord in eternal happiness." In another letter preserved by the first governor of New England, the writer exclaims, "Alas! you would have had him with you, and he would as fain have come to you."

Peace to the just man's memory—let it grow !
Greener with years and blossom through the flight
Of ages; let the mimic canvas show
His calm, benevolent features; let the light
Stream on his deeds of love that shunned the sight
Of all but Heaven, and in the book of fame
The glorious record of his virtues write,
And hold it up to men, and bid them claim
A palm like his, and catch from him the hallowed flame.

How small a place he occupied in the world's eye, whom now the people of a vast continent look back to with filial reverence, though it was not permitted him to set a foot upon the promised land! Like Moses, he led his people to the verge of the wilderness, and from afar beheld their goodly inheritance. What mattered it though the few who yet lingered behind could not grave for him the memorial-stone? They needed it not; for the spot was hallowed in their remembrance, as the resting-place of their loved minister; and they looked, probably, rather to hold its record in their memory, than to behold it much longer with their eyes, when the strongest tie that might have bound them to their foreign shelter, was thus severed, and they hastened to join their brethren in their home in the wilderness. Nevertheless, the grave of the good man has not been forgotten. Pilgrims from that land where now the memory of the little band of exiles is revered as that of the fathers of a great nation, have sought the old Church of St. Peter's at Leyden, and have thought its ancient aisle more sacred because it holds the dust of the Pilgrims' pastor.

While the church of the Pilgrims at Plymouth waited and longed for their pastor, whose face they were no more to see in the flesh, his place was supplied by Mr. William Brewster, a man endowed with no mean gifts, and not unworthy to occupy the honorable pre-eminence of the first New England pastor. His place in the exiled church at Leyden appears to have been that of ruling elder, an office which would seem to have been only temporarily continued in the church of the Pilgrims, though it still forms an essential feature in the ecclesiastical polity of most of the Presbyterian churches of Scotland and America. What the exact effect of such a pastoral oversight, vested solely in the hands of a ruling elder was calculated to produce, in robbing the church of the Pilgrims of some essential feature of ecclesiastical completeness and symmetry, it does not concern us greatly to inquire.

Dr. Cheever, indeed, has thought it advisable to discuss its merits in his Plymouth Pilgrims, and to compare the ideas entertained by the founders of New England, with the rules of the "Cambridge Platform of 1649, and the Confessions of the New England Churches of 1680." Happily the Pilgrim Fathers were occupied with weightier affairs, and left to the next generation to revive the party spirit of controversial religion, which engrafted on the New England annals records of bigotry and intolerance not greatly behind those of the mother-country.

The history of Elder Brewster, as he is usually styled in the Pilgrims' journals, presents us with some remarkable incidents. Like Robinson, he was a student of Cambridge University, though he did not pursue his studies long enough to attain to the acquirements or honors of the former. On leaving the University, he repaired to the Court, and was engaged for some years in the service of William Davidson, the celebrated and unfortunate secretary of Queen Elizabeth, and the victim of her duplicity, when she polluted her womanly fame with the blood of a sister queen, and then strove to shift its responsibility on her agents. In 1584, the English Queen leagued with the United Provinces, to enable them to maintain their independence of her Spanish rival. The fortresses of Flushing, the Brille, and Rammekins, were consigned to them as pledges for the repayment of the money, which, with characteristic prudence, she had advanced them on loan. Brewster accompanied the Secretary of State when he went as ambassador to the Low Countries, to take possession of these cautionary towns, as they were termed; and when in token of their being thus ceded to the Queen, the keys of Flushing were delivered to her Majesty's ambassador, Brewster received them in charge, and slept with them under his pillow.

When Elizabeth had resolved on the death of Mary, the hapless Queen of Scots, Davidson was privately ordered to draw out the death-warrant, which she signed, and sent to the Chancellor to have the great seal appended to it. When her victim was beyond the reach of mercy or justice, Elizabeth shrank from the execration with which the murder of her defenceless prisoner was universally regarded, and accused her secretary of undue precipitancy. With an affected sorrow and indignation which deceived no one, she railed at the unfortunate agent of her will, committed him to the Tower, and arraigned him before the Star-chamber. He was amerced in a fine of $50,000, by which he was utterly ruined.

"Thus" says Whitaker, the able vindicator of the Scottish Queen, "fell Davidson, a memorable evidence of the cunning, the perfidiousness, and the barbarity of Elizabeth and her Cecil!" The fall of Davidson put to an end William Brewster's connection with the Court, though he failed not to do what good services he could for his old master, who is spoken of not only as a man of great abilities, but as no less esteemed for his piety and worth, and unskilful only in those pliant arts which best subserve the ambition of the courtier.

Brewster retired to the country, most probably to his native place in Lincolnshire, where he won the esteem of many friends, and where, it is presumed, he first became known to Mr. John Robinson. "He did much good," says Governor Bradford, "in the country where he lived, in promoting and furthering religion; and not only by his practice and example, and provoking and encouraging of others, but by procuring of good preachers to all places thereabouts, and drawing on of others to assist and help to forward in such a work; he himself most commonly deepest in the charge, and sometimes above his ability. And in this state he continued many years, doing the best good he could, and walking according to the light he saw, until the Lord revealed further unto him. And in the end, by the tyranny of the bishops against godly preachers and people, in silencing the one and persecuting the other, he and many more of those times began to look further into particulars, and to see into the unlawfulness of their callings, and the burden of many anti-christian corruptions, which both he and they endeavored to cast off, as they also did, as in the beginning of this treatise is to be seen."

"After they were joined together into communion, he was a special stay and help to them. They ordinarily met at his house on the Lord's day, which was a manor of the bishop's, and with great love he entertained them when they came, making provision for them to his great charge; and continued so to do whilst they could stay in England. And when they were to remove out of the country, he was one of the first in all adventures, and forwardest in any. He was the chief of those that were taken at Boston, in Lincolnshire, and suffered the greatest loss; and one of the seven that were kept in prison, and after bound over to the assizes."

"When he came into Holland, he suffered much hardship after he had spent the most of his means, having a great charge and many children; and in regard of his former breeding and course of life, not so fit for many employments as others were, especially such as were toilsome and laborious. Yet he ever bore his condition with much cheerfulness and contentation. Towards the latter part of those twelve years spent in Holland, his outward condition was mended, and he lived well and plentifully; for he fell into a way, by reason he had the Latin tongue, to teach many students who had a desire to learn the English tongue, to teach them English, and by his method they quickly attained it with great facility; for he drew rules to learn it by, after the Latin manner; and many gentlemen, both Danes and Germans, resorted to him, as they had time from other studies, some of them being great men's sons. He also had means to set up printing, by the help of some friends, and so had employment enough; and by reason of many books which would not be allowed to be printed in England, they might have had more than they could do."

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for January:

Rev. W. E. Christmas's Prophetic Tour in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick (with portrait).
Characteristics of the 1,000-Year Millennium—A General View. By Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.
Signs of the Last Day. Sermon by Martin Luther.
The Present Truth. By Rev. A. G. Gordon.
Daniel's 2,300 Days. By Mr. McLeod.
The Coming Colossal Conflict.
Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, sassa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a careful combination, proportion and process, to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not used by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
the best blood purifier before the public. It cures every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliary, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Neural Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
met peculiar and unparalleled success at Lowell. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. By druggists, $1.50; six for $5. Prepared only by HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

20 Doses One Dollar
SALARY. $40 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment, at home or traveling. No soliciting, delivering and making collections. No Postal Address with stamp, HAFER & CO., Ploum, O.

Stop that CHRONIC COUGH NOW!
For if you do not it may become consumptive. For Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility and Wasting Diseases, there is nothing like

SCOTT'S EMULSION
Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES Of Lime and Soda.
It is almost as palatable as milk. Far better than other so-called Emulsions. A wonderful flesh producer.

Scott's Emulsion
There are poor imitations. Get the genuine.

BOVININE
BUSH'S FLUID FOOD

AND WHEN BOVININE. BECAUSE your physician will cheerfully welcome the aid and nutrition afforded by BOVININE, if you ask him, in his treatment of Consumption, Bronchitis, All Fevers, Throat, Dyspepsia, Gastric Catarrh, Pneumonia, General Debility, Infants, Nursing Mothers, Nervous Prostration, Cancer, The Worked. Athletes, Bicycle Riders, Singers and Public Speakers find it indispensable on BECAUSE in disease ordinary foods are not assimilated, and thousands starve in the midst of plenty for a suitable food. WHEN you visit the sick poor, carry them BOVININE; it may save a life; it is beneficial. BECAUSE Beef Tea and Cooked Beef Extracts are by all authorities pronounced good food. BECAUSE BOVININE is the only raw meat food condensed by a cold process, by which the nutritive elements of selected beef are preserved in a palatable form, ready for immediate use. BECAUSE BOVININE never spoils, as has been proved after a test of 2 years. WHEN you ask up a bottle of BOVININE. It's a necessity in sea and car sickness, and good for a lunch. SE, after severe tests and comparisons, it is preferred in all Hospitals of the United States Army, and by the best physicians everywhere. See their Hospital reports, &c.

WILSON'S
GRAND RAINBOW COLLECTION OF RARE AND BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS
25 CENTS
ENGLISH SHOW PANSIES

Samuel Wilson, Mechanicsville, Bucks Co., Pa.

SCOTT'S FLOWERS
41 Years' Experience in growing our strong and reliable seedlings of great beauty. Handsomely illustrated Catalogue for 1890, fully describing Beautiful New Flowers sent FREE to any address. Send for it now. ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa.

T. DeWITT TALMAGE'S
GEMS, containing 30 of his best Sermons, and a full History of his Church, including the burning of the Tabernacle, 1888-700 pages, 20 full-page illustrations, in splendid portrait of Talmage. Low price and is my motto. Price, bound in cloth, $1.50; in paper, 50 cents. Discount to live agents, sent for Prospectus and package of circulars, work. Address: OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 50 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea. Greatest inducement ever offered to get our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address: GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 81 and 93 Vesey St., New York.

JM (Morphine Habit, Opium Smoking), etc., easily cured. Book Free. Dr. J. C. Hoffman, Lib. So. Wisconsin.

THE BEST SEEDS
are those put up by D. M. FERRY & CO.
Who are the largest Seedsmen in the world.
D. M. FERRY & CO'S Illustrated, Descriptive and Priced SEED ANNUAL
for 1890 will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to last season's customers. It is better than ever. Every person using Garden, Flower or Field Seeds should send for it. Address D. M. FERRY & CO. DETROIT, MICH.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.
A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full terms address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

LADIES 100,000 DEMOREST CORSETS FREE
100,000 SHOULDER BRACES FREE
100,000 STOCKING SUPPORTERS FREE
YOUR CHOICE.

A MARVELOUS OFFER
By A Reliable House!

Every lady has heard of MME. DEMOREST. Her name is a by word in every house in the land. Her celebrated Patterns have been in use over 40 years. We are the publishers of the well-known publication, MME. Demorest's Illustrated Monthly Fashion Journal and we wish to increase its circulation 200,000 copies during the next 90 days, and to that end we will give away to new subscribers:

100,000 Demorest Celeb'd Corsets FREE
" Shoulder Braces FREE
" Stocking Supporters FREE

The MME. DEMOREST ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY FASHION JOURNAL is a 36 page paper, beautifully illustrated, covering every possible field of Fashion, Fancy Work, Home Decorations, Cooking, etc., each department being under the special supervision of the best known contributors. It is besides replete with matters of interest to mothers, and is furthermore filled with illustrations, stories, sketches, humor and matters of general interest.

SHOULDER BRACES FREE.
Every lady should suspend the clothes from the shoulders.

STOCKING SUPPORTERS

HOW TO OBTAIN A PAIR OF SHOULDER BRACES AND STOCKING SUPPORTERS FREE
Send us 50 Cents for one year's subscription to our JOURNAL, and 25 Cents additional to pay postage and packing. 75 Cents in all, and we will mail you one of these handsome CORSETS FREE.

REMEMBER THERE IS NO HUMBUG ABOUT THESE OFFERS.
We do exactly as we guarantee. Our house has been established for over 40 years, and we can refer you to any Commercial Agency, Bank, Express Office or Business Firm in the land. Make all remittances either by Draft, Postal Note, Money Order, or Registered Letter. When postal note is not procurable, send stamps. Address all communications to THE DEMOREST FASHION & SEWING MACHINE CO., 17 EAST 14TH STREET, NEW YORK.
This offer should be taken advantage of at once as we will give away no more than 100,000 of each article. SHOW THIS TO YOUR FRIENDS. IT WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN.
We know the Demorest Fashion and Sewing Machine Co. to be a thoroughly reliable firm and advise our readers to accept their offer.—EDITOR.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS
EFFECTUAL
THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE
WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.
Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents
FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK,
Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beecham's Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper.)

ASTHMA CURED
SCHIFFMANN'S ASTHMA CURE
Instantly relieves the most violent attack. No waiting for results. Its action is immediate, direct and certain, and a cure is the result in all curable cases. A single trial convinces the most skeptical. Price 50c. and $1.00, of druggists or by mail. Trial package Free to any address. Dr. H. SCHIFFMANN, St. Paul, Minn.

"Demonology or Spiritualism."
Ancient and Modern. "An effective weapon." "A sword of fire." "Only unanswerable work on the subject." Startling disclosures.—History facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

RIDGE'S FOOD
The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label). Palmer, Mass.

Twenty-Seventh Edition now Ready.
THE KING'S SON;
OR,
A MEMOIR OF BILLY BRAY.
By F. W. BOURNE.

The New York Christian Advocate says: "Of Billy Bray, the famous Methodist preacher of Cornwall, Eng., it may be truly said 'he yet speaketh,' although he has been dead more than twenty years. It is reported that at least six hundred persons are known to have been led to Christ by reading his biography. These converts are found in all parts of the world, and come from almost every position in life. Noted leaders, eminent formalists, and cultivated scholars, as well as obscure and unlearned men, have been drawn into the kingdom of grace by this fascinating story. The most noted preacher of the age frequently finds the striking illustrations which enrich his sermons in the life of Billy Bray."

18mo., Cloth. 119 pp. Price, 50 Cents. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE LORD WITHIN.

The soul's best portion is the Lord;
And when He fills our lives,
We think less of the blessings given
Than of the love that gives.
The heart receives the blessed Christ—
He comes to dwell within;
Abiding presence in the soul
That finds pure joy in Him.

To his dear will we yield our own,
Give Him supreme control,
And let our life draw strength from Him
Who fills, exalts the soul.
O Heavenly Kingdom, sweet within,
A realm of untold peace!
Where God may dwell, where Jesus reigns,
Where weary longings cease!

Thrice blessed soul to make a home
Where Jesus may abide!
The Lord with us, and we in Him,
Our loving Friend and Guide.
And life is but to do His will,
The precious will of God,
To follow where He leads the way,
To love and serve the Lord.

—Phoebe A. Holder.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

A Brooklyn, N. Y., landlady threatens to raise the price of board to all her boarders who take Hood's Sarsaparilla, it gives them such an appetite! Try this peculiar medicine.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also Imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you. Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all. We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the

CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS. for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON, Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

We send to all parts of the U. S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of dress.

RECOLLECT THE GOODS are delivered to you PREPAID all carrying charges

WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell "The Christian's Legacy." One young man started on the 13th of December and ordered 59 copies before the 31st of December. 102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York

FREE

WHAT IS IT?

TO ALL

In order to quickly introduce the celebrated English Dr. Scott's Electric Porous Plaster to the readers of this paper, the Pall Mall Electric Association, of London, make the following liberal offer

GOOD FOR 60 DAYS

BUT FIRST ASK FOR THE PLASTERS IN YOUR DRUG STORE

DON'T DELAY.

and if you cannot get them remit $1.00 and you will receive four of these famous Electric Plasters by mail, postpaid, together with a pair of DR. SCOTT'S GENUINE ELECTRIC INSOLES FREE and a copy of that valuable Book, the Doctor's Story. Cut this adv't out and keep it to remind you

EVERY DRUGGIST WILL RETURN THE MONEY IF IT FAILS, SO WILL WE. AGENTS WANTED.

Dr. Scott's Electric Plasters have established a wonderful reputation for their marvelous efficacy in CURING QUICKLY

COLDS, COUGHS, ALL CHEST AND LUNG TROUBLES, NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY, LIVER, STOMACH TROUBLES, SPRAINS, ACHES AND BRUISES.

Price, 50 Cents. A WORD ABOUT OUR ELECTRIC INSOLES.

They are simple in construction, astonishing in their effect, they prevent and assist in curing many forms of disease arising from wet and cold feet in winter, keeping the feet at one even temperature, prevent chilling, sweating and consequent discomforts. A grand adjunct when worn with our Plasters. Thousands suffer to-day the result of wet and cold feet which might easily and positively have been prevented by this simple remedy.

Remit $1.00 to GEO. A. SCOTT, 842 Broadway, N. Y., mentioning this paper, and you will promptly receive, postpaid

FOUR PLASTERS, Retail, - - $1.00 ONE PAIR INSOLES, Free, - - $1.00 ONE DR'S STORY, Free, - - $1.75

Mention size of shoe you wear. Write us to-day. It is an opportunity that may never occur again.

Gathering Jewels;

OR,

The Secret of a Beautiful Life.

A splendid book, bound in cloth and gold. Illustrated

Bishop VINCENT says: "In 'Gathering Jewels' the story is well told; the subject, which a gracious Providence furnished, is unusually rich and prolific of evangelical facts and teachings. The book should go into thousands of homes."

New York Witness says: "The material for this volume teems with spiritual food for reflection, and is calculated to inspire many to the work of saving souls. It illustrates the power of prayer, and shows that the sweetest contentment may be found in 'gathering jewels' for the heavenly kingdom that may 'shine in His glory, bright for His crown.'"

This book has been strongly endorsed by The Christian Herald, having republished two full columns from its pages in its issue of Aug. 2d, 1888.

Send a paper Dollar or Stamps at our risk, and we will send you a book post-paid. A celebrated Van Everen adjustable book cover free with each book if requested.

CHRISTIAN NATION, Publishers, 252 Broadway, New York.

CHRISTIAN WORK

—IN—

MEXICO.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the address of Bishop H. C. RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE OF AUTOGRAF OF STEWART HARTSHORN ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

ENNIS CALIFORNIA EXCURSIONS

In Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars, via IRON MOUNTAIN ROUTE, Texas and Pacific and Southern Pacific Rys., leave Chicago and St. Louis Jan. 15th and 29th, Feb. 12th and 26th, March 12th and 26th, and April 9th, 1890. One way rate from Chicago, $47.50. St. Louis, $42.50. These sleepers are provided with complete berth outfits and separate wash rooms for ladies and gentlemen at very small extra cost. Porter in charge of each car and a special agent of the company with each excursion. Tickets on sale at all principal points in U. S. and Canada. For full particulars address any of the company's agents, or J. E. ENNIS, Exc. Mgr., 199 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shots at Sundry Targets, by T. L. Cuyler, $2.50. Quick sales. Big pay. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors Edited by T. L. Cuyler, $2.75. 192,000 sold. 5000 Curiousities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT, N.Y.

SHORTHAND by mail or personally. Situations procured all pupils when competent. Send for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N.Y.

PIANOS $150 to $1500 UNIVERSITY
ESTAB. 1850. INCOR. 1877
They Lead the World!
Sent for trial in your own home.
ABSOLUTELY PERFECT
Guaranteed Six Years.
DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!
Cat. Free.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO. ORGANS $35 to $500
235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

"QUITTING THE MANSE,"

A master-piece of the heroic steel engravings of the century.

This engraving is intended to commemorate an incident in the Disruption of the Scottish Church in 1843, when nearly 500 ministers resigned their stipends, manse, social positions, and what men most tenaciously regard, for conscience sake, in what they esteemed the cause of truth. Just published, 16x23 1/2 inches. Sent securely wrapped, post paid, for a paper dollar or stamps, at our risk.

Mrs. Jane B. Clark, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "The picture is a splendid piece of high art."
CHRISTIAN NATION, 252 Broadway, New York.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—Wilbor's Cod-liver Oil and Phosphates has now been before the public twenty years, and has steadily grown in favor and appreciation. This could not be the case unless the preparation was of high intrinsic value. The combination of the Phosphates with pure Cod-liver Oil, as prepared by Dr. Wilbor, has produced a new phase in the treatment of Consumption and all diseases of the Lungs. It can be taken by the most delicate invalid without creating the nausea which is such an objection to the Cod-liver Oil when taken without Phosphates. It is prescribed by the regular faculty. Sold by the proprietor, A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, and by all Druggists.

HOW TO STRENGTHEN THE MEMORY;

NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

By M. L. Holbrook, M. D.
Author of "Hygiene of the Brain;" "Eating for Strength," etc.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order."
12 mo. Cloth bound, price, $1.00. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller. 77 Bible House, New York.

Gloriosa in New Style

We announce the arrival of our portations of Gloriosa for 1890.

This lustrous and durable fabric now on exhibition in entirely new shades and patterns and in first quality only.

Other silk and wool Fabrics Spring will also be displayed; among them Silk Warp Mohair and Cor Bengaline in large variety.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St., NEW YORK.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST

By Rev. JAS. STALKER, M. A.

A new edition, with introduction, REV. GEO. C. LORIMER, D. D.

12mo, cloth, 166 pages, 60 cents.

This work is in truth "Mullum in Parvo," containing within small compass a vast amount of helpful teaching, so admirably arranged that reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the revealed record of the life work of our Lord in a shell of space and with a minimum of study.

"This book is an example of the fact that in practical value, a little book may be worth more than a big one."—The Standard.

"It is designed as a hand-book for Bible Classes, fills a niche left vacant by all its predecessors Christian Instructor.

"This task is admirably performed. We have charmed with the author's skill in presenting so fully, yet so satisfactorily, such a view of the surroundings, and the teachings and the doings of Jesus, a book that we can heartily recommend."—Christian Standard.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York

STENOGRAPHY AND TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching long established: hundreds of graduates hold responsible positions; success guaranteed. type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets Write or call. VERMILYIE'S COLLEGE, 816 Broadway, New York

Parturition Without Pain

A Code of Directions for avoiding most of Pains and Dangers of Childbearing. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price by mail, $1.00.

"A work whose excellence surpasses our power commend."—New York Evening Mail. 1000 agents wanted. M. L. HOLBROOK, 25 Bond St., New York

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. For a DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

XIII., No. 7. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

TRAIT AND LIFE OF LORD NAPIER OF MAG-DALA, who Died January 10.

HOUSE ON THE WALL. Dr. Talmage's Sermon
at Sunday Morning.

DAYS AND THE DAYS OF NOAH. By Rev.
Haslam.

from New Books: A Riotous Sunday-School—A Printing-Office Transformed—Somebody's Boy.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE: Camping-Out in the Holy Land—The Programme of the Day—The Attendants—The Tower of David—Jacob's Well.

MISSIONARIES IN EXTREMITY.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

HELP FOR YOUR SICKNESS. A New Sermon by
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGEL-ISTIC MEETINGS.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE DR. DOLLINGER.

PICTURE OF THE STORMING OF MAGDALA.

AN EDUCATIONAL FAILURE. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. (Continued.)

The Late Lord Napier, the Conqueror of Magdala—The Rescued Captives on the Way to the Coast.

THE LATE LORD NAPIER OF MAGDALA.

The Hero of Abyssinia.

THE death of this distinguished soldier, whose portrait appears on our first page, occurred on January 14, at his London residence, in the eightieth year of his age. His disease had its commencement in the Russian influenza, or La Grippe, which has, of late, proved fatal to so many persons of all ages and conditions. His quiet life, for a considerable number of years past, had caused his name to be in some degree overlooked; but with his death the memory of his notable services in India and Africa has revived, and the highest military honors have been accorded him, including a grave near those of Nelson, Wellington, and other historic warriors, in one of the two great mausoleum sanctuaries of Great Britain.

Robert Cornelis Napier was the son of Major C. F. Napier, of the Royal Artillery, by Catherine, daughter of C. Carrington, Esq., of the island of Barbadoes. He was born in the island of Ceylon, in 1810, and after receiving a sound military education, he entered the service of the East India Company as a member of the Corps of Bengal Engineers. In this branch of the soldier's profession he soon became distinguished; his of Oude and the Punjab bearing testimony to his enterprise and sagacity, as well as to his engineering skill. After some years he became a high authority in this line of his profession, and was promoted to the post of Chief Engineer of Bengal. In the war of the Indian mutiny he rendered important service as Chief Engineer in the army of Sir Collin Campbell, and afterward, in China, he was second in command under Sir Hope Grant. His fame had now become established, both in England and India, and he was rewarded with the rank of Major-General, was made a K. C. B., and Military Member of the Council of India. In 1865 he became

Roads Through the Jungles

Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, and two years later was appointed to command the Expedition against King Theodore of Abyssinia for the rescue of the captives in his possession. On April 10, 1868, after a march of more than three months through the inhospitable highlands of Abyssinia, the British troops, 11,000 strong, encountered and routed the Abyssinian forces at the Arogee Pass, and three days later (as shown in picture on page 108),

The Stronghold of King Theodore

—a natural fortress "which, perhaps," says a competent narrator of the event, "has not its parallel in the known world"—fell before them. Protected by cliffs so precipitous that a cat could not climb them, and approachable only by its northern gateway, which was guarded by a strong stockade, it was at this point that the assault had to be attempted. Under a hot fire of shot, shell, and rockets, that assault was made. The attacking troops pressed forward, unchecked by the storm of lead and iron which beat upon them, carried the stockade, and rushed into the fortress. The unhappy Theodore who, with a small band of faithful followers, had bravely contested the position to the last, retreated to a higher ground within the walls, and, before the soldiers could reach him, shot himself.

Magdala was Captured, and the captives were rescued. The engraving on the front page represents the procession of rescued European prisoners who had been captured and held by King Theodore, and whose liberation was the primary object of the expedition. They numbered about thirty; chief among them being Mr. Rassin, British Envoy; Consul Cameron, Lieutenant Prideaux, Dr. Blanc, and the Rev. Dr. Stere. The majority of the company were Germans, but there were some half-breeds among the attendants of the persons above mentioned, which fact may possibly have afforded King Theodore a pretext for arresting and detaining the whole party, as they were en route for their several residences in Europe.

This memorable achievement won for General Napier the thanks of Parliament, a pension of $10,000 per annum, and elevation to the peerage with the title of Baron Napier of Magdala. In July of the same year, on the triumphant return of his expedition he was presented with the freedom of the city of London, and a bejewelled sword of the value of $1,100, besides other high compliments and honors.

In January, 1870, he was appointed to succeed Sir William Mansfield, as Commander-in-Chief of the forces in India, and, six years later, was made

Governor of Gibraltar. In 1878 he was named as commander in the Expected Campaign Against Russia,

which, provisionally, was averted by the Treaty of Berlin. For twenty-three years Lord Napier has had a seat in the House of Lords, but has manifested little interest in politics. His residence in London during his declining years has been marked by no effort at display, but among his military associates, and in the various learned and charitable bodies of which he was a member, his high qualities were fully appreciated.

A high authority says of him, "Great Britain loses in Lord Napier of Magdala an illustrious soldier, and one of the kindest and most estimable of men. In the race for renown, which he was far from despising, he was often outstripped. The more rapid progress of others left no touch of bitterness on him. He never scorned to be a lieutenant because he might reasonably have expected to lead. By an experience which is almost more extraordinary, when it was his turn to go manifestly and irreversibly to the front, his ascendancy provoked no jealousy or envy. He had been nobody's enemy or maligner. His reward was to enjoy the somewhat unusual converse, and to be without detractors.

Goodness and Graciousness

such as his are not substitutes, in a campaign, for professional intelligence and strategy. But in combination they become military virtues themselves. Lord Napier of Magdala, if he is not to be reckoned among the foremost captains of history, had the true general's insight; and he was, moreover, an admirable, honorable gentleman. His countrymen are proud of him, and mourn sincerely for his death. The British Army, both in India and at home, contains others as capable as was he, as modest and as sympathetic, as equal to the utmost demands which circumstances can make upon them, though only now and then will a conjuncture happen which, like an Abyssinian Expedition, throws the light backward along a soldier's past, and shows him to have been through the whole, potentially, as rightful an owner as was Robert Napier of the Field-Marshal's baton, and of an Empire's regard."

Canon Fleming, preaching on the gallant General's death, said: "Death has been busy in our midst, and our Church has not escaped. Lord Napier, of Magdala, as a parishioner, was a constant worshipper in this church. In him, England has lost a great soldier, our Queen a loyal servant, our country a devoted patriot, and our Church a humble Christian. He was one who, through a long and splendid career, built up his character and wrought his achievements by the maxim and rule of our text this morning, 'As the duty of every day required.' (Ezra 3:4.) Caring much for others and little for himself, he lived

A Very Pattern of Modest Merit.

"The loss of such men would be irreparable if we did not know that England was not made in a day, but by the generations of sons who have followed their fathers. So long as we shall hand down such an inheritance as men like Lord Napier have won, and stand together as an unbroken nation and an undivided Empire, no Powers shall ever make a breach in us. He whom we mourn to-day will but add one more splendid example of that type of character of whom it may be said, as it was of Henry Lawrence, 'Here lies one who always tried to do his duty.'"

FUNERAL HONORS TO LORD NAPIER.

Field-Marshal

LORD NAPIER OF MAGDALA,

G.C.B., G.C.S.I., D.C.L.

Born, 6th December, 1810,

Died, 14th January, 1890.

SUCH was the simple inscription on the outer coffin which enclosed the mortal remains of one of England's famous soldiers as, with imposing military honors, his body was borne to its last resting-place in St. Paul's Cathedral, on the morning of January 21, 1890. It was a spectacle full of suggestion, showing how a nation honors the mortal remains of a man who has served her well, and of whose achievements she is proud. The body, lying on a plain gun-carriage, was attended by guards of honor, followed by representatives of royalty, both British and foreign, through thoroughfares lined with countless crowds of sympathetic citizens, to the music of the "Dead March." Upon the coffin lay the plumed hat of the late Field-Marshal, and his sword in its golden scabbard. Immediately behind the gun-carriage walked Lord Napier, the eldest son of the deceased; and behind him dead man's horse, a slender dark bay, saddled and bridled, was led by two cavalymen. Before the coffin was lowered to the crypt, the Duke of Cambridge laid upon it a beautiful wreath of lilies laurel. The Prince of Wales placed thereon a second wreath of plain laurel, and Count Hatzfeldt a third one, sent by the German Emperor.

Then, in the presence of a vast concourse of sons, of various ranks and orders, the grand impressive burial service of the Church of England was performed by Canon Gregory, and all that mortal of the honored soldier was lowered into grave. He rests near the tomb of Wellington Nelson—a place in death which England's heroes covet.

The chief mourner on the occasion was his son, the Hon. R. W. Napier, who now becomes the second Lord Napier of Magdala, the honorary peer and title having been granted for two lives.

A CHINESE SILVERSMITH.

In a letter to the Missionary Herald from Hager who is laboring at Hong Kong, he thus describes two recent applicants for Christian baptism.

"One of these was a silversmith, of whom there are a great many in China; but their chief business is to decorate the gentle sex, and not to make images to be worshipped. This young man of twenty had once been in Singapore, and only returned to China a few months ago. Soon after his arrival he came to our chapel, where he learned something of the teaching of Christ. Being interested in the truth, he came every evening for two months, where he asked me, 'Can I receive Christian baptism, and still work on the Sabbath?' I did not give him a direct answer, but asked him whether Christ gave up all or only a part for him. He quickly replied, 'All.' 'Then what should you do in your present circumstances?' I asked.

"He did not reply, but I saw that he was determined to give up his Sunday work. Accordingly he went to his employer and told him that he wanted to rest four days in every month, to which his employer strongly objected, and furthermore told him that if he persisted in becoming a Christian he must go elsewhere to find work to do. Nothing daunted, however, the young man decided not to work on Sunday, and to follow Christ. When Sunday morning arrived, he came early to our chapel and studied and worshipped with us during the whole day. He expected to be out of employment on the following day, but when he asked his employer whether he should go to work on Monday morning, he was told that he could do so for the next two or three months. And now every day comes to our chapel, both morning and evening, and reads and prays with us. Such earnestness and stability of purpose is a sufficient answer to all criticism of missionary work in China, like Lieutenant Webb, who say that all converts receive four dollars a month and are engaged on missionary premises."

"The other man is about thirty-six years of age and was formerly a vegetarian, who has been learning to 'lay up merit' for himself in order to obtain the peace of heaven. Unknown to me he has been stoned in Yeung-kong, and has read our Bible for several years. He has been suffering with inflamed eyes for some days, and he asks God to heal him. I like to see such simplicity of Chinese prayers, for many deal only with generalities, and are in nowise specific. I tried to impress upon both these men the idea of the necessity of being true to God; as a mere profession was of no value to the church or to themselves.

"The other is a young man about to be married. When a child he was bought by his present adoptive father, and he is somewhat of a slave, though enjoying the rights of sonship. For him to become a Christian will require courage and faith, and at present he seems to be very weak. At heart he thinks he believes in Christ, but there are many sons to hinder his progress in the divine life."

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with traits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. It is in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, Bible House, New York.

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at office, 45 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most clear and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfillment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored plate. Price, including postage, $1.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Riotous Sunday School.*

IONS. GREIG, of Paris, France, said: I will give an instance of the difficulties to be encountered. There was a hall in Paris about seven years ago, where a French lady took the organization of school in hand. Twenty children were present. They listened for five minutes, and then they took chairs and carried them out into the street, and put them at one another's heads; but now, if you go there, you would find a large hall with 300 scholars, and three schools fully organized, a school of little girls and little boys, and a general school for those who can read; and in addition, but not counting at the same time, a class for men, almost as old as they choose to come, to be prepared for church-membership. There is also a meeting for young girls held a little distance off. This is what all organized work.

Kindly let me give you another specimen of what all organized work. Last Sunday, in one of our best halls, which can contain 400, which is very fine for a Paris hall, an interesting incident happened. This hall is filled in winter, but in summer children are taken away by their parents for a promenade so dear to the Parisian's heart; in that school the attendance we find had gone down to sixty. We like that, so far. It may astonish some of my brethren to hear that we make no effort to keep, beyond the six or seven winter months, the great mass of children who come irregularly. Their presence disorganizes the teaching and during the summer we count to work upon those who have been caught, undisturbed by the going in and going out of the irregulars. Well, I thought sixty small, and the teachers said, "Let us go out and fetch in children from the 'highways and hedges.'" They went out by twos and threes, and in ten minutes had brought in one hundred children out of the streets close by—children who, though living close by, had never heard of the existence of the school. If they had not come in, they might never have heard of the love of Christ. I call that organized Sunday-school work; and that is not quite according to the strict model. Let me tell you just two little things. I have here one of the reports sent in to me with respect to the progress of the work. A question had been asked, "There ever spiritual results anywhere?" They reply, "Yes." There are some most interesting ones. Here is the latest that came to my notice. Chatelleraut, where meetings have been held since May last year, the children were brought in from the streets, being wholly Roman Catholic—one Protestant among them. Of the children, none of them had received even a moral education, out of that number there is at least one who is singing the praises of God by the throne of Christ, before his death from a disease which caused excruciating suffering, instead of complaining, sang hymns he had learned in Sunday-school. He went to his parents, giving them a rendezvous in heaven, and entreating his father not to put off going to Christ. Some of his fellow-scholars came to see him, and he urged them to come to Christ; but, finally, he died refusing to see any one, but wishing only to have his Sunday-school teacher with him.

Here is another instance of spiritual results. There is in Paris an atelier—what you call which was notorious for its immorality. No mother had any respect for her children would allow them to go to work there. One of my Sunday-school scholars had to go—her mother wished her to work there. She went, and she kept herself busy, and one of her fellow-scholars, needing work, went alongside of her, knowing that two are better than one; and for two years they worked there in the very sink of iniquity. Then that printing-office changed its character, and now, instead of being one of the worst in the district, the people look upon it as scarcely Paris-like—changed by these Sunday scholars, one of whom was of relapsed parentage, and the other of Catholics.

A Printing-Office,

Somebody's Boy.

B. F. Jacobs of Chicago, said: One of our best Americans, Horace Mann, was speaking in Massachusetts, and he pointed to the great pile of money for waif boys, and he made the assertion that the money was well spent if it saved only one boy.

After the lecture was over, one friend was heard to ask another "Do you not think Mr. Mann was very extreme in his statement?" The other man tightened his hand upon the arm of his friend, and stammered out, "Not if it was my son." But this boy is somebody's son.

One night I went to a meeting, and I was permitted to speak for the Lord Jesus Christ, and was speaking from the verse, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness." At the close there were some inquirers, and I said, "If there is a person who has found Christ since last Sunday, let him come forward," and a man came forward and said, "I am the man." He said, "My father was a preacher in England, and I have been trained in a Sunday-school; I was a wearying boy, and got to drinking, and after having wearied out all places at home I came to America, and I have wandered round here, and I came here hanging on a freight-car, and while here in Chicago I thought I would steal something, and thus get some rest for a few weeks." (Fancy a man deliberating as to whether he would not steal for the sake of getting a few weeks' rest!) "While here, I saw a notice up, 'A man wanted; it was to take a board at one dollar a day. During his walk he was attracted by a sign, 'Gospel meeting every evening.' I went in, and I said to myself, I have not heard a sermon for fifteen years; and as I went in there was a woman praying. I listened, and I said, 'My God! here is my mother come back!' and I went out at the close of that meeting, and resolved to come the next night. I came in half-drunk, and listened to the sermon or message about 'seeking first,' and I said, 'I will seek Him now.'" He was with us for a few months, after which he said, "I am going back to Old England." I had a letter from him in which he said, "Dear brother: Last Lord's Day I was permitted to stand in the pulpit where my father used to preach, and I told the story of Jesus and His love." I have told you that somebody's boy is worth reaching.

OUR DAYS AND THE DAYS OF NOAH.

By Rev. W. Haslam.

IN the fifth chapter of Revelation the Lord Jesus Christ is represented standing before the throne of the Ancient of Days to receive the sovereignty which by right belonged to Him. Thus authorized, He is the King of the whole earth, the Heir of the Land of Promise and of the throne of David. He who had been Prophet and Priest is now duly inaugurated as the King of kings.

His investiture into this office is witnessed by the living creatures, the elders, and the great company of angels. These all express their joy with triumphant acclamations. They evidently understand the import of the whole scene, and, in anticipation of the glory and power yet to be manifested, they give thanks and praise; whereupon all creation join in the chorus. In the midst of this grand tumult of heavenly triumph, the Lord Jesus Christ goes forward without delay, having taken the book, to open the seals thereof.

The same emblem or figure appears again in the nineteenth chapter of this book. There we are told that His name is called "The Word of God," and on His vesture and on His thigh a name written "King of kings and Lord of lords." There He is going forth in a vesture dipped in the blood of His enemies, and with many crowns upon His head. Here He has but one crown given to Him; and He is now only and the victory that is to be. He has a bow in His hand, to indicate His warlike purpose; but we see not yet any arrows or sword in His possession. This is quite in keeping with the circumstances of the present time and action. In this action upon the world at large we see the Lord's manner of dealing with those who resist and refuse Him and His message of love. The Lord knows how "to reserve the unjust unto the Day of Judgment to be punished." (11 Peter 2: 9.) When Peter wrote these words he had in his mind and the people of that time. How did God reserve the unjust of that day? Not by casting them off and afflicting them, but, in the first instance, by pleading with them in mercy. Through the voice of Noah, Christ Himself preached to these people; and no doubt he pointed to the ark which was in course of preparation to confirm the warning he was giving them. The Deluge was surely coming! In every case these warnings were more or less in vain. Men seemed enamored of destruction, and turned a deaf ear to all God's remonstrances and pleadings. Human nature is not changed; and men still disregard God's Word as they did in times past. Many people are not aware that Peter is our Noah; and others are so little interested that they do not even know the subject of his warning. Noah's world was reserved unto the deluge of water; ours, as the apostle testifies, is reserved unto fire. He says that men are "willingly ignorant" of the fact that "the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the Day of Judgment and perdition of ungodly men." (11 Pet. 3: 5, 7.)

Setting Out to the Fight,

The Days of Noah

Terrible Things are Coming

upon the earth; but the majority of men are heedless; and some who do hear these warning words think they are not to be taken literally; others again, that they will not happen in their time. Thus, no doubt, it will be in the particular days of which we are speaking. In the days which are coming, the Lord's witnesses will preach the Gospel of the Kingdom, and proclaim the coming of the King to take vengeance; but men will not regard it. They will go on "eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage," as if the world were to continue.

When men reject God's Word, they become judicially hardened. We see how it is now in the case of an individual who so disregards it. God gives him up to himself and his idols. The poor infatuated and deluded creature thinks that it is well with him. He cares for no one to hinder him in his doomed career. He goes on in his own ignorant way until he is lost beyond the reach of mercy. If the rejection of God is so solemn in the case of one person, imagine what it will be in the case of many thousands, who are thus given over to their wilful and rebellious ways.

In the beginning of the days of the Son of man this will be exactly the state of things upon the earth. Unparalleled will mark this period. As when a dam or barrier is borne away, the long pent-up torrent pours itself out in headlong force, overflowing its banks and spreading desolation everywhere, so will it be when the ungodly are permitted to go forth according to their own will.

Liberty and Prosperity

It is the counterpart of the sign or emblem in the heavens—the Lord going forth in His power, though without arrows or sword. Notice that the sign is in heaven, and not manifest upon the earth; and it is not seen by those who are most concerned in it. The world did not know when God shut the door of the ark nor did the Jews know when the Lord left the Temple for the last time, saying, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." (Matt. 23: 38.)

The men of the world will go on their own way, with a tide of prosperity at first, flourishing like a green bay-tree. They nor suspect any. Lifting themselves up in their pride and vanity, they will laugh at the idea of God's government, and perhaps even at His very existence. Men will desire to be their own masters; and in their selfishness and their rivalry with others they will come into endless collisions.

Will not Look for Danger,

Predicting these days, the Apostle Paul says to Timothy, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

Peter also, referring to this time, says, "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of His coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." (11 Peter 3: 3, 4.)

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God from The World's Sunday-School Convention. A report of the proceedings of the famous convention of July, 1889. Published by Fleming H. Revell, 12 Bible House, New York.

THE HOUSE ON THE WALL.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Last Sunday Morning, February 9, 1890.

"And the young men that were spies went in and brought out Rahab, and her father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that she had." Josh. 6: 23.

Present Desolation of Jericho—A Despoiled Home in the City—The Missing Daughter—Her Bargain with the Spies—The Concerted Signal—How the Red Cord is Used—I. In The Window of Rescue—The Victims of Strong Drink—A Degraded Minister's Indictment—II. In The Window of the Household—Prayerless Homes—The Help of Unseen Hands—III. Across the Window of Prospect—The Beckoning Hands—Heavenly Answers to Earthly Queries.

WHEN, only a few weeks ago, I visited Jericho, I said, Can it be possible that this dilapidated place is the Jericho that Mark Antony gave as a wedding-present to Cleopatra? Where are the groves of palm-trees? Where are Herod's palaces, that once stood here? Where is the great theatre, from the stage of which Salome told the people that Herod was dead? Where is the sycamore-tree, on the limb of which Zaccheus sat when Jesus passed this place? Where is the wreck of the walls that fell at the blowing of the rams'-horns? But the fact that all these have disappeared did not hinder me from seeing in imagination the smash of everything on the fated day, save one house on the wall. That scene centuries ago comes back to me as though it were yesterday. There is in the city of Jericho. What is the matter? Is it poverty? No. Worse than that. Is it leprosy? No. Worse than that. Is it death? No. Worse than that. A daughter has forsaken her home. By what infernal plot she was induced to leave I know not; but they look in vain for her return. Sometimes they hear a footstep very much like hers, and they start up, and say: "She comes!" but only to sink back again into disappointment. Alas! Alas! The father sits by the hour, with his face in his hands, saying not one word. The mother's hair is becoming gray too fast, and she begins to stoop, so that those who saw her only a little while ago in the street know her not now as she passes. The brothers clinch their fists, swearing vengeance against the despoiler of their home. Alas! will the poor soul never come back? There is a long, deep shadow over all the household.

A Sick and Sad House

Added to this, there is an invading army six miles away, just over the river, coming on to destroy the city; and what with the loss of their child, and the coming on of that destructive army, I think the old people wished that they could die. That is of the Bible. In a house on the wall of this city is that daughter. That is her home now. Two spies have come from the invading army to look around through Jericho, and see how best it may be taken. Yonder is the lost child, in that dwelling on the wall of the city. The police hear of it, and soon there is a shuffling of feet all around about the door, and the city government demands the surrender of those two spies. First, Rahab—for that was the name of the lost child—first, Rahab secretes the two spies, and gets their pursuers off the track; but after awhile she says to them: "I will make a bargain with you. I will save your life if you will save my life, and the life of my father, and my mother, and my brothers, and my sisters, when the victorious army comes upon the city."

The First Scene in this Drama

Oh, she had not forgotten her home yet, you see. The wanderer never forgets home. Her heart breaks now as she thinks of how she has maltreated her parents, and she wishes she were back with them again, and she wishes she could get away from her sinful enthrallment; and sometimes she looks up in the face of the midnight, bursting into agonizing tears. No sooner have these two spies promised to save her life, and the life of her father, and mother, and brothers, and sisters, than Rahab takes a scarlet cord, and ties it around the body of one of the spies, brings him to the window, and as he clammers out—nervous, lest she have not strength to hold him—with muscular arms, such as woman seldom has, she lets him down, hand over hand, in safety to the ground. Not being exhausted, she ties the cord around the other spy, brings him to the window, and just as successfully lets him down to the ground. No sooner have these men untied the scarlet cord from their bodies, than they look up, and they say: "You had better get all your friends in this house—your father, your mother, your brothers, and your sisters—you had better get them in this house. And then, after you have them here, take this red cord, which you have put around our bodies, and tie it across the window; and when our victorious army comes up, and sees in the window, they will spare this house, and all who are in it. Shall it be so?" cried the spies. "Aye, aye," said Rahab, from the window; "it shall be so." That is the second scene in this Bible drama. There is a knock at the door of the old man. He looks up, and says: "Come in;" and lo! there is Rahab, the lost child; but she has no time to talk. They gather in excitement around her, and she says to them: "Get ready quickly, and go with me to my house. The army is coming! The trumpet! Make haste! Fly! The enemy!" That is the third scene in this Bible drama.

That Scarlet Thread

The hosts of Israel are all around about the doomed city of Jericho. Crash! goes the great metropolis, heaps on heaps. The air suffocating with the dust, and horrible with the screams of a dying city. All the houses flat down. All the people dead. Ah, no, no! On a crag of the wall—the only piece of the wall left standing—there is a house which we must enter. There is a family there that have been spared. Who are they? Let us go and see. Rahab, her father, her mother, her brothers, her sisters, all safe, and the only house left standing in all the city.

What Saved Them?

Was the house more firmly built? Oh no; it was built in the most perilous place—on the wall; and the wall was the first thing that fell. Was it because her character was any better than any of the other population of the city? Oh no. Why, then, was she spared, and all her household? Can you tell me why? Oh it was the scarlet line in the window. That is the fourth scene in this Bible drama. When the destroying angel went through Egypt, it was the blood of the lamb on the door-posts that saved the Israelites; and now that vengeance has come upon Jericho it is the same color that assures the safety of Rahab and all her household. My friends, there are foes coming upon us, more deadly and more tremendous, to overthrow our immortal interests. They will trample us down and crush us out forever, unless there be some skilful mode of rescue open. The police of death already begin to clamor for our surrender; but, blessed be God! there is a way out. It is through the window, and by a rope so saturated with the blood of the cross, that it is as red as that with which the spies were lowered; and if once our souls shall be delivered, then, the scarlet cord stretched across the window of our escape, we may defy all bombardment, earthly and Satanic.

The Window of Rescue.

In the first place, carrying out the idea of my text, we must stretch this scarlet cord across the window of our rescue. There comes a time when a man is surrounded. What is that in the front door of his soul? It is the threatenings of the future. What is that in the back door of his soul? It is the sins of the past. He cannot get out of either of these doorways. If he attempts it he will be cut to pieces. What shall he do? Escape through the window of God's mercy. That sunshine has been pouring in for many a day. God's inviting mercy. God's pardoning mercy. God's all-conquering mercy. God's everlasting mercy. But, you say, the window is so high. Ah, there is a rope, the very one with which the cross and its victim were lifted. That was strong enough to hold Christ, and it is strong enough to hold you. Bear all your weight upon it, all your hopes for this life, all your hopes for the life that is to come. Escape now through the window.

"But," you say, "that cord is too small to save me; that salvation will never do at all for such a sinner as I have been." I suppose that the rope with which Rahab let the two spies to the ground was not thick enough; but they took that or nothing. And, my dear brother, that is your alternative. There is only one scarlet line that can save you. There have been hundreds and thousands who have been borne away in safety by that scarlet line, and it will bear you away in safety. Do you notice what a very narrow escape those spies had? I suppose they came with flustered cheek and with excited heart. They had a very narrow escape. They went in the broad door of sin; but how did they come out? They came out of the window. They went up by the stairs of stone; they came down on a slender thread. And so, my friends, we go easily and unabashedly into sin, and all the doors are open; but if we get out at all, it will be by being let down over precipices, wriggling and helpless, the strong grip above keeping us from being dashed on the rocks beneath. It is easy to get into sin, you man. It is not so easy to get out of it.

The Window of Suicide.

A young man goes to the marble counter of a hotel. He asks for a brandy-smash—called so, suppose, because it smashes the man that takes it. There is no intoxication in it. As the young man receives it he does not seem to be at all excited. It does not give any glossiness to the eye. He walks home in beautiful apparel, and all his prospects are brilliant. That drink is not going to destroy him; but it is the first step on a bad road. Years have passed on, and I see that young man after he has gone the whole length of dissipation. It is midnight, and he is in a hotel—perhaps the very one where he took the first drink. A delirium is upon him. He rises from the bed and comes to the window, and it is easily lifted; so he lifts it. Then he pushes back the blinds and puts his foot on the window-sill. Then he gives one spring, and the water man finds his disfigured body, unrecognizable, on the pavement. O, if he had only waited a little while, if he had come down on the scarlet ladder that Jesus holds from the wall for him, and for you, and for me! but no, he made one jump, and was gone.

One Victim's Curse.

A minister of Christ was not long ago dismissed from his diocese for intoxication, and in a public meeting he gave this account of his sorrow. He said: "I had a beautiful home once, but strong drink shattered it. I had beautiful children; but this fiend of rum took their dimpled hands in his grasp and led them to the grave. I had a wife—to know her was to love her; but she sits in wretchedness to-night while I wander over the earth. I had a mother, and the pride of her life was I; but a thunderbolt struck her. I now have scarcely a friend in the world. Taste of the bitter cup I have tasted, and then answer me as to whether I have any hatred for the agency of my ruin. Hate it! I hate the whole damning traffic! I would to God to-night that every distillery was in flames! for then in the glowing sky I would write in the smoke of the ruin: 'Woe to him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips.'" That minister of the gospel went in through the broad door of temptation; he came out of the window.

When I see the temptations that are about us in all countries, and when I know the proclivities of sin in every man's heart, I see that if any of us escape it will be a very narrow escape. Oh, if you have, my friends, got off from our sin, let us tie this scarlet thread by which we have been saved across the window. Let us do it in praise of Him whose blood dyed it that color. Let it be in announcement of the fact that we shall no more be fatally assaulted. "There is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Then let all the forces of this world come up in cavalry charge, and let spirits of darkness come on an infernal storming party attempting to take our soul—this rope twisted from these words, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," will hurl them back, defeat them.

The Household Window.

Still further: We must take this red cord of our text and stretch it across the window of our households. When the Israelitish army came up again to Jericho, they said: "What is that in the window?" Some one said: "That is a scarlet line." "Oh," said some one else, "that must be the house that was to be spared. Don't touch it." That line was thick enough, and long enough, and conspicuous enough to save Rahab, her father, her mother, her brothers, and her sisters—the entire family. Have our households as good protection? You have bolts on the front door and on the back, and fastenings to the window, and perhaps burglar alarm, and perhaps an especial watchman blowing a whistle at midnight before your dwelling; but that cannot protect your household. Is there a sign on our houses the sign of a Saviour's sacrifice and mercy? Is there a scarlet line in the window? Have your children been consecrated to Christ? Have you been washed in the blood of the atonement? In what room do you have family prayer? Show me where it is you are accustomed to kneel. The sky is black with the coming deluge. Is your family inside or outside of the ark? It is a sad thing for a man to reject Christ: but to lie down in the night of sin, across the path to heaven, so that his family come up and trip over him—that is terrible. It is a sad thing for a mother to reject Christ; but to gather her family around her, and then take them by the hand and lead them out into paths of wor-ess, away from God and heaven, alas! alas! there may be geranium and cactus in that family window, and upholstery hovering over it, and child-faces looking out of it, but there is no scarlet thread stretched across it. Although that house seems to be on the best street in all the town, it is really on the edge of a marsh across which sweep most poisonous malarials, and it has a shaky foundation, and its splendor will come down, and great will be the fall of it. A home without a prayerless father! An undevout mother! Alas! awful! Is that you? Will you keep on, my mother, on the wrong road, and take your loved ones with you? Time is so short that we cannot spare any of it on apologies, or indirections, or circumlocutions. You owe to your children, O father, mother, more than food, more than clothing, more than shelter—you owe them the example of a useful, consecrated, pronounced Christian life. I cannot afford to keep it away from them.

Unseen Hands.

Now, as I stand here, you do not see any hands stretched toward me, and yet there are hands on my brow, and hands on both my shoulders. They are hands of parental benediction. It is like a good many years ago now since we folded these hands as they began the last sleep on the banks of the Raritan in the village cemetery; but these hands are stretched out toward me to-day, they are just as warm, and they are just as gentle as when I sat on her knee at five years of age. And I shall never shake off those hands. I do not want to. They have helped me so much a thousand times already, and I do not expect to have a trouble or a trial between this and my grave where those hands will not help me. It was not a splendid home, as the world calls it; but we had a family Bible there, well worn by tender hands; and there was a family altar there, where we met morning and night; and there was a holy bath there; and stretched in a straight line or in loops or festoons, there was a scarlet line in the window. O the tender, precious, blessed memory of a Christian home! Is that the impression you are making upon your children? When you are dead—and it will not be long before you are—when you are dead, will your child say: "If I ever was a good Christian father, mine was not; if there was a good mother, mine was one?"

Over Worldly Prospects.

Will further: we want this scarlet line of the text run across the window of our prospects. I see my father and her father, and her mother, and brothers and sisters looking out over Jericho, the city of palm-trees, and across the river, and over at the city invading, and then up to the mountains and sky. Mind you, this house was on the wall, I suppose the prospect from the window must have been very wide. Besides that, I do not think the scarlet line at all interfered with the view of the landscape. The assurance it gave of safety had added to the beauty of the country. To-day, my friends, we sit in the window of earthly prospects, and we look off toward the hills of heaven and the landscape of eternal beauty. God has opened the window for us, and we look out. We only get a dim outline of the inhabitants. We only here and there catch a note of the exquisite harmony.

Beckoning Hands.

at blessed be God for this scarlet line in the window! That tells me that the blood of Christ has bought that home for my soul, and I shall go there when my work is done. And as I put my hand on the scarlet line, everything in the future brightens. My eyesight gets better, and the robes of the vicar are more lustrous, and our loved ones who have away some time ago—they do not stand any more with their backs to us, but their faces are this side, and their voices drop through this Sabbath saying with all tenderness and sweetness: "Come! Come! Come!" And the child that you thought of only as buried—why there she is, and it is to-day in heaven; and they gather the amaranth, they pluck the lilies, and they twist them into a garland for her brow, and she is one of the May-queens of heaven. And do you think they could see our waving to? It is quite a pleasant day, pretty clear, and many clouds in the sky. I wonder if they can see us from that good land? I think they can. If I look out of this window of earthly prospects we can all see them, then from their towers of light I think they can fully see us. And so I wave them glory, and I wave them the joy, and I say:

"Have you got through with all your troubles?" and their voices answer; "God hath wiped away all tears from our eyes." I say: "Is it as grand up there as you thought it would be?" and the voices answer: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for those that love Him." I say: "Do you have any more struggle for bread?" and they answer: "We hunger no more, we thirst no more." And I say: "Have you been out to the cemetery of the golden city?" and they answer: "There is no death here." And I look out through the heavens, and I say: "Where do you get your light from night, and what do you burn in the temple?" and they answer: "There is no night here, and we have no need of candle or of star." And I say: "What book do you sing out of?" and they answer: "The Hallelujah Chorus." And I say: "In the splendor and magnificence of the city, don't you ever get lost?" and they answer: "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne leadeth us to living fountains of water."

Oh, how near they seem! Their wings—do you not feel them? Their harps—do you not hear them? And all that through the window of our earthly prospects, across which stretcheth the scarlet line. Be that my choice color forever. Is it too glaring for you? Do you like the blue because it reminds you of the sky, or the green because it makes you think of the foliage, or the black because it has in it the shadow of night? I take the scarlet because it shall make me think of the price that was paid for my soul. Oh the blood! the blood! the blood of the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. I see where you are. You are at the cross-roads. The next step decides everything. Pause before you take it; but do not pause too long. I hear the blast of the trumpet that wakes the dead. Look out! Look out! For in that day, and in our closing moment on earth, better than any other defence or barricade, however high or broad or stupendous, will be one little, thin, scarlet thread in the window.

DR TALMAGE'S WELCOME HOME.

A WONDERFUL scene was that presented on Thursday evening last in the armory of the Thirteenth Regiment in Brooklyn, when Dr. Talmage made his first public appearance after his tour in the Holy Land. The spacious building was crowded in every part. Every chair on the floor had its occupant, every foot of standing-room in the aisles between the chairs was filled with a human being. The balconies around the room were crowded, and far up above the festooned decorations heads could be seen bending over to see, if they could not hear. Various estimates were made of the numbers present, varying from six thousand to fifteen thousand. It is probable that ten thousand was the correct figure. If the building could have held more the number would have been still larger, for hundreds went away unable to gain admission.

A platform had been erected at the East end of the hall, at the back of which, in gas jets, the words were spelled out, "Welcome Home." Beneath this illuminated welcome Dr. Talmage sat beaming on his many friends, and near him Mr. Louis Klopsch, the companion of his travels, to whose graphic pen we are indebted for the interesting letters which have made our readers acquainted, week by week, with the incidents of the journey. The Mayor of Brooklyn presided, and among the distinguished guests who took part in the proceedings were the venerable General W. T. Sherman, General A. C. Barnes, Colonel Austen, Postmaster Hendrix, and Rev. W. P. George, D. D., of Allendale, N. J., whose eloquent and scholarly sermons on two of the Sundays of Dr. Talmage's absence thrilled and delighted the great Tabernacle congregation.

Dr. Talmage was evidently deeply moved by the enthusiasm of his welcome. On his way to the platform sixty children of the Tabernacle Sunday-school had preceded him, singing, "Home again from a Foreign Shore," and strewing flowers on his path, and when he rose to respond to the addresses of welcome, such a cheer went up from the thousands of throats as is seldom heard in the City of Churches. Dr. Talmage said in the course of his response:

"Were I deserving of a thousandth part of the kind things said of me to-night I should be among the most fortunate of men. But I remember that these gentlemen, who have addressed you, long ago established the habit we all covet of speaking well of others, and, so long having spoken well of others, they have only again demonstrated that excellent proclivity, and spoken well of me. Kindness is the first-born daughter of God, long ago come down to bless our world, and she will not return to heaven until every man speaks well of his neighbor, and the earth has become an echo of the skies. And then Brooklyn, anyhow, is only one great big family, and we are brothers and sisters all, and when any one of the family has been absent, and gets home, we all come to the front door to meet him. It is an ambition with all of us to be thought well of by our neighbors, among whom we come and go, and daily exchange civilities, and when you come out from all styles of occupations and professions and circles and homes to greet me, I can only express my gratitude with deep emotion, and pledge you new and better service in the days that are to come than in the days that are past, and that I am ready to be with you in all enterprises for the increased prosperity and happiness of our beloved city, joining hands with you in toiling for free libraries, more appropriate school buildings, armories more worthy of our citizen-soldiery, more bridges across the East River, and for the hastening of the time when all classes of people in our midst, employers and employees, capitalists and laborers, shall adopt the golden rule, doing to others as they would be done by."

THE LATE DR. DOLLINGER.

(See portrait on page 169.)

THE most conspicuous theologian of our times, the venerable Dr. Dollinger, has ceased to be numbered among living celebrities. He died on January 10 at his modest home at Munich, Germany, in his ninety-first year. Once the pride of the Roman Church on account of his profound learning and acute argumentative powers, he lived to be excommunicated by the Pope and to be hated almost as intensely as Luther.

John Joseph Ignatius Dollinger was born at Bamberg, Bavaria, on February 28, 1799. How so long a life connects this generation with a past that seems to us so remote is realized from the fact that he distinctly remembered being presented, when a boy ten years old, to the first Napoleon. He was a student from his boyhood, and was ordained into the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church at the age of twenty-three. Even then he had a reputation for learning so high that he was chosen shortly afterward to be Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Munich, and was subsequently made Professor of Dogmatic Theology.

In 1826 he published a work on the Eucharist, which became a standard authority, and in rapid succession other works of a theological and historical character issued from his pen. It was not, however, until 1864 that the work which gave him worldwide fame was written. It was the first sign of his independence of thought and courageous expression of opinions in opposition to those of the head of his Church, which, later, was his best-known characteristic. That work was a repudiation of the doctrine of the Pope's latest encyclical, and a bold assertion that the temporal sovereignty should be abandoned. Six years later he gave fresh offence to the Pope by refusing to believe, as he was required to do by the Vatican Council, that the Pope was infallible when speaking ex-cathedra on questions of faith and morals.

That a German professor should presume to differ with the decision of Pope and council was an unpardonable offence. Arguments and threats were used, but Dollinger was firm in his refusal, and on April 19, 1871, he was formally excommunicated. That Dr. Dollinger felt this treatment keenly was evident, but he did not waver, and to the end of his life never regretted the step he had taken. When urged in after years to recant and make his peace with the Church, he said, with the firmness and simplicity for which he was noted, "I will not sully my old age with a lie." He ceased to perform priestly functions, but his colleagues and fellow-countrymen would not hear of his giving up his work in the University. Within four months of his excommunication, he was elected rector of the University by a vote of fifty-four to six, and the Bavarian Minister of Worship declared that the state did not recognize the validity of the Papal decree.

Dr. Dollinger contented himself with passive resistance. He passed his latest years quietly in University work and in promoting the scheme he devised for a union of the churches of Christendom; he has now gone to his rest, honored by his country and mourned by all who knew him.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

THE story of the interesting tour of Dr. Talmage and his friends is continued in the following extracts from a letter from Mr. L. Klopsch dated Beyrout:

We originally had set aside six consecutive days for our stay at Jerusalem, but, on the evening of the second day after our return from Bethlehem, Dr. Talmage gave instructions to begin the encampment on the following morning. He did this for two reasons: to avoid trouble on Sunday, to which he is uncompromisingly opposed, and to improve to the very best advantage the delightful weather we were enjoying, before the rainy season should set in. In Palestine the rainy season lasts two months, during which time there is an unremitting supply of moisture, sometimes present in the form of fine spray, at other times falling in heavy rain. Whether in the one form or the other, the atmospheric condition is that of perpetual dampness, making travelling exceedingly unpleasant. We had provided ourselves with an abundance of waterproof garments, and our supply of boots and shoes was equal to every possible condition of weather. At the same time we were anxious to make the most of the pleasant days remaining to us, not knowing how much longer they would last. So orders were issued to prepare camp, as the following day we were to start for the Jordan.

Camping-Out in the Holy Land is an experience which will bear description. The camp is not as simple an arrangement as the uninitiated may suppose. In appearance it is a regular caravan, moving slowly, not faster than three miles an hour, and rarely travelling longer than seven hours a day. The persons constituting the members of our camp were: the five in our party, three of whom were ladies; one dragoman or guide; one sheik, who was our protection against Bedouin marauders; a cook; two waiters; and seven muleteers. Sometimes, but not always, the sheik had a Nubian negro to carry his double-barrelled gun, which he always kept loaded and ready for business. Of animals, we had eight horses, nine mules, and five donkeys; making in all, a total of eighteen persons and twenty-two animals. Besides the personal baggage of the tourists, consisting of trunks, valises, etc., there were in our camp a complete outfit of beds and bedding, a dozen or so of Turkish rugs, a stove, and a full supply of cooking utensils, an elaborate table-service, all requirements for the toilet, a kitchen-tent, a saloon-tent, three sleeping-tents, and two smaller tents, an abundance of provisions, and any quantity of smaller items, too numerous to mention.

The camp is divided into two parts, one travelling for the accommodation of the sight-seers, the other to cater to their necessities of refreshment and repose. Of these, the former is the smaller, consisting only of the tourists themselves, the dragoman, the sheik, and two waiters who carry with them the lunch-tent. These two divisions of the camp never move together, the larger one of them preceding the tourists in order to make ready for the night. As soon as the party arrive at a camping-place after the day's travel, they dismount and repair to their tents, where they find everything in readiness for their comfort. The sleeping-tents are richly decorated with Egyptian needlework, are carpeted with soft, thick Turkish rugs laid on the bare ground, and each contains one or two iron bedsteads, a table, furniture for the toilet, candlesticks, etc. It presents a home-like, inviting appearance.

The General Programme

for the day is about as follows: Morning-call at six; half an hour later, breakfast, consisting of eggs and chops, bread, butter, jam, and coffee. At seven the members of the party are on horseback ready for their journey. After four hours' ride we dismount for luncheon, when the lunch-tent is quickly raised, a rug is spread on the ground, over this is laid a dainty table-cloth, and on this are spread cold chicken, hard-boiled eggs, sardines, bread, oranges, nuts, raisins, and cheese. The tourists recline while they eat and drink, in Oriental fashion, and help themselves to what lies before them on plates of agate-ware. Everything served is fresh, and of excellent quality, and there is plenty of it.

While the tourists are taking their lunch, the larger part of the encampment, which is not packed in the morning until after the tourists have left, passes by and proceeds to the next camping-place. At half-past one travel is resumed. Three hours more in the saddle, and one feels ready for another meal. Even the most dyspeptic person is willing for dinner, which happily is invariably a good one. Excellent hot soup is followed with roast meat and vegetables; next come roast fowl and salad; capital pudding is then served; nuts, raisins, oranges, pomegranates, and other fruits, cheese, and Turkish coffee end the repast. After dinner, a lively bonfire is started, around which the tourists assemble and rehearse the scenes and incidents of the day. At nine the shoes left in front of the tents for the porter to blacken are the sure indications that the weary tourists have retired for

The Night.

Pass the camp at any time of the night, however, and three figures are seen to hover around the camp-fire. They are a shabbily dressed guard, it is true, but, as they are armed to the teeth with guns, pistols, bowie-knives—in one word, with a whole arsenal of weapons—bold, indeed, must be the robbers who would dare to attack these grim-visaged warriors. They come quietly to the camp about seven in the evening, their services having been secured from among the principal men in the locality where the party happens to be, and remain on duty until the camp is alive with preparations for the next day's journey, when they take their departure as quietly as they came. All in camp are Arabs. Most of them understand but two English words, "good" and "finish," this pronounced "feenish." They say "good" when you either mount or dismount from your horse. Caresingly they pat the animal, and at the same time throw into their pronunciation of the word the two meanings: the horse is a good one; don't you think he is a good one? Your attendant says "feenish" when you ask him for something of which the supply is exhausted. He is a mirthful individual and always accompanies his declaration with a grin which says plainly enough: "You have already all you can get." Of course it is awkward not to be able to make your wants and wishes known, by means of language, to the man whose business it is to learn and perform them, but the situation is relieved by his good-nature, which I have found to be constant and unchangeable. If you scold him he takes no offence, because he does not understand one word you utter, and if you bring a whole torrent of objurgations with the proper accompaniments of gesture and facial expression to bear on him, he still smiles in real or affected ignorance that you are angry with him.

The Attendants

'Twould be a cruel and unreasonable mistake, if not an impossible thing, to cherish resentment against the most amiable of servitors. He not only sees to it that all your meals are supplied, but ingeniously suggests multifarious ways in which he can be of service to you. And never a murmur of impatience escapes his lips, however difficult or even unreasonable may be the service required of him. He will travel a mile to get you a pitcher of fresh water, if you detect or think you find a trace of impurity, or have a dislike to the taste of that given you. This most accommodating of mortals will jump off his mule, unload and unstrap all his packs to look for a book you may express the desire for, or to get you a cracker, should you feel faint on the road. I found him, moreover, perfectly honest and trustworthy without an exception.

Having returned to Jerusalem, we visited

The Tower of David,

which reaches high among neighboring buildings of the Holy City. An open space stands before the great structure, which is entered through an archway ornamented with pinnacles. Most of what was once the arched space has been built up, and one goes through a comparatively small gateway into the building, walking on a causeway slightly higher than the stony street of the space outside. There are stairs on the outside of the great tower, which lead up half-way to the top. The remaining stairs are inside. Having gained the top, one finds a parapet for safety, and looks out upon Jerusalem from a point of decided vantage. The history of the structure is not perfectly known. What of carpentry work there is in it is modern. Evidences of work by Crusaders are revealed in the masonry, but it may be that the massive foundation actually represents, in part, the period of the great King. Here, says tradition, it was that he received the news of Absalom's death. Taking out his Bible Dr. Talmage read aloud the story of how the handsome Prince stole the hearts of the men of Israel, of his rebellion and his terrible fate.

A squad of Turkish soldiers (the tower being used as an arsenal), surrounded the reader as the beautiful narrative flowed from his lips. We next visited the wailing-place of the Jews, where we found about forty of the faithful, wailing, moaning, and mourning because of the destruction of the Temple, and imploring Jehovah with impassioned earnestness for its restoration. A number of men, women, and children were engaged in chanting the ninety-third Psalm. So sincere and earnest were they in the lugubrious devotions, the tears coursing down the pale cheeks, that Dr. Talmage said he himself felt like weeping with them.

At 1 P. M. the same day we left Jerusalem, in probability never to see it again. Taking the road that Christ and His parents must have taken nearly two thousand years before, we passed in short time the extensive workshops of the London Society for the Conversion of the Jews, which is the most successful, because the most practical Christian agency ever at work in Palestine. Gibeon, where the prophet Samuel lived and died, and Ramah, where he was born, were soon passed, and we came to Beeroth. Continuing our journey from this point, we traveled four hours longer, and then encamped for the night. We rested on what said to be the identical spot where Jacob, lying with stones for his pillow, saw in his dreams a ladder set up on the earth, the top of it reaching to heaven, and on which angels of God ascended and descended. Ebal and Gerizim were next visited.

Jacob's Well,

which is near Gerizim, "this mountain," as our Lord called that large hill, has a great stone over its mouth. The masonry, on which Jesus sat as I talked to the woman of Samaria, no longer exists, but the well is still in use at such times as the supply of water is not cut off by lack of rain. It is more of a cistern than a well. For this reason our Lord compared its water with "living water" springing up. A hole has been cut through the middle of the covering stone large enough for six buckets to be put down into the well through. The well, which is now seventy-five feet deep, was much deeper before visitors formed the habit of throwing stones into it to hear the echo caused by their striking the bottom. Some learned people suppose that when Jacob dug the well it was double the depth it is now, and as it is more than seventy feet across, one can form some idea of what the gifts, as an engineer, that characterized the tutelage of Jacob, and how rich were the resources which enabled him to carry out his great plan. Nablus, the new city, was Shechem in very ancient times, and Samaria in our Lord's time. It is situated in a fertile, well-watered valley. Woody growths cover the sides of surrounding hills, and olive-trees add to the scene in the centre of which it stands, in considerable beauty, as seen from a distance. It is quite a manufacturing town, that is, for the Orient, containing soap and olive-oil works. Inside is dirty and architecturally disappointing. Some of the streets are darkened by arches. The chief building in the town is a mosque, which was once a Christian church. It was built by the Crusaders, but now the crescent triumphs over the cross.

MISSIONARIES IN EXTREMITY.

THE following incident is related by Dr. C. Hamlin in the current number of the Missionary Herald: In the year 1839, my first year of missionary service, all the American missionaries were ordered out of the Empire. The order was communicated to Commodore Porter, and he advised us that we could not protect us. The station at Constantinople was very much weakened. Mr. Homes just left to join Dr. Grout in researches among mountain Nestorians. Dr. Dwight was in America and Dr. Schaffler about to leave for Vienna. There seemed to be no earthly resource. The English Ambassador, Lord Ponsonby, was a nobleman of the very worst sort, and would have been glad to see us go. Armenians had been forbidden, under penalty of anathema, to call at any missionary house. We were "minished and brought low." The missionaries all resolved to yield only to force, and we home an appeal to our Government, claiming the same rights that were accorded to Romish missionaries. Commodore Porter smiled at the appeal, useless, but we gave ourselves unto prayer. We together, morning, noon, and night, for our prayer. Dr. Goodell did not lose his hopeful and cheerfulness, but there was a peculiar solemnity in everything that was done and said. Right in the midst of this crisis Sultan Mahmoud died, his forces were utterly routed at the battle of Nezib, and the whole magnificent fleet was betrayed into the hands of Ali Pasha, of Egypt. A young sultan at olly new Government came into existence, the patriarchs and bishops were changed. Where were the enemies of our work? "God blew and they were scattered." We joyfully resumed our work without waiting to hear from our Government, with no one to molest us or make us afraid. Our confidence in God was not in vain. All the missionaries required new strength and confidence for the trials to come.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for Feb. 23, Luke 4: 1-13; Golden Text Heb. 2: 18.

nor in Temptation—The Test for the Gold—The Human Side—A Matter for Rejoicing—Gives Fellowship with Christ—Should be Referred to God—Not a Sign of Little Grace—Paul Buffeted After Special Revelations—Jesus Alone in Temptation—To Remedy from Fasting—A Help in Prayer—The First Temptation a Doubt of Sonship—Satan's Quotation of Scripture—Temptation Met on Conquered Ground.

IN that He Himself hath suffered, being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted." "For we have not an High Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. (Heb. 2: 18; 4: 15.)

Has its Divine Side

well as its human side. From God's side it is the greatest honor which God can confer upon His children when He can so far count upon them as to tempt them to the proof. It is real gold, not tinsel, which is put into the fire. Soldiers who have been proved true are placed in positions of danger. God uses His tried and tempted children to conquer angels and men. Paul says, "I think that I had set forth us the apostles last, as it were, to death; for we are made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men." (1 Cor. 4: 9); and he shows how "unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places may be known by the riches the manifold wisdom of God." (Eph. 3: 10.) By the temptations of Job, God taught Satan, though he might buffet His child, and gain advantage over him for a time, his power could not be exercised within permitted limits, and the use of God would conquer him in the end; and brought His servant out of the furnace with a new wedge of himself—of his God, which he could never have gained under other circumstances. There is also temptation. There are some, but they are very few, who go up to the battle-field as Jehoshaphat did, and let the singers go out before the army (Chr. 20: 21, 22); like David they learn to "bless the Lord at all times" (Ps. 34: 1); and they do not think it "strange concerning the fiery trial which cometh upon them," "as though a strange thing happened unto" them, "but rejoice inasmuch as" they are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, at the declaration of His glory also" they "may rejoice with exceeding joy." (1 Pet. 4: 12, 13.) Such as are not afraid of temptation, they go up to conquer in the name of the Lord, and they sing, "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear; what can I do unto me?" (Ps. 118: 6.) There are others who look upon temptation as something to endure, to meet in the strength of God the best way they can.

The Human Side

These are blessed. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation." "Behold, we count ourselves happy which endure." (James 1: 12; 5: 11.) There is another class, and the most numerous, who almost invariably pity themselves when they are tempted, and think themselves badly used; they fall, and excuse themselves for falling, and in their hearts bear a grudge against God for letting them be tempted, and also against any man or circumstance which has been the direct instrument of temptation to them.

How would God have us regard temptation? Not as a disgrace or a dishonor, not as a misfortune, but as a God-permitted proving. It was when Abraham had been found faithful (Gen. 17-19), "that God did tempt Abraham." (Gen. 22: 1.) It was when God's own witness concerning him went to prove him to be "a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil" (Job 1: 1; 2: 3), that God put him so sorely to the test. Christ Himself was tempted more than any other man. He "was tempted in all points like as we are"; no other man has had to sustain all the concentrated force of Satan's temptations. Is it not then "enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord" (Matthew 10: 25)? Shall we pity ourselves, or demand the sympathy of others, when we are "called unto the fellowship of His Son, Jesus Christ our Lord" (1 Cor. 1: 9), even when it is "the fellowship of His sufferings being made conformable to His death" (Phil. 3: 10), in the way of temptation? Shall we not rather count it all joy when we fall into manifold temptations, knowing that the proof of our faith worketh patience? And shall we not "let patience have its perfect work, that we may be perfect and entire, wanting in nothing" (James 1: 2-4, R. V.)?

But we must clearly distinguish between temptation as it comes to us from God, and temptation as it comes to us from Satan.

God Never Can Suggest Sin

to His children. Therefore James writes, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man; but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." (James 1: 13-15.) But the very temptations of Satan, although they do not originate with God, are made God's test to us while we abide in Christ, and by referring them to God instantaneously, when they arise, and neither dealing ourselves with the temptation nor the tempter, it becomes to us a test from God. For instance, it was surely the devil in Potiphar's wife which suggested the awful sin into which she tempted Joseph, but the instantaneous reference to his God, "How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" changed the battleground. Satan and sin retired from the field; the Heavenly Father permitted His child to be tested, and His grace prevailed.

People often imagine that it is a sign of a low state of grace when a Christian is tempted. But Jesus was "full of the Holy Ghost" when He was tempted, and was actually "led of the Spirit into the wilderness" for the very purpose "to be tempted of the devil." It is most often the times when we have been most used of God, or have been learning more of His truth, that Satan chooses for his attacks. It was when Paul had been in the third heaven, and had received wonderful revelations, and "heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter," that an angel of Satan was sent to buffet him, lest he "should be exalted above measure." (2 Cor. 12: 2-7.)

Jesus was alone at the time of His temptation; as yet no disciples had left their all to cast in their lot with Him; and "He was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts." (Mark 1: 13.) During all these forty days

"He Did Eat Nothing."

(Luke 4: 2.) There are some who have imagined on this account that a sure way of overcoming temptation is to fast. But if fasting, or prayer, or human effort of any kind can overcome sin and temptation, then it is man and not God who is Satan's master. Moses fasted forty days and forty nights, sustained in all his being by the presence of his God, breathing in God who has "life in Himself" (Ex. 24: 18; John 5: 26); but no sooner did he come down from the mountain than, in a fit of anger for the sin of the people, he broke the very tables of stone which were "the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables." (Ex. 32: 15-19.) Elijah fasted forty days and forty nights, and at the end of it came to the mistaken conclusion that he alone of all Israel was true to God, while there were seven thousand besides who had not bowed the knee to Baal, or worshipped him. (1 Kings 19: 8-18.) Thus we see that fasting is in itself no remedy for sin, no means of holiness; but it may be, and often is, a fitting and most helpful accompaniment to prayer, and when the heart is much moved it is often impossible to eat.

Our great enemy found it no easy matter to tempt the Lord Jesus, and so he took advantage of the sensation of hunger which followed His long fast and said to Him, "If Thou be the Son of God command this stone that it be made bread." Satan's first suggestion was a doubt of His Sonship. Many a tempted one, under the lash of the enemy of souls, has doubted whether he could be a child of God and have such things before his mind as the devil brings up. And then the enemy, pushing on his supposed advantage, required Him, with the doubt before Him, to work a miracle! The enemy is not tired of this suggestion, and he often uses men in making such suggestions now; "If you believe that the sick are healed now, why don't you heal such and such an one?" As though any man could be master of the power of God! Jesus answered

Not in His Own Words.

From first to last He could say, "The words that I speak, I speak not of Myself" (John 14: 10): "The Lord hath given Me the tongue of the learned." (Isa. 50: 4.) No wonder that "guile was not found in his mouth." (1 Pet. 2: 22.) He answered Satan in His Father's words, quoted from Deut. 8: 3: "It is written that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." Jesus had been experiencing the sustaining power of the word of His Father during His long fast. It is a marvellous thing that in this time of temptation the devil was permitted to have the power of leading Jesus hither and thither, to the top of a high mountain, and up to the pinnacle of the temple. But it gives us a glimpse of the working of God; how He, for His own wise purposes, allows the enemy to have a certain power over circumstances, in order that in the end his defeat may be the greater.

He took Jesus "up into an high mountain," and "shewed Him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time." We see from this what power Satan has, that he could compress into a moment of time a view of all the kingdoms of the world. While the eye of the Saviour, suffering being tempted, rested for a moment on the sight before Him, Satan said, "All this power will I give Thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it. If Thou therefore wilt worship me all shall be thine." What! would Satan retire and leave the world free from his dark presence? would he abstain from tempting man and would sin almost cease? Was this the offer made to the Son of God? But on what terms? To fall down and worship him! Could sin be done away by worshipping its author? A thousand times No! Jesus, emptied as He was of His Godhead, so that He met the enemy as a God-filled man, and not as an almighty God, answered and said: "Get thee behind Me, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." (Deut. 10: 20.)

Foiled twice in the same way, by the Word of God, Satan changed his tactics. He brought Jesus to Jerusalem, and "set Him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto Him, If Thou be the Son of God cast Thyself down from hence; for it is written, He shall give His angels charge over Thee to keep Thee; and in their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest at any time Thou dash Thy foot against a stone." Satan can quote Scripture, but he always does it partially. What a quick way it might have seemed to show Jerusalem that He was indeed the Son of God if Jesus had adopted the suggestion! But the Son of God was subject. The enemy had missed out from his quotation, "To keep Thee

In All Thy Ways."

Jesus never trusted to Himself or took His own way. "I came down from heaven," He said, "not to do Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me;" "I do always those things that please Him." (John 6: 38; 8: 29.) He answered, "It is said, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord, thy God." The devil's store of temptation was exhausted; he had tried the Saviour by the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life (1 John 2: 16), and had found Him always taking refuge behind the Word of God. He has led the way through temptation to certain victory. Satan is a conquered foe; he cannot attack us on other than conquered ground, and he can only defeat us when we attempt to meet him on our own ground instead of the ground which Christ has won for us. Jesus has destroyed "him that had the power of death, even the devil" (Heb. 2: 14); and while we abide in Christ, having "no confidence in the flesh," i. e., in ourselves, but all confidence in Jesus, Satan has no power over us; the fortress in which we hide is impregnable.

A temptation overcome leaves us in a far better position than before. After Jesus' temptation, "angels came and ministered to Him," and, far from being weakened by the conflict, He "returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee." Temptation in itself cannot harm us, though, like our Lord, we may "suffer being tempted"; but yielded to, it becomes sin, and the loss to God's cause is incalculable.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Samoan Treaty Negotiated at the Berlin conference by the representatives of the United States, Germany, and England, was ratified by the Senate on February 4. The vote was 38 for ratification to 12 against. Eight Democrats voted with the Republicans. The chief opposition to the treaty came from Senator Eustis, of Louisiana, and Senator McPherson, of New Jersey. The former objected to it on the general principle that it was contrary to the traditional policy of the Government to interfere with the domestic affairs of other countries, and still more so to incur joint obligations with European Powers. Senator McPherson opposed the treaty, principally on the ground that the Samoan king was a practical nonentity, and that too much power was given to the Chief Justice, who should be appointed by the three signatory Powers. It is, however, gratifying, that the treaty was ratified, as otherwise Samoa would have reverted to the condition of anarchy from which it has been delivered. It was incidentally mentioned in the course of the debate that the United States have acquired by purchase the lands adjoining the harbor ceded to us at Pago Pago.

The Pan-American Conference has now Entered upon the discussion of the most difficult of all the questions submitted to it—that of a coin to be current in all the countries represented in the conference. Mr. Estee, the California delegate, has devised a scheme which has the approval of all the delegates except those of the United States. He proposes that the standard coin shall be of silver, and shall contain $412\frac{1}{2}$ grains, and shall bear a uniform inscription, hereafter to be agreed upon, and that the United States of America shall coin not less than \$2,000,000, nor more than \$4,000,000 of such coins each month, and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and Hayti shall coin in the aggregate not more than \$4,000,000 each month, the amount of such coinage by each to be apportioned among said last-named Republics according to the population. The coins are to be legal-tender in the countries named, between citizens, and in international transactions. The objection to Mr. Estee's proposal in its present form arises out of our experience with the trade dollar, which did not encourage us to issue another coin to be called a dollar, but not worth a dollar. The conference will doubtless recommend the issue of some coin current throughout the continent, but, it may be hoped, not the coin proposed by Mr. Estee.

General Sympathy has been Evoked Through-out the country with Secretary Benjamin F. Tracy, by the tragic event which on February 3 desolated his home. Early on the morning of that day the house in Washington, D. C., occupied by the Secretary of the Navy, was found to be on fire. The fire appears to have started on the second floor, for the servants in the basement did not know of it until informed by a passer-by, who saw the smoke issuing from the upper windows. They attempted to go up-stairs to alarm the Secretary and his family, who had not risen. The servants were horrified to see the smoke and flames on the staircase, and were afraid to venture through them. A brave policeman literally fought his way through, and found Mrs. Tracy, who was an invalid, trying to arouse her husband from the stupor which the dense smoke had caused. The policeman dragged General Tracy to another room, and took him to an open window. Mrs. Tracy, being relieved of anxiety about her husband, climbed out of a rear window, and hung for a moment or two to the sill by her hands. She was too weak to maintain that position long, and she fell into the area, sustaining injuries from which she died. By that time the firemen had arrived, and brought a ladder to the front window, and by this means General Tracy and the policeman who remained with him were saved. Miss Tracy had tried to make her escape, but had fallen suffocated into the hallway, and was picked up dead. The Secretary's married daughter, Mrs. Wilmerding, and her daughter Alice, leaped from the second-story window, and alighted on a grass-plot below, which, being soaked by recent rains, was soft. Mrs. Wilmerding broke her wrist, and her daughter was bruised, but their lives were spared. One other life, that of a maid, was sacrificed. She evidently had been stupefied by the smoke, and was burned to death. General Tracy was prostrated with grief when he recovered consciousness, and heard of his double bereavement. The President and the members of the Cabinet were prompt in offering sympathy, and telegrams from private friends and public bodies came in large numbers to the stricken man. Queen Victoria also cabled a graceful message of sympathy.

An Ominous Warning was Issued by the Con-vention of colored men last week. In a long address to the people of the United States the Convention declares that there exists in certain parts of the country a condition of affairs which makes it necessary for colored American citizens to meet in a separate body for the consideration of grave and important questions that are national in their character. Then political and social grievances of the colored people in the South are recited, and it is averred that the purpose of the Convention is to so impress upon the public mind the justice and fairness of the claims of the colored people that no political party can safely afford to ignore them. "To us," the address says, "this should be the paramount consideration. Questions relating to governmental administrative policy, as, for instance, the tariff, civil service reform, and the financial policy of the Government, we should make secondary and subordinate. Without regard to the attitude of parties upon such questions, and without regard to our own views upon them, we feel that it is our duty to support only that party and only such candidates for office as are known to be friendly to our cause until all political parties will accord to us the rights and privileges to which we are entitled under the Constitution and the laws of the land." We cannot but deplore this conclusion, which is the first step in a race conflict the consequences of which may be very disastrous.

The Project of the World's Fair Appears Likely to suffer wreck in a conflict of political parties. Since the necessary legislation was introduced in the Legislature at Albany an effort has been made to add to the committee in charge of the project a number of Republican politicians. The committee was originally selected with the view of excluding political considerations. How far it was successful is a matter of dispute, but public opinion approved the selection, on the ground that whether the men composing it were Republicans or Democrats did not signify, so long as they were men of intelligence and public spirit. It appears, however, to have occurred to ex-Senator Platt, who at present is the chief of the Republican party in the State, that if the project were left in the control of the committee selected, it might be used to promote Democratic interests in a Presidential year. He therefore proposes to counteract any such effort by adding Republicans to the committee. Unquestionably, the expenditure of so large a sum of money as the project involves might be so directed by unscrupulous men; but it is contended that the character of the men on the committee is too high to justify the suspicion. The conflict in the Legislature on the subject at the close of last week was so violent that it seemed probable that the project would fail altogether. Should it do so, the people of the State will have an account to settle with whichever of the political parties it may deem guilty of thwarting the project, and that account will be settled when it casts its votes in November, 1892.

The Speaker's Experience in the Recent Trouble in the House has convinced him that rules are a necessity, and he accordingly formulated a set which the Committee has but slightly changed. Some of the differences between the new rules and those hitherto in operation are important. Their effect will be to restrict debate at the Speaker's option, and thus to facilitate practical work. The new rules give to the Speaker formally what he has contended for—the power to "count" or "discover" a quorum; they withdraw the power the House has hitherto exercised to excuse a member from voting; they give to him, instead of the House, the power to declare what committee a bill shall be referred to; they authorize him to decide what are dilatory motions; and they authorize him to refuse to entertain the motions for a recess or for adjournment to a day fixed. It is thought that the House will adopt the rules as they are, though some merely verbal changes may be made.

The Report is Circulated That the English Government is about to authorize the issue of bank notes of the value of five dollars. At present the lowest denomination is of twenty-five dollars. A London correspondent of the New York Times asserts that the Bank of England is preparing to issue the paper currency of the lower denomination to the extent of $20,000,000, and that its basis will be silver coin or bullion. It is forty years since small notes were in circulation in England. The continual forging of one-pound notes during that time that forgery was a capital crime was the main reason of their withdrawal forty years ago, and a last man hanged for forgery in England was for counterfeiting of these notes.

An Anti-Semitic Agitation has been Developing in France. In an interview with the French correspondent of the New York Herald, the Marquis de Mores, who is well known in this country, explained its origin. He alleges that the Jewish capitalists in Paris have succeeded for a long time past in controlling both the executive and legislative branches of the Government. He said that the permanent officers of the Government, on whom owing to frequent changes in the Cabinet, devolved the business of Government, are paid so inadequate salaries that they could not live if they did not receive supplemental salaries from the Jews. "Not only said the Marquis, "is bribery carried on throughout the various executive departments of the state, but far from uncommonly, in the Chamber itself. Last year the salaries of not less than one hundred and eighty Deputies were attached for debt. I mention this to show how welcome a few thousand-franc notes would be to a debtor thus embarrassed. In such cases thousand-franc notes are always forthcoming from the Jews, but always for a consideration. The result is that all serious legislation for the real interests of the people is impossible." The Marquis is evidently desirous of arousing public antipathy to the Jews. If he succeeds, he will probably have serious cause to repent. An agitation against the rich in the inflammable condition of French society would not be limited to operations against the Jews. There has been a time and it may come again, when the head of a Marquis fell under the guillotine with as much applause from the mob as did the head of a Jew.

A Shrewd Scheme to Conciliate German Work-ingmen emanates from the Emperor of Germany. In a rescript to Prince Bismarck published on February 5, the Emperor declares his desire to ameliorate the position of the workingmen. He desires that the Ambassadors of France, England, Belgium and Switzerland shall be officially asked whether their Governments are disposed to come to an international agreement with Germany, with a view to meeting the needs and wishes of workingmen revealed in the recent strikes and labor disputes. When the principle of the Emperor's proposal is accepted, Prince Bismarck is empowered to invite all the nations interested to attend a labor conference. In what way such a conference can benefit the workmen does not appear. More practical, and with better promise of beneficial results is a second rescript to the Emperor's Minister of Commerce, Baron von Berlepsch, in which the Emperor states definite points on which he believes the Government may interpose for the workman's advantage. He affirms that it is "the duty of the state to regulate the duration and the nature of labor as to ensure the health, the morality, and the supply of all the economic wants of the workingmen, and preserve their claims to equality before the law. For the promotion of peace between workingmen and their employers, legal measures must be taken toward the establishment of regulations empowering workingmen to appoint delegates enjoying their confidence to represent them in the settlement of affairs, these delegates safeguarding the interests of the workingmen whom they represent, in all negotiations with the employers or with the Government." It may be hoped that the Emperor's interest in this class of his subjects will continue after the forthcoming elections are over.

Bishop H. C. Riley has Resumed his Lectures on Mexico and Central and South America. He recently lectured in Paterson, N. J., in the school-room of the Church of the Holy Communion, and the audience were so delighted with his narrative of the progress of Christian work in those lands, and with his beautiful stereopticon views, that a liberal contribution was made to the funds of the cause, and the Bishop was unanimously invited to lecture again in the largest hall in the city. We are glad to learn that the committee recently formed to aid the Bishop in his arduous labors is succeeding in arousing public interest in the undertaking, and that the income by which the Bishop is supporting the evangelists in the field is steadily increasing. The work has special claims on Evangelical Christians, because an effort is made by the ritualists in the Church to discourage sympathy with it on account of its antagonism to Romanism. The ritualists regard the Church of Jesus as a trespass on the domain of the Roman Catholic Church. All who realize what a curse to any people, in both civil and religious life, Romanism is, and who feel, too, the responsibility of the Christians of the United States for the evangelization of Mexico, cannot do better than help Bishop Riley in the effort he is making to support the preachers of the pure gospel in Mexico. Contributions to the fund, however small, will be gratefully received by the treasurer, J. P. Heath, Esq., 43 Bible House, New York.

A Child is Held as Security for a Debt in St. Louis. On February 6 a gentleman applied to the police for aid in recovering his child. He stated that some months ago he engaged a nurse for his infant son. He became dissatisfied with the way in which she performed her duties, and gave her notice to leave. The girl raised the question of wages, the amount of which had been made contingent on her conduct. She contended that she had been efficient, and demanded the higher rate, while her employer insisted that she was entitled only to the lower rate. The question was left unsettled, but the nurse became convinced that her prospects of receiving the sum she held to be her due were very slight. She therefore adopted a plan to compel payment. She disappeared suddenly, taking the child with her. Search had been made for her without success. She had, however, notified the father that whenever he chose to deposit a certain amount to her credit in a bank which she named, he could have his child. Until then she would retain it, and would not be too lavish in her attentions to it. The father was terribly concerned for the safety of his child, but regarding the nurse's claim as an attempt to blackmail him, he was reluctant to pay it. The nurse evidently counts on the strength of parental love being sufficient to compel payment, and if she can evade the search of the police for a few days, her scheme will probably succeed. No father would hesitate long to make any sacrifice rather than his child should suffer. That fact shows how God must have loved the world when He gave His only begotten Son to die that the world might be saved. (John 3:16.)

A Life of Disappointment and Unavailing Sorrow ended tragically in Ozark, Mo., on January 29. A gloomy, morose man nearly seventy years old had lived there for many years. He had but one friend in the neighborhood, and the only persons in his house were colored men, who performed all the household duties. They were out for a holiday on January 29, and when they returned at night they were horrified to see the house in flames. The fire could not be extinguished, nor could anything be saved from it. When it had burned itself out the charred body of the owner was found among the ashes. Then the man's friend told his story. He was a native of Southampton, England, and a graduate of the University of Glasgow. He had fallen in love with a domestic servant in his father's employ, and wanted to marry her. His parents objected to the match, though the girl was well educated and evidently loved their son devotedly. They sent the girl away, and purchased a commission for their son in a regiment going to India. The young man was compelled to go, but he wrote frequently to the girl, promising to return and marry her. He received no answer, and after a few years he learned that his father had, by payments of money to the girl's family, succeeded in intercepting his letters. She, believing her lover had forgotten her, pined away and died. The young man on hearing the news became reckless, sold his commission, and for some years led a wild, dissipated life. Finally he drifted to Ozark, where he settled down and lived until he perished in his burning house. If the girl had held fast to her faith in her lover, in spite of his apparent neglect, her life might have been saved, and his years would not have been wasted. Christians are sometimes tempted to lose faith in their Lord when sometimes He seems deaf to their prayers, and allows them to suffer in person or in fortune. They ought to know Him better, for He never deserts those who trust in Him, and in the end justifies their confidence by eternal union with Himself. (1 Peter 1:6, 7.)

A Marriage in a Lighthouse Took Place on February 1. There is no more popular man among captains and sailors than the faithful, methodical man who keeps the Lynde Point Lighthouse on the lower Connecticut River. It is a very dangerous place for navigation, but its dangers have never been increased by a neglect of duty on the part of the lighthouse keeper. When, therefore, it became known that his pretty and winsome daughter was to be married, there was no lack of interest in the ceremony. All who could be present went to witness it, and gathered around the young couple under the rotunda of the lighthouse on Saturday afternoon. The moment the minister declared them man and wife the light was turned on, and instantly from every steamer and tug within sight there went up the hoarse screech of congratulatory steam whistles, rising high above the roar of wind and sea. The discordant greeting still rang out, as the newly wedded couple, with their friends, sat down to enjoy the wedding-feast. It may be hoped that their married life will, in some of its aspects, be fitly typified by its beginning. If they follow Christ, the roar and discord of the outside world will not disturb their peace and happiness, while from their abode will shine the light that may mark the path of safety to voyagers on life's troubled waters. (Matt. 5:14-16.)

A Profitable Enterprise Among Fashionable ladies has been started by a needy lady of good family in New York. Her education and aristocratic connections were strangely at variance with her poverty, and she was practically living on charity when the idea occurred to her. She was at a party some months ago when the Samoan trouble was the subject of conversation. Some one asked, "Where is Samoa?" and she was surprised to see that none of the ladies knew. She knew they would feel ashamed of their ignorance, though probably none would take the trouble to read up the subject. She persuaded a wealthy friend to let her have the use of her parlors for an afternoon, and privately invited a number of ladies to come and listen to a talk about Samoa. About twenty came, and the talk was so interesting, and so thoroughly enlightened them that the ladies could talk intelligently on the subject in their homes, and at social gatherings. They felt so much indebted to their instructor that when she proposed to hold a regular weekly meeting, at which she would talk of the subjects most prominent in conversation, they all agreed to come, and pay a dollar each for the privilege. The class has since grown rapidly, and the lady has now classes in three other cities. Those who attend consider their dollar well spent in the share they are thus enabled to take in the conversation at the dinner-table; and their instructor is now earning a fair income from their fees. The success of the enterprise shows how general is the desire to shine in conversation. Probably if the lady proposed to talk about vital religion her hearers would rapidly diminish in number, though it is of all subjects the most important, having in it the way to eternal life. (1 Tim. 2:23-26.)

A Pathetic Death in a Blizzard is Reported from "No Man's Land." A dispatch from Beaver City to the New York Sun states that on the day of the recent blizzard, and before any sign of the terrible visitation had appeared, a settler set out in his wagon for Meade, to make purchases. He was accompanied by the wife of his nearest neighbor, an intimate friend who lived on a ranch two miles from his own. Happily for them they were in Meade when the blizzard came and were able to get shelter with some friends for the night. The weather was bright and clear the next morning, so knowing that there would be anxiety at both ranches as to their safety, they set out at dawn for home. On arriving at the ranch where the lady lived they were surprised to find it deserted. She concluded that her husband had gone to the other ranch, so she went on thither with her companion. On the way they noticed some strange objects in the snow, and the man alighted to examine them. He was horrified to find that they were the dead bodies of his wife and his companion's husband. He easily understood the fatality. His wife must have become alarmed when she saw the premonitory signs of the blizzard and have set out for the other ranch for protection. His friend, knowing she was at home alone and probably in terror, had doubtless started to bear her company. They had met on the way, had been overtaken by the blizzard, and had perished before they could get shelter. It was not surprising that a delicate woman should have died in such a storm, but the man might have survived had he thought of himself chiefly. But he had taken off his coat and overcoat and put them on the woman in the vain effort to protect her, and the storm, catching him in his shirt sleeves, did its fatal work on him. Our admiration for so noble an act of unselfishness is mingled with regret that it should have failed. That he should have stripped himself of the garments which alone could save him from death, and yet not save her to whom he gave them, seems doubly painful. There has been a grievous degree of this waste in the sacrifice of Christ. Though He died to save all men, men die unsaved every day. (Heb. 2:3.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The New York Presbytery voted on the question of revision on February 3. The vote was 82 for revision, 43 against it.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, on February 2, announced his intention of resigning the pastorate of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, in April next when he will have completed the thirtieth year of his pastorate.

The Presbyterian Theological Seminary in San Francisco has recently received a donation of $250,000 from Mr. Alexander Montgomery, of that city. The money is held in trust, and cannot be used until an additional $50,000 shall have been raised by the directors.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has, during the eighty-one years of its beneficent existence, issued from its London house alone 29,000,000, complete Bibles, nearly 32,000,000 New Testaments, and 12,845,000 portions of the Bible—altogether 72,500,000 books.

The Young Women's Christian Temperance Union of Montreal, Canada, has started a coffee barrow, which is provided with a large fire-box, water, and a small cupboard for cups, saucers, etc. The object is to supply a good cup of coffee at a lower price than the saloons charge for a glass of beer.

The Rev. E. W. Oakes is being greatly blessed in his labors in England. He has been holding services in connection with Rev. M. Baxter's Gospel Union Mission at Leicester, and there was a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit. Great crowds attended the meetings and many souls were converted.

Rev. Geo. C. Needham closed a month's services at Hannibal, Mo., and is now in Boston where he has arranged a week of special services to Roman Catholics in one of the churches of that city. Mr. Needham feels that there ought to be an effort now to preach a line of non-controversial gospel sermons to that class of citizens. The evangelist may go South later on.

The death of Oswald Livingstone, a son of the late Dr. Livingstone, is announced. He had been practising in England as a physician. He was named after Mr. Oswell, one of his father's friends at Kolobeng, with whom the great explorer made his memorable journey to Lake Ngami. The only surviving children of Livingstone now are Mrs. Bruce, of Edinburgh, and Mrs. Wilson, of Kendal.

Eight women in South Dakota made a raid on the saloons of Hatton, a town north of Mayville, on January 13. They armed themselves with axes and other weapons, marched in a body to the saloons, and set to work chopping and smashing. The leader was a quiet and unassuming woman who had just learned that her husband had signed a mortgage on the farm in order that a saloon bill could be paid.

Rev. B. Fay Mills is holding services in the Tabernacle Church, Jersey City, N. J. In ten minutes after the doors were opened for the first service, 4,000 persons had crowded into the building, and a large number who came before the time fixed for the commencement of the service were unable to enter. Twenty ministers of various denominations are working in the meetings. The requests for prayer are very numerous, and a great blessing is expected.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has closed his meetings at Fitchburg, Mass. At the last meeting such a scene as is rarely witnessed took place when the 371 persons who have made a profession of faith during Dr. Munhall's visit, and the pastors who have been helping the work, united in blessing God for having sent the evangelist to the town. The Rev. C. S. Brooks said, "I want to recognize the exaltation of the Bible that has been characteristic of these meetings. I want to say to Dr. Munhall that the manner in which he has used the Bible in these meetings will be felt for the whole of this generation."

HELP FOR YOUR SICKNESS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"When the even was come, they brought unto Him many that were possessed with devils: and He cast out the spirits with His word, and healed all that were sick: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." Matt. 8:16,17.

The Evening Work—The Tired Saviour Willing to Work—I. His Works of Healing—All Sorts of Diseases—Forgives All Kinds of Sin—The Demoniacs of His Day—The Devil's Own Among Us—No Failures—The Sole Medicine Used—II. Christ's Personal Power to Heal—The Secret of It—Bearing the Sickness—By Sympathy—As Champion of Humanity—As the Accepted Substitute—The Words at the Foot of the Bill.

It was the evening: in all probability it was the evening of a Sabbath-day. The Jews were so tender not to break the Sabbath that they did not even bring forth the sick to the Saviour until the even was come. The Saviour would gladly have healed them on the Sabbath-day, for that was to Him a high day for holy work, but they did not think it right, and so they kept back their sick till the day was ended. If any of you have thought that the time has not come for you to approach the Saviour, you have labored under a great error, for He would not have you delay for a single hour; but I hope you are now satisfied that you have waited long enough and that at last the evening is near in which you should come to Jesus.

Whether it was a Sabbath evening or not, the day had been spent by the Saviour in diligent labor; for our Saviour took care, when the people would listen to Him on the seventh day, to preach with all His might. As soon as the sun was up, He began to tell out saving truth. He was tired when evening was come, and He might have sought rest; but instead of that, they

Brought the Sick to Him

to heal, and He must close up a weary day by a yet more arduous task. Until darkness had covered the earth, He must continue still to scatter blessings right and left. At this hour our blessed Master has laid aside all weariness; and now at eventide He is waiting to bless. Whatever has been done during the day, yet, if some poor, weary soul has spurned the voice divine through all the former hours, He is waiting still to save, ere yet the sun has quite gone down. When even was come, they brought unto Him those that were sick.

What a strange sight that evening saw! They brought forth to the Saviour those that were possessed of evil spirits, and those that were sick. They brought them on their mattresses, and laid them in the streets. It must have been a very difficult thing to bring out some that were possessed, because they struggled and raved: but nevertheless they brought them. The streets were turned into a hospital, and in the still evening air you could hear the cries of those poor creatures who were possessed of evil spirits, and the moans of those in acute pain. It was a sad sight.

A Piteous Sight,

to look upon; and as far as Christ's eye could see, every nook and corner were occupied with these sick people. But what a glorious thing it must have been to see Him, the divine Physician, with tears of pity in His eyes, and yet with beaming joy on His countenance, suffering intensely all the while because of their suffering, and yet joyous because He was able to bless them. That was one of the happiest evenings that ever ended day in Palestine.

I. Let us notice, first, our Lord's works of healing. On that occasion, and on others, he cured

All Sorts of Sickness.

I think I am right in saying that there is not, in the whole list of diseases, one which the Saviour did not heal. They may be known by new names, for they say the doctors have invented a dozen new diseases lately, but they are only old diseases to which they have given new names. Our great-grandfathers died of diseases the names of which they never knew, or else they had other names than those which are given to them now. But as man has always been much the same, most diseases have continued as long as the human race. We have to be very grateful that leprosy, which was the great scourge of the Jews, is almost extinct now; but in our Saviour's day it seems to have been exceedingly common. But leprosy and all forms of disease came under the Saviour's power, and fled at his word.

Now the parallel of that is this—Jesus Christ can forgive sins of all sorts. There are different grades of sin. Some are exceedingly defiling and loathsome. Other sins are scarcely hurtful to the general commonwealth, and so are often almost unnoticed. Yet any sin will ruin a soul for ever. It may be thought to be little, but as a little prick with a poisoned arrow will heat all the blood, and bring on death, so is sin such a venomous disease that the least of it is fatal. But from whatever kind of sin you are suffering, I would encourage you to come to Jesus with it, be it what it may. Is yours an extreme case? Have you been grossly guilty? Come with it, then, for our Lord healed the worst diseases. On the other hand, have you been kept out of gross sin from your early youth? Have you been preserved from outward vice? It may be that is the forgetting of God, and living without love to Christ—a deadly sin, let me tell you; but bring it to the Saviour. Have you been idle? Have you been proud? Have you been lascivious? Have you been untruthful? Have you been profane? Have you been malicious? I cannot tell; but God knoweth—who can read your heart as readily as we read a book. But whatever the sin may be, remember that all manner of sin and of blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." Oh, hear this, and look up to the Saviour, and pray Him of His great mercy to exercise the healing art of His redeeming love on you, this evening, now that the sun has set! They brought to Jesus all sorts of diseases.

Your Chief Sin

Note, next, that Jesus can deal with special cases of devilry. Possession with evil spirits was probably peculiar to that age. I sometimes think that, when the Saviour came down on earth, the devil had the impudence to ask to be let loose, that he and all his servants might come on earth, and in person might meet the Saviour. Satan is still busy, going about, seeking whom he may devour; but not exactly in the particular way in which he raged in Christ's day. He cannot take possession of men's bodies as he did then. So the Saviour met Satan foot to foot, and face to face; but the devil made a poor fight of it, for whenever the Lord Jesus made His appearance, the devil wanted to be off; and if he did not want to go, the Saviour soon moved him by saying, "Come out of him."

The parallel to that is this. There are some men that we meet with, in whom the devil evidently reigns; and there are such women, too—for when women are bad, they can be bad, and there can be no mistake about it. The devil can make more mischief out of a woman than out of a man when he thoroughly gets possession of her. Well, whether men or women, there are some who might be called "The Devil's Own."

One man is a drunkard: there is no holding him; he must drink on; he seems to be infatuated by it. He takes the pledge, and abstains for a little while; but by and by the devil gets hold of him again, and he goes back to his taps. Though he has drunk himself into delirium tremens, and to death's door, yet still he gives way to this loathsome vice. Others are possessed with the devil of lasciviousness, and it does not matter what they suffer, they will be always defiling themselves, ruining body and soul by their iniquity. We know persons who seem to have a devil in them in the matter of passion. They are but a little provoked, and they lose all command of themselves, and you would think that they ought to be put in a padded room in Bethlehem Hospital, and kept there till they cooled down. Otherwise, they might do mischief to themselves and to others. Surely some men, who can scarcely speak without swearing, have the devil in them. How one's blood runs chill, in going down our streets, to hear how commonly our workmen degrade themselves with filthy conversation! It is not exactly cursing: it is less honest, and more vile! Is there any hope for such? These are the very people in whom Jesus has often displayed His healing power.

I could tell you to-night of lions that have been turned to lambs, men of furious passions who have become gentle, and quiet, and loving, men of profane speech who would be shocked at the very remembrance of what they once said, and whose voices have been often heard in prayer: men and women, too, who loved the wages of iniquity, and lost their character, and defiled themselves; but they are washed, and they are sanctified. I have blessed the name of God when giving the right hand of Christian fellowship to ransomed ones to whom we could not have given our right hand a little while ago, for it would have been wrong to join with them in the wickedness of their pursuits. Oh, yes, my Master still casts devils out of men! If there are any such here to-night, let your cry for help go up to our blessed Master. Come again, great Lord, and cast out the evil spirit from men, and get to thyself the victory in many a heart, to the praise of the glory of thy grace!

The remarkable point about this miracle-working was that all were healed, and

There was no Failure.

When a man brings out a patent medicine, he publishes verifications of the efficacy of his physic. He gets a number of cases, and he advertises them. I suppose they are genuine. I should not like to be hanged if they were not. I suppose, therefore, they are all accurate and authentic. But there is one thing which you never knew a medicine advertiser do: he never advertises the failures of the medicine—the number of persons that have been induced to buy the remedy, and have derived no good from it: if these were all advertised, it might occupy more room in the newspaper than those who write of a cure. My Lord Jesus Christ is a Physician who never had a failure yet—never once! Never did a soul wash in Christ's blood without being made whiter than snow. Never did a man, besotted with the worst of vice, trust in Jesus without receiving power to conquer his evil habits. He must save you if you trust in Him. As surely as He lives He must save you, for He has put it, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." I will repeat it, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." You have never come, if He has not received you; for He must save those who trust in Him.

Notice, that His word was the sole medicine He used: "He cast out the spirits with His word." No other medicine, no charms, no long performances, no striking of His hand over the place; but He spake, and it was done. He said to the devil, "Come out of him," and it came out. He said to the disease, "Go," and away it went. In that way the Lord saves men to-day—by His word. While I am speaking it to-night, or when you shall be reading it, His word will be the power of God unto salvation. I am glad that you are here to hear it, for faith cometh by hearing. I shall be glad if you diligently read it, for reading is a kind of hearing, and many are brought to the Saviour thereby. Jesus Christ does not need to put you through a long purgatory, and keep you for months getting ready to be saved. He has only this night to open your ear to hear His word, and when you hear it He can bless it to your soul so that you shall live.

II. May God give you a hearing ear, and save you while I speak, secondly, of our Lord's personal power to heal! Whence came it that He was able to save? We are pointed to by these words, "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias, the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." Christ was able to heal the diseases of men because He bare them Himself. Do not think that our Lord Jesus was actually diseased: He suffered greatly, but I read not that any disease was upon Him. Probably there was no man in whom there was less tendency to natural disease than in Him. His pure and blessed body was not subject to the diseases which are brought upon men through sin being in them. How, then, did He take upon Him our sicknesses and our sorrows?

The Secret of His Power

First, He bare our sicknesses by intense sympathy. When Christ looked at all those sick people, He did, as it were, take all their sicknesses upon Himself. You know what I mean. If you talk with a person who is very ill, and you feel for him, you seem to lay his pains upon yourself, and then you have power to comfort him. When I am seeing troubled people, I enter into one sorrowful case after another till I am more sad than any of them. I try as far as I can to have fellowship with the case of each one, in order to be able to speak a word of comfort to him; and I can say, from personal experience, that I know of nothing that wears the soul down so fast as the outflow of sincere sympathy with the sorrowing, desponding, depressed ones. I have sometimes been the means in God's hand of helping a man who suffered with a desponding spirit; but the help I have rendered has cost me dearly. Hours after, I have been myself depressed, and I have felt an inability to shake it off. You and I have not a thousandth part of the sympathy that was in Christ. He sympathized with all the aggregate of human woe, and so sympathized that He made His heart a great reservoir, into which all streams of grief poured themselves.

My Master is just the same now. Though He is in heaven, He is just as tender as He was on earth. I never heard of anybody losing tenderness by going to heaven. People get better by going there; and so is Christ, if it were possible, even more tender than when on earth. Think of this. Somebody might not sympathize with you, poor sinner, but Jesus does. You would not like to tell some people what you have done, for they would turn upon their heel, and give you a wide berth, but it is not so with Jesus. He looks upon sin, not with the eye of a judge, but with the eye of a physician. He looks at it as a disease, and He deals with it that He may heal it. He has great sympathy with sinners, though He has no sympathy with sin. He takes the sinner's sorrows to Himself.

The Invitation.

"Ah!" says one, "no man careth for my soul." Dear friend, man or woman, whoever you may be, One greatly cares for you, and He speaks to you to-night by these lips. Oh, that these lips were better fitted to be used by Him! He says, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." He bids you take of the water of life freely. He is ready at this moment to bestow salvation. "Nobody knows my case!" cries one. But Jesus knows it. He knows that dark spot in it. He knows that hard core which will not come away. He knows that filthy thing which you remember to-night, and shiver as you remember it. He knows it all, and yet he says, "Return, thou backsliding daughter." He bids the vilest of the vile come to Him, for He has sympathy with them still.

Jesus Christ took upon Himself our sicknesses by His championship of our humanity. Satan misled our first parents, and the powers of darkness held us captive. In consequence of sin we have become sick and infirm, and liable to suffer. Now, when our Lord Jesus came on earth, he as good as said, "I am the Seed of the woman; and I have come to bruise the head of man's adversary." So Christ, in that respect, took upon Himself all the consequences which come of sin. He stood forth as the Champion of fallen manhood, to fight Satan and cast him out of men's bodies; to battle with disease and to overthrow the evil which lies at the root of it, that men might be made healthy.

He is our Champion still. I delight to preach Him to you, ye suffering, ye sorrowing, ye sinful, ye lost, ye castaways! One has come who has taken up your cause, the sinner's Redeemer, next-of-kin to man, who has come to avenge Him of His adversary, and to buy back His lost inheritance. Behold in Jesus the Champion of sinners, the David who comes and defies the Goliath that has long afflicted men. Oh, I wish you would trust our glorious Champion!

But here is the pith of the whole matter. The reason why Jesus is able to heal all the mischief that sin has wrought is this—because He Himself took our sin upon Him by His Sacred Substitution.

Sin is the root of our infirmities and diseases; and so, in taking the root, He took all the bitter fruit which that root did bear. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." Harken, then, ye guilty ones! Hear how freely God can forgive, and yet not injure His justice. If you trust Christ, you may be sure that you are among the number of those whose sins were laid on Christ.

"But did He suffer in my stead?" I must answer this question by another, "Dost thou believe that Jesus is the Christ? Wilt thou trust thy soul with Him?" Well, if thou dost, thy transgressions are not thine, for they were laid on Him. They are not on thee, for, like everything else, they cannot be in two places at one time; and if they were laid on Christ, they are not laid on you. But what did Jesus do with the sins that were laid on Him? Can they not come back to us? No, never; for he took them to the sepulchre, and there he buried them for ever. And now, what saith the Scripture? "In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found." "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions; and, as a cloud, thy sins." "Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea." Our sins are gone. Christ has carried them away. "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us."

Believers are the seed for whom the victory has been gained. They are the seed to whom the promise is sure. It is not to those who are of works, but to those who are of faith. Those that are born again, of the Spirit of God, through faith which is in Christ Jesus—these are "redeemed from among men." Suppose I owed ten thousand pounds; if a friend should call on my creditor, and pay that ten thousand pounds for me, I should then owe the creditor nothing. I could meet him with a smiling face. He may to-morrow morning bring his account books if he likes, and say, "There, you see, there are ten thousand pounds down there against you." I would joyfully answer, "Yes; but look on the other side. You have been paid. Here are

The Words at the Foot of Your Bill,

"Received in full of all demands." Now, when Jesus took the sins of believers upon Himself, He discharged them by His death; and every man that believes has the receipt in full in our Lord's resurrection. "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God." Yea, those that believe in Christ have the complete forgiveness of every sin. As for me, I like to sing with Kent—

Here's pardon for transgressions past,
It matters not how black their cast;
And O my soul, with wonder view,
For sins to come here's pardon too!

All blotted out at once with one stroke of the sacred pen—obliterated once for all. God does not again lay to the charge of men what He has once forgiven them. He does not forgive them half their sins, and visit them for the rest; but, once given, the blessing is irrevocable; as it is written: "The gifts and calling of God are without repentance." He never draws back, nor repents of what He has done. He saves, and the salvation which saves is everlasting salvation.

Now I see why Christ can heal. Dear heart, you have come here to-night full of the disease of sin, and you are saying, "Will He heal me?" Look to Him! Look to Him! Look to Him! The morning that I found Christ I did not think to find Him. I went to hear the Word as I had heard it before; but I did not hope to find Jesus there and then. Yet I did find Him. When I heard that there was nothing to be done but simply to look to Jesus; and when the exhortation came so sharp, and shrill, and clear, "Look! look! look!" I looked, and I bear witness to the change that passed over me—such a change as though I died and rose again. And such a change, my hearer, shall pass over thee if thou believest.

There is life for a look at the Crucified One;
There is life at this moment for thee.

God give thee the look, and give thee the life, even now, for Jesus Christ's sake! Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

How the Quarryman Descended the Quarry.—Mr. W. A. Campbell observes: "On one occasion when I was in Aberdeenshire, I was passing a large granite quarry. I saw one of the quarrymen on the top of the rock, who evidently wished to reach the bottom of the quarry. Not having much to do, I watched his operations, as he took an iron stanchion stuck it deep in the ground, and then looping a rope which he carried, he fastened it securely to the iron; then holding the rope with both hands, and with both feet braced against the rock he gradually lowered himself to the bottom, at which he arrived in safety. As I turned away I thought that is a good example of faith. The man had faith in the iron and in the rope. He knew they would hold him, and he proved his faith by committing his life to their trustworthiness. Are there not many people who say they have faith in Christ, but yet who never use it? There are many who say they believe that He can and is willing to save and keep them, and yet they will not trust themselves to Him, as the quarryman did to the iron stanchion and the rope."

A Lesson from the Apples.—Mr. Hamilton remarked: "A father once gave a present of half a dozen fine red-cheeked apples to his son, whom he had just been checking for playing with some boys who swore and stole. The little fellow thanked his father for them, and was about to carry them off, when his father said, 'I think you had better put them in this cupboard to keep for a few days, when they will be much better.' The boy put them in and was going off when again his father said, 'Here is another apple you may put in beside the others.' 'But, father, this is a bad one; it is quite rotten.' 'Never mind, put it beside the others,' said his father. It also was placed in the cupboard; but in a few days, when father and son went to get the apples, to the boy's grief he found that all the seven apples were rotten. 'That is with putting the one bad one in,' the little fellow exclaimed, while tears of disappointment ran down his face. 'Yes,' replied the father, taking no notice of the tears, 'one bad apple destroyed six good ones, and yet my son thinks he can play with six or seven bad boys and get no evil by it.' The boy saw the moral; and now he is a man and thanks his father for the lesson that has been of service to him through his life. Some Christians seem to think they can belong to Christ, yet go into the world and not be contaminated thereby. Shun evil companions."

A Fashionable Lady's Death.—A Devoted worker for Christ says: "A lady lay on a bed of sickness. She had led a gay and thoughtless life. The happy possessor of wealth and position, and the principal lady in her set of acquaintances, her life had been very pleasant, but now she was very ill. The doctor said she could not live much longer. Everyone was afraid to tell her that the end was so near, but one ventured to inquire, 'Madam, would you not like to see a minister?' 'See a minister? I? Oh, no! What is the use? Do you think I am dying?' she asked, in reply. Her friend told her that she was, and must die very soon. Becoming excited, for such a thought had never occurred to her, she raised herself upon her elbow, and fixing her terrified eyes upon her companion, she exclaimed, 'No, I am not dying! I will not die! I shall get up and dress.' She attempted to rise, but finding herself too weak, she sank back into her bed, crying that she would not die; but even as she said so she passed away, exclaiming that she was not prepared to die. Thus she went into eternity with all her guilt upon her soul, to be judged by the Saviour she had slighted."

Bread Cast upon the Waters.—A Preacher, addressing himself to Sunday-school teachers recently, related two instances of great encouragement, which should prove some inspiration to wearied ones of little faith. Two gentlemen met on a steamer during a Scotch excursion, and they talked with interest of many things, amongst others of Sunday-schools. "To tell the truth," said one, "I am not very enthusiastic about that kind of work; I was a teacher for many years, and after all I seemed to have done no good." "Well, I do believe in Sunday-school work," said the other. "As a lad I received life-long influences for good in my old class at school, and was led by my teacher to yield myself to God and His service," and he named the school with which he had once been connected. "Were you there?" cried the other; "that was where I taught. Were you there in my time? My name is A. C." "And I was your scholar! I remember you now," was the unexpected reply. The younger man gave his name, and memories succeeded each other concerning that old school unforgotten by both; and there, side by side, stood the teacher who believed he had done nothing, and the man he had influenced for time and eternity!

A Poacher Becomes a Saint.—"A Home Missionary was once walking in the country town in which he labored for Christ, when a parishioner said to him, 'Look here, sir, I am afraid you are a coward.' 'Why?' he inquired, with surprise. 'Well, there is Bill Blake. You come to see a lot of us, but you never go near him,' was the answer. Bill Blake was a notorious poacher, a wife beater, and generally at the fore-front of every wickedness and devilry in the town. The missionary felt that his critic was about right. He was a coward, or he would have spoken to Blake before about his need of Christ. He went home, and kneeling down, prayed thus: 'Lord, thou knowest I have been a coward; but if thou wilt give me the power, I will go this night and see that man.' He went, and found Bill at home, and as he entered the house was greeted with the words, 'Hilloa, governor, have you come to convert me? If so, I'll soon make an end of you.' 'Bill,' he called to his boy, 'bring me that rope.' A coil of new rope was brought; then the man, placing his boy on a chair, proceeded to bind him hand and foot, until the boy could not move. Then, turning to the missionary, he asked, 'Is he firmly bound?' The visitor passed his hands over the knots, and said, 'Yes, he cannot move.' Then Bill took out of his pocket a big knife. The preacher started. 'Don't be afraid; I'll not harm him,' said Blake, and cut the rope, and the boy was free. Again turning to the missionary, the man said, 'I am just as that boy was, bound hand and foot. If you cannot cut my bonds and set me free, there is the door; if you can, come and do so.' The missionary was equal to the occasion. 'Stop, Bill,' he exclaimed; 'though I am not able to do so, I have a Friend who can.' Then he told him of the power of Christ to save, and Bill Blake, from being the worst sinner in the village, became a most devoted saint."

The Late Dr. Dollinger. (See page 101.)

The Storming of Magdala by Lord Napier.

THE STORMING OF MAGDALA.

(See Illustration.)

THE achievement of delivering the captives of a barbarous king, which is briefly mentioned on page 98 of this issue, in the biographical sketch of Lord Napier, was worthy of a place in the legends of knight-errantry. The story is one of thrilling interest. In the year 1866 King Theodore, of Abyssinia, sent a curious letter to the Queen of England. It is said that it contained an offer of marriage, the news having reached the dusky potentate that Queen Victoria had long been a widow. However that may be, the letter was not answered, and the king, deeming himself slighted, was angry. He seized a white missionary, an English vice-consul, and several other English subjects, and their colored attendants, and thrust them into prison. The English Government sent a Syrian Christian, Mr. Hormuzd Rassam, on a friendly mission to the king, to intercede for the release of the captives; but the king contemptuously thrust the envoy into the same dungeon, thereby showing his disregard of the customs of civilized nations, under which the person of an envoy is sacred.

Some excitement was produced in England by this high-handed procedure, and the Conservatives, who were then in power, resolved to declare war, and rescue the imprisoned people. The Liberals protested, arguing that some of the white captives were Germans, and had no claim on English protection, while the others were too obscure to justify so large an outlay as would be involved in rescuing them. The English people, however, had no sympathy with such reasoning, and approved the decision of the Government, though they knew that at least ten million dollars would be spent in the expedition.

Lord (then Sir Robert) Napier was accordingly sent with a well-equipped force to Abyssinia. The little army made its way through the country; its guns dragged by elephants through mountain defiles, over precipitous ridges, and through dense forests, which were penetrated by roads cut by the engineers attached to the force. Napier learned that King Theodore had carried his prisoners to the mountain city of Magdala, which was said to be inaccessible. He followed, and on April 10, 1868, encountered the Abyssinian army in the plain below. He won an easy victory, and two days later stormed the city itself. The captives were delivered, and King Theodore in a fit of chagrin and terror committed suicide. The English force brought the rescued company to the coast in triumph, and immediately evacuated the country. It was a war undertaken from a sense of duty, and is one of the most creditable in English history; for, in spite of predictions to the contrary, the country gained nothing by the expedition—not even a harbor on the coast, but simply rescued its own citizens from the grasp of a barbarous king.

AN EDUCATIONAL FAILURE.

(See illustration on page 109.)

A LADY who undertakes a business and pledges herself to carry it through to a successful issue, and is, moreover, noted for succeeding in whatever she sets out to do, is apt to say some disagreeable things when she has to confess her failure, and is talking to the person whose perversity has caused the failure. That was Mrs. Mostyn's case, and she did not spare her younger sister, Beatrice Guise, in the interview which took place between them in the pretty summer-house in the shubbery in the rear of her residence. Mrs. Mostyn had chosen that place for the talk, with the intention of using some forcible expressions which she did not care to have the servants overhear, as they might have done if the talk had been held within-doors. So she caught Beatrice just as the latter was going out for a walk, and strolled with her through the grounds until they reached the arbor. Then she said, "Let us sit down here for a few minutes, Beatrice; I want to speak to you seriously." Half an hour later, Mrs. Mostyn having spoken her mind with emphasis, but without effect, went out in stormy mood, overturning her chair in her hasty departure, and leaving Beatrice to meditate on what should be her next step.

When King Saul equipped David for the fight with the giant, putting on him his own armor, he had the best intentions and supposed he was taking the best measures for the protection of the lad in his dangerous enterprise. But David preferred to dispense with the armor. Beatrice Guise had been similarly incommoded by the fashionable attire which her sister had provided for her, and, in addition, had no liking for the enterprise itself. Now she was thinking whether it would not be better to resume her plain, simple dress and return to the home and the occupations which she loved.

A dull, awkward girl was Beatrice Guise, without proper spirit, or proper pride, or proper regard for the proprieties of life. It must have been so, for Mrs. Mostyn made the statement; and Mrs. Mostyn was an accepted authority in the best circles of the great city in which she lived. Mrs. Mostyn could introduce her protégés into the most exclusive society, and the fact that a young lady was approved by Mrs. Mostyn was sufficient to procure for her invitations to balls and parties, and to ensure her a cordial welcome in houses at which a passport of some kind was needed.

She had helped many girls in that way, and she counted on her power to help her sister Beatrice. It was time, in Mrs. Mostyn's opinion, that Beatrice married; and knowing well that in the quiet New England village where she lived she was little likely to marry well—that is, to marry a wealthy and aristocratic suitor—she had written to her mother, a woman as ambitious as herself, urging that Beatrice be sent to her at once, and promising to "form her" and introduce her to fashionable society. Beatrice was accordingly sent, but somehow she had not been "formed."

"I can do nothing for you, Beatrice," she said, when she had taken her seat in the arbor on that summer afternoon. "You are a hopeless case, I believe. You do not even dress as other girls do. You just hang your clothes on any way, as if you did not care how they look. I have given you dresses that are fashionable, but when you put them on they look as if they were on a lay figure—as if they did not belong to you. And last night, when we had invited young Gould on purpose to meet you, you had scarcely a word to say, and left him while you went and talked to the curate about Sunday-schools and the sick poor. You will never secure an eligible husband in that way."

"But I don't want an eligible husband, Clara, and I was much more interested in Mr. Wilson's description of his missions than I ever could be in Mr. Gould's account of the amateur theatricals."

"I am surprised at you, Beatrice," said her sister; "I can scarcely believe you are my sister. Do you suppose I should ever have married Mr. Mostyn or have occupied the position in society I do if I had acted as you are doing?"

"Indeed, Clara, I do not wish to do as you have done. You do not seem to me at all a woman to be envied. You are constantly striving after things that do not seem to me worth struggling after, and you are elated and depressed by occurrences that I should think very trivial—not worth a thought. I would rather be of some use in the world."

Beatrice's outburst astounded her sister, who had never doubted for a moment that the young village girl regarded her as the very highest ideal of a successful and happy lady. She supposed that Beatrice admired and envied her, and was only prevented following her example by sheer incapacity. That Beatrice did not admire her, or her life, or her position, argued a degree of stupidity almost incredible in its density. "I have no patience with you, Beatrice," she said at last; "you had better become a hospital nurse at once. I believe that would be nearer your idea of a happy life."

"It would, indeed," said Beatrice, "and I think it would be a much better life than that you and your friends are living. I do not believe you are really happy after all, and I am sure you are doing no good."

"We do not need a simple school girl's criticism and advice at any rate," said Mrs. Mostyn; and it was then that she flung out of the arbor overturning her chair, indignant at the audacity of this girl, so much her inferior in all that makes a woman charming, in sitting in judgment upon her. Mrs. Mostyn did not like to admit herself defeated, but it seemed very much as if she who had succeeded in so many contests requiring tact and skill, and in which she had contended with women of the world, adepts in all its arts, would be foiled in her efforts to improve her own sister. It was very annoying and vexatious, and Mrs. Mostyn was piqued by the failure. She went to her own room and thought the matter over before she finally decided whether she should give Beatrice another trial or not.

Later in the same day Mrs. Mostyn was surprised by the information that Mrs. Glyn had called to see her. The Glyns were known to her, but they were not in her set, and there had never been any visiting between them. They were a very old and wealthy family, very much respected by good people, but very eccentric. Wealth has claims on the homage even of the people of Mrs. Mostyn's class, unless it is allied with vulgarity, which it certainly was not in Mrs. Glyn's case, and so Mrs. Mostyn received her visitor with the outward deference due from one who knows the ways of the world.

"I came to speak with you," said Mrs. Glyn, "about your sister. We should be so glad if you would bring her to call upon us. Mr. Wilson, the curate of St. Andrew's, has told us how very interesting she is." Mrs. Glyn did not add, as she might have done, that Mr. Wilson had told her that he feared a precious soul was in danger of being led into temptation by a worldly woman, and urged her to make an effort for the poor girl's rescue.

Mrs. Mostyn knowing nothing of this, promptly sent for Beatrice, rightly conjecturing that there might be some affinity between her sister and this wealthy lady, who herself dressed in a style not approved by Mrs. Mostyn's cultivated taste. Beatrice soon appeared, looking, as her sister thought, more dull and sheepish than usual. Mrs. Glyn, however, did not appear repelled by Beatrice's uninteresting appearance, but greeted her with kind cordiality. Beatrice, who had been accustomed to the thinly disguised contempt of her sister's visitors, and to that display of superiority which wounded her sensitive nerves and rendered her more conscious and ill at ease than she generally was, was pleasantly surprised by the manner of this new acquaintance, and was at once drawn toward her by a grateful recognition of sympathy.

It was quickly settled that Beatrice should accept Mrs. Glyn's invitation, and then Mrs. Glyn, by a few simple questions, drew from the girl an account of what she did in her village home. The class she taught in the village school, the cottages of the poor, the little efforts she had made to brighten cheerless homes, and the sufferings of certain favorite humble friends, were all described with a brightness and interest that astonished Mrs. Mostyn, who had never seen her sister so animated before. Finally Mrs. Glyn carried Beatrice off with her on a round of visits she was then making, and Mrs. Mostyn returned to her own room, wondering at the odd fancies some people had, and their strange notions of what constitutes pleasure.

The acquaintance with the Glyns ripened, and many an evening when Mrs. Mostyn was shining resplendent with lace and jewels, the queen of some aristocratic assemblage, Beatrice was in the Glyn mansion discussing with Mrs. Glyn and her daughters the weighty matters connected with the cutting out and manufacture of certain homely garments destined to make glad the heart of some poor distressed Christian. Mrs. Mostyn never succeeded in "forming" her sister, but the attempt was made, and very successfully, by Mrs. Glyn's eldest son, who found Beatrice not so uninteresting nor so dull as Mrs. Mostyn considered her, but declares that she is the best wife a clergyman ever had, and a blessing to the parish. It is only fair to add that his opinion in indorsed in hundreds of poverty-stricken homes.

After a Stormy Interview.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. Their Perils, Pains, and Privations. (Continued from page 94.) Eminent Leaders.

FROM the press established by William Brewster at Leyden, came forth works esteemed no less by the good men of that age, than distasteful to the advocates of absolute uniformity among the people of England. When Cartwright, the Father of English Puritans, was released from prison in 1585, he undertook to refute the Rhemish translation of the New Testament. Queen Elizabeth was herself alive to the necessity of exposing the fallacies of this most subtle weapon of Romanism, and had already applied to the celebrated Beza, when Sir Francis Walsingham referred her to the great Puritan divine, as no less able to cope with the chosen champions of Popery.

Archbishop Whitgift, however, was of a different opinion, and preferred leaving the Rhemists unanswered, rather than intrust the defence of the doctrines of the Church of England to one disaffected to its discipline. "Disheartened hereat," says Fuller, "Cartwright desisted, but some years after, encouraged by an honorable lord, resumed his work; but, prevented by death, perfected no further than the fifteenth chapter of Revelation. Many years lay this worthy work neglected, and the copy mouse-eaten in part, when the printer excused some defects herein in his edition, which, though late, at last came forth, Anno, 1618."

The printer who thus apologized for the unavoidable blanks in this Defence of the Protestant Scriptures, which the Archbishop of Canterbury consigned to the moths and the mice, was none other than William Brewster. In a letter from the Hague in 1619, by Sir Dudley Carelston, addressed to Secretary Naunton, Brewster is referred to, not only as the printer of Cartwright's Confutation of the Rhemists' Translation, but as either himself the printer, or privy to the writing and printing, of all the Nonconformist works which issued from the press in Holland, for distribution in England and Scotland.

He appears to have rendered himself peculiarly obnoxious to the Court by the publication of a book entitled De Regimine Ecclesie Scoticanæ. Such was the indignation of James's Government at this and similar controversial works, that Brewster had to flee from Leyden, and to take refuge in England from the emissaries of its own Government. It seems probable, from all that appears, that he was in hiding there while the negotiations were being carried on with the merchant adventurers for the transportation of the exiled Church to Virginia, and this no doubt contributed to confirm the intending emigrants in their desire to secure an asylum beyond the Atlantic.

No printing-press was needed in the early years of the settlement at Plymouth Bay. Each of the Pilgrims doubtless bore with him his well-thumbed Bible, in itself a sufficient library for the pious colonists. William Brewster thenceforth shared in the labors of the planters, and in the oversight of the colony, though in the latter he bore a less prominent share than might have been anticipated. He was fully sixty years of age when he landed with his brethren to face the rigors of their first winter in New England, in all probability the oldest of the Pilgrim Fathers. The venerable elder thenceforth moved amid his little flock, enforcing, by precept and example, the principles which he maintained with undeviating integrity amid so many vicissitudes and trials, and exhibiting amid the first rude log-huts of Old Leyden Street, the same polished courtesy of the Christian and the gentleman with which he had graced in earlier years the Court of Queen Elizabeth, and the Council Hall of the Hague.

In glancing back on the annals of the Pilgrim Fathers, the brave men who presided over the civil affairs of the colony during the period of its early growth occupy no less prominent a share of our interest than those who formed their spiritual guides. The first journal of the Pilgrims ends March 23, 1621, with the election of a Governor for the infant settlement, when the choice fell upon Mr. John Carver, the faithful friend of the exiles of New England. It is curious that, notwithstanding the pre-eminence, both in personal worth, and in wealth and station, which led to the unanimous choice of Carver as the first Governor of the colony, scarcely anything is known of his previous history.

He appears to have been a man possessed of considerable wealth, which he generously shared with his Christian brethren, bearing a considerable proportion, both of the whole necessary cost, and of the chief labor and anxieties consequent on the removal from Leyden to New England. Of his integrity and disinterested zeal, the colony had received abundant proof. As he had borne so large a share in the cost of the plantation, and had taken so prominent a part in all the arrangements needful for carrying it into effect, the new settlers could not fail to have unbounded confidence in his honest zeal for the successful carrying out of their scheme of colonization, and therefore it is probable that the choice fell upon him as first Governor of New Plymouth, almost as a matter of course.

In the MS. records of Plymouth Church, the following brief but most honorable tribute to his memory occurs: "I may not omit to take notice of the sad loss the church and this infant commonwealth sustained by the death of Mr. John Carver, who was one of the deacons of the church in Leyden, but now had been, and was, their first Governor. This worthy gentleman was one of singular piety, and rare for humility, which appeared, as otherwise, so by his great condescendency, whereas this miserable people were in great sickness. He shunned not to do very mean services for them, yea, the meanest of them. He bare a share likewise of their labor in his own person, according as their great necessity required. Who being one also of a considerable estate, spent the main part of it in this enterprise, and from first to last approved himself not only as their agent in the first transacting of things, but also all along to the period of his life, to be a pious, faithful, and very beneficial instrument. He deceased in the month of April in the year 1621, and is now reaping the fruit of his labor with the Lord."

The re-election of Mr. Carver as Governor of the colony had taken place little more than a fortnight before; and now the sorrowing Pilgrims were called upon to lay their chief in his unnoted resting-place close by the bleak seashore, where the Pilgrims secretly buried their dead near by the rock which their descendants revere as the noblest monument of these Pilgrim Fathers. It was literally but a step from the landing to the grave where the first Governor of New England rested from all his cares and pains.

There is a simple dignity in the brief history of this Governorship worthy of the Cincinnatus of America's first free settlement. His wealth and talents were the property of his people, and expended to the utmost on their behalf. In return, he bore the full weight of all their sorrows and anxieties; nor did he shrink from the humblest or the meanest duties in which they shared, but took a foremost part, alike in the burdens of government, the cares of the hospital, and the labors of the field. He fell, like a gallant soldier, fighting in the van.

His death is thus briefly noted in the journal of his successor. "While we are busy about our seed, our Governor, Mr. Carver, comes out of the field very sick, complains greatly of his head. Within a few hours his senses fail, so as he speaks no more, and in a few days after dies, to our great lamentation and heaviness. His care and pains were so great for the common good, as therewith, it is thought, he oppressed himself and shortened his days; of whose loss we cannot sufficiently complain."

They laid him at rest in the same spot already consecrated by the dust of so many friends. Lest the Indians should learn of their weakness, and take courage from that to assail the little band of suffering exiles, they had been compelled to bury their dead in secret, and to level the graves and to sow them, for the purpose of concealment. But they departed from their wonted caution in laying their first Governor in his grave, bestowing on him such honors as it was in their power to confer. "He was buried," says Morton, "in the best manner they could, with as much solemnity as they were in a capacity to perform, with the discharge of some volleys of shot of all that bare arms."

The following brief summary in the Chronicles of the Pilgrims is all that we know of his descendants. Amid the life-struggles of the young colony other thoughts possessed them than the founding of families, or the careful records of heraldic trees. "Nothing is known of Carver previous to his appointment in 1617 as one of the agents of the church at Leyden. Nor is anything known of his immediate descendants. It will be seen by the Compact, that there were eight persons in his family. He lost a son, Dec. 6, and his daughter Elizabeth married John Howland. The name of Carver does not appear in the assignment of the lands in 1623, nor in the division of the cattle in 1627; nor does it occur at any subsequent time in the annals of the colony. 'His children attained no civil honors; they rose to no distinction; but, less fortunate than the children of the other Governors, they remained in obscurity, and were unnoticed by the people.' William, the grandson (or nephew) of the Governor, died at Marshfield, Oct. 2, 1760, at the age of 102. Not long before his death, this grandson, with his son, his grandson, and great-grandson, were all at work together without doors, and the great-grand-grandson was in the house at the same time. Many of the name are still living in various parts of the old colony.

The town of Carver, in Plymouth County, will help to perpetuate it."

The successor to Governor Carver was Mr. William Bradford, and along with him, Mr. Isaac Allerton was elected as his assistant. Carver claims the foremost place among the early Governors of New England, not simply because he was the first on whom the choice of the colonists devolved the onerous duties of a ruler, but because, with persevering self-denial, and generous self-sacrificing zeal, he tended on the birth of the colony, and nursed it in its earliest hours. That done, his duties were at an end, his work was accomplished, he entered into his rest; and the cares of government devolved on a successor whose name is still had in honorable remembrance among his people, as him who reared the humble settlement of Plymouth Bay amid its earliest hardships and perils, and guided its course with consummate skill during a period of thirty years.

Dr. Cheever remarks of him, that his character was not unlike that of Washington: "Nay," says he, "there is a very striking resemblance!" The same author discovers in him, very shortly after, a resemblance scarcely less striking to Franklin. "He was a man whose natural stamp of character was very much like Franklin's; but in him a calm and noble nature was early renewed and enriched by grace, and brought under its supreme domination; not left to attach itself to earth only, or to exhibit the qualities of a sage, in the wisdom of mere mortal humanity."

Great men are not thus the mere repetitions of one ideal. It would be strange indeed, if, amid the infinite varieties of nature, the giants of America, during the generations of her new existence, were but successive reproductions of the one type which the infant state of New England supplied. But it was not so. Bradford resembles Washington and Franklin only in the same degree in which he possessed virtues and genius which are common to all the great and the good men, both of the Old and the New World. Placed in similar circumstances, all truly good men are found to exhibit striking resemblances, from the very contrast which they present to the no less familiar assimilations which pervade the common herd. But their resemblance is far greater in the possession of a distinct individuality, which distinguishes all of them from the multitude, and each of them from all others.

Governor Bradford was a man of unobtrusive virtue and sterling worth, well fitted to guide the colony through the perils that beset its early years. He was born at Austerfield in Yorkshire, in 1558, the heir to a considerable landed inheritance. The death of his parents, while he was yet a child, left him to the guardianship of relatives, who considered that they amply provided for the heir to a rich paternal inheritance by instructing him in "the innocent trade of husbandry." It was no act of special neglect which thus abandoned him to no better education than sufficed for the children of a Yorkshire farmer in the sixteenth century, and was deemed no insufficient stock of knowledge for a Yorkshire squire in times much nearer our own day. William Bradford, however, was not so easily satisfied. He looked back with gratitude in after years to early and long-protracted sickness, as a means by which God in kind providence had withheld him from the temptations and the excesses to which the orphan heir of a wealthy inheritance is peculiarly exposed. To the same years of early sickness was probably due much which influenced his whole future career.

We can still picture to ourselves the pale, intelligent, thoughtful English boy, shut out by indisposition from the ordinary boisterous sports of youth, and destitute of the literary pastimes which now beguile the duller youths into occasional perusal of a book, not as a task but as a recreation. Deprived of other means of occupation, the orphan boy took refuge in his own thoughts. His Bible, moreover, supplied food for meditation and serious reflection; nor is it improbable, though no note of it is recorded, that his hours of sickness and solitude were sometimes broken in upon by some pious neighbor, who, amid the stringent formalities of re-established Protestantism, was venturing to judge for himself in the concerns of his religious faith.

Certain it is, that William Bradford, while a mere boy, manifested an earnest impression of the power of religious truth, and incurred no slight ridicule and ill-will by casting in his lot with the despised Nonconformists who thus early attracted the attention and opposition of Queen Elizabeth's Government in the north of England, by opinions, in relation to ecclesiastical polity and personal faith, derived from the presumed example of the primitive church. He was subjected to the displeasure of his relatives, and the scorn of his neighbors, as a religious enthusiast and fanatic; but both were alike ineffectual in tempting him from his course.

The preacher whose ministry fell on the heart of the orphan boy like the refreshing showers of spring on the green blades of the early grain was Mr. Richard Clifton, of whom we learn little more than that he was an old man of exemplary piety and self-denying zeal, whose labors in the cause of truth had produced no slight influence on the obscure corner of Yorkshire in which the little village of Austerfield lay. He was a man whose gray hairs told that he had witnessed many changes of that eventful era; had escaped perchance from the bloody agents of Mary's blind zeal, and hailed with joy and thanksgivings the accession of Elizabeth. He is described in the Governor's History of the Colony, as "a grave and reverend preacher, who by his pains and diligence had been a means of converting many."

The band of English Nonconformists who united themselves by a solemn covenant in the fellowship of the gospel, and afterward sought in exile the liberty of conscience denied them at home, are described as "of several towns and villages, some in Nottinghamshire, some in Lincolnshire, and some in Yorkshire, where they bordered nearest together." Mr. Richard Clifton appears to have been the evangelist of Yorkshire, under whom the brethren that went forth from thence into exile were gathered together, ere they cast in their lot with those who ultimately formed the Pilgrim Fathers of New England. But the good old man's course was well-nigh run. In his old age he was driven forth by persecution from the land of his birth and the scene of his ministerial labors only to find a grave among strangers. He shared with Robinson the pastoral charge of the exiled Church until its removal from Amsterdam to Leyden. He was then far advanced in years, and, in the near anticipation of the great final change, he shrank from another removal. It was well that it should be so. The aged Pilgrim was soon after called to his final home. But pious hands laid him in his last resting-place, and tears of true affection were shed as they committed his mortal remains to the dust, to await the resurrection morn.

His history is thus briefly summed up in Governor Bradford's Dialogue: "Mr. Richard Clifton was a grave and fatherly old man when he came first into Holland, having a great white beard; and pity it was that such a reverend old man should be forced to leave his country, and at those years to go into exile. But it was his lot; and he bore it patiently. Much good had he done in the country where he lived, and converted many to God by his faithful and painful ministry, both in preaching and catechizing. Sound and orthodox he always was, and so continued to his end. He belonged to the church at Leyden; but being settled at Amsterdam, and thus aged, he was loath to remove any more; and so when they removed, he was dismissed to them there, and there remained until he died."

When the Nonconformists of the north of England resolved to brave all for conscience' sake, and rather give up their country with its most endearing ties than sacrifice their faith, which they valued more than life itself, William Bradford appears to have cast in his lot among them with all the generous impetuosity of youthful enthusiasm. He was scarcely nineteen years of age when the attempted escape to Holland, in 1607, was frustrated by the catchpole officers of Government. Nevertheless he was one of those seized by them at Boston, stripped of their money and goods, and cast into prison. Even after he had effected his escape, and had reached Zealand—which he appears to have done before the most of his companions in the first attempted flight renewed their efforts—he was threatened with a repetition of former sufferings. He had not been long on shore when he was apprehended and dragged before the magistrates, at the instigation of an envious and malignant fellow-passenger, who accused him as a criminal fleeing from England. When the magistrates of Zealand had learned the nature of young Bradford's crimes, and the cause of his seeking the protection of their Government, he was dismissed with assurances of safety and welcome, and joyfully repaired to the appointed place of rendezvous of his friends at Amsterdam.

(To be Continued.)

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown. Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Gathering Jewels;

OR,

The Secret of a Beautiful Life.

A splendid book, bound in cloth and gold. Illustrated.

BISHOP VINCENT says: "In 'Gathering Jewels' the story is well told; the subject, which a gracious Providence furnished, is unusually rich and prolific of evangelical facts and teachings. The book should go into thousands of homes."

New York Witness says: "The material for this volume teems with spiritual food for reflection, and is calculated to inspire many to the work of saving souls. It illustrates the power of prayer, and shows that the sweetest contentment may be found in 'gathering jewels' for the heavenly kingdom that may 'shine in His glory, bright for His crown.'"

This book has been strongly endorsed by The Christian Herald, having republished two full columns from its pages in its issue of Aug. 2d, 1888.

Send a paper Dollar or Stamps at our risk, and we will send you a book post-paid. A celebrated Van Eyren adjustable book cover free with each book if requested.

CHRISTIAN NATION, Publishers, 252 Broadway, New York.

NATURAL STONE FILTER.

GATE CITY

STONE FILTER CO.

JOHN A. DAVENPORT, Gen. Man.

16 MURRAY ST., NEW YORK.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Write to Ridge & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. W. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

$80 SALARY, $40 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment, at home or traveling. No soliciting. Duties delivering and making collections. No Postal Cards. Address with stamp, HAFFER & CO., Platts, O.

THE Late Hon. John Roach, America's Great Shipbuilder, Lived Wholly on BOVININE for Two Months. His Son, Stephen W. Roach, in a Letter, said: "For more than two months past the nature of the disease from which my father was suffering has totally precluded the use of solid food, and it was at first feared that, from inability to administer proper nourishment, his strength would fail rapidly. To my BOVININE has been able to supply that need of the system, being in a palatable, highly condensed form, easily assimilated under all conditions."

THE "OSTRICH PLUME" CHRYSANTHEMUM

(Mrs. Alpheus Hardy).

PETER HENDERSON & CO. NEW YORK

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S ROSES AND SEEDS. We offer postpaid at your door the LARGEST STOCK of ROSES in America, all varieties, sizes and prices. New CLEMATIS and CLIMBING VINES. New Hardy FLOWERING PLANTS. New Summer FLOWERING BULBS. ALL THE FINEST NEW ROSES, New CHRYSANTHEMUMS, GLADIOLUS, TUBER ROSES, New MOON FLOWERS, New and Rare FLOWER & VEGETABLE SEEDS. New GRAPES. Satisfaction guaranteed. OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., handsomely illustrated. Write for it FREE. It will pay you to see it before buying. Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., Rose Growers and Seedsmen, West Grove, Pa.

For 25 Cents we will send one regular size packet each of the rare and lovely deep blue Torenia Fournieri illustrated above, the ever-changing gorgeous new Shirley Poppies, the dwarf fragrant Little Gem Sweet Abyssum, many varieties mixed of Choice German Asters, elegant mixed colors of Burpee's Superb Camellia-Flowered Balsams, finest mixed varieties of Chinese and Japanese Pinks, extra fine mixed New and Beautiful Ipomoeas, choice Mixed Pansies, Fordhook strain of Superfine Petunia hybrida, and the twelve best varieties of New Sweet Peas Mixed, making in all TEN PACKETS FOR 25 cents and known as BURPEE'S GEM COLLECTION FOR 1890.

Purchased separately these ten varieties would cost 85 cts., but we will mail the entire collection for 25 cts. cash or postage stamps, or Five Gem Collections mailed for $1. Illustrations and directions for culture printed on each pkt. We are extensive growers of the BEST FLOWER SEEDS and this Special Offer is made to induce all lovers of beautiful flowers to give our seeds a thorough trial. Order Now! and if you have not yet received it, write also for BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1890. A handsome book of 128 pages, with hundreds of illustrations and beautiful colored plates painted from nature. It tells about the BEST SEEDS, Bulbs, Plants, &c., including Rare NOVELTIES that cannot be obtained elsewhere. Entirely free from sensational and exaggerated descriptions, it is a trustworthy Guide, of great value to every one who cultivates a garden in town or country. W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO. Seedsmen - PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SEEDS.

My Annual PRICED CATALOGUE is now ready and mailed free to all applicants. It contains all the leading and most popular sorts of VEGETABLE, FARM AND FLOWER SEEDS. Besides all the desirable novelties of last season, and nearly every thing else in my line of business.

ALFRED BRIDGEMAN, 37 East 19th St., New York City.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE.

If you are thinking about building a house you should send 25 cents for my new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up, costing from $300 to $5,000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house, and will suit you almost as well as if you paid $5 for a book. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 ROSE ST., New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT FARRAND & VOTY. ORGANS. DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.—A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full terms address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

BEECHAM'S PILLS ACT LIKE MAGIC ON A WEAK STOMACH. 25cts. a Box OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

ASTHMA CURED. DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE. address, we will mail trial bottle FREE. DR. TAFT BROS., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Some Children Growing Too Fast become listless, fretful, without energy, thin and weak. But you can fortify them and build them up, by the use of

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES Of Lime and Soda.

They will take it readily, for it is almost as palatable as milk. And it should be remembered that AS A PREVENTIVE OR CURE OF COUGHS OR COLDS, IN BOTH THE OLD AND YOUNG, IT IS UNEQUALLED. Avoid substitutions offered.

A New Work of Large Worth for Christian Workers.

SEED CORN;

OR,

Thoughts, Themes and Illustrations for Pulpit and Platform and for Home Reading.

By Rev. C. PERRIN, Ph. D.,

Fellow of the Society of Science, Letters & Art, London.

This new and exceedingly helpful volume will be appreciated by all who have occasion to prepare for THE PULPIT, THE PRAYER-MEETING, OR OTHER OCCASION OF PUBLIC ADDRESS.

Although no less than two hundred authors have been drawn upon to supply the material for this work, it is believed that the great mass of illustrative matter will be found entirely new and fresh—embracing between 300 and 400 pages of original and carefully selected illustrative excerpts covering a wide range of subjects.

No public speaker need be reminded of the effective power of an apt illustration or simile, or the difficulty of obtaining such as are both fresh and to the point.

SEED CORN consists of the material from a working pastor's note book, gathered during a ministry of over a quarter of a century. It is issued with the confidence that it will be found to meet, to a very large extent, a felt need.

An attractive 12mo vol., fine cloth, price, $1.50. J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

Nasal Catarrh can be easily, quickly, pleasantly, and lastingly cured, providing one knows how. I do know how, can do it, and guarantee just such a cure. MY HEALING CATARRH POWDER (perfectly soluble) will positively and effectually cure in a few days only any ordinary case not complicated with scrofula. There is no humbug and no disappointment about it. I know what I am talking about, and what I say is the TRUTH; if not, denounce me in this paper as a fraud. Many thousands of packages sold in past twelve years, and I hereby declare upon oath that I seldom have a complaint, and do not know of a failure to cure in all this time. It is perfectly harmless, safe and pleasant to use, clears the head without sneezing, purifies, heals, stops and cures every discharge from the nose, sweetens the breath, and cures catarrh in all its stages. A package, enough to last two weeks, and more than enough to surely and infallibly cure nearly every case, sent post-paid for only 25 cents by GEO. N. STODDARD, 1226 Niagara St., Buffalo, N. Y. Have been in drug business in Buffalo over 22 years. Have my own good reasons for offering this incomparable remedy at so low a price. Mention this paper.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS. Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines into their proper position. With light pressure Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous illa. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

STILLNESS.

Be silent to God; let Him mould thee. — LUTHER.

Thy lesson art thou learning,
O tried and weary soul?
His ways art thou discerning
Who works to make thee whole?
In the haven of submission
Art thou satisfied and still?
Art thou clinging to the Father,
'Neath the shadow of His will?
Now while His arms enfold thee,
Think well, He loveth best,
Be still and He shall mould thee,
For His heritage of rest.

The vessel must be shapen
For the joys of Paradise;
The soul must have her training
For the service of the skies;
And if the great Refiner
In furnaces of pain
Would do His work more truly,
Count all His dealings gain.
For He Himself hath told thee
Of tribulations here;
Be still and let Him mould thee
For the changeless there.

From vintages of sorrow
Are deepest joys distilled,
And the cup outstretched for healing
Is oft at Marah filled.
God leads to joy through weeping,
To quietness through strife,
Through yielding into conquest,
Through death to endless life.
Be still, He hath enrolled thee
For the kingdom and the crown;
Be silent, let Him mould thee
Who calleth thee His own.

Such silence is communion,
Such stillness is a shrine;
The fellowship of suffering
An ordinance divine.
And the secrets of abiding
Most fully are declared
To those who with the Master
Gethsemane have shared.
Then trust Him to uphold thee,
'Mid the shadows and the gloom;
Be still and he shall mould thee
For His Presence and for Home.

For Resurrection stillness
There is Resurrection Power;
And the prayer and praise of trusting
May glorify each hour;
And common days are holy,
And years an Eastertide,
For those who with the Risen One
In Risen Life abide.
Then let His true love fold thee,
Keep silent at His word;
Be still and He shall mould thee;
O rest thee in the Lord.

E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York
I furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets sorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

There is more experience, time, and brain work presented in the preparation of Hood's Sarsaparilla than in any other medicine. It is this high makes Hood's Sarsaparilla peculiar.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of
r. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their facsimile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressing needed, and can be mailed to
the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

AGENTS: F. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shots at Sundry Targets, by Talmage
$2.50. Quick sales. Big
pay. Also, Mother,
Home & Heaven,
400 best authors E. and
by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75.
192,000 sold. 5000
Copies of Bible $2.25. By Mail E.B.TREAT, N.Y.

"Demonology or Spiritualism,
Scientific and Modern."—"An effective weapon."
"A word of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History, facts and its—Scores saved already. Whole communities awakened. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1.
Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

PLAYS! Speakers; Dialogues; Books of Games,
Sports and Amusements, Charades, Mazeaux, etc. Catalogue sent free on application to
THE DEWITT PUBLISHING HOUSE,
33 Rose Street, New York.

trated, embracing "THE BEST FLOWERS ONLY," and is mailed FREE to any address.
ROBERT SCOTT & SON, 19th & Catharine Sts., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SCOTT'S DEWDROP BEGONIA.

The Greatest Novelty in Begonias.
Always in bloom; flowers satiny-white, shaded to delicate rose in color, with golden stamens; will stand the strong sun during summer, and will grow and thrive anywhere. We own the entire stock of this, the Greatest Triumph in Begonias (one plant will bear 75 to 100 clusters). We will mail, postpaid, good strong plants for 25 cts. each; 5 for $1.00; 12 for $2.60.

ORCHID WATER LILY.

This rare Pontederia will be all the rage, as it can be grown in any jar or cask, and will bloom the entire summer. Balloon-shaped sacks filled with air enable the whole plant to float on the surface of the water; lovely orchid-like flowers, in clusters, delicate lilac, shading to rose, spotted orange. 35 cts.; 4 for $1.00.

ORDER NOW! FOR 50 CTS.

We will mail one plant each of Dewdrop Begonia and Orchid Water Lily. In ordering ask for SCOTT'S CATALOGUE FOR 1890, fully illustrated, and is mailed FREE to any address.

CHARLES DICKENS' WORKS, FOR THE MILLION.

15 VOLUMES FOR ONLY $1.50.

THE GREATEST OFFER EVER MADE BY ANY BOOK PUBLISHER.

GOOD PAPER! CLEAR PRINT! NEAT BINDING!

The usual price for the cheapest set of Dickens' Novels has heretofore been $10.00. Owing to the present low price of printing paper and a very large contract with a leading book manufacturer, we are enabled to offer the most extraordinary bargain in good literature ever heard of.

OVER 5200 PAGES OF READING MATTER are comprised in this set of Dickens.

15 Handsomely Made, Convenient Sized Books, Only $1.50.

Dickens' Works are the most widely read of any novels printed in any language. The popularity of Dickens is ever increasing, and every person should own a full set of his works.
Charles Dickens is eminently the novelist of the people. His books teem with shafts of sparkling wit, touches of pathos, thrusts of satire; his characters are original and real, as well as quaint and grotesque; he unmasks vice in all its forms. The lights and shadows of life are delineated in a thrilling and dramatic style. To own a complete set of his incomparable books is to be possessed of an inexhaustible mine of interesting literature. No person is well read who has not perused them.

The entire 15 Volumes will be sent Free of Express or Delivery Charges, for Only $1.50.

Black House, Little Dorrit, Great Expectations, Sketches by Boz, Dombey & Son, Martin Chuzzlewit, Pickwick Papers, Uncommercial Traveler, Our Mutual Friend, David Copperfield, Mystery of Edwin Drood, Christmas Stories, Barnaby Rudge, Oliver Twist, Tale of Two Cities, Old Curiosity Shop, American Notes, Hard Times, Nicholas Nickleby, Reprinted Pieces.

This set of Dickens is not for sale by newsdealers and booksellers.

NOT CHEAP, TRASHY BOOKS!

These 15 Volumes are each about 5 x 7 1/4 inches in size and of uniform thickness. The printing is clear and the type good. They are printed from plates made for this edition. Not Condensed or Abridged.

DO YOU WANT THIS SET?

Never before has the opportunity been presented for securing so much valuable reading matter for so small an amount. It is really a whole library of Standard Works at the price of the commonest trash. If you wish to get this set you should send in your order at once, that it may be among the first, and that you lose no time in enjoying the ownership of it. Address

J. BRIDE & CO., 54 & 56 Duane St., New York.

"QUITTING THE MANSE,"

A master-piece of the heroic steel engravings of the century.

This engraving is intended to commemorate an incident in the Disruption of the Scottish Church in 1843, when nearly 500 ministers resigned their stipends, manes, social positions, and what men most tenaciously regard, for conscience sake, in what they esteemed the cause of truth. Just published. 16x23 1/2 inches. Sent securely wrapped, post paid, for a paper dollar or stamps, at our risk.

Mrs. Jane B. Clark, Rochester, N. Y. writes: "The picture is a splendid piece of high art."

CHRISTIAN NATION,
252 Broadway, New York.

WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell
"The Christian's Legacy."
One young man started on the 13th of December
and ordered 50 copies before the 31st of December.
102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150
Nassau St., New York

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in his popular work
"Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as one especially to be recommended for young, weak, or doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tendered you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and would gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; we earnestly hope that in no more may be benefited by it.—Preface.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind, and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price,
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

SPRING DRESS GOODS for 1890.

We have just placed on sale fifty cases of medium and rich Dress Goods for Spring and Summer, being the initial opening in this Department.

A early inspection is invited.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

THE ONE GOSPEL;

OR,

The Combination of the Narratives of the Four Evangelists in one Complete Record.

Edited by Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D.

12mo, Flexible Cloth, Red Edges, 75 Cents.
Limp Morocco, Full Gilt, $2.00.

Without taking the place of the four Gospels this book may be an aid in their study—a commentary wholly biblical, whereby the reader may, at one view, see the complete and harmonious testimony of four dependent witnesses.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers,
740 & 742 Broadway, New York.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

By Rev. JAS. STALKER, M. A.

A new edition, with introduction, by
REV. GEO. C. LORIMER, D. D.

12mo, cloth, 166 pages, 60 cents.

This work is in truth "Multum in Parvo," containing within small compass a vast amount of most helpful teaching, so admirably arranged that the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole revealed record of the life work of our Lord in a nutshell of space and with a minimum of study.

"This book is an example of the fact that in real practical value, a little book may be worth more than a big one."—The Standard.

"It is designed as a hand-book for Bible Class, and fills a niche left vacant by all its predecessors."— Christian Instructor.

"This task is admirably performed. We have been charmed with the author's skill in presenting so briefly, yet so satisfactorily, such a view of the surroundings, and the teachings and the doings of Jesus. It is a book that we can heartily recommend."—Christian Standard.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

New Edition Just Published.

GOD IN BUSINESS.

A REMARKABLE RECORD OF DIVINE HELPS AND DELIVERANCES TO CHRISTIAN BUSINESS MEN.

This book is a record of God's dealings with His people in business. The author begins with personal testimony. Then follows the experience of more than 100 of God's people who desire to acknowledge that they were helped by Him in business. * * * The incidents here recorded are of such a wonderful character that it is not an easy matter to lay down the book until every page is perused. A short sketch of the life of John S.
Creed, of Brooklyn, is a most wonderful record of divine guidance and help. Here then is testimony that there is a God-force waiting to be used in all prayer and faith for all our affairs. It is a truth that all God's people need more and more to study.
—Presbyterian Messenger (London).

This is a well-intended book, and one moreover, that is built on such a foundation that it is impossible to shake it. * * * If young business men will read they may learn from it a lesson that may prove of great commercial value.—Methodist Times (London).

Bound in Cloth. Price, 85 Cents.

Paper Cover, 50 Cents.

* * * Sent post paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

STENOGRAPHY.

AND

TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching; long established; hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free.
Write or call. VERMILY'S COLLEGE,
816 Broadway, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XIII., No. 8. Office, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF GEN. FONSECA and
REV. ENRIQUE HERNANDEZ Y ORTIZ.
THE GLORIOUS CHRIST. Dr. Talmage's Sermon
Last Sunday Morning.
THE MEXICAN CHURCH OF JESUS. By Rt. Rev.
H. C. Riley, Bishop of Mexico.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE: Mohammedan Cemeteries—Capernaum—A Stay in an Old Khan, etc.
JESUS AT NAZARETH. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
AN UNEXPECTED GUEST.
A Sermon in an Empty Room—An Indian's Ordeal—A Man Reclaimed by Love—A Bar-tender's Rescue, etc.
PROPHETIC ASPECT OF THE EPIDEMIC.

SOMETHING DONE FOR JESUS. . A New Sermon by
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
ANECDOTES AT EVANGELISTIO MEETINGS.
PORTRAITS OF PROF. AND MRS. D. B. TOWNER.
PORTRAIT OF THE LATE BISHOP LIGHTFOOT.
PICTURE OF CATHEDRAL IN MADAGASCAR.
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. (Continued.)

GEN. DEODORO DA FONSECA.

REV. ENRIQUE HERNANDEZ Y ORTIZ.

The New President of Brazil—A Mexican Evangelist—The Government Building at Buenos Ayres.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE general interest aroused throughout the country by the Pan-American Conference in the political, social, and religious condition of the countries to the south of the United States is fully shared by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and they have, in a practical way, manifested their recognition of the duties of Christians in regard to them. The closer bond that is now being arranged between the United States and those countries appeals to churches, merchants, and statesmen. It is in recognition of this fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this week, true to its principle of dealing with the subjects of general interest, publishes the portraits and picture on the preceding page.

Deodoro da Fonseca, President of the United States of Brazil, is fifty-five years of age. He comes of Portuguese stock; his father, while living in Portugal, received some concessions of land in Brazil, and went there to turn them to account. He married a Brazilian lady, and had three sons, of whom the present President is the eldest. He was sent to the Polytechnic School in the Brazilian capital, and at the end of his course entered the army. He was at once sent to the front in the expedition then engaged against Paraguay, and by his valor and strategic skill rose to the rank of general. Dom Pedro, the Emperor, was highly pleased with the young General, and gave him the command of the army in Matto Grosso. Subsequently the Emperor gave him control of the arsenal and military arms manufactory at Rio. He was thus the most influential military officer in the Empire. In that capacity he was frequently annoyed by the lax management and general deterioration which, during the Emperor's later years, affected all departments of the Government. He, with a few other officers, organized a military club, in which these subjects were discussed. Fonseca became its president, and it was the popularity he gained in that office which, doubtless, led to his being chosen President of the country after the revolution.

The Rev. Enrique Hernandez y Ortiz, whose portrait also appears on the first page, is a man of very different type. He is a devoted laborer for Jesus in Mexico. The hatred manifested against gospel preachers in that country is so virulent that to preach there needs the moral courage and intrepidity of a soldier in an enemy's land. He is the son of an earnest Christian family in Mexico, and was educated in one of the schools established by Bishop Riley in that land. He was converted early in life; and showed so much intelligence, true piety, and zeal that the Bishop encouraged him to devote his life to the work of the ministry. The careful training he enjoyed has not been wasted. An earnest, faithful, devoted laborer he has proved, and is now one of the foremost of the little band of preachers who are proclaiming the gospel as it is in Jesus through the country. He is the pastor of one of the churches belonging to Bishop Riley in the city of Mexico, and, not content with the labors involved in that position, he is a diligent teacher in the schools in which he received his education. He is married to a charming lady who was also educated in those schools, and who zealously helps him in his work. It is a sign of the diligence and perspicacity of this young couple that, finding that the best works on evangelical religion are in the English language, they have laboriously learned that tongue, and read and speak it easily. We may add that they are readers and admirers of this journal, and appreciate the help it gives them in their work.

The Government Building of Buenos Ayres, a picture of which also appears on the first page, is an evidence of the wealth and magnificence of the Argentine Republic. The picture will prove to our readers that the people who can erect such a structure are not the semi-civilized, disorderly people they are supposed to be by the great bulk of the public here. The growth of the country is enormous, and the fortunes which are being made there by immigrants are prodigious. Every immigrant going there is entitled to 250 acres of good land, free, and may purchase, at seventy-five cents of our money an acre, as much more as he wishes, up to 1,500 acres. Last year 124,000 immigrants from Europe took advantage of this liberal offer. The city of Buenos Ayres is much like an American city. The streets are straight, and intersect each other at right angles at distances of 150 yards. The chief buildings are the Capitol, represented on the first page, a Roman Catholic cathedral, two large hospitals, and the University. It is interesting to learn that a few years ago about twenty school teachers from the United States were brought to Buenos Ayres. One of these, Miss Clara Armstrong, was made the subject of complaint to the Government. She was recently accused, by the Papal envoy, of teaching heresy in the schools. His charges were investigated by the Minister of Education, who reported to the President. The Government decided to support Miss Armstrong in her position, and the Roman Catholic complainant was expelled from the country for interfering in civil affairs.

The Christian work in Mexico has frequently been the subject of comment in this journal. The noble effort Bishop Riley is making, against formidable obstacles, to make the glad news of salvation, through Christ alone, known throughout the country, cannot be too highly commended. He has given all his large private fortune to it, and all the labor of his life. Our readers have given him their cordial support thus far, and we hope they will continue to do so. They will be glad to have the following encouraging report of his work from his pen:

CHRISTIAN WORK IN MEXICO.

By the Rt. Rev. H. Chauncey Riley, D. D.

MUCH earnest Christian work has been faithfully done in Mexico for years past. By God's help and blessing, very important results have been obtained in connection with that work. Congregations have been gathered in many parts of the republic of Mexico, that meet regularly for Christian worship, and that maintain the Christian faith in its primitive purity and integrity.

Over forty of these congregations were, years since, carefully organized into a general Mexican Church organization. This general Mexican Church organization, embracing more than forty congregations, is known in Mexico by the title of "The Church of Jesus."

Abroad it is often spoken of by the fuller title of the "Mexican Church of our Lord Jesus Christ." In connection with this Mexican Church of our Lord Jesus Christ, Christian schools and orphanages have been established, where a large number of bright boys and girls have received a good secular education and been carefully taught the Holy Scriptures. Faithful and earnest Christian young men have been carefully educated for the ministry by members of this Mexican Church of our Lord Jesus Christ, and many able publications teaching the great truths of the gospel have been printed from its press. The gospel has been faithfully preached, and congregations of the Mexican Church of our Lord Jesus Christ have gathered regularly for Christian worship in two beautiful stone church buildings in the city of Mexico for many years past.

The Workers.

Besides the Rev. Enrique Hernandez y Ortiz, to whom reference has already been made, another very faithful worker in the Mexican Church of our Lord Jesus Christ is Mr. Albert E. Mackintosh. He is the son of an English gentleman who for many years resided in Mexico and married a Mexican lady. Mr. Mackintosh has been instrumental in gathering an English-speaking congregation in the City of Mexico, that meets regularly for Christian worship in a hall connected with one of the church buildings of the Mexican Church of Jesus Christ, in the City of Mexico.

Another devoted laborer is the Rev. Mr. Puerto, who is a faithful minister in the Mexican Church of our Lord Jesus Christ, and who has been doing a very important work in the State of Puebla, in the republic of Mexico. Two lay evangelists, Mr. Leon and Mr. Delgado, are also indefatigable in service. They have been laboring with success in the Valley of Mexico during the year 1889.

The Christian

Influence of the Church

of our Lord Jesus Christ has extended to Spain and Portugal. Having been asked to visit Spain and Portugal to aid Christian work in those lands, I did so in the year 1880, and assisted in organizing several faithful congregations in Spain into a Spanish church, and some earnest congregations in Portugal into a Portuguese church.

In the Hand-book of Foreign Missions published by the Religious Tract Society in London, in the year 1888, the clerical Secretary of the South American Mission Society, the Rev. R. J. Simpson, alludes to the work in Spain and Portugal in the following terms: "In Spain and Portugal a 'Reformation' movement has for some time been in progress, and has already taken the form of a 'Reformed Spanish Church.' This movement will certainly extend to South America."

The poor have been the first to publicly welcome and defend the pure gospel, as preached for years past in Mexico. The congregations of the Mexican Church have been gathered from among the poor. To support the preachers in those congregations and the teachers in their Christian schools, and to meet many of the incidental expenses connected with this important Christian work in Mexico, until the work shall be more firmly established the generous gifts of our fellow Christians living in lands more blessed with gospel privileges than Mexico yet is, are most pressingly needed.

The Society

To aid in gathering the necessary funds with which to befriend and continue this Christian work of the Mexican Church of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to try and extend that Christian work into other portions of the vast Spanish American field, the Spanish-American Society has been organized with an office at 43 Bible House, New York. The income of this society during the year 1889, largely gathered by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, mailing contributions to my address at the office of the society, amounted to three thousand and one dollars and sixty cents. To continue by God's blessing this Christian work in Mexico effectively during the year 1890, we most earnestly ask our fellow Christians to continue to forward contributions in its behalf as the Lord may prosper them. Remember that every little helps.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

THE story of the tour of Dr. Talmage and his friends in the Holy Land is continued by Mr. Klopsch as follows: My last letter ended with a description of Samaria, where we staid for the night. There, among other things, we saw the site of Ahab's Ivory Palace, to the magnificent architecture once surrounding which over fifty gigantic columns or pillars, still in upright position, give abundant testimony. In fact, so numerous are the evidences to the faithfulness and trustworthiness of the Scriptures, that Dr. Talmage, although ever orthodox, claims that now the Bible has become to him a new book of which the Holy Land itself is the most stunning commentary.

Early up and early at it—the only practicable way of making a trip like this truly successful—was again the order of the day, and 7 o'clock found us in the saddle ready for the occasion.

Mohammedan Cemeteries

are very numerous in this country, and we had long before this become quite accustomed to seeing them; but this morning our attention was specially directed to one by a large throng of women, who were moaning and weeping as though they had just laid away one very dear to their hearts. On inquiry we found that with the Mohammedans it is customary for the women to visit and weep every Friday for one year at the grave of their departed, and their grief manifested on such occasions exhibits all the freshness and earnestness usually occasioned by recent loss. And here, this chilly morning, thinly clad, were probably a hundred and fifty women comforting each other as best they could while grieving and mourning their own bereavement.

On we went, crossing the magnificent plains of Esdraelon, the great battle-field of Palestine, every inch of which, at some time or other, has been drenched with the blood of the slaughtered. To the right of us lay Nain, from which the widow's only son was borne out for burial, when Christ, moved to pity, caused him to be restored. To the left was Gilboa, where King Saul and his three sons, and among these Jonathan, lost their lives while in contention with the Philistines. Gideon's Pool, where his faithful three hundred lapped water like dogs, lay an hour's journey off our path, and we were about to pass it by, rather than delay more than two hours making the round trip, when Dr. Talmage objected, insisting that he must see it if it took all day. Thither we went, and a refreshing draught of its delicious water fully repaid us for the effort. Soon up among the hills, the scene of the Saviour's childhood and early manhood, burst on our view. Our hearts rejoiced at its sight, and all the weariness caused by nearly nine hours' saddle-work immediately left us. An hour later we entered the village, and the very first house that we saw had a carpenter-shop on the ground-floor in full blast. Nothing, it seemed to me, could be more appropriate. Never were we so eager to get to our encampment, which, for this night, was in the Russian Convent. Once dismounted, we did not even linger long ough to adjust our somewhat disordered toilet, off we sped as quickly as possible to make the most of the few hours between then and sunset, to spend them among the interesting points of the charmingly located and very attractive little town, so dear to the hearts of the Christian world. Naturally we first wended our way to the Church of the Annunciation, said to cover the site of the miracle described by its name. This church, it is aimed, enshrines as it were the home of Mary Joseph, and rooms in it were pointed out as the kitchen of the Virgin and the carpenter-shop of her husband. All these are hewn in solid rock. As to its authenticity is divided, yet there is no doubt in its favor than against. But a discussion of that point may be received with better grace from the eloquent preacher who engages public attention than from the scribe who chronicles his adventures. Some things, however, admit of no dispute, among these the site of the village itself, the hills that surround it, and the diminutive valley that nestles sweetly at the foot of the town. This was the place, and these were the surroundings of Christ's boyhood, and as such none can rob them of their interest to the hearts of His followers. The sun had now set, and already it was beginning to darken, so we hastened back to the convent, in Eastern towns no lights illumine the streets and the wayfarer on his journey home. Here we set practically ends the day, though sunrise begins it. Shops open about 9:30 or 10 o'clock, and invariably close at sunset. The lights in the homes of the people are still of the most primitive character, candles and olive oil meeting the requirements. At the convent we were hospitably entertained, and our comfort promoted in every possible way, and that night we rested surrounded by comparative luxury.

Nazareth,

While exceedingly interesting in connection with many Biblical associations that cluster around Nazareth in itself has nothing of any account to commend it for a protracted stay.

The Russian Convent

Which we passed the night was scrupulously clean, and materially helped us to relish the breakfast. We found temptingly spread before us on entering the dining-room. After breakfast we called for the bill, and found it to contain charges that bankrupt the hotel fraternity throughout our journey long before the Columbus Exhibition pro-jesses tangible form. Among other items found thirty cents charged for lodging, three for toast and tea, and ten cents for lodging of servants. It is needless to add that we paid the bill without a protest.

On our way out we called at the telegraph office, and sent the first cablegram ever transmitted from Palestine to America. The operator was obliged to telegraph to Beyrout for instructions as to charges. It was quite a journey between huge hedges of mammoth cactus plants, the barb-wire fence of nature's manufacture, over hills representing the refuse of centuries, amid the barking and howling of incredible dogs, which by the Mohammedans are considered sacred animals, we reached where Christ once graced with His presence a marriage-feast, the occasion of His first miracle. Dismissing in front of a neat little chapel, which tradition says covers the exact site of the interest-event, we awaited the coming of the patriarch, who admitted us, and exhibited several large water jars about two and a half feet high, and capable of holding about twelve gallons each. These he claimed to be the identical jars that once contained the product of the miracle, a statement which was received with grano salis. About midway between Nazareth and Lake Galilee we halted long enough to rest the camels, and while so doing a large caravan of camels passed us.

Can of Galilee,

It was late in the afternoon when we entered

Tiberias,

to which we were to encamp on the Sabbath. Tiberias is largely inhabited by Israelites, and nearly all the shops were hermetically sealed, while the streets were thronged with a motley crowd, dressed in all the colors of the rainbow, and apparently engaged in exchanging visits and making the most of their day of rest. It is beyond doubt the filthiest town we ever saw, and profoundly grateful were we when, after passing through it, we learned that a return to it was optional, but not necessary. Although once the winter resort of royalty, to-day it is the cesspool of all Palestine. Nearly the entire native population was down with fever, including all the physicians connected with the English Church Mission. We encamped about half a mile away from the town, right on the banks of the Galilee, from the sweet, crystal water of which we imbibed freely that evening, a statement that will find a more just appreciation when it is remembered that of all the discomforts of travel in Palestine, the greatest is the lack of fresh, pure, and palatable drinking-water, from the want of which we frequently had to endure the most intensely parching thirst. But here, at last, was an abundant supply of the cool, precious liquid, the mere sight of which seemed to refresh our very souls. We fairly ached for it, and when at last a pitcherful was secured, we drank and drank again and again.

Our joy, however, lasted but for a while, and a little while at that. There is plenty of water there still, and whosoever will may partake of it freely, but we must really decline. Horrors upon horrors! The mere thought of it compels me to clench my teeth lest a catastrophe overtake me! Those Russian pilgrims—men and women indiscriminately—bathing in the very water from which we drank! Phew! The hot sulphur baths in which invalids seek health and purification emptying into the same stream! Aye, and still more. The bodies of the dead taken down to the banks and there washed in the floods of the lake, out of which every true Israelite hereabouts faithfully believes the true Shiloh shall yet arise!

For the following morning the Doctor had arranged a sail on the lake as far as for which we secured one of the two boats that now constitute what shipping facilities Galilee can boast of, though once the sails of four thousand ships enlivened its waters. It was an ordinary rowboat, with rudely constructed sails, which latter seemed quite superfluous, as its propelling power was six oars manned by as many Arabs. We got off swimmingly, and keenly enjoyed the sail for a while, but suddenly the sky was overclouded and rain began to fall—the first we had experienced since we left New York; and in less time than it takes to pen these lines white caps appeared, a heavy under-current became manifestly plain and the boat began to toss to and fro at an alarming rate. Most of the party were painfully seasick, and orders were given to land with the utmost speed. But this the oarsmen found impossible. We got as near to the land as was considered safe and waited for a tidal wave to carry us over some of the rocks between which we could not pass, but tidal waves did not move in that direction just then, and finally three of the men, divesting themselves of their outer garments, jumped into the shallow water and held the boat from being dashed to pieces. Soon the rest of the crew followed, and one by one the party were carried ashore. The excitement did not last very long, but it afforded another page of Galilean experience that will not soon be forgotten.

Capernaum,

We found Capernaum and ancient Bethsaida utter ruins, the former abounding in choice specimens of artistically sculptured marble, while the latter offers nothing of any account in the way of antiquities, but is now being repopulated and brought under cultivation by a colony of German vine-growers, whose beautiful gardens, artistically designed, and few neat, substantial buildings, scrupulously clean, are in striking contrast with the evidences of shiftlessness and dirt that characterize everything possessed by the natives.

It had been arranged that on the morrow we were to pass out of Palestine and into Syria, and unless six hours more were spent in the saddle we could not push ahead far enough to render this practicable. On our way we visited

An Old Khan

(inn) built in the time of the Roman occupation, and still in use. Here the caravans from Damascus to Jerusalem, and vice versa, are prone to halt, and so on this occasion we found the inner court filled with camels, burdened and otherwise, and dark-visaged, fiery-looking men armed to the very teeth. In the rooms on the lower floor, which were simply holes in the wall that surrounded the court, and without windows or doors, veiled women were preparing the evening meal over little wood fires started on the ground in the most primitive style imaginable. Each apartment was filled with smoke, there being neither stove nor chimney, and no civilized human being could breathe its air and live, yet these women apparently suffered no inconvenience whatever. The men looked so vicious that we felt quite afraid, being but a little company and comparatively unarmed; and more grateful were we than we cared to admit to each other when we got out and away from that place. And yet one more experience that day was destined to cause us no little uneasiness. We had jointly agreed to cover a larger territory than usual and to travel later than ordinarily, and were now that divides Palestine from Syria. The afternoon was quite clear, though the morning had been showery. When on the mountain-top a fog began to settle, and within ten minutes it became so dense that the riders could not see their horses' heads. We journeyed in silence, while the darkness increased perceptibly momentarily, wondering when and where we were to encamp for the night. Presently our dragoman called a halt, and hallooed, evidently expecting a response, but none came. He then confessed that he had lost his way, and had hoped that some one at the encampment would hear his cry, and answer. Our feelings can better be imagined than described. Away from habitations of any kind, in a dense wet fog without shelter, or food, night fast approaching, and in imminent danger of accident from misstep and precipice. But happily our anxiety lasted but a little while, for, halting again after a slow, cautious ride of ten minutes or so, we repeated the call, and the welcome response away off was distinctly heard by all.

On the Mountain Range

Early the next morning, brightened and cheered and full of enthusiasm, we entered upon

The Last Day in Palestine.

Yet our experience had been such an agreeable one that we would gladly have lingered had Dr. Talmage been able to find any more material for his Life of Christ, but he claimed to possess all that he could utilize, and now was anxious to visit the place of Paul's triumphs and trials. The sun shone grandly as we started off, and very few clouds recalled the heavy fog that caused us so much uneasiness the night before. Dr. Talmage felt, he said, "as though he could take the whole trip over again." Nearing Mount Hermon, the tops of which were capped with snow-white clouds, he pointed up to the beautiful sight, and said "that while the sun was doing its very best, there were just enough clouds left to make every hill a mountain of Transfiguration." Within a short time afterward we reached Dan, at which the Jordan takes its start. Here over an hour was spent in selecting a stone for the baptismal font of the new Brooklyn Tabernacle, which when filled with the Jordan water, of which Dr. Talmage laid in an abundant supply, will make a very interesting reminder of the most pleasant trip of all his life. Bidding farewell to the old Jordan we pushed on, and soon learned that the lunch-place and the extreme limit of Palestine were at hand by hearing our dragoman exclaim, "Now the end is drawing nigh, Casarea Philippi." And so it was. We encamped for an hour, visited the town, read the biblical references to it, and passed on, grateful that throughout our trip through the Holy Land no accident or evil had befallen us, but that, in place of all the rain, robbery, and ruin that evil though well-intentioned prophets had predicted, there was nothing but pleasure, sunshine, profit, and success.

DOUBLE FETTERS.

AN incident which may serve as an illustration of the gospel message, is related by Dr. Cullis in his Times of Refreshing. He says that in the great struggle in India, between the British and Tippoo Sahib, several English officers were taken prisoners; among them was one named Baird. One day, a native officer brought in fetters to be put upon each of the prisoners; the wounded not excepted. Baird had been severely wounded, and was suffering from pain and weakness. A gray-haired officer said to the native official: "You do not think of putting chains upon that wounded man?" "There are just as many pairs of fetters as there are captives," was the answer, "and every pair must be worn." "Then," said the noble officer, "put two pairs on me; I will wear his as well as my own." This was done. Strange to say, Baird lived to regain his freedom—lived to take that city; but the noble friend who had been fettered for him died in prison. Up to his death, he wore two pairs of fetters! But what if he had worn the fetters of all in the prison? What if, instead of being a captive himself, he had quitted a glorious palace to live in their loathsome dungeon, to wear their chains, to bear their stripes, to suffer and die for them, that they might go free, and free forever?

THE GLORIOUS CHRIST.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, last Sunday Morning, Feb. 16, 1890.

"He that cometh from above is above all." John 3:31.

The Alpha and Omega—Worthy All Words that all Letters can Spell—I. Above all in Preaching—The Primary Subject—Not Limited to Conventional Phraseology—The Power of Words—Endless Varieties of Presentation—The Most Glorious of Themes—The Royal Robe of Demetrius—Martin Luther's Letter to Staupitz—II. Above all in Sorrow—III. Above all in Death—Saladin's Funeral—Only Two Styles of Departure—IV. Above All in Heaven.

THE most conspicuous character of history steps out upon the platform. The finger which, diamonded with light, pointed down to Him from the Bethlehem sky, was only a ratification of the finger of prophecy, the finger of genealogy, the finger of chronology, the finger of events—all five fingers pointing in one direction. Christ is the overtopping figure of all time. He is the vox humana in all music, the gracefulest line in all sculpture, the most exquisite mingling of lights and shades in all painting, the acme of all climaxes, the dome of all cathedrals of grandeur, and the peroration of all language.

The Greek alphabet is made up of twenty-four letters, and when Christ compared Himself to the first letter and the last letter,

The Alpha and the Omega,

He appropriated to Himself all the splendors that you can spell out either with those two letters and all the letters between them. "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end." Or, if you prefer the words of the text, "above all."

What does it mean? It means, after you have piled up all Alpine and Himalayan altitudes, the glory of Christ would have to spread its wings and descend a thousand leagues to touch those summits. Pelion, a high mountain of Thessaly; Ossa, a high mountain, and Olympus, a high mountain; but mythology tells us when the giants warred against the gods they piled up these three mountains, and from the top of them proposed to scale the heavens; but the height was not great enough, and there was a complete failure. And after all the giants—Isaiah and Paul, prophetic and apostolic giants; Raphael and Michael Angelo, artistic giants; cherubim and seraphim and archangel, celestial giants—have failed to climb to the top of Christ's glory they might all well unite in the words of the text and say: "He that cometh from above is above all."

First, Christ must be above all else

In Our Preaching.

There are so many books on homiletics scattered through the country that all laymen, as well as all clergymen, have made up their minds what sermons ought to be. That sermon is most effectual which most pointedly puts forth Christ as the pardon of all sin and the correction of all evil—individual, social, political, national. There is no reason why we should ring the endless changes on a few phrases. There are those who think that if an exhortation or a discourse have frequent mention of justification, sanctification, covenant of works and covenant of grace, that therefore it must be profoundly evangelical, while they are suspicious of a discourse which presents the same truth, but under different phraseology. Now, I say there is nothing in all the opulent realm of Anglo-Saxonism, of all the word treasures that we inherited from the Latin and the Greek and the Indo-European, but we have a right to marshal it in religious discussion. Christ sets the example. His illustrations were from the grass, the flowers, the salve, the barnyard fowl, the crystals of salt, as well as from the seas and the stars; and we do not propose in our Sunday-school teaching and in our pulpit address to be put on the limits.

I know that there is a great deal said in our day against words, as though they were nothing. They may be misused, but they have An Imperial Power.

They are the bridge between soul and soul, between Almighty God and the human race. What did God write upon the tables of stone? Words. What did Christ utter on Mount Olivet? Words. Out of what did Christ strike the spark for the illumination of the universe? Out of words. "Let there be light," and light was. Of course, thought is the cargo, and words are only the ship; but how fast would your cargo get on without the ship? What you need, my friends, in all your work, in your Sabbath-school class, in your reformatory institutions, and what we all need, is to enlarge our vocabulary when we come to speak about God and Christ and heaven. We ride a few old words to death, when there is such illimitable resource. Shakespeare employed fifteen thousand different words for dramatic purposes; Milton employed eight thousand different words for poetic purposes; Rufus Choate employed over eleven thousand different words for legal purposes; but the most of us have less than a thousand words that we can manage and that makes us so stupid.

When we come to set forth the love of Christ we are going to take wherever we find it, and if it has never been used in that direction before, all the more shall we use it. When we come to speak of the glory of Christ the Conqueror, we are going to draw our similes from triumphal arch and oratorio and everything grand and stupendous. The French navy have eighteen flags by which they give signal, but those eighteen flags they can put into sixty-six thousand different combinations. And I have to tell you that these standards of the cross may be lifted into combinations infinite and varieties everlasting. And let me say to these young men who come from the theological seminaries into our services every Sabbath, and are after a while going to preach Jesus Christ, you will have the largest liberty and unlimited resource. You only have to present Christ in your own way.

Tenderest Phraseology

Brighter than the light, fresher than the fountains, deeper than the seas, are all these Gospel themes. Song has no melody, flowers no sweetness, sunset sky no color compared with these Glorious Themes.

These harvests of grace spring up quicker than we can sickle them. Kindling pulpits with their fire, and producing revolutions with their power, lighting up dying beds with their glory, they are the sweetest thought for the poet, and they are the most thrilling illustration for the orator, and they are to the ambassador of the sky all enthusiasm. Complete pardon for direst guilt. Sweetest comfort for ghastliest agony. Brightest hope for grimme death. Grandest resurrection for darkest sepulchre. Oh, what a gospel to preach! Christ over all in it. His birth, His suffering, His miracles, His parables, His sweat, His tears, His blood, His atonement, His intercession—what glorious themes! Do we exercise faith? Christ is its object. Do we have love? It fastens on Jesus. Have we a fondness for the Church? It is because Christ died for it. Have we a hope of heaven? It is because Jesus went ahead, the herald and the forerunner.

The royal robe of Demetrius was so costly, so beautiful, that after he had put it off no one ever dared put it on; but this robe of Christ, richer than that, the poorest and the wannest and the worst may wear. "Where sin abounded, grace may much more abound."

Martin Luther's Letter.

"Oh, my sins, my sins!" said Martin Luther to Staupitz, "my sins, my sins!" The fact is, that the brawny German student had found a Latin Bible that made him quake, and nothing else ever did make him quake; and when he found how, through Christ, he was pardoned and saved, he wrote to a friend, saying, "Come over and join us great and awful sinners saved by the grace of God. You seem to be only a slender sinner, and you don't much extol the mercy of God; but we that have been such very awful sinners praise His grace the more now that we have been redeemed." Can it be that you are so desperately egotistical that you feel yourself in first-rate spiritual trim, and that from the root of the hair to the tip of the toe you are scarless and immaculate? What you need is a looking-glass, and here it is in the Bible. Poor and wretched and miserable and blind and naked from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, full of wounds and putrefying sores. No health in us. And then take the fact that Christ gathered up all the notes against us and paid them, and then offered us the receipt! And how much we need Him

In Our Sorrows!

We are independent of circumstances if we have His grace. Why, he made Paul sing in the dungeon, and under that grace St. John from desolate Patmos heard the blast of the apocalyptic trumpets. After all other candles have been snuffed out, this is the light that gets brighter and brighter unto the perfect day; and after, under the hard hoofs of calamity, all the pools of worldly enjoyment have been trampled into deep mire, at the foot of the eternal rock the Christian, from cups of granite lily-rimmed, puts out the thirst of his soul.

Again I remark, that Christ is above all in dy alleviations. I have not any sympathy with morbidity abroad about our demise. The Emperor of Constantinople arranged that on the day of coronation the stone mason should come and consult him about the tombstone that after a while would need. And there are men who are morbidly maniacal on the subject of departure from this by death, and the more they think of it the more they are prepared to go. This is an unmanly not worthy of you, not worthy of me.

Saladin, the greatest conqueror of his day, dying, ordered that the tunic he had on be carried after his death on his spear at the head of his army, and that then the soldier, ever and a should stop and say: "Behold, all that is left of Saladin, the emperor and conqueror! Of all states he conquered, of all the wealth he accumulated, nothing did he retain but this shroud." I have no sympathy with such behavior, or such a surd demonstration, or with much that we utter in regard to departure from this life to next. There is a commonsensical idea on this subject that you need to consider—there are only

Two Styles of Departure.

A thousand feet underground, by light of toiling in a miner's shaft, a ledge of rock may upon us, and we may die a miner's death. Far at sea, falling from the slippery ratlines and bro on the halyards, we may die a sailor's death. A mission of mercy in hospital, amid broken beds and reeking leprosies and raging fevers, we may die a philanthropist's death. On the field of battle, serving God and our country, slugs through heart, the gun-carriage may roll over us, and we may die a patriot's death. But, after all, there are only two styles of departure—the death of the righteous, and the death of the wicked—and we want to die the former.

God grant that when that hour comes you be at home. You want the hand of your kind in your hand. You want your children to surround you. You want the light on your pillow from that have long reflected your love. You want a room still. You do not want any curious strangers standing around watching you. You want to be kindred from afar to hear your last prayer. I think that is the wish of all of us. But is that all? earthly friends hold us up when come up to the girdle? Can human voice open heaven's gate? Can human hand pilot through the narrows of death into heaven's hall? Can any earthly friendship shield us from the rows of death, and in the hour when Satan's practice upon us his infernal archery? No, no, no! Alas! poor soul, if that is all. Better die in the wilderness, far from tree shadow and from rain, alone, vultures circling through the air, lying for our body, unknown to men, and to have burial, if only Christ could say through the tudes: "I will never leave thee, I will never for thee." From that pillow of stone a ladder will soar heavenward, angels coming and going; across the solitude and the barrenness would the sweet notes of heavenly minstrelsy.

The Billows of Death

Dying Utterances.

Gordon Hall, far from home, dying in the of a heathen temple, said: "Glory to The God!" What did dying Wilberforce say to wife? "Come and sit beside me, and let us go to heaven. I never knew what happiness was until I found Christ." What did dying Haniel More say? "To go to heaven, think what that is! To Christ, who died that I might live! Oh, glorious grave! Oh, what a glorious thing it is to die! the love of Christ, the love of Christ!" What Mr. Toplady, the great hymnwriter, say in his hour? "Who can measure the depths of the heaven? Oh, the sunshine that fills my soul shall soon be gone, for surely no one can live in this world after such glories as God has manifested to my soul."

What did the dying Janeway say? "I can easily die as close my eyes or turn my head in. Before a few hours have passed I shall start Mount Zion with the one hundred and forty-four thousand, and with the just men made perfect, and we shall ascribe riches, and honor, and glory, and majesty, and dominion unto God the Lamb." Dr. Taylor, condemned to burn at stake, on his way thither broke away from his guardsmen, and went bounding and leaping, jumping toward the fire, glad to go to Jesus to die for Him. Sir Charles Hare, in last moments such rapturous vision that he cried: "Upward, and upward!" And so great was the peace of Christ's disciples that he put his fingers upon pulse in his wrist and counted it and observed and so great was his placidity that after a while said: "Stopped!" and His life had ended here in heaven. But grander than that was the money of the worn-out first missionary, when, cried: "I am now ready to be offered, and the of my departure is at hand; I have fought the fight, I have finished my course, I have kept faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me in that day, and not to me, but to all them that love His appearing!" Do you not see that Christ is above all in dying agonies?

In the Mamartine Dungeon,

Toward the last hour of our earthly residence we are speeding. When I see the sunset, I say, "One less to live." When I see the spring blossoms scattered, I say, "Another season gone forever." When I close this Bible on Sabbath night, I say, "Another Sabbath departed." When I bury a dead, I say, "Another earthly attraction gone forever." What nimble feet the years have! The clocks and the lightnings run not so fast. From decade to decade, from sky to sky, they go at a hand. There is a place for us, whether marked or not, where you and I will sleep the last sleep, the men are now living who will, with solemn adieu, carry us to our resting-place. Ay, it is down in heaven whether our departure will be

A Coronation or a Banishment.

Brighter than a banquet hall through which the light feet of the dancers go up and down to the end of trumpeters will be the sepulchre through whose rifts the holy light of heaven streameth. I will watch you. He will send His angels to guard your slumbering ground, until, at Christ's behest, they shall roll away the stone.

Also, Christ is above all in heaven. The Bible distinctly says that Christ is the chief theme of celestial ascription, all the thrones facing His one, all the palms waved before His face, all the knees down at His feet. Cherubim to cherubim, seraphim to seraphim, redeemed spirit to redeemed spirit, shall recite the Saviour's earthly sacrifice.

Stand on some high hill of heaven, and in all the liant sweep the most glorious object will be Jesus. Triads gazing on the scars of His suffering, in silence first, afterward breaking forth into acclamation. The martyrs, all the purer for the flame through which they passed, will say: "This is Jesus, whom we died." The apostles, all the happier for the shipwreck and the scourging through which they went, will say: "This is the Jesus whom we preached at Corinth, and at Cappadocia, and at Antioch, and at Jerusalem." Little children clad in white will say:

"This is the Jesus who took us in His arms and blessed us, and, when the storms of the world were too cold and loud, brought us into this beautiful place." The multitude of the bereft will say: "This is the Jesus who comforted us when our heart broke." Many who wandered clear off from God and plunged into paganism, but were saved by grace, will say: "This is the Jesus who pardoned us. We were lost on the mountains, and He brought us home. We were guilty, and He has made us white as snow." Mercy boundless, grace unparalleled. And then, after each one has recited his peculiar deliverances and peculiar mercies, recited them as by solo, all the voices will come together into a great chorus, which will make the arches echo and re-echo with the eternal reverberation of and triumph.

Edward I. was so anxious to go to the Holy Land that when he was about to expire he bequeathed £60,000 to have his heart, after his decease, taken to the Holy Land in Asia Minor, and his request was complied with. But there are hundreds to-day whose hearts are already in the Holy Land of heaven. Where your treasures are, there are your hearts also. Quaint John Bunyan, of whom I spoke at the opening of the discourse, caught a glimpse of that place, and in his quaint way he said: "And I heard in my dream, and lo! the bells of the city rang again for joy; and as they opened the gates to let in the men I looked in after them, and lo! the city shone like the sun, and there were streets of gold, and men walked on them, harps in their hands, to ring praises withal; and after that they shut up the gates, which when I had seen I wished myself among them!"

AN UNEXPECTED GUEST.

(See S. S. Golden Text for March 8.)

A COLD night with drizzling snow in a large city. The sidewalks were getting slippery, as an elderly man found out when, in looking up at the lettering over a store, he tripped and would have fallen but for the friendly grasp of a policeman.

"Thank you," said the man, "I was not taking heed to my steps. Just like me! Pray, friend, would you add to your kindness by telling me where I am likely to find John Westfield? This seems to be his store, but the house is all in darkness."

"Mr. Westfield is at home by this time; he does not live at his store. Come with me and I will show you the car that goes near his house."

After riding about an hour the conductor said, "Here you are," and, pointing to a handsome house, added, "that is Mr. Westfield's."

The stranger alighted, and ascending the marble stoop, rang the bell. In the flood of light which poured on him when the man-servant opened the door, the stranger looked a very poor man indeed. His garments were glossy with long wear and were travel-stained, his hat, though carefully brushed, was very shabby, and his boots had been patched more than once. He seemed to be a gentleman, but a gentleman in very needy circumstances.

No, Mr. Westfield was not at home, nor Mrs. Westfield. Was it particular business? Well, they were at Mr. Luke Westfield's house on the South Side. There was a party there. The stranger had better not disturb them. Had better come again in the morning, or better still, go to the store. That was where Mr. Westfield did business.

The traveller made no reply; but when he was on the sidewalk again, he said to himself: "I'll go. Surely my boys will give me a welcome."

Mr. Luke Westfield's house was not so handsome as that of his brother John; but it showed signs of prosperity too. A maidservant answered the stranger's ring here, but she hesitated about disturbing her employer, and when she consented to do so she called another servant to take care of the overcoats, while she went on the errand.

"Father!" exclaimed Mr. Luke Westfield when he came out in response to the summons, looking very elegant in his full evening dress. "Why, you don't mean it! How are you? Who could have expected you would come East, and turn up in the night, like a ghost, in this fashion! Well, this is a surprise! Come in this room. Here, Jane, light the gas. I will go and call John. He is here with his wife. We have a few friends to see us to-night."

The old man sat alone in the room, which seemed gloomy and inhospitable with only one of the burners lighted in the large chandelier. Presently the two brothers returned, looking very much alike, though John, the elder, was more corpulent than Luke, and more impressive in manner.

"You have taken us quite by surprise, father," he said. "It is so long since we heard from you we feared you were dead. Why, it must be fifteen years since you went away."

"Seventeen," said the father.

"You must have quite a story of adventures to tell. We must hear it all to-morrow. Luke has his house full of guests just now. You won't mind going over to my house for a bed. My son Henry will go with you to show you the way. You would not care to go in among strangers to-night."

Henry was called, and with not a very good grace undertook to pilot his grandfather over to his father's house. "You can come back, you know," said his father. "Find Arthur and tell him to see that his grandfather has a comfortable room. Don't sit up for us, father, we shall be late; we shall see you at breakfast in the morning."

The old man bade his sons good night and retraced his steps to John's house. His companion was silent, not to say surly, and evidently grudged the good time he was losing. He handed the old gentleman over, on their arrival, to the care of a delicate lad of some sixteen years whose appearance showed him to be a chronic invalid. It was a bright cheery face, however, that he turned to his grandfather on being told who he was, and there was a graceful reverence in his greeting and in the concern he showed for the old man's comfort.

"Not a very cordial welcome," said the old man, as he sat meditating in his room. "Well, well, we shall see." Seventeen years before, a great crushing blow had fallen upon him. He was engaged in several lines of business and was very prosperous. Each of his two sons was trained under his own eye and was a good business man. John was twenty-three years old and Luke twenty-one. Mr. Westfield in those days was an active business man, looking forward to the time when he should leave business to his sons and travel with his wife to see the world. But his wife was killed in a railroad accident, and Mr. Westfield felt he had nothing more to live for. He turned his business over to his sons, each of them taking the branch with which he was familiar. The father went away, taking a comparatively small sum of money with him and giving all the remainder to his boys. "I have enough to last my time," he said, as he counted the contents of his pocket-book. "It will not be a long one." But he had lived much longer than he expected.

His welcome was little more cordial in the morning. His son and daughter-in-law were civil and hoped he would make a long stay. The old man did not like to tell them that he had thought of living with them the remnant of his days. His grandchildren, with the exception of Arthur, were light, flippant boys and girls, who were astonished that their father's father wore such shabby clothes and seemed so poor.

Arthur was the only one of the two families who really showed any pleasure in the old man's society, and as the days passed they became close friends. The boy was evidently sorry for his grandfather, and seemed apologetic when the others showed him scant respect. The old man often saw the look of reverential pity on his face, and loved him for it.

"I have some money, all my own," said Arthur one day; "you need some new shoes, grandfather. I wish you would let me have the pleasure of getting them for you."

"Certainly, my boy," said the old man; "it is very kind and thoughtful of you. I shall appreciate them; these are certainly the worse for wear."

Arthur's whole store of pocket-money went in the same direction, and the boy took more pleasure in his grandfather's changed appearance than the money could have brought him in any other way. Mr. John and Mr. Luke often spoke together of the old man's condition, and finally agreed that they would make up a joint fund and settle him with a small income in some other town, where his shabby and woe-begone appearance would not disgrace them. John was to acquaint his father with the project on a certain morning, but the old gentleman forestalled him.

"John," said he, "I have about worn out my welcome, I think, and I have made up my mind to go back West."

That idea suited his son exactly, but he decided that the cost of the journey should be deducted from the sum to be paid him.

"I want you to let me take Arthur with me," the old gentleman went on. "He and I have become attached to each other. I like the boy, and I have decided to make him my heir."

John looked up astonished at the word. What kind of endowment could the old man make?

"I speculated a little," said Mr. Westfield, "when I went out first. It took my mind off my trouble. You in the East would be astonished at the success I had. I suppose if I sold my lands to-day I could get twenty times their cost. I have sold some, and the profit trebled all my capital. It is quite a big pile altogether, John, and I mean Arthur to have it all. I will take him back with me, and see if we cannot make a healthy man of him, and I will make him rich beyond your wildest dreams."

"Why did you not tell us, father?"

"I thought I should like to see how you and your brother would treat a poor old man to whom you owed everything, and," said the old gentleman, with a significant look, "I have seen. Arthur is a boy after my own heart; he deserves his good fortune."

The brothers looked very much confused as John told Luke the story. "Well," said Luke, "I am glad the money is not going out of the family; but it would have been better if he had given it to us. We could have used it to better advantage."

"It is one of father's eccentricities," said John; "we can do nothing."

No, it was too late to do anything. The father could give his wealth to whom he would, and he had made his choice. Their opportunity had passed. The despised man had found them unworthy, ungrateful, undutiful, and he passed them by.

So men have missed, and are missing every day, not only eternal riches, but eternal life. The Son of God came with both gifts in His hands, but they despised Him and rejected Him and He is still rejected. "He came unto His own, but His own received Him not." (John 1:11.)

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Jefferson's Diplomacy.*

In studying the effect which the strong language toward Spain was meant to produce at the Tuileries, Jefferson had in mind the effect which his strong language produced at the Tuileries in 1803. He played a game of finesse hardly safe in the face of men like Godoy, Talleyrand, and Napoleon, whose finesse was chiefly used to cover force, and was not betrayed or derided by factious opposition in the press. Besides being unsafe, it was unfair to himself. Jefferson was an honest man, and in putting on the outward appearance of a Talleyrand, he resembled an amateur imitating Talma and Garrick. Gestures and tones alike were unnatural, awkward, and false; they exposed him to ridicule.

If President Jefferson had taken the public into his confidence, he would have told the people that under no circumstances would he consent to war; but that if the great Powers of Europe combined to injure America, she would close her ports, abandon her commerce, shut herself within her own continent, and let the world outside rob and murder elsewhere. Such an avowal involved no disgrace; the policy it proclaimed was the alternative to war; and as the radical doctrine of the Republican party, the course was not only that which Jefferson meant to take, but it was that which he took. The avowal might have invited aggression, and have been followed by failure; but he would have done better to fail on a direct issue of principle, than to fail after evading the issue until the issue itself was lost.

The Trial of Aaron Burr.

March 30, 1807, in a room at the Eagle Tavern, in Richmond, Aaron Burr was brought before Chief Justice Marshall for examination and commitment. Although Burr had been but a few days in the town, he was already treated by many persons as though he had conferred honor upon his country. Throughout the United States the Federalists, who formed almost the whole of fashionable society, affected to disbelieve in the conspiracy, and ridiculed Jefferson's sudden fears. The Democrats had never been able to persuade themselves that the Union was really in danger, or that Burr's projects, whatever they were, had a chance of success; and in truth Burr's conspiracy, like that of Pickering and Griswold, had no deep roots in society, but was mostly confined to a circle of well-born, well-bred, and well-educated individuals, whose want of moral sense was one more proof that the moral instinct has little to do with social distinctions.

In the case of Burr, Jefferson himself had persistently ignored danger; and no one denied that if danger ever existed it had passed. Burr was fighting for his life against the power of an encroaching Government; and human nature was too simply organized to think of abstract justice or remote principles when watching the weak fighting for life against the strong. Even the Democrats were more eager to see Burr than to hang him, and had he gone to the gallows he would have gone as a hero, like Captain Macheath among the admiring crowds of London. Between Captain Macheath and Colonel Burr was more than one point of resemblance; but no part of Burr's career was more humorous than the gravity with which he took an injured tone, and maintained with success that Jefferson, being a trivial person, had been deceived by the stories of Eaton and Wilkinson, until, under the influence of causeless alarm, he had permitted a wanton violation of right.

A SERMON IN AN EMPTY ROOM.

In the biography of a humble worker for Christ in southern Spain, who died recently, a suggestive incident is related. It appears that a simple Spanish peasant, Francisco Gutierrez by name, was converted, through reading the Word of God, in 1870. In the early days of his Christian life his zeal was an all-devouring one. He was a man of the Book; early and late, anywhere, everywhere, he was preaching the glorious old, but to him new, gospel, till people told him that the book was turning him mad.

Of course such a John the Baptist was soon persecuted, and was brought before governors, both civil and ecclesiastical, for Christ's sake. None of these things moved him; fearlessly he held on his way, and God upheld and blessed him. Of the few who followed him in those dark days, some turned back to Rome, while others were afraid to confess Him. Thus it came to pass that one Sunday morning, Francisco found himself all alone in the little room in which he had been wont to preach the gospel. Opening door and windows, he preached to an empty room with all the force of his powerful voice. "If they won't hear inside," he said, "they shall hear outside." This would appear to have been a turning-point in his life, for ever afterwards men and women gained courage to come to the front, and were converted.

Thus, amid storm and persecution, was founded a true church in his native town of Tznatoraf, on the slopes of the Sierra Nevada. To-day, in the largest room of Francisco's house, forty souls meet every Lord's day to worship God in spirit and in truth. As the direct and indirect effect of his labors, there exist in his native province five other little groups of Christians, who speak of Francisco as their "father in God." It is said that one hundred souls have been led to Jesus through him.

AN INDIAN'S ORDEAL.

In a recent address at Chicago, Bishop Whipple related the following incident as an illustration of the moral courage of Christian Indians: One day an Indian came to our missionary and said: "I know this religion is true. The men who have walked in this new trail are better and happier. But I have always been a warrior, and my hands are full of blood. Could I be a Christian?" The missionary repeated the story of God's love. To test the man, he said, "May I cut your hair?" The Indian wears his scalp lock for his enemy—when it is cut it is a sign he will never go on the war-path again. The man said, "Yes, you may cut it; I shall throw my old life away." It was cut. He started for home, and met some wild Indians, who shouted with laughter, and with taunts said, "Yesterday you were a warrior, to-day you are a squaw." It stung the man to madness, and he rushed to his home and threw himself on the floor and burst into tears. His wife was a Christian, and came and put her arms about his neck and said: "Yesterday there was not a man in the world who dared call you a coward. Can't you be as brave for Him who died for you as you were to kill the Sioux?" He sprang to his feet, and said, "I can, and will." I have known many brave, fearless servants of Christ, but I never knew one braver than this chief.

RECLAIMED BY LOVE.

THE reclamation of a dissipated government clerk was described last week by a statesman in Washington, D. C., who witnessed the process. He said that a young man of good family, formerly one of the most efficient and diligent clerks in the department, became dissipated and spent his evenings in drinking and gambling. The chief of his department expostulated with him, and warned him that he would be dismissed, but without avail. Recently a number of new clerks were appointed, one of whom was a lady so pretty and graceful that her friendship was eagerly sought by the young men, the dissipated clerk among the others. Very strangely, the young lady preferred him. One of the older ladies warned her against him, and assured her that he was a dissolute fellow not deserving her notice. "I think there is good in him," said the pretty clerk. "He might reform if he had encouragement." After this a wonderful change came over the young man. He stopped drinking, abjured gambling, attended to his work with a will, and was altogether a new man. A short time ago both the young people resigned, the young man to occupy a more lucrative position in a merchant's office and the lady to become his wife. The statesman whose influence had originally secured the government appointment for the young man, received a visit from the young couple recently and says there is no doubt about the permanent character of the young man's reformation. When hope and love enter the heart there is no limit to the effect that may follow on the life. It is when the miserable and depraved learn that Jesus loves them and desires to save them that they turn from their sin. (II Cor. 5: 14, 15.)

A BAR-TENDER'S RESCUE.

THE appeal of a Christian woman to a young man in South Dakota was marvellously blessed some time since. The Baptist Home Missionary says that in 1884 a young man came to South Dakota. He was finely educated at Upsala and Stockholm, Sweden—able to speak half a dozen languages. He was at first thrown among the cowboys, then became bartender in a low saloon. He had abandoned himself to the dissipations of frontier life. He was of staid build, standing six feet and four inches. He quickly became a leader. One day a Christian woman entered the saloon. She had not known him personally, but she extended her hand, saying, "You are too much of a man to stand behind the bar." "Yes, I know it," he replied. "Would you not like to become a Christian?" "Yes; but how can I?" "Would you like to have me pray for you?" "Yes, if you please."

Then she knelt on that dirty floor and prayed for him. He left that saloon, and never again went inside of it. He was unable to get either his pay or his clothes. Just then the Baptists were holding revival meetings in a school-house. In these meetings he was converted, and began to bear testimony for Christ. Soon they sent him to Chicago. He studied at Morgan Park, and worked among the Swedes. He began his ministry in South Chicago, where he gathered blessed fruit. After two or three years he went to Kansas as missionary among the people at Clay Center. His abounding labors were richly blessed. By exposure, incident to excessive labor and scanty clothing, he took cold, which resulted in quick consumption, and in six weeks he died in the triumphs of a loving faith. His name was George Lindhagen. His call to Morgan Park as professor, I am told, was contemplated. He was one of the most modest and humble of men.

DIED STEALING.

THE saying about the ruling passion being strong in death was illustrated in the experience of the Rev. Henry White, a London clergyman who visited much in the homes of the poor. He says that one night recently, after he had gone to bed, he was summoned by a woman to the bedside of her dying husband. It was a squalid room, but Mr. White noticed that the thin candles were set in massive silver candlesticks, whilst about the room were strewed many articles of portable property of a character strangely diverse from the ordinary poverty of the apartment. He spoke to the sick man some words of comfort, and finally promised to pray with him. As he spoke he observed a gleam in the sick man's eye, and, following his glance, saw that it rested on the slight gold watch chain that hung from the pocket of his waistcoat. Leaning over the man he prayed for him, the while sobbing bitterly. Where "Amen" should have come in he heard the death-rattle in the man's throat, and moved away. Then he discovered that the dead man's fingers were entwined in his watch chain, and as he quickly started back the watch came out and fell on the bed. The man was noted burglar and pickpocket; and even in the throes of death had been unable to resist the temptation unconsciously put in his way.

PROPHETIC ASPECT OF THE EPIDEMIC.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

"I will send a blast." (Isaiah 37: 36.) The Hebrew term ruach is put for the Spirit of God, for the spirit of man, for wind, for whirlwind, for temper and blast. It is nearly a hundred times rendered "wind," and is made "blast" in the verse "blast of the nostrils" (Ex. 15: 8), explained as the strong east wind (Ex. 14: 21) that drove the sea over Pharaoh and his host. Josephus's Ant. B. 10, ch. 1, quotes Berosus as calling the death blast that smote the Assyrian army a plague, or pestilence distemper; but the other old Jewish writers, say Dr. Gill, say it was a hot blast or fiery wind that took away the breath and killed without burning the clothes or body. Just so does the sirocco; and such, no doubt, was the secondary cause of the destruction of the Assyrian army; but we must not forget that an angel was behind the wind.

"For the angel of death spread his wings on the blast, and breathed in the face of the foe as he passed, and the eyes of the sleepers waxed deadly and chill. Their hearts but once heaved and for ever grew still."

When the morning sun shone on that tented field, there lay stark in death (Isa. 37: 36) one hundred and eighty-five thousand mailed warriors. It was not a bloody battle between hostile armies, nor a natural catastrophe, nor an accident, nor a common occurrence in nature. It was a sudden death by the hand of God.

"For the might of the Gentiles, unsundered by the sword, Hath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord."

But how did God do it? By an angel's hand that poisoned the air, a sirocco blast, a hot wind that stifled all life in man and beast! How easy for God to do this!

We are led to these criticisms and reflections in

* From the History of the United States During the Second Administration of Thomas Jefferson. By Henry Adams. A clear and concise narrative of the events of that critical period of our national existence. 2 vols; price $4. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

meditating upon the changed, poisoned, and epidemic air which has spread over the entire globe during December, 1889, and January, 1890. Two hundred thousand square miles of aerial change in some mysterious manner, totally unknown to science, causing fevers, burnings, inflammations, diseases of the respiratory membranes, prostration and a score of unpleasant symptoms; men, women, children, kings, queens, nobles, paupers, rich and poor, high and low, millions of people all over the earth, suddenly made sick and suffering, and thousands dying of the aerial malady. God was in the hot blast that swept to death an invading army long years ago. Is not God in the aerial plague of the last two months? Who can explain the cause of its coming? With reverence and awe let us exclaim, O Christian people, "This is the finger of God," as the magicians exclaimed of the Egyptian plagues. And we infer from prophecy that this Influenza Epidemic is the first of a series of plagues that are coming on the earth during the closing eleven years of this age, from 1890 to 1901.

JESUS AT NAZARETH.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for March 2, Luke 4: 16-30; Golden Text, John 1: 11.

The Living Word and the Written Word—The Preparation of Conquered Temptation—The Power of Experience—The Gospel Proclaimed—The Defect in Man's Gospel—The Captives Delivered Not Delivering Themselves—The Result of the Preaching—God Willing, Man Unwilling—Unbelief of the Nazarenes.

JESUS at Nazareth, at home, and amidst home surroundings—but Jesus no longer the subject Child, the industrious carpenter, but now the religious Teacher, the Prophet, the Healer—how would He act? How would He be received? "He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up; and, as His custom was (as He probably had done many times there before), He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto Him the book of the prophet Isaiah." The living Word was about to read the written Word. Jesus is Himself the Word of God, the message of God to man; "the express image of His Person, and upholding all things by the Word of His power." (Heb. 1: 3.) He is not, as John the Baptist was, and as every other true preacher should be, a voice; the Word of God is that which the voice communicates. "Never man spake like this Man" was the testimony of His enemies. (John 7: 46.) "Thou hast the words of eternal life," was the testimony of His friends.

Conquered Temptation

was the immediate preparation for the preaching of Jesus; it was the Word of His Father which He was about to read, and He had just tried and proved its power against the enemy, and found in the forty days and forty nights of fasting through which He had passed, that "man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." John the Baptist's school for his ministry of repentance was the lonely desert, where he was shut up to God; but the Lord Jesus graduated in quite another school, in fighting and gaining every inch of ground, in every conceivable temptation, from the enemy of souls. He, as man, could speak of God's deliverance with all the authority of conscious experience; He had "suffered being tempted" (Heb. 2: 18), but was yet "without sin," because He had counted on the stability of the Father's written Word.

There is no such preparation for preaching as the personal experience of God's faithfulness: there is a weight in the words of those who have proved it, which no power of eloquence, no acquaintance with doctrine, no amount of preaching can give. Let a preacher be himself awed under the solemnity of his message, and all his hearers will be awed with him; let him break down under the power of his own words when speaking of the love of God, and no heart in the audience will be unmoved. It is easy to discern whether a preacher lives in the known presence of God, for when he does so there is something about him akin to that radiance which lit up the face of Moses when the children of Israel could not look on it; something of that power which made Elijah master of the situation wherever he was—whether with the dead child, the persecuting Ahab, the trembling Obadiah, or the captain of fifty; there is a something which men feel, without being able to explain it; it is the presence of the unseen God. Joseph had it in Egypt, and Potiphar felt it; Stephen had it when before the council, and the power was irresistible; Paul had it, and neither Felix nor Agrippa could bear it long; it was simply God's presence with them, which they felt in him.

The Lord Jesus, fresh from His conflict with the devil in the wilderness "returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee." It is a glorious thing to come forth from temptation stronger than before. Every preacher who comes out of temptation strengthened, carries his tested strength into his preaching. It was so with Jesus, "There went out a fame of Him through all the region round about. And he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all." "He taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes." (Mark 1: 22.) "They were astonished at His doctrine, for

His Word was With Power."

Just so far as Christ speaks through us is our word with power; just so far as we come out of temptation "strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might" (Eph. 6: 10), will the simplest words with which He charges us tell with power upon those to whom He sends us. Jesus "opened the book." When, after His resurrection, He opened the Scriptures to His amazed disciples, their hearts burned within them. (Luke 24: 32.) "And when He had opened the book, He found the place where it was written, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." It was the written Word of God, His Father's message—nothing original, although He was the Son of God! He was anointed to be the Messenger of another. It takes more grace to fill a second place than a first. And the message? "He hath anointed me to preach the gospel—the good news—to the poor." "Do your best, live according to your conscience, struggle against sin, and then rest satisfied that no man can do better, and that God, who is love, cannot demand impossibilities, and so none can stand a better chance:" such is Man's Gospel!

But how utterly false it is! It meets men who are already debtors to God, and already bankrupt, and says, "Do all you can to pay your way," while the accumulated arrears of debt frown darkly from the past. We want a gospel which will meet us when we are helpless, hopeless bankrupts. Jesus came to rescue those who could not help themselves. Reader, are you "poor," a debtor to God, with nothing to pay? Knowing that you ought to love Him, do you find no love in your heart to pay that debt of love you owe Him? Knowing that your sins are grievous, do you find no power in your heart to grieve over them? Do the consequences of sins long past speak of a misspent life which you cannot undo? Knowing that you ought to believe on Christ, do you look into the resources of your poor undone heart and find there nothing, no love, no sorrow for sin, no faith in Jesus? Then you are poor; poor enough to want a friend. Jesus brings good news to such. Poor debtor, your debt is paid; paid by Jesus on the cross. He says, "I have found a ransom." (Job 33: 24.) "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and as a cloud thy sins; return unto Me, for I have redeemed thee." (Isa. 44: 22.) "But my love is so cold and my faith so weak," some may say. Do you think He does not know that? and yet He says, "I have redeemed thee." Praise him until faith and love awake.

"But," another may say, "I am a slave to sin which I cannot conquer; my temper is beyond my control; I am fretful and anxious; I have secret temptations which are irresistible." Oh, thank God, the anointed Saviour came "to preach deliverance to the captives." You say, "I pray and strive, but all to no purpose." No wonder. For Jesus did not come to preach that the captives should pray themselves free, or struggle themselves free. He undertook to do the fighting, and He has won the victory. "Our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." Satan gets you to look within, and whispers, "You have always fallen into such and such a sin; learn by experience that there is no help for it." But he is a liar; by the word of the living God, your old man is nailed up tight to the cross that you should not serve sin.

You say, "I feel sin working in me." Then you are not abiding in the safe place which God has given you. "Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ." (Rom. 6: 11.) Let a woman take the situation of cook in a family; that becomes her place, and she is out of her place in other work. Let a man reckon himself to be a printer, and get a situation as one, and he would be quite out of place as a footman or a gardener. Let a man reckon himself to be dead, because God says he is, and he accepts of the situation; then let him keep it, and then every attempt of Satan to find him alive to sin will be futile, because he keeps his place in Christ, and in that place Satan cannot enter. Bless God, there is deliverance from all sin in Christ, open to the experience of all who will take and keep their place in Christ.

But what was the result of the Master's preaching? If Paul knew that the words spoken by the Holy Ghost through him were "a savour of life unto life" or "of death unto death" (11 Cor. 2: 16), how much more must the very words of God, delivered by Him who is the Word of God, be "quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart"! (Heb. 4: 12.) "He closed the book," but its contents were working on the hearts. Then He "sat down" but "the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him." They expected something, and he said, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." This was all; it was the application of the gospel of salvation. "This day" God is all He says in His Word; and He implied, "This day every sinner may be saved, every captive freed, every blind eye opened, every sick one healed." The impression was profound; it was caused by the simple reading of a passage from Isaiah, accompanied by an application only nine words in length, but every word was the spirit of God was upon Him who uttered them, it was the revelation of the Messiah who sat there waiting to be trusted. Alas for Nazareth, He waited in vain. Were there in that company no poor, no broken-hearted, no captives, no blind? Yes, the place was full of them, but the great enemy was at hand, and suggested, "Is not this Joseph's son?" "He is only a carpenter, if He had been a prophet you would have found it out before now; this is only a moment of excitement; it will all pass." And so, after having bowed before the power of God, and been within a hair's breadth of deliverance, they missed it! Oh how this history has been repeated; how many thousands of times has the Saviour had to turn sorrowfully away, and say to those He died for, "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life"! They wanted His credentials, and He said, "Ye will surely say unto Me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself; whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in Thy country." There was a hindrance at Nazareth; "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief" (Matt. 13: 58), or, as told in another gospel, "He could there do no mighty work, save that He laid His hands upon a few sick folk and healed them. And he marvelled because of their unbelief." (Mark 6: 5, 6.)

A Living Reality;

God willing, man unwilling; it has been the history of every age. If God had His way, and men would come to His terms, would one unpardoned sinner remain upon the face of the earth? If He had His way, would one child of God be struggling with sin another hour? If He had His way would not the teaching of His children be carried on directly by the Spirit without the disease and suffering which is now so general? He said, so sorrowfully, "Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country. But I tell you, of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elijah, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land; but unto none of them was Elijah sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow." God was ready to be the God of every widow, but not one in Israel was found to trust Him; He must get this Gentile to shew his own people the might and tenderness of Israel's God! "And many lepers were in Israel in the days of Elisha the prophet, but none of them was cleansed saving Naaman the Syrian." Again a Gentile must shew Israel that "the Lord that healeth thee" (Ex. 15: 26) still liveth among His people. The truth was unwelcome; those who had known Him in His boyhood, who had passed and repassed Him in the street, "rose up" against Him, for no other sin but that He brought truth home to their consciences. They sought to throw Him over the rocks, but a wondrous something delivered Him, "He passing through the midst of them, went His way."

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

NOTICE!

OUR readers will be pleased to learn that the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., has consented to become Editor-in-chief of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is with no ordinary gratification that the publisher makes this announcement. There is no man so popular as Dr. Talmage, as a preacher, and he is appreciated by none more than the readers of this journal, who have perused his sermons, week by week, for so many years. As an editor Dr. Talmage is not so widely known, though in that sphere, also, he has had considerable experience, and has displayed conspicuous ability. Dr. Talmage needs no introduction to our readers, and we are confident that they, with us, will hail his advent to the editorial chair as an augury that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will become under his charge abler, brighter, and more useful than ever. Dr. Talmage takes control next week.

Dr. Talmage intends to preach next Sunday on the life and death of his friend Henry W. Grady, the editor and orator, of Georgia. A verbatim report will appear in the next issue of this journal.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Elaborate Preparations for the Taking of the census are being made. The actual enumeration is to commence on Monday, June 2, and will be closed within fifteen days in cities and towns, and within thirty days in rural communities. The country has been divided into 175 districts, for each of which a supervisor has been appointed, who in turn has subdivided his district into sections, each of which contains, as nearly as possible, 4,000 inhabitants, according to the figures of the last census. For each of these an enumerator is appointed, and there will probably be 40,000 of these assigned to as many subdivisions. The results of this census will be printed in thirteen volumes. About 80,000 postal-cards will be required daily for the enumerators' reports, as each has to send two copies per day, one to his Supervisor, and one to Washington. The cost of the work will be enormous. The pay of the enumerators alone is expected to exceed four million dollars. Their work will be very arduous. Ten years ago complications arose through the resignation of nearly five thousand who had undertaken to do the work but found it too great. The present law visits with fine and imprisonment any enumerator who fails to perform his duty, unless he can give satisfactory reasons for his failure. It also provides that citizens refusing to answer questions shall pay a fine of one hundred dollars.

Still Another Claimant for Admission to Statehood is urging its demand. Arizona contends that she is fully qualified for self-government, and by wealth, population, and progress has proved her eligibility for admission. The people of the Territory are deeply wounded by the disposition Congress has manifested to slight their claims. Delegate Smith, whom the Territory sends to Congress, said last week: "We have at least a hundred thousand of the best-educated and most energetic people in the United States. We have the most liberal common-school system in America. Our population is rapidly increasing. Every industry is being rapidly developed. A north and south railroad from the Southern Pacific to the Atlantic and Pacific is now in course of construction, which will bring in close relation the fruit and grain products of the south with the vast lumber and mineral products of the north, thus lessening the cost of each to the consumer. We have at least $75,000,000 of taxable property. Our cattle will number near, if not fully, two million. We produced last year agricultural and horticultural products which were worth $9,207,000, live-stock $6,000,000, gold and silver $4,431,500, copper $2,000,000, and lumber, wool, &c., $1,500,000, making a total of over $23,000,000 worth of products, of which $13,000,000 are exported." With such a showing, it is not surprising that Mr. Smith hazarded the prediction that Arizona will yet be one of the most prosperous States in the Union.

No Material Progress was Made by the Pan-American Conference last week. It now appears probable that only by special reciprocity treaties can the great obstacle which our tariff presents to the development of trade with our Southern neighbors be overcome. Dr. Albert Nin, the delegate from Uruguay, said in a speech in Washington that the hope of being able to bring about a customs union has been abandoned by the committee having the subject in charge without any discussion and with the consent of the United States representative. It was realized that the firm attitude taken by our Government on protection would preclude all hope of a general agreement for the mutual exchange of products. The project of a common coin current throughout the continent is also blocked, owing to a division in the United States delegation.

A Scheme to Establish a Telegraph System in connection with the Post Office was submitted on February 11 by the Postmaster-General to a committee of the House. The first section establishes the "Limited Post and Telegraph Service" as a bureau of the Post Office Department, and directs that all post offices in places where the free delivery system now exists, or may be established, shall be "postal telegraph stations," together with those in any other places where, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, the wants of the public "may be supplied under the operation of the act." It is then provided that the Postmaster-General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Attorney-General, may sign contracts for ten years with any telegraph company for the furnishing of lines or the transmission of dispatches. The dispatches may be prepaid by ordinary stamps if the words "Postal Telegram" are written upon the blank and dropped into any letter-box or post office. The charge is to be ten cents for twenty words to any point within the same State as the issue of the dispatch, and proportionate rates for longer distances. Another section provides for the transmission of money by telegraph at moderate rates. The public will have reason for self-congratulation if Mr. Wanamaker is able to push his scheme through Congress.

Portugal, in Spite of Assurances that the Dispute with England on the African matter is amicably settled, is evidently preparing for future trouble. The Portuguese Ministers of War, Marine, and Finance have signed decrees authorizing the completion of the defences of Lisbon and the arming of the ports with guns. The decrees also provide for the purchase of torpedoes, the reorganization of the army, and the buying of eight war-ships. Bonds will be issued to cover the indebtedness thus incurred. The additions that the Government intends to make to the Portuguese navy will include four cruisers and four gunboats. The Government will send a floating dry-dock to St. Paul de Loanda, and another to Mozambique. Meanwhile, in order to avoid irritating England by the utterances of irresponsible orators, the Government has forbidden patriotic meetings and processions. The prohibition has the effect of fostering the smouldering discontent, and in two cases recently was not enforced without fighting.

Intense Excitement in Paris was Produced last week by the arrest of the Duc d'Orleans. He has attained the age of twenty-one years, and in obedience to a law passed in July last, presented himself on February 7 for military duty at the recruiting office in Paris. The law requires all Frenchmen to thus report, on attaining the age of twenty-one, and, by an oversight on the part of the framers of the law, no exception was made in the case of banished persons. The Duc d'Orleans is the eldest son of the Comte de Paris, and grandson of Louis Philippe, who was King of France from 1830 to 1848. By a law passed in 1886 he, and all other heirs of French monarchs, were expelled from the country, and forbidden to return. His appearance in the French capital was therefore treated as a violation of the law, and his plea that he was obeying the later law as a pretence. The young man had gone openly to the recruiting office, stating his name and station, and his desire to enlist as a private in the army. He was promptly arrested, and on February 12 he was tried and condemned to two years' imprisonment. It is expected that after a few days he will be pardoned and conducted over the frontier, as the Government does not wish to make a martyr of him. The nobles and aristocracy made a great show at his trial, and even the men struggled for a sight of the young prince, but there was no attempt to interfere with the course of justice. It is an encouraging sign of the strength of the Republic that this scion of royalty could be arrested, tried, and condemned like an ordinary law-breaker without exciting serious disturbances.

A Terrible Volcanic Eruption is Reported from Japan. A steamer which arrived at San Francisco on February 12 from Yokohama brought the report that Mount Zoo, near Fukuyama, commenced to rumble at 8 o'clock on the evening of January 16. This continued two hours, followed by a short cessation, during which period the inhabitants of the neighboring villages rushed away from their homes in great confusion. Soon the top of the mountain was lifted off. There was a din equal to a dynamite explosion, and sand and stones were belched forth, falling in the neighborhood of Fukuyama, where smoke and fire were blown by the wind. At the entrance of the town the ground was covered with sand and earth to a depth of over a foot. Stones and earth also fell at Midsunomimura, a village six miles away. No previous eruption of Mount Zoo is recorded. Only one man lost his life, but fifty-five houses were destroyed.

The Emperor of Germany Made an Address to his Council of State on February 14, which indicated that he is in earnest in his attempts to improve the condition of the workingmen. He said that the object for which the Council was summoned was the consideration of the measures necessary to regulate the position of the working people before submitting these measures to the legislative bodies. He invited both criticism and suggestion, the task he had undertaken being one so serious and responsible. The most surprising remark of the Emperor, however, was a practical endorsement of the leading principle of trades-unionism. He said: "Not less important for assuring peaceful relations between masters and men are the forms of the guarantees to be offered to workingmen to secure to them the right to express, through representatives enjoying their confidence, their own statement of their interests in any difference. The endeavor must be made in this connection to place the representatives in communication with the mining officials and State superintendents, to enable both sides to be thoroughly informed, and to be kept in constant touch with each other."

The Report of the Parnell Commission was Issued on February 13. It disappoints all parties—the Times and its friends most of all. The three judges, who all sign the report, find that Davitt, Dillon, O'Brien, Harris, Redmond, O'Connor, Condon, and Kelly joined the Land League with the intention of using it to bring about the independence of Ireland; that they disseminated various newspapers which tend to incite sedition and the commission of crime; that they did not denounce intimidation, and refrained from denouncing it, though they were aware that it led to crime; that they defended persons charged with agrarian crime and supported their families; that they paid compensation to persons injured while committing crime; and that they invited and accepted aid from the physical-force party in America. On the other hand, the judges acquit the same men of insincerity in denouncing outrages, of directly inciting outrages, of being intimately associated with notorious criminals, and of paying them money to assist them to escape from justice. As to Mr. Parnell, the judges acquit him of the charge of being an accessory after the fact to the Phoenix Park murders of sending money to Byrne to help him to escape and of holding intimate relations with Sheridan and Boyton, knowing them to be criminals. I will be seen that, while the report does not clear the character of the accused persons, it acquits them of the charges which degraded them in the esteem of the English public, and which the Time most persistently pressed against them in its article on "Parnellism and Crime."

A Copy of this Journal may Figure as a Historical curiosity at some future day. When the foundation-stone of the new Brooklyn Tabernacle was laid on February 10 by Dr. Talmage, a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Jan. 1, 1890, was placed in the cavity of the stone. It was the number which had for its frontispiece a portrait of the Brooklyn preacher and a picture of the new Tabernacle. Among the other articles deposited in the cavity were the church records, photographs of the ruins of the burned Tabernacle, photographs of the trustees, a Bible, a set of current coins and copies of the daily journals. The stone itself is unique. Its weight is 3 feet 4 inches and its radius 1 foot 4 inches. On its face it bears the inscription "The Brooklyn Tabernacle. Erected 1890." The ceremonies were brief, as there will be a more general assembly to witness the laying of the corner-stones which Dr. Talmage secured from Calvary and Mount Sinai. Dr. Talmage said that he hoped to reach in the new edifice by the end of September or the beginning of October.

A Triple Celebration of Methodist Triumphs was held in New York on February 13. The events celebrated were, the seventieth anniversary of the Missionary Society, the centennial of the Book Concern, and the completion of the handsome new mission and publication house on Fifth Avenue. The meeting was held in the Metropolitan Opera House, which was filled to its utmost capacity. Not only were local celebrities of the Methodist Episcopal Church present, but distinguished members of the Church from nearly all the States of the Union came to participate in the rejoicing. In the course of his remarks, Dr. Sandford Hunt, the senior book agent in New York, said that, as the financial outcome of the century, the agents and the book committee, under whose supervision they act, had the high honor of presenting to the Church the grand fire-proof structure on Fifth Avenue, with its presses driven with steam and its apartments illuminated with lightning, and all free from debt. The building referred to is an eighty-story structure of granite and brick, and has cost over a million dollars. Clinton B. Fisk incidentally mentioned, in the course of an able speech, that the Methodist Episcopal Church was the first religious body to congratulate Washington on his election to the Presidency.

Dancing in a Burning Hall was Going On in Paterson, N. J., on February 8. The order of Red Men of that city fixed their customary ball for February 7, and a large company gathered to enjoy the festivity. The dancing went on till about two o'clock on the following morning, when there was an intermission. Then the dancers had time to look around them, and they had reason to be grateful for the opportunity. They saw that while they had been dancing, the hall had been burning. The fire had attained such headway before they noticed it that tongues of flame protruded from the floor near the orchestra, and a dense smoke was rising and passing through the open windows. There was a general panic. Women screamed and some fainted. Happily, all were enabled to get out in safety. The janitor of the building, and his family, who had retired to rest, had a narrow escape of being burned to death. They were asleep, and did not know of the fire until the furniture in their rooms was actually burning. Then they rushed out without staying to dress, and joined the panic-stricken dancers on the street. The abrupt interruption of festivity, the sudden awaking from sleep, were a type of what will take place, the world over, on a day fast approaching. Christ warned us that the world would be eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, in the day of His coming. (Matt. 24: 38, 39.)

A Mother and Father Sacrificed their Lives to save their children on February 8. In the Wallkill Valley, eight miles from Kingston, N. Y. are the Binnwaters, four beautiful sheets of water. They have been frozen over for some time past, but the ice broke during the last thaw. The low temperature of February 8 caused a coating of new ice to form over the old, but it made the sheet more treacherous by concealing the breakages of the old ice beneath. Three children of a family living on the margin of the lake ventured with a companion on the ice in a hand-sled. They had travelled half across when the ice broke, and with loud screams the children disappeared in the water. The mother of the three heard them, and ran to the edge of the hole to try to rescue them. But the ice broke under her, and she too went under. Her husband saw her sink and ran to the spot. He, too, plunged through the gap and was seen no more. Several neighbors saw the fatalities but none dare venture on so perilous a work of rescue. They got ropes and threw over the hole, hoping that some of them might rise to the surface and save themselves by grasping the rope, but none of them did. Kind hearts were there, torn by the thought of their friends perishing before them, but it was impossible to save them. Not less helpless was the whole human race when God gave His Son to die, that He might rescue all who trust Him. (John 3: 16.)

An Ex-Soldier Pleading for his Enemies Astonished the Virginia House of Delegates on February 13. The question before the House was the propriety of making an appropriation for the relief of soldiers of the State who had served in the Confederate army. One of the members of the House is Mr. B. Chambers, who served in the Union army. It could not naturally be expected that he would vote for the appropriation; but he not only voted for it, but advocated it in a strong speech. He said that though he had fought against the men whom the bill was intended to relieve he heartily supported it. His only objection to the bill was that it was not liberal enough. He regretted that the State of Virginia was not able to do a great deal more than was to be done for the soldiers by the bill. This is only one of many instances of the magnanimity of the soldiers of the late war toward their former enemies. Though politicians try to keep alive sectional ill feeling, they very rarely receive the aid of the soldiers. The Virginia legislator not only sets a laudable example, but is himself following that example to which the world owes its opportunity of salvation—the example of Him who prayed for His murderers, and, while we were yet enemies, died for us. (Rom. 5: 8-10.)

A Curious Question has Arisen in the Pension Department. For some years past a woman has been receiving a pension as the widow of a deceased soldier. Recently some one notified the commissioner that the woman had obtained a divorce from the soldier not long after the war. On being questioned, the woman firmly denied that she had been divorced, and declared and proved that she had lived with him until he died. But the record of the divorce was found, and the woman was confronted with it. She said that she knew nothing of it, and it must have been procured without her knowledge and consent. Her husband was a worthless, drunken fellow, who was wasting his property; and thinking it would all be spent, she went to a lawyer and asked him if he could not obtain protection for her, and get her the right to control the property. She remembered giving testimony in court as to her husband's brutality and general business incapacity, but had no idea that the suit was one for divorce. She continued living with him, seeking to reform him, controlling the property, and treating him as her husband in every way. During his last sickness, as her neighbors attested, she waited upon him with the tenderest kindness. Still, the record shows that she was not his wife at the time, and is, therefore, not entitled to the pension. Her surprise and vexation are extreme. There will be many at the last great day who will be similarly astonished. Though living good moral lives, and in some cases engaging in Christian work, and fully expecting to go to heaven at last, they will be answered by the Lord, "I never knew you," because they have never entered into living union with Him. (Matt. 7: 22, 23.)

A Remarkable Discovery in Military Explosives was tested in New York last week. A practical chemist invited some friends to his laboratory to see the effect of a neutralizer of nitro-glycerine, explosive gelatine, and other dangerous substances. On the ledge of his window was a glass bottle. "It contains nitro-glycerine," he explained. "I keep it outside because it is too warm here. A temperature of 45 degrees would explode it. Now," he continued, "I'll show you my secret." Before the friends had time to run, the inventor had opened the window and brought the bottle of nitro-glycerine into the warm room. "A temperature of 45 degrees would explode it," he said, "but before it gets that warm I just mix it with twenty per cent. of this neutralizer, and now a child could play with it." As he spoke he mixed the explosive with his "neutralizer." To show that his nitro-glycerine was "neutralized" he poured some of it into a saucer and touched a lighted match to it. A blue flame arose, like that from burning alcohol, but there was no explosion. "That," said the inventor, "is the secret I have discovered after fifteen years. The other problem is to instantly restore its destructive power. I'll show you how that is done." Taking a small quantity of the neutralized nitro-glycerine, he poured a little cold water upon it, and immediately the explosive and the neutralizer separated, as does oil from water. "The neutralization," he said, "has not weakened but strengthened the explosive. A nation that could use explosive gelatine in projectiles," continued the inventor, "would be invincible with a very small armament." There are terribly destructive forces in human nature for which the philosophers of all ages have labored to find a neutralizer. They miserably failed, and the world was without a remedy until the infallible one was revealed from heaven. (Mark 7: 21, 22, and Ezek. 36: 26.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. John Corbett, an Englishman, has presented a miniature on silver of George Washington to Harvard University.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is making arrangements to establish a national University in Washington. Negotiations for a site near Oakview are in progress.

Rev. Chapman Harris, famous in slavery days as one of the organizers of the Underground Railway, died on February 10, at Madison, Ind. He was eighty-eight years of age.

Rev. Hiram Hutchins, the beloved pastor of Bedford Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, has resigned his charge. He is seventy-seven years of age, and in April will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination.

Dr. George D. Dowkontt, the eminent organizer of the Medical Mission work, speaking at a meeting in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, said that his society had already sent out twenty qualified medical missionaries and had many more ready to graduate.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Lewis, Bishop of Ontario, preached at Trinity Church, New York, on February 9, on behalf of the British and American Homes for girls in Paris, which were founded by his wife, formerly Miss Ada Leigh. Portraits of the Bishop and his wife were published in this journal on May 8, 1889.

Rev. B. Fay Mills is being much blessed in Jersey City. On February 9 the Tabernacle was thronged in the morning, and at the North Baptist Church, where the evening service was held, not more than half those who came could gain admission. At some of the meetings no person over thirty years of age is admitted.

Mr. Louis Klopsch received an enthusiastic welcome, after his tour with Dr. Talmage in Palestine, from the M. E. Sunday-school in Seventeenth Street, New York, of which he is superintendent. When he resumed his duties in the school on February 9, Miss S. Selbert, one of the pupils, made an address on behalf of the school, and the Rev. A. C. Morehouse spoke for the church and presented him with a beautiful basket of flowers.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman, of the Hebrew-Christian Church, 17 St. Mark's Place, New York, publicly baptized another Hebrew convert on February 9. The ordinance was preceded by a powerful logical sermon on Abel and his offering, which set many of his Jewish hearers thinking. Mr. Freshman is being greatly blessed in his labors among the Jews of New York, and only needs a little financial help to largely extend his work.

Mr. Rankin, the Mayor of Elizabeth, N. J., has issued an order to the police directing them to enforce the Sunday-keeping ordinance. He says that he has a list of 150 stores open for business on a recent Sunday. The list comprised cigar stores, confectioners', fruit stores, saloons, butchers' shops, bakeries, barbers' shops, groceries, shoe shops, dry goods and clothing stores. The offenders make matters worse by their protest against interference, in which they say that the Sunday receipts equal the receipts of the other six days.

Mr. Malachi Taylor continues his daily Bible readings from 12 to 1 o'clock in room 235, Stewart Building, New York. Every afternoon and evening he has meetings in Brooklyn, Jersey City or some adjacent city. Cards announcing date and place of meeting may be had on application to Mr. Taylor at the Stewart Building. All persons are cordially welcomed to these meetings. Thousands of the Lord's people have been helped to fuller spiritual life by Mr. Taylor's teaching, which is remarkable for its close adherence to the letter of the Word.

Dr. Justin D. Fulton has been preaching for three weeks at the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, Boston, Mass. Within a radius of a quarter of a mile of that church there are 8,000 Roman Catholics, many of whom attended his meetings, and some were converted. Dr. Fulton is now holding services in Dr. Wild's church, Toronto, during the pastor's absence in California. Of the services in Boston, a local report says: "The meetings are characteristic. That is always true where Dr. Fulton is. Their special direction is indicated by the heading of the hand-bills circulated, 'Loving Words for Romanists.' The Doctor is making those words both tender and strong, and the results watched, prayed, and worked for are appearing."

SOMETHING DONE FOR JESUS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"She hath wrought a good work upon me." Matt. 26:10.

The Ointment Sacrificed—The Censorious Critics—The Race not Extinct—What is Waste?—The Offering Unwittingly Appropriate—I. The Motive Impulses to Personal Service—Gratitude—A Poor Woman's Gift—Veneration—Sympathy—Affection—II. Modes of Personal Service—Life Consecration—Forgiveness of Injuries—Distinct Christian Work—III. Cautions—Beware of Selfish Motives—IV. A Good Defence for Work—A Missionary's Farewell.

Study carefully the story of the enthusiastic Christian woman who poured the alabaster box of very precious ointment upon the head of our ever-blessed Lord and Saviour. Honored as that action is by the universal Church of God, it did not escape criticism among the religious people of her own day. The disciples censured her, but Christ defended her; and in the course of His vindication of her He said, "Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me." There is no reason for troubling gracious men and women; and specially no cause for so doing when their work is good, and is done for their Lord. Yet are there plenty of

Troublers Around Us

to this day, and we could spare a few of them from our own immediate neighborhood. They are only able to worry us so far as we think of them, and therefore we will let the wasps alone, and feed upon the honey which flowed from the lips of our Lord Jesus. Observe that this woman had wrought a good work—good in intent, and good in itself. Her Lord said so, and His verdict ends all debate.

Observe specially that her good work was a good work upon the Lord Jesus. It was of no immediate benefit to anybody else, nor was it meant to be. "This ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor." So Judas and the other disciples said. The five hundred pence which it would have produced might have been spent in bread, and so have fed many poor people; but she expended it on Jesus, and meant that it should all be used in His honor, and that only. Poor or no poor, she thought only of Him. The ointment might have been used for certain purposes at festivals or otherwise, and so have been more or less beneficial to a number of persons; but on this occasion the benefit was to the Lord alone, and she meant it so to be. On this account the practical, philanthropic people called it "waste."

What is Waste?

Is anything wasted which is all for Jesus? It might rather seem as if all would be wasted which was not given to Him. This box of precious ointment was all for Him. Other persons in the room might smell the sweet perfume, but that was not what the grateful woman aimed at; she intended all the sweetness for Jesus; it was a good work wrought upon Him. The woman's thought was that she would honor the Lord; her only intent was to show her reverence for Him; and, provided He should be pleased with her deed, she would be perfectly content, though no one else might be gratified. Her first and last thoughts were for Jesus Himself.

We know from another evangelist that she broke the alabaster box. Was there need for that? Not in order that the ointment might be poured forth. She might, we should suppose, have opened the box in a less hasty manner; but the manner of a gift has frequently as much in it as the matter of a gift.

She Broke the Box

to display her eagerness, and to show that the choicest thing she had was not good enough for Jesus. She banished every notion of economy when she thought of her Lord. If she had possessed ten thousand times as much, she would have given it all to Him, and have poured it out without stint. Had some of us been there, we might have called it eccentricity, or fanaticism, or precipitancy, or waste; but she did not consider what onlookers might have to say; her only consideration was what Jesus might think. To please Him was the height and range of her ambition. Happy woman, to have reached this gracious absorption!

The good work which she performed was, far beyond her own thought, a most appropriate one. Our Lord said—and here I am free from all charge of following my fancy, and am sure to be correct—that there was another meaning, more remarkable by far. Whether this woman, with some prophetic spirit resting upon her, saw further into our Lord's words than His disciples did, we do not know; but Jesus declared that she did it for his burial—as it were, embalming Him a little before the time for His closely approaching sojourn in the tomb. There was a great appropriateness, then, in the act; and, we think, more appropriateness than she herself knew of at the time she did it; but it is ever so with loving hearts, reason does not guide them; but by holy instinct they hit upon the right thing.

On this occasion I wish to speak of good works wrought on Jesus, and therefore I shall not be speaking to you all. Many of you are incapable of working a good work for Christ; for you are not saved yet. How can an evil tree bring forth good fruit? How can those who do not believe in Jesus do anything for him? It is not yet time for you to do anything for Him. Your first business is that He should do everything for you. You must go to Him as guilty sinners, and find mercy in Him. I speak at this time only to those who have trusted in the Lord Jesus, and so have been set apart by Him, and sanctified for ever by His one sacrifice. These, owing as they do, so much to their Lord, are those to whom I would speak now, and say, render unto Him good works that shall terminate in Him, and shall be made to express your love to Him.

Motive Feelings.

I. And, first, there are feelings which prompt true believers to do works as unto Christ. To bring forth these peculiar services, certain feelings move within the believer's bosom. The first, and most powerful, probably, is gratitude. "We love Him, because He first loved us." He lived for us; He died for us; He rose for us; He pleads for us. We owe all to Him. The natural impulse of the renewed heart is to say, "What can I do for Him? I love His people, but I love Him best. I want to tell Him how I love Him; I want to show Him, by some direct act done for Him, that my heart adores Him for all He has done for me." Beloved brethren and sisters, have you never felt in that way? How often I have had my hand grasped by loving persons, who have said, "I wanted to tell you that you led me to the Saviour!" They wanted to say it to me; and often have they written to me, and cheered my heart, because they felt a personal gratitude which wanted a personal expression.

A Poor Woman

once forced me with tears to receive a small sum of money for myself. I declined it till I saw that it would hurt her feelings, for she had evidently longed for this opportunity for expressing her thankfulness for the sermons she had read. If we feel thus toward an earthly friend, how much more toward Him who has saved us by His blood!

Another feeling that will prompt us to the same course is that of deep veneration. Then, oftentimes, the feeling of sympathy will come in, and blend itself with veneration. Such sympathy is by no means to be condemned, but to be commended. I mean by sympathy this: have you not felt, when you have heard of our Redeemer's sufferings and death, that He deserved a great reward for them? Have you not wished that you could put a crown upon His head for having so disinterestedly laid down His life for His enemies. We have said in our hearts, How can we fitly honor this paragon of perfection, this Mirror of unbounded love? Such a One as He is, having suffered so deeply, ought to be rewarded plentifully with the honor of all who can appreciate a great and noble deed.

In the midst of all this, as a central flame burning like the sun in the centre of the lesser lights, our affection for Jesus will make us long to serve Him. We love our dear ones upon earth, but we love Jesus better than all of them put together. And, Master, when we have looked at thee, and seen the nail-prints, and beheld the scar in thy side; when we have beheld thee standing before thy Father's throne still pleading for us, and revealing thine undying affection towards us, in thine intercession for us, we have said, "We must serve Him. We must find out some way by which we may give Him new honor." Oh, for the power to live, to die, to labor, to suffer as unto Him, and unto Him alone! You know better than I can tell you, many of you, what these aspirations are. I am merely traversing a road with which you are continually familiar. Let us keep company in thought; and may I beg that, on some sunny day, when my Lord gives me special work to do for Him, you will be at my side with your gifts and efforts of love for His dear name?

Modes of Work.

II. I shall pass on, in the next place, to notice the modes in which this suggested service of good works done unto Him may show itself. We will begin, as it were, at the base of the pyramid, and go upward; and may we commence by saying that the entire life of the Christian ought to be, in many respects, a good work done unto Christ. Albeit that there must be in our life an eye to the good of our fellow-men, yet we may do it all unto the Lord. The same law which saith, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength," adds, "and thy neighbor as thyself;" which proves that it does not necessarily take away any part of our love from God when we act in love to our fellow-men. In all the obligations of life, Jesus should be before us. We should be honest, not only for our reputation's sake, for that would be an unworthy motive, but for Christ's sake. Would we have Christ's disciples called "thieves"? We should be sternly upright, never by any means under suspicion of untruth or double-dealing, because we serve the Lord Christ, who is faithful and true. Of us more is expected than of others, since we serve a better Master.

Certain matters ordinarily overlooked in common life, the Christian must look to for Christ's sake. For instance, that of Forgiveness of Injuries.

Some will not forgive at all: this is fatal to all hope of salvation. Others will forgive, but not till after some considerable time of wrath: good delayed in evil indulged. But you, Christian, you are to do a good work upon Christ by forgiving for His sake. He has forgiven you, and therefore you will forgive others freely, and continually. Your revenge is the noble vengeance of heaping coals of the fire of kindness upon your enemy's head. You might have smitten him, but for Christ's sake you bless him. May your whole life, then, ordinarily, be lived as unto Jesus; and may special gems of forgiveness glisten in it!

Now go a step higher. That which is purely Christian work ought to be done also upon Him, and for Him. I mean by Christian work evangelic service which grows out of the plan of salvation. I refer to those things peculiar to Christians—such as spreading the gospel, teaching, instructing, consoling, almsgiving, and the like. All this should be done for Jesus more really than it often is. And that other part of Christian service, namely, endurance, the bearing of shame for Christ's sake, the patient suffering of the will of God in providence—all this should be done for Christ most distinctly. I know there will be a second motive here, as in the former, and properly so. When I preach, I have an earnest desire to do good to my hearers; I ought to have such a desire. But yet, I desire to be moved by a higher motive than love to your soul; I desire that, by the stirring up of your minds, Christ may get glory; that you may be led to do something for Him which will bring Him honor, and please Him. May you as saints be prospered, that the Lord of saints may be honored!

Consecrated Gifts.

We will go a step higher. There are works of the consecration of our substance. In these all Christians ought to abound. It is ours to give often, give largely, give even till we feel the pinch of giving. But we must take care that we truly give as to the Lord. When you give your money to the Church of God to maintain the preaching of the gospel, or to assist missionary enterprise, or whatever else the church has in hand, you are doing a good work to others; you are helping on the gospel, which has been a blessing to you, and will be a blessing to them. But, over and above that, your desire should be to do it as unto the Lord.

The same should be true of what is bestowed upon the poor. When you noiselessly and quietly give to the poor, who need your help, you are doing it for Christ—if such, indeed, be your motive and it ought always to be so. We are getting still nearer when we give to the Lord's poor because the are in living union with Jesus; they are a part of Christ's body, and in giving to them we are giving to Christ Jesus himself. I suppose the day will come in this age of novel reforms when we must not dare to help the poor and needy. We can hardly do so now without coming under the censure of the school of hard economists. I see notices in the windows requesting us by no means to give alms. I should like to put at the bottom of such placards the text of Scripture which commands us to give to him that asketh of us. Law or no law, trust, when a Christian sees a case of necessity, he will not be held back by any motives of political economy, or any of the hard and fast teachings of the social scientists.

Poor Saints

We will go a step higher dear brethren. There are two great duties which the Lord has appointed for His people only, and these we should observe because they are appointed by Him. I refer to the two commands regarding of the Lord. In keeping these commandments there is a great reward to our own souls, but we ought to come as believers to be baptized out of love to Jesus. We ought not to ask, "What is the good of this?" We may not say, "Shall I get anything by it?" But we are to say simply this, "He bade me, and I will do it for the love I bear His name." I feel shocked when I hear people say, "But it is not essential to salvation." Thou mean and beggarly spirit! Wilt thou do nothing but what is essential to thine own salvation? A Pharisee or a harlot might talk so. Is this thy love to Christ—that thou wilt not obey Him, unless He shall pay thee for it, unless He shall make thy soul's salvation depend upon it? Oh, if you love the Master, the least of His commandments will seem very precious in your sight, and you will feel that, because you love Him, you obey Him.

Baptism and the Supper

But I will come to the point by saying, dear brothers and sisters, seek to do something for Jesus which shall even be above all this a secret sacrifice of pure love to Jesus. Do special and private work towards your Lord. Between you and your Lord let there be secret love-tokens. You will say to me, "What shall I do?" I decline to answer. I am not to be a judge for you; especially as to a private deed of love. The good woman in our text did not say to Peter, "What shall I give?" nor to John, "What shall I do?" but her heart was inventive.

Cautions.

III. But time fails me, and therefore I must, briefly, and with extreme brevity, offer you a counsel or two about doing good works for Jesus. Take care that self never creeps in. It is to be all for Jesus; let not the foul fingers of self-seeking stain your work. Never do anything for Jesus out of love for popularity. Be always glad if your right hand does not know what your left hand does. Hide your works as much as possible from the praise of the most judicious friend. At the same time, let me also add, never have any fear of censure from those who know not your love to Jesus. This good woman did her work publicly, because it was the best way to honor her Lord; and if you can honor Him by doing a good work in the market-place before all men, do not be afraid. To some, the temptation may be to court the publicity; to others, the temptation may be to dread it. Serve your Lord as if no eye beheld you; but do not blush though all the eyes in the universe should gaze upon you. Let not self, in either case, come in to defile the service.

Let us, above all, keep out of our heart the thought which is so common in this general life, that nothing is worth doing unless something practical comes out of it—meaning by "practical" some manifest result upon the morals or temporals of others. It is almost universal to ask the question, Est bono?—"What is the good of it? What good will it do to me? What good will it do to my neighbor? To what purpose is this waste?" Nay, not if it will glorify Christ, do it; and accept that motive as the highest and most conclusive of reason.

IV. I will not detain you longer, but just close my saying that there is of any kind of work which you may do unto Jesus, and unto Jesus only. However large the cost, nothing is wasted which is expended upon the Lord, for Jesus deserves it. What if it did no service to any other; did it please him? He has a right to it. Jesus deserves that there should be such done altogether for Him. Do you doubt it? There is brought into the house, on his birthday, a present for father. That present is of no use to mother, or to the children; it cannot be eaten, it cannot be worn; father could not give it away to anybody, it is of no value to anybody but himself. Does anybody say, "What a pity it was to select such a gift, even though father is pleased?" No, everybody says, "That is just the thing we like to give to father, since he must keep it for himself. We meant it to be for him, we had no thought of any second; and we are glad that he must use our gift for his own pleasure." So with regard to Jesus. Find out what will please him; and do it for him. Think of no one else in the matter. He deserves all you can do, and infinitely more.

A Good Defence

Besides, you may depend upon it that any action which appears to you useless, if you do it prompted by love, has a place in Christ's plan, and will be turned to high account. This anointing of our Lord's head was said to be useless. "No," said Jesus, "it falls in just in its proper place—she has done it for my burial." There have been men who have done an heroic deed for Christ, and at the time they did it they might have asked, "How will this subserve my Lord's purpose?" But somehow it was the very thing that was wanted. When Whitefield and Wesley turned out into the fields to preach, it was thought to be a fanatical innovation, and perhaps they themselves would not have ventured upon it if there had not been an absolute necessity; but by what seemed to that age a daring deed they set the example to all England, and open-air preaching has become an accepted agency of large value. If you, for Christ's sake, become Quixotic, never mind; your folly may be the wisdom of ages to come.

A Farewell.

I shook hands, after the sermon this morning, with a good missionary of Christ, from western Africa. He had been there sixteen years. I believe that they reckon four years to be the average of a missionary's life in that malarious region. He had buried twelve of his companions in the time. For twelve years he had scarcely seen the face of a white man. He was going to Africa to live a little while longer, perhaps, but he expected soon to die; and then he added (I thought sweetly) as I shook his hand, "Well, many of us may die; perhaps hundreds of us will do so; but Christ will win at the last! Africa will know and will fear our Lord Jesus; and what does it matter what becomes of us—our name, our reputation, our health, our life—if Jesus wins at the last?" What heroic words! What a missionary spirit! Live in that spirit, dear brethren and sisters, and in that spirit come now to the communion-table! Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Physician's Daughter's Faith.—Mr. Hamilton says: "A famous doctor had an only and much-loved daughter. Once when her father was from home, she was suddenly seized with a fever. Her illness was becoming more and more serious, but she thought if only her father would return there would be no danger; he would certainly be able to stop the ravages of the disease, and enable her to recover her usual health. Word of his daughter's condition was sent to him, and at once, with all the speed of a father's love, he hurried to his daughter's bedside. 'Now, my dear,' he said, 'don't be afraid. I understand your disease, it has been taken in good time. I have cured hundreds of such cases, and I am quite sure I can cure you.' At once her alarms fled. She believed her father's word implicitly. She had faith in him, in his power and willingness to save. And that trust was not in vain, for in a short time she was restored to her usual health. Have faith in Christ's power and willingness to save. He is the great Physician, and has healed thousands upon thousands of cases."

A Pugilist Becomes a Preacher.—The Rev. James Wells relates: "In 1845, Hugh Miller visited Olney. He found the whole town in a stir. All the evil-looking fellows in the neighborhood seemed to have gathered there. They had come to witness a fight between two pugilists, named Bendigo and Caunt, for championship and a large stake. After ninety-three rounds Bendigo beat. When the fight was over, Hugh Miller saw him standing at the door of a saloon with his face all bruised. He seemed the last man one would have expected to become an earnest worker for Christ, yet that transformation did take place. Thirty years had passed since that great fight and Bendigo, now about sixty years of age, was in gaol for the twenty-seventh time. One Sabbath he heard in the prison chapel an address on David and Goliath. He understood it; Goliath was just another Caunt. So interested did he become that at the close he cried out, 'Bravo! I am glad the little one won.' Next morning the sermon was about Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. He fancied that the name of the third was Bendigo, and said to himself, 'If one Bendigo may be saved, why not another?' He began to think deeply about his sins, and remembered that Jesus was the Saviour of sinners. Upon leaving gaol he found his old companions waiting for him, but, instead of going with them, he went to a mission meeting, and yielded himself to the Saviour. He afterward testified, 'I have been in twenty-one prize-fights, and have not been beaten in one; but when I came to the cross of Christ I was beaten at the first round.' Such triumphs of grace show us that the Gospel of Christ is still the power of God unto the salvation of all who believe."

Saved from a Passing Train.—"A Little Girl and her younger brother were playing on a narrow cutting of the railway. The railway at that point made a very sharp turn, and trains could not be seen until they were very near. As the children were playing, a train swept swiftly round the curve and was almost upon them ere they perceived it. The little girl had just time to place her brother under a small jutting piece of rock, then herself stood flat against the face of the rock, clinging to it with both hands. A passenger in that train heard, as it passed rapidly along, the voice of the little girl, crying to her brother, 'Cling fast to the rock, Johnny! Cling fast to the rock!' And Johnny did as he was told, and the train swept harmlessly past. God has provided a place of safety for us, even the sheltering Rock, Christ Jesus. He has set our feet upon it, but we must cling to the Rock, and cling to it with all our heart."

The Wife of a Sporting Man Gives the Following testimony: "It was a good thing for my husband and me when Shaftesbury Hall was opened. We never went to any church since we were married. He used to go with betting men, and at night attended a low music-hall. But the second Sunday your hall was opened, we were going by, and my husband stopped a minute to listen. He said, 'They are singing nicely in here, let us go in.' We went in. The next week he was so different, he would not go to the music-hall, and when Sunday came round, he said to me, 'Get your things on, mate. I'm going to the missionary's hall.' This led to the conversion of us both." The missionary says: "They are both also total abstainers, and two of my workers. It is very encouraging to look at the faces of those reclaimed, and to see the reformation in their lives and homes. The threadbare shawl is exchanged for a new mantle, and the shabby, shapeless bonnet for a new one. A friend remarked, 'Your people are getting quite respectable.' I replied, 'Part of the mission of Christianity is to make people respectable.'"

A Young Jew's Testimony.—The London City Mission has now seven missionaries to Jews, all of them being themselves converts from Judaism; and it is encouraging to find that they all speak of the existence of many Jews in London who secretly believe in Christ as the long-looked-for Messiah, and of not a few who have been given grace to confess Him openly by baptism. "Only a short time ago," writes one missionary, "I was cheered by the testimony of a young Jew at the first meeting in connection with the newly appointed missionary at Mile End. After the meeting he came up to me, showing me the Bible from which he had been reading to the Jews assembled, and, addressing me, said, 'Do you see this Bible? You gave it me four years ago at the Strangers' Rest. I was then living among the Jews, and therefore tore out the title-page, because it had on it, "The Old and New Testaments," and I did not wish the Jews with whom I lived at the time to know that I possessed the New Testament. I am now rejoicing in God my Saviour, and would not like to part with this blessed book for anything.' This young Jew has been baptized at the Jews' Episcopal Chapel, Palestine Place, and is now working as a journeyman printer at the Jewish Converts' Institution, devoting his spare time to the Lord's work."

A Woman "Mad for Drink."—"The B—s have been a remarkable couple. Fond of singing and music, they both visited traveling circus and concert parties. Drink and bad companions led them into trouble and to prison. They got their living by playing and singing outside of prisons. For years this went on, but B. was induced to sign the pledge, and three years ago I was the means, in God's hands, of leading him to Christ. His wife, however, continued her drunken habits, often staying out all night, frequently fighting, and often locked up. She would at times insult me, but generally came to me in her trouble. She signed the pledge, only to break it the next day. Sometimes she would come into our meetings under the influence of drink. When I have pleaded with her she would say, 'Oh, give me a penny for a half-pint! I am mad for drink.' I never gave her up. I knew that God was able and willing to save, and I looked to Him for His power. For the greater part of two days we sought Divine help on our knees at her house, and, praise God, her cry for deliverance from her besetting sin was heard. Through much conflict she came forth victorious, threw off her drinking companions, and for some months has been a living monument of God's sparing mercy. The husband and wife, though very poor, are now a happy Christian couple.

Prof. D. B. Towner.

Mrs. D. B. Towner.

The Late Bishop Lightfoot.

How the Lark was Made to Sing.—"A Man was going through a bird-fancier's place, and was examining with interest a fine collection of larks. He noticed one very quiet and sad-looking bird at the top of the cage, and asked the keeper what was wrong with it. 'Oh,' was the reply, 'it is going to die. It has never sung since we have had it.' 'Ah, what price do you put upon it?' 'Oh, sir, if you want a bird I would not recommend that one. It has never whistled a note since it has been here.' 'But what do you want for it?' he asked. A price was stated, and immediately the bird was bought. As its purchaser took it away he said to himself, looking at the bird, 'If you can sing, I will make you.' He tried sugar, different kinds of seed, and shifted the cage from one situation to another, but it was of no use; the bird remained dumb. At last he said, 'I have only one more resource.' He took the bird out to the green fields, and, opening the cage door, said to it, 'Now, go! You are free.' The bird at first looked curiously at the door, as if it could scarcely realize that it was free, then looking up at its owner seemed to say, 'Am I really free?' Then it spread its wings and flew away, and as it mounted higher and higher it opened its mouth and sent forth a perfect flood of song. Oh, poor sinners, who are living in the cage of sin, the Lord who has bought you with His blood, has opened a door of escape. It is wide open and all may pass through it. Will you do so? or will you continue to dwell in your cage? Harken to those hymns of praise! They are the song of joyful thanks from those who have been set free."

A Woman Who Had Never Washed.—A Devoted Christian worker says: "One of the hill tribes in the north of India have, as a part of their religion, the law that the human body should never touch water. A few hundred miles from that part was a mission-station, and one day the missionary was surprised to see a very dirty young woman knock at his door. 'Sir,' she said, 'I have heard in my country that you teach a new religion, a religion for women as well as for men. I started weeks ago, and have come hundreds of miles, through jungles, over hills, and along burning highways, to learn about it. Will you take me in and teach me?' 'Yes,' was the reply, 'on one condition, that you take a bath.' 'Take a bath?' she repeated, starting back, 'No, I cannot; I have never washed, nor any of my people before me. No, I cannot.' 'Then,' said the missionary, 'I cannot take you in.' The girl turned sadly away, for she would not yield. Thirteen days, one after the other, she came with the same request, 'Teach me about Christ' and each time she got the same answer, 'Be washed first.' On the fourteenth day the missionary's wife took a mirror and put it in the hall just opposite the door. As she was sitting in her room in the forenoon, she heard a shrill scream, and this young woman rushed into the room, shouting, 'Lady, lady, there is an awful wild beast in your house!' The lady suffered herself to be led out, and was taken up to the mirror, when she proved to the poor girl that it was her own reflection. When she saw herself as she really was, within an hour she was in the bath. Not only was she washed bodily, but soon her soul was washed white in the blood of the Lamb."

The Lighthouse on the Rock.—"A man once said to the keeper of a lighthouse, 'Does your lighthouse ever shake?' 'Well,' replied the keeper, 'when there has been a terrific storm, and the waves washing over us, and breaking upon us, sometimes I have thought that it did shake somewhat. But there is one thing of which I am perfectly sure, and that is that the rock upon which the lighthouse is built never shakes.' Individual Christians, or even individual churches may shake, when the great billows of trial or adversity break over them, but there is one thing upon which we may rest assured, that the Rock, Christ Jesus, upon which we are built; never shakes. He remains strong and steadfast to the end, making secure all who have put their trust in Him."

PROF. AND MRS. D. B. TOWNER.

(See Portraits.)

THE name of Towner has a double claim on the regard and gratitude of the Christian public of the United States. Not only have their voices thrilled large audiences of worshippers solemnizing the minds of the people and preparing them for the preaching of our best evangelists, but they have given to the Church that precious volume entitled Hymns, New and Old, which is incomparably the best of all works of Gospel song. Many of our readers have listened to the singers with profit and delight, and a still larger number have used their book with sincere thankfulness to the authors and compilers. Their portraits and a brief sketch of their lives, therefore, will be very welcome to all.

D. B. Towner was born in Rome, Pa., on March 1850; he is now, therefore, in his fortieth year. In early boyhood the singular sweetness and power of his voice attracted the attention of all who knew him, and several competent judges urged him to study music, assuring him that such a gift was worthy of the most persevering cultivation. The hint was not disregarded, and such progress did the youth make that in 1868, when he was eighteen years of age, he was music teacher in a famous singing-school, and was recognized as one of the most efficient professors of the art.

During the next five years he devoted himself assiduously to study and practice. In 1873 he went to Binghamton, N. Y., to lead the singing in the Centenary M. E. Church, and on week days he conducted musical institutes and conventions in neighboring cities. Subsequently he removed to Cincinnati, O., where he continued teaching, drilling church choirs, etc. About five years ago the call of God to enter His service could not be mistaken.

Manifest tokens of His blessing were frequent, and invitations of various evangelists for his help showed the way to service. Mr. Towner, after prayerful consideration, felt it to be his duty to resign his lucrative connection and give himself wholly to evangelistic work. He removed to Northfield, Mass., at Mr. D. L. Moody's suggestion, and took charge of the music in the annual College Conference, and aided Mr. Moody in other important services. Since then he has been associated with Dr. L. W. Munnhall, Rev. B. Fay Mills, Major Whittle, and other well-known evangelists, who all place a high value on his services and acknowledge the valuable aid he has rendered them. The pastors of churches in which revival services have been held have also spoken in the most earnest terms of the benefit of Mr. Towner's musical services, adding to their encomiums on the tender pathos and appropriate expression of the feeling of the hymns, unstinted praise of the musical accuracy of his performances. They have thus been a delight to musical critics equally with a power in evangelistic work among the unskilled masses. It may be added that Mr. Towner is no mere mechanical worker; his heart is in the gospel service, and it is his delight to go from seat to seat in the inquirers' meeting directing individual souls to Christ.

Mrs. Towner is truly a help meet for her husband. She possesses, like him, a wonderful natural musical taste, and in accompanying him on the organ and joining her rich, melodious voice to his just at the right moment, contributes to the sweetness and power of the service. Mr. Towner speaks of her as his "strong right arm." They were married December 20, 1870.

THE LATE BISHOP LIGHTFOOT.

(See Portrait.)

THE death of Bishop Lightfoot is a loss not only to his own Church and his own country, but to all Christendom. In these days of assault on the inspiration and authority of the Bible, the enemies of the Book encountered no opponent so able to fight them with their own weapons as Bishop Lightfoot. His general learning was equal to theirs, and his knowledge of ancient literature was immeasurably superior. It appeared that God had especially prepared him to be a champion of His Word. His natural gifts and his educational training were precisely those needed by the Christian leader in the conflict which has waged so fiercely during the past sixty or seventy years.

Joseph Barber Lightfoot was born at Liverpool, England, in 1828. His preparatory education was gained at a famous school in Birmingham, under the famous Dr. Prince Lee, one of the most learned biblical scholars of his day, and himself subsequently a bishop of his Church. From his hands Lightfoot passed to Trinity College, Cambridge, and obtained the highest honors in his degree. He was Senior Classic and Senior Chancellor's medallist in 1851, and was also a Wrangler, or a First Classman in mathematics. His subsequent life was for many years mainly devoted to the University, to which he was intensely attached. He became Fellow of Trinity in 1852, and subsequently tutor. In 1861 he became Hulsean Professor of Divinity, and in 1875 Margaret Professor. In 1871 he was appointed Canon Residentiary at St. Paul's Cathedral, London. His name will always be cherished in that cathedral as one of its great ornaments, and Dr. Liddon, in his sermon on the occasion of his funeral, paid a graceful tribute of honor and regret to his former colleague. His influence there was of the utmost value, as he brought the gifts of his unsurpassed learning to the work of the practical instruction of a great London audience. In April, 1879, he was made Bishop of Durham.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL IN MADAGASCAR. (See Illustration.)

THE recent consecration of the Cathedral of St. Lawrence, at Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, is practical evidence of the progress of Christian missionary work in that island. The building is 125 feet long, and 54 feet 6 inches wide. With the transepts the entire width is 76 feet 6 inches. Its cost up to the present time has been $40,000; the whole of which has been raised by friends of the mission in Great Britain, Australia, and New Zealand. The two great Church societies, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, each contributed $5,000. An effort is now being made to raise a further sum for the erection of towers to the cathedral. The picture here given is from a photograph taken on the day of consecration, when great crowds of native Christians were wending their way to the new edifice to join in the dedication service.

This mission in Madagascar is one of the most interesting of all the many enterprises undertaken by missionary societies. It was inaugurated in 1818 by the appointment of the Rev. Messrs. Jones and Bevan, who, with their families, entered upon their labors the following year. Within two months after their arrival at Tamatave, five of the little band—namely, Mr. and Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Bevan, and two children—sickened and died, and Mr. Bevan was left alone. He, nevertheless, determined to go on with his work, and the following year, being reinforced by the arrival of other missionaries, the mission soon entered on a career of success. Within the next fifteen years the entire Bible was translated into the Malagasy language, and the missionaries sometimes preached to congregations numbering as many as a thousand persons.

But now arose that fearful persecution of the Christians, under the reign of the pagan queen, Ranavalona Manjaka, in which the missionaries were driven from the island, hundreds of Christian converts were slaughtered, and the mission lay altogether in ruins for more than a quarter of a century. In 1867, by the death of the queen, the way was opened once more for preaching the gospel in Madagascar, and when the next band of missionaries entered the country they were delighted to find that, through all those dark and terrible years, many native Christians had secretly clung to their faith, and also that, as in apostolic days, they had gained accessions to their numbers, in spite of, and possibly, in part, by reason of, the dangers attending their devotion. Several memorial churches were now erected to the memory of the martyrs, and the work of the mission began to be pushed out in other parts.

In 1871 there were twenty-three European missionaries in Madagascar, besides a number of native evangelists. The self-denying liberality of the members of those churches was conspicuously shown by their home missionary zeal and enterprise, thus giving still further proof of the genuineness of the gospel work among them. The event of recent interest is the completion of the revised edition of the Malagasy Bible in 1888.

The island of Madagascar is the largest in the world except Australia, being nearly as large as the State of Texas. It contains a population of about 5,000,000, mostly a scattered one, for the reason that there are almost no navigable rivers, and but very few harbors on the coast, so that there are no favorable locations for the massing of great populations. Tamatave, on the east coast, is the principal port, with a population of about five thousand.

Dedication of the New Protestant Cathedral in Madagascar.

Besides the missionary churches, about a hundred in number, there is what may be called a native national Church, the congregations of which are mostly to be found in the interior, where they seem to have grown up during the days of persecution, which raged most fiercely in the seacoast towns. The Church has an itinerant ministry, but is not governed exactly on the principles of any other Christian Church. Of late abuses have crept into it, originating in the avarice of some of its leading members, which, it may be hoped, will soon be reformed.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 110.)

The Famous Governor.

WILLIAM BRADFORD appears to have devoted himself at an early period to supply the deficiencies consequent on his neglected education. Of the course pursued by him we have no note, though doubtless the natural desire of an intelligent mind for extended knowledge would be fostered and increased in him by the domestic habits which illness forced on him during his early years. By his own exertions he amply supplied the defects of a neglected education. He thoroughly mastered the Dutch language, and was conversant with French, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. In the narrative he gives of the arrest of the Nonconformists, in 1607, by the officers of the English Government at Boston, he states that they were "rifled and stripped of their money, books, and much other goods." Young Bradford was doubtless one of those whose library was spoiled by the lawless agents of the Government; as we know that he afterward possessed a considerable collection, which he took with him to New England. Among the records of the founders of the old colony, which have been preserved, is a catalogue of its historian's library, which includes 275 volumes, sixty-four of which are in the learned languages.

In Holland, however, the young exile had to turn his attention to other objects than the acquirement of learning, and the amassing of books. He applied himself to study the art of dyeing and washing silks; and so soon as he was of age, he converted his estate in England into ready money and endeavored to establish a successful trade at Leyden. But he was a stranger in the country, and inexperienced in the manufacture by which he sought to support himself in the land of his adoption. He met with many disappointments and losses, which he piously esteemed as the chastenings of God, lest the cares of the world should spring up and choke the good seed in his heart. God, in truth, had far other work for him, and was training him for the duties of the high trust that was to be committed to him.

William Bradford was in his thirty-second year when he landed with the band of the Mayflower's Pilgrims in Plymouth Bay. He had been with them in every step of their progress, from the time when, as a thoughtful boy, he cast in his lot among the despised Nonconformists of Yorkshire, and shared in their prison and their flight, to that period when the expedition, in which his energies and his worldly means had been alike freely embarked, was safely anchored in its destined haven beyond the Atlantic. The sickly boy had grown to be a man of robust frame, of vigorous judgment, great firmness, and self-reliance, and a gentle patience and sweetness of temper, such as is rarely found, combined with the sterner virtues of a mind fitted for command. Above all Bradford had no ambition to rule, or to assume any prominent part in the new State.

We owe to his own pen the most ample historic annals of the founding of New England, yet, save by inference, we would hardly discover that the writer had borne any part in the great work. It is, perhaps, well that its history should be so considered even now; that it should be viewed solely as a community animated by one feeling, and inspired by the same faith and humble trust in the God and Father of all. It was, indeed, a noble band of Christian men and Christian women, that breasted the billows of the stormy Atlantic in the little Mayflower, "freighted with the destinies of a continent." True, it may be, as one of their descendants exclaims, that, "on their heroic enterprise the selectest influences of religion seemed descending visibly; while beyond their perilous path were hung the rainbow and the western star of empire."

But it was no spirit of worldly ambition that animated these Christian soldiers. Their unobtrusive virtues sought room for action, not an arena for display. Each stepped into his own place, and fulfilled the duties of this station without thought of honor or reward; and were it not that the great nation, which now fills the land where they struggled for a foot of earth, has learned to look back on these Pilgrims with the pride of ancestry, we might forget the worth of that freight which the little Mayflower bore, as she battled with the storms of the mighty ocean, and struggled onward to their haven of rest. Of this, however, there is little danger. In the annual and occasional festivities with which the anniversary of the Pilgrim Fathers' landing is celebrated throughout America, oratory exhausts itself in the attempt to clothe their virtues in language of fitting honor, and worthily to picture an event wherein Americans behold the advent of their national greatness and renown.

"Let us go up," exclaims Edward Everett, in an address delivered at one of these popular celebrations of the landing of the Pilgrims, which took place throughout New England in 1839,—"Let us go up in imagination to yonder hill, and look upon the November scene. That single dark speck, just discernible through the perspective glass, on the waste of waters, is the fated vessel. The storm moans through her tattered canvas, as she creeps, almost sinking, to her anchorage in Provincetown Harbor; and there she lies with all her treasures, not of silver and gold (for of these she has none), but of courage, of patience, of zeal, of high spiritual daring. So, often, as I dwell in imagination on this scene; when I consider the condition of the Mayflower, utterly incapable as she was of living through another gale; when I survey the terrible front presented by our coast to the navigator, who, unacquainted with its channels and roadsteads, should approach it in the stormy season, I dare not call it a mere piece of good fortune that the general north and south wall of the shore of New England should be broken by this extraordinary projection of the Cape, running out into the ocean a hundred miles, as if on purpose to receive and encircle the precious vessel.

"As I now see her, freighted with the destinies of a continent, barely escaped from the perils of the deep, approaching the shore precisely where the broad sweep of this most remarkable headland presents almost the only point at which, for hundreds of miles, she could with any ease have made a harbor, and this perhaps the very best on the seaboard, I feel my spirit raised above the sphere of mere natural agencies. I see the mountains of New England rising from their rocky thrones. They rush forward into the ocean, settling down as they advance; and there they range themselves a mighty bulwark around the heaven-directed vessel. Yes, the everlasting God himself stretches out the arm of His mercy and His power in substantial manifestation, and gathers the meek company of His worshippers as in the hollow of His hand."

It is just that the virtues of the colonists of New England should be remembered, while acknowledging the worth of their Governor. Had Governor Carver lived, his successor would have pursued the even tenor of his way, contented with the humble duties and virtues of private life; and had the latter died, there were not wanting others to fill his place. It is not detracting from the merits, or diminishing the worth, of Governor Bradford, thus to picture him as the willing ruler of a band of noble and virtuous colonists, who, like one family, rejoiced and suffered together, and acted in sympathy with the wise guidance of their head, even as the blood circulates through every vein and artery of the healthy frame, and throbs responsive to the heart's pulsations.

The colonists of Plymouth, it must be borne in remembrance, had exercised the rights of legislation and self-government without the sanction of a royal patent. The social compact, which becomes little more than a figure of speech when adopted as a term descriptive of the complicated relations of the most republican government, was literally realized among the New England settlers. Each individual member of the settlement voluntarily subjected himself to the will of the majority, and to the guidance of him whom they had chosen to govern. In every community the virtues of each individual member constitute an element in the prosperity of the state; but in the first little republic of New England one vicious member was sufficient to have destroyed the equilibrium on which the stability of the whole depended.

Had some proud rebel, refusing either to subject himself to the will of the majority, or to leave the society, to the arrangements of which he was unwilling to submit, chosen to appeal directly to the king, in all human probability the settlement would have been dissolved, and scattered as effectually as the abortive colony of Weston. The latter, indeed, abundantly suffices to illustrate the instability of such a union when attempted with vicious and discordant elements. What would all the virtues and all the wisdom of Governor Bradford have sufficed had his lot been to govern the colonists of Wessagusset instead of those of New Plymouth? Nevertheless, the wisdom and sagacity of the Governor did stamp, as with his own character, the whole early history of the colony. While he lived, his influence never failed to be directed for its best interests, and no eulogium can too strongly commend the wisdom and sagacity with which he administered its affairs.

It must not be forgotten in estimating the virtues of him who held, during so many of its early and eventful years, the chief post in the first colony of New England, how unenviable were the duties of his station. Did provisions fail, he must be appealed to. Did Indians prove treacherous, or companions false, or friends desert their cause, or enemies increase around them, he must be ready for each emergency. Nay, did even seed-time and harvest seem to belie the gracious promise of mercy made to Noah and his posterity—did the earth refuse to yield her increase, or did death cut down old man and maiden and child, until the soil beneath their feet was thickly sown with the moldering dust of friends; all these created new calls for his wisdom and sagacity, or his long-suffering and heroic endurance. The very patient and virtuous forbearance of the colonists added to his cares: for when with sad yet uncomplaining wistfulness each one turned to him in their adversity, and with tearful eyes silently appealed to him for aid, he must have felt as the father of one great family, whose every want and suffering becomes even more keenly his own. It is no mean award to him that he proved equal to the task.

"From the time when Governor Bradford enters upon his administration of the affairs of the colony, year after year its history is his. He was in an eminent degree the moving and guiding genius of the enterprise. His conduct toward the Indians was marked with such wisdom, energy, and kindness, that he soon gained a powerful influence over them. With the people of the colony—not merely his first fellow-pilgrims, but all that came successively afterwards—he had equal authority and power, without the necessity of assuming it. The most heedless among them seem to have feared and respected him. He set them all at work, and would have none idle in the community, being resolved that 'if any would not work, neither should they eat.'

"Cotton Mather gives an account of a company of young fellows, newly arrived, who were very unwilling to comply with his orders, or rather with the arrangements of the colony, for working in the fields on the public account. But on Christmas Day they excused themselves from the labors of the public industry, under the pretence that it was against their conscience to do any work on that day. The Governor told them if that were the case, he would spare them till they were better informed; but soon afterwards he found them all at play in the street, hard at work upon their diversions, as if in obedience to the Book of Sports. That being the case, he very quietly took away the instruments of their games, and gave them to understand that he had a conscience as well as they, and that it was against his conscience as the Governor that they should play while the others were at work; so that, if they had any devotion to the day, they should show it at home, in the exercise of religion, and not in the street, with their pastime and frolics. The reproof was as effectual as it was happy, and the Governor was plagued with no more such tender consciences.

"His administration of affairs as connected with the merchant adventurers, was a model of firmness, patience, forbearance, energy, and enterprise. Along with a few others, he took the whole trade of the colony into his hands, with the assumed responsibility of paying off all their debts, and the benevolent determination to bring over the rest of their brethren from Leyden. His activity in the prosecution of this great undertaking was indefatigable. Meanwhile, no other business, either of the piety or the civil polity of the colony, was neglected. He made such arrangements in conjunction with his brethren, to redeem their labor from the hopelessness of its conditions in the adventuring copartnership under which they were bound for the seven years' contract with the merchants, as inspired them all speedily with new life and courage. Under the pressure of the famine his example was as a star of hope, for he never yielded to despondency; and while with Brewster he threw them upon God for support and provision, he set in motion every possible instrumentality for procuring supplies."

But it is needless to follow out the eulogy, or enter further on the evidence of its truth. Most justly may it be said that Governor Bradford's history is the history of the colony. He was annually re-elected so long as he lived—excepting only five years, during which, at his own earnest request, he was relieved from the cares of his great trust. Winslow filled his place during three years, and Prince during the remaining two. To his moderation and public spirit, much of the character permanently stamped on the institutions of New England may still be traced. Had he been ambitious, much was in his power. Had he been the narrow-minded sectary that prejudice has pictured the Nonconformists of England in the seventeenth century, the elements of spiritual pride, and the despotism of bigotry were within his reach. But he was none of these; nor was that free colony of exiles for conscience' sake, the fit arena either for unsatisfied ambition or intolerant sectarianism.

"The frame of civil government in the colony," says Bancroft, "was of the utmost simplicity. A governor was chosen by general suffrage, whose power, always subordinate to the general will, was, at the desire of Bradford, specially restricted by a council of five, and afterward of seven, assistants. In the council, the governor had but a double vote. For more than eighteen years, the whole body of the male inhabitants constituted the legislature; the State was governed, like our towns, as a strict democracy; and the people were frequently convened to decide on executive not less than on judicial questions. At length, the increase of population, and its diffusion over a wider territory, led to the introduction of the representative system, and each town sent its committee to the general court. We subsequently find the colony a distinct member of the earliest American Confederacy; but it is chiefly as guides and pioneers that the fathers of the old colony merit gratitude.

"Through scenes of gloom and misery, the Pilgrims showed the way to an asylum for those who would go to the wilderness for the purity of religion or the liberty of conscience. Accustomed 'in their native land to no more than a plain country life and the innocent trade of husbandry,' they set the example of colonizing New England, and formed the mould for the civil and religious character of its institutions. Enduring every hardship themselves, they were the servants of posterity, the benefactors of succeeding generations.

"In the history of the world, many pages are devoted to commemorate the men who have besieged cities, subdued provinces, or overthrown empires. In the eye of reason and of truth, a colony is a better offering than a victory; the citizens of the United States should rather cherish the memory of those who founded a state on the basis of democratic liberty, the fathers of the country; the men who, as they first trod the soil of the New World, scattered the seminal principles of republican freedom and national independence. They enjoyed, in anticipation, the thought of their extending influence, and the fame which their grateful successors would award to their virtues.

"'Out of small beginnings,' said Bradford, 'great things have been produced; and as one small candle may light a thousand, so the light here kindled hath shone to many, yea, in some sort to our whole nation.'—'Let it not be grievous to you—such was the consolation offered from England to the Pilgrims in the season of their greatest sufferings—let it not be grievous to you, that you have been instruments to break the ice for others. The honor shall be yours to the world's end.'"

Governor Bradford lived to the age of sixty-nine. He rejoiced in beholding the reward of his labors. The refuge of freedom, which he had anticipated as he embarked with the first Pilgrims in the Mayflower, had been realized. It may be that he looked forward with still higher hopes, and anticipated the future history, not of the colony only, but of the vast continent which he had helped to rescue from the wandering savage, that it might become the home of a race sprung from the old Saxon Fathers of England. He died on the 9th of May, 1657, "lamented," says Mather, "by all the colonies of New England, as a common blessing and father to them all." He was laid to rest, amid the Fathers of New England, on the brow of Burial Hill, from whence he had so often looked out in earlier years over the broad ocean that lay before him, watching in hope of tidings and of help from the land of his birth.

Two centuries had elapsed since the landing of the Fathers at Plymouth, when, on the 22d of December, 1820, the founding of New England and its liberties was celebrated with unwonted honors and rejoicing by the inheritors of their great bequest. The name of William Bradford, the Governor of New England, was then breathed with pride and veneration, and his memory revived as chief among the Fathers of the State. Subscriptions were entered into to provide some fit memorial of his worth, and in 1825 a marble monument was erected on the Burial Hill at Plymouth, to mark the spot where he and his son William lie buried.

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for February:

Views of Some American Adventists.
Signs of the Last Day. Sermon by Martin Luther. (Concluded.)
The Coming European War. An Address by Rev. W. H. Daniels.
Former False Messiahs Among the Jews. By Dr. Towers.
Types, Forerunners, and Coming of Antichrist. By Rev. S. Johnson.
The Midnight Cry. Discourse by Rev. W. E. Chrismas.
Prophetic Aspect of the Influenza Epidemic.
On The Ascension of Man.
The Impending Prophetic War. By Rev. W. E. Chrismas.
A Prophetic Excursion. By W. H. D.
Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

Dyspepsia

Many lives miserable, and often leads to destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and insidious disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the system, creates an appetite, promotes healthy action, relieves sick headache, clears the blood and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had lost the appetite, and what I did eat distressed me little good. In an hour after eating I experienced a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food was digested and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, sick feeling. I have felt so much better since I used Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Be sure to get only
Hood's Sarsaparilla
of all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by L. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.
10 Doses One Dollar

CHRISTIAN WORK IN MEXICO.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the press of Bishop H. C. RILEY, of J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York.

NEW NOTES
FOR BIBLE READINGS,
S. R. BRIGGS,

WITH BRIEF MEMOIR OF THE AUTHOR.
Rev. J. H. BROOKES, D.D.

A practical and valuable compend is not to be added with the well known "Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings," edited by S. R. BRIGGS and L. L. IOTT, which has reached, during the past year, a sale of 30,000 copies, and has been extensively circulated in the United States, Great Britain and Canada. The entire new volume is suggestive and able. — The Presbyterian.

The book is admirably adapted to its purpose. Dr. Brookes' brief memoir the reader becomes exceedingly interested in the personality of the author, and enjoys studying Scriptures under leadership. — The Golden Rule.

The readings are practical, helpful, full of suggestion, and bring out the most important points in the subjects on which they are based. It is, in the best thing of the kind we have seen. — Christian at Work.

selection appears to be made with reference to action and spiritual profit. Persons who engage in the work of teaching the truths of God will find great assistance by consulting this. — The Philadelphia Methodist.

pages, large 12mo., with complete Index. In Cloth, Library Edition, $1.00 Flexible, Traveler's Edition, 75
sent post paid on receipt of price.

E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE OF TOGRAPH OF THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

IMITATING THE MANSE,

Master-piece of the heroic steel engravings of the century.

An engraving is intended to commemorate an in the Disruption of the Scottish Church in men nearly 500 ministers "signed their stipends, and their names, and what men most tenacious of conscience sake, in what they call truth. Just published, 1883, 25c. Fully wrapped, post paid, for a paper our risk.
K. Rochester, N. Y., writes: "The piece of high art."
CHRISTIAN NATION,
252 Broadway, New York.

BUSH'S FLUID FOOD
BOVININE

THE ability to control and mitigate the worst features of exhausting diseases, such as TYPHOID FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, PNEUMONIA AND ALL BOVININE. H. S. JEWETT, M. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: I desire to state the case of a patient of mine, a young lady 17 years of age, who was taken with typhoid fever August 12. The fever ran 28 days. BOVININE and milk were the principal nourishments; milk more especially through the first part of the illness, and BOVININE during the later phases of convalescence. I found BOVININE very well adapted to the tender and ulcerated condition of the intestines, and convalescence went rapidly forward with its use. I am now using BOVININE in a severe case of chronic bronchitis, where there is much coughing and expectoration in the morning, with very poor appetite. I find BOVININE doing good work, pleasant to take and easily assimilated, maintaining the strength in a marked degree.

A GLORIOUS FLOWER
No engraving can do justice to the unique and peerless beauty of this NEW CHRYSANTHEMUM. Imagine! Lants completely studded with balls of flowers one foot in circumference, whose petals curve gracefully inward, and which in turn are dotted with a peculiar hairy-like growth, the whole resembling, more than anything else, masses of SNOW-WHITE OSTRICH PLUMES, and you then begin to form some idea of the beauty of this royal flower. Your garden will not be complete this season if it does not contain the "OSTRICH PLUME CHRYSANTHEMUM." (Plain and full instructions for culture with each order.)
PRICE.—For fine plants, certain to bloom, 40c. each, three plants for $1; seven plants for $2; twelve plants for $3. Free by mail.
With every order for a single plant or more will be sent gratis our superb Catalogue of "EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN" (the price of which is 25 cents), on condition that you will say in what paper you saw this advertisement. Club orders for THREE, SEVEN or TWELVE plants can have the Catalogue sent, when desired, to the SEPARATE ADDRESS of each member comprising the club, provided always that the paper is named.

PETER HENDERSON & CO. 35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK

SCOTT'S FLOWERS
41 Years' Experience in growing our strong and reliable Rare Novelties of great beauty. Handsomely illustrated Catalogue for 1890, fully describing many Beautiful New Flowers, sent FREE to any address. Send for it now.
ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa.

PAINLESS EFFECTUAL BEECHAM'S PILLS
THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE WORTH A GUINEA A BOX
For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scoury, Blisters on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c. THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES. This is no fiction. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one Box of these Pills, and they will be acknowledged to be a Wonderful Medicine. — "Worth a guinea a box."
BEECHAM'S PILLS, taken as directed, will quickly restore females to complete health. For a WEAK STOMACH; IMPAIRED DIGESTION; DISORDERED LIVER; they ACT LIKE MAGIC: a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs, Strengthening the muscular System; restoring long-lost Complexion; bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. These are "facts" admitted by thousands, in all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PATENT MEDICINE IN THE WORLD. Full directions with each Box.
Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN & CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York.
Sole Agents for the United States, who (inquire first), if your druggist does not keep them,
WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, 25 CENTS A BOX.

Rev. T. DeWITT TALMAGE'S
GATHERED GEMS, containing 30 of his best Sermons and a full History of his Life and Church, including the burning of the Tabernacle, Oct., 1889, 700 pages, 20 full-page illustrations, including a splendid portrait of Talmage. Low price and quick sales is my motto. Price, bound in cloth, $1.50; half Russia, $2.00. 5 per cent. discount to live agents, send 50 cents for Prospectus and package of circulars, and go to work. Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

THE BEST SEEDS
are those put up by
D. M. FERRY & CO.
Who are the largest Seedsmen in the world.
D. M. FERRY & CO.'s
Illustrated, Descriptive and Priced SEED ANNUAL
for 1890 will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to last season's customers. It is better than ever. Every person using Garden, Flower or Field Seeds should send for it. Address
D. M. FERRY & CO.
DETROIT, MICH.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. For a DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

RIDGE'S FOOD
The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Sold everywhere, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomachs, 4 sizes can Pamphlet free. Write to Ridge's Food (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.—A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest and best in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full terms address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

DOES CURE CONSUMPTION

In its First Stages.

Be sure you get the genuine.

Gathering Jewels; OR, The Secret of a Beautiful Life.

A splendid book, bound in cloth and gold. Illustrated.

Bishop VINCENT says: "In 'Gathering Jewels' the story is well told; the subject, which a gracious Providence furnished, is unusually rich and prolific of evangelical facts and teachings. The book should go into thousands of homes."

New York Witness says: "The material for this volume teems with spiritual food for reflection, and is calculated to inspire many to the work of saving souls. It illustrates the power of prayer, and shows that the sweetest contentment may be found in 'gathering jewels' for the heavenly kingdom that may 'shine in His glory, bright for His crown.'"

This book has been strongly endorsed by The Christian Herald, having republished two full columns from its pages in its issue of Aug. 2d, 1888.

Send a paper Dollar or Stamps at our risk, and we will send you a book post-paid.

A celebrated Van Everen adjustable book cover free with each book if requested.

CHRISTIAN NATION, Publishers,
252 Broadway, New York.

A NEW BOOK. THE SALT CELLARS;

A Collection of 3,300 Proverbs and Quaint Sayings, Together with Homely Notes Thereon.
BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Very handsomely bound in 12mo, illuminated cloth, $1.50.

"The placing of a proverb for every day for 20 years has cost me great labor, and I feel that I cannot afford to lose the large collection of sentences which I have thus brought together. There are many proverb books, but none exactly like these. Some of my sentences are quite new, and more are put into a fresh form." — From the Author's Preface.

The London Literary World says: "There is not a page that is not brightened with genuine wit and enriched with wisdom."

"Few books contain more wit and wisdom to the cubic inch than this, and the man who can read it without profit must either be too virtuous for this world or too hardened in wickedness to be helped." — New York Examiner.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHARACTER OF JESUS.

By HORACE BUSHNELL, D.D.

This book is beyond all question superior to anything on the subject heretofore written.

"The delineation of the character of Jesus is in our view the finest upon its theme in English literature." — New Englander.

"A sincere contribution to the cause of Christian truth, in a day when the foundations are assailed, and every man is bound to stand by the faith." — N. Y. Observer.

New Edition, Cloth, Price 60 cts. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 109 Main St., Richmond, Va.

$60 SALARY. $10 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment, at home or traveling. No soliciting. Duties delivering and making collections. No Postal Cards. Address with stamp, HAFFER & CO., Ploua, O.

SHORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught by mail or personally. Situations procured for pupils when competent. Send for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

TRUST AND OBEY.

BY REV. J. H. SAMMIS.

"The secret of the Lord is with those that fear Him."—PSALM XXV: 14.

When we walk with the Lord,
In the light of His Word,
What a glory He sheds on our way;
While we do His good will,
He abides with us still,
And with all who will trust and obey.

Not a shadow can rise,
Not a cloud in the skies,
But his smile quickly drives it away;
Not a doubt or a fear,
Not a sigh or a tear,
Can abide while we trust and obey.

Not a burden we bear,
Not a sorrow we share,
But our toil He doth richly repay;
Not a grief, or, a loss,
Not a frown, or, a cross,
But is blest when we trust and obey.

But we never can prove
The delights of His love,
Until all on the altar we lay;
For the favor He shows,
And the joy He bestows,
Are for them that will trust and obey.

Then in fellowship sweet,
We will sit at His feet,
Or, we'll walk by His side in the way.
What He says we will do;
Where He sends we will go;
Never fear; only trust and obey.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiar—different from other medicines—its combination and proportion of ingredients, and preparation, being unlike any other medicine in the market.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also Imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY
ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. 1877

PRICE $150 to $1500

They Lead the World!

Sent for trial in your own home.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT

Guaranteed Six Years.

35

DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!

Cat. Free.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

ORGANS
$35 to $500

The Greatest Thing in the World.

An Address on 1 Corinthians xiii.
BY PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND, F.R.S.E., author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World."

Leatherette Binding, Gilt Top, Price, 35 cents.
"Beautiful and suggestive."—Baptist Magazine.
"Professor Drummond has a happy faculty of rubbing the dust off of old truths, and presenting them afresh in their native integrity."—North British Daily Mail.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun San Chon, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P.O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

WANTED "The Christian's Legacy."
One young man started on the 18th of December and ordered 59 copies before the 31st of December. 102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York

PLAYS! Speakers; Dialogues; Books of Games, Sports and Amusements, Charades, Tableaux, etc. Catalogue sent free on application to THE DEWITT PUBLISHING HOUSE, 83 Rose Street, New York.

NATURAL STONE WATER FILTERS.

Open cut shows filter disc used in our filters, and separate patent ice chambers.

Fine Decorative China and Gray Stoneware Jars to hold the water.

A Natural Stone for a Filtering Medium.

Fitted with separate Patent Ice Chambers to cool the water. As easily cleaned as a water pitcher.

For Use in Offices, Homes and Schools.

For free descriptive list, address,

Gate City Stone Filter Co.,

JOHN A. DAVENPORT, Gen'l Manager,

46 Murray Street, NEW YORK CITY.

Open cut shows filter disc used in our filters, and separate patent ice chambers.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. Silks direct from the manufacturers to you.

Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all. We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the

CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS, for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Paille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT we send to all parts of the U. S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of dress.

THE GOODS all carrying charges PREPAID

IF YOU WANT AN "OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE, OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

THE NATIONAL STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA. A Volume for Universal Reference

THE NATIONAL STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA is a valuable book for popular use, compiled by expert editors, after consultation of the best authorities, printed from new, large, clear type, and bound in cloth. It contains information on every conceivable subject, and its reliability has been assured by the most careful preparation. It is of greatest use in answering the ten thousand questions that constantly arise in regard to dates, places, persons, incidents, statistics, etc., etc. It contains

700 Pages and 20,000 Articles

Pertaining to questions of—

Agriculture, Astronomy, Architecture, Geography, Botany, Chemistry, Engineering, Geology, History, Horticulture, Literature, Mechanics, Medicine, Mythology, Natural History, Physiology, and the various Arts and Sciences.

Complete in One Volume, With 1,000 Illustrations

This is an entirely new work, unlike any other, and the only ENCYCLOPEDIA ever published and sold for less than five dollars; it is indispensable for every department of human knowledge.

This ENCYCLOPEDIA will be sent, postpaid, for $1.00. Five Books for $4.00. Get four friends one each, and you will get your book free.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

A Gem For The Little Folks.

THE STORY OF JESUS
For Little Children.

By MRS. G. E. MORTON.

Fully Illustrated.

12mo, 316 Pages, Cloth, Printed in Colors, $1.00, post-paid.

"Told in simple words and a very handsome book. How wonderful that the biography of the Son of the Highest is better adapted than any other to be told to little children. Angels study it; devils dive into it; babes love it. Blessed be the Story of Jesus."—C. H. SPURGEON.

"The demand for a fourth edition of this pleasant and instructive work shows that it has already met with considerable favor. Planned something on the same lines as the 'Peep of Day,' several illustrations and an attractive binding add to its value as a Sunday-school prize or children's reward book."—The Book-seller.

"A difficult task well executed in simple, but not childish language, the 'old story' is told once more. The holiness of our Lord, and the great object of His life are kept in prominence, while his intercourse with all classes is described in a life-like way. We heartily recommend the book, which is improved by neat wood-cuts."—The Christian.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

New Edition Just Published

GOD IN BUSINESS

A REMARKABLE RECORD OF DIVINE HELP AND DELIVERANCES TO CHRISTIAN BUSINESS

This book is a record of God's dealings with people in business. The author begins with personal testimony. Then follows the experience of more than 100 of God's people who desire knowledge that they were helped by Him in business. * * * The incidents here recorded, such a wonderful character that it is not a matter to lay down the book until every page is perused. A short sketch of the life of J. C. Creed, of Brooklyn, is a most wonderful record of divine guidance and help. Here then is testimony that there is a God-forever waiting to be used in prayer and faith for all our affairs. It is a book that all God's people need more and more to—Presbyterian Messenger (London).

This is a well-intended book, and one more that is built on such a foundation that it is impossible to shake it. * * * If young business men will read they may learn from it a lesson that will prove of great commercial value.—Methodist (London).

Bound in Cloth. Price, 85 Cents. Paper Cover, 50 Cents.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books, Christmas

GUYA-LOG.
Curiosities of Bible $2 By N. E.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington
EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 9. Office, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. B. FAY MILLS, and Picture of Scotch Presbyterian Church, N. Y.
HENRY W. GRADY, THE EDITOR AND ORATOR.
Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.
THE DAY OF CONSUMMATION.
1. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE: Visit to Mount
Hermon—Damascus—A Walk in Straight Street—Entertainment at Beyrout—A Voyage Over the Apostle Paul's Track—Ephesus—The Temple of Diana—Smyrna—Mitylene.

LOVE'S COMPETITION. A New Sermon by Rev.
C. H. Spurgeon.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGEL-ISTIC MEETINGS.
Gems from New Books: A Minister's Experience in the Johnstown Catastrophe.
THE GREAT PHYSICIAN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
A MODERN EXORCISM. A Story on the S. S. Text.
PICTURE OF THE PIER OF BUENOS AYRES.
PORTRAITS OF THE STANLEY EXPEDITION.
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. (Continued.)

Rev. B. Fay Mills, the Eminent Evangelist—The Scotch Presbyterian Church in New York.

REV. B. FAY MILLS.

The Eminent Evangelist.

A Famous Father—A Thorough University Training—Becomes Pastor at Cannon Falls, Minn.—Home Mission Work in Dakota—Revival Services at Greenwich and Champlain, N. Y.—Pastorate at Rutland, Vt.—A United Appeal for Help from Middlebury—Services at North Adams—An Unmistakable Call to Evangelistic Service—Successful Meetings in Many Cities—Incidents in His Meetings in New Jersey.

READERS of this journal have noticed in the news columns from time to time records of wonderful seasons of blessing in connection with the labors of the Rev. B. Fay Mills. In nearly every section of the country, in cities and country villages, in churches of no less than twenty-one different denominations, Mr. Mills has preached, and wherever he has gone the result has been the same. God has blessed the word preached, and many souls have been converted. It will therefore be a gratification to the readers to have the portrait of him published on the first page this week, and some details of the life of one whose labors God has so signally honored.

Education.

B. Fay Mills was born in 1857 in New Jersey, where his father, the Rev. Thornton A. Mills, D. D., was well known and loved, not less for his philanthropic than for his ministerial labors. He commenced his college career at Andover at the early age of sixteen, and then proceeded to Hamilton College, N. Y. Subsequently he studied at Lake Forest University, Ill., where he graduated with high honors. After pursuing a course of special theological study under some of the ablest theologians in the Presbyterian Church, Mr. Mills was ordained at Cannon Falls, Minn., in 1878. While there he added to his pastoral labors some very arduous work in connection with the American Home Missionary Society.

First Revival Services.

During an extended evangelistic tour in the Black Hills, Dakota, Mr. Mills broke down under the strain, and came East to recuperate. He did not, however, discontinue labor, but preached at Greenwich and Champlain, N. Y. To the surprise of all, a revival of religion ensued, and there was a time of great blessing. No thought of evangelistic work was induced in the mind of Mr. Mills by this movement. He accepted an invitation to the West Parish of Rutland, Vt., and settled there in 1883. He found there a deplorable state of dissension, and much that made the prospects of success very dark, but he labored on in love and faith, and had the joy of seeing harmony and brotherly love take the place of unchristian feeling. Three years of happy successful labor followed before there was an unmistakable

Call to Evangelistic Service.

In January, 1886, the pastors of Middlebury had been praying for a deeper spiritual work in their churches, and were led by the reports they had heard of the happy results which had followed the work of Mr. Mills in Rutland, to invite him to hold special services in Middlebury. He accepted, and held meetings for two weeks, in which all the churches united. Over three hundred persons, including nearly all the students in the college, were led to Christ at those meetings. It was a blessed time for Middlebury, and the service of thanksgiving was a time of great enthusiasm. A call to North Adams shortly afterward had a similar result, and then Mr. Mills recognized that God had appointed him to this field of service. He accordingly resigned his pastorate in May, 1886, and from that time to this he has continuously labored in this deeply interesting but arduous work.

The Scenes of His Labors have been many and varied. They commenced in Vermont, at Burlington, Brandon, and Vergennes. In New Jersey he held services in Washington, Morristown, Montclair, and Jersey City. In March, 1888, he was invited by Dr. Theodore Cuyler to hold services in his church in Brooklyn; and though Dr. Cuyler had never before asked the help of any evangelist he thanked God that he had been led to invite Mr. Mills, when he saw fully six hundred persons stand up and pledge themselves, in Christ's strength, henceforth to live for Him who had died for them. Dr. S. M. Hamilton, of the Scotch Presbyterian Church in West Fourteenth Street, New York, also a few weeks ago gave manly testimony of a similar experience, owning that he had been prejudiced against special efforts of this kind, but that he was sincerely thankful for the results of the meetings Mr. Mills had conducted. Only last week Dr. Hamilton spoke again with thankfulness of the permanence of the good achieved by Mr. Mills's visit.

At Charlestown, Lowell, and Fall River, Mass., the results of Mr. Mills's services were still more remarkable. Among the converts were some whose conversion seemed the most improbable of all events. They came from infidel clubs, from saloons and gaming tables, and from the haunts of vice. Cold, worldly Christians, the hardest of all men to move, became zealous, and a deep, earnest movement went through society. At Fall River four hundred new converts met at the closing service to join in the way appointed of celebrating the Lord's death "till He come." Still more remarkable was the harvest at Jersey City Heights, where no less than 1,250 persons made a profession of faith in Christ at his two weeks' meetings.

One important feature of Mr. Mills's work is the spirit of brotherly love between churches of various denominations which seems to spring up under his labors. Minor differences are forgotten; and pastors and people are surprised to find how much they have in common, and how readily they can work together in Mr. Mills's meetings. In Worcester, Mass., thirty churches joined in the work; in Providence, R. I., fifty churches; in Indianapolis, Ind., twenty-three churches; in Springfield, Mass., twenty churches; in Boston, Mass. (to which city Mr. Mills has paid four visits), thirty-four churches; and in Philadelphia (where he has been five times) fifty-four churches.

Remarkable Incidents

are related in connection with Mr. Mills's work. The Rev. William H. Belden, of Bridgeton, N. J., writing to a contemporary of the work in his city, mentions among others the case of "a young man who went in an unbelieving, scoffing spirit, but was broken right down in the prayer, and then and there gave his heart to the Lord; he became, and is now, a consistent member of one of the churches. A very wild young fellow, who was thoroughly linked in with boon companions, was won by the judicious personal approaches of the evangelist himself—certain other providential causes co-operating—and broke the circle of his set by an out-and-out surrender. A gay, giddy girl, who had long resisted the most zealous efforts of pastor and friends, came to the Lord through Mr. Mills's preaching, and she and her mother and four sisters renounced the world together. A man who confessed he had not looked into a Bible for five years, yielded himself; his sincerity has been demonstrated by the thoroughgoing way in which he has mastered and cast behind him his love for tobacco. A good man's bad son—two such—are reclaimed, gladdening their fathers' hearts and filling the streets with delightful testimony to the Lord's work. The latest house-building is a token of a father's new hope and joy in his child. It is all the Lord's doings, and it is marvellous in our eyes; we rejoice that He sent us His servant, whom He so greatly owns and blesses for His appointed work."

THE SCOTCH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

THE building in which some of Mr. Mills's services were held in New York was the Scotch Presbyterian Church, a picture of which appears on the first page. It is additionally interesting from the fact that the long and earnest discussion on revision recently took place within its walls. The call to the first pastor of this church—Rev. John Mason—was dated May 25, 1762. The beginning was small, but the people had an indomitable perseverance and a reliant faith. The numbers grew rapidly. Their first house of worship was a small frame building on the south side of Cedar Street, between Broadway and Nassau. In 1768 this building gave way to a more substantial stone edifice. Mr. Mason's labors were very successful up to the breaking out of the Revolutionary War, when he, with many members of his church, were compelled to leave the city because of their espousing the cause of the colonies. Mr. Mason entered the Continental army as a chaplain and served through the war. At its close he returned to the city and, by energetic work, soon had the church restored to comparative prosperity. This good and great man, after having the happiness of seeing a large increase in his beloved church during his ministry, died, greatly lamented, April 19, 1792.

In September of that year, Rev. John Mitchell Mason, son of the former pastor, began to act as supply. In March, 1793, the church presented him a unanimous call, which he accepted. On May 12, 1810, he resigned his charge.

Rev. B. B. C. McLeod succeeded him, and pastor for about twelve years. During his ministry the congregation left the Associated Reform Church and joined the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. On May 26, 1824, Rev. Jos. McElroy, a man full of the Holy Spirit, was stilled as pastor of this church. During his pastorate of nearly fifty years, the church grew and prospered.

In 1836 a new and elegant house of worship, built on the corner of Grand and Crosby streets. In 1845 the church had 675 communicants. At the tide of population still moving northward in 1853 it was deemed best to buy land and build present edifice, on the north side of Fourteenth Street, near Sixth Avenue. Not long after this, McElroy's health began to fail under increasing years, and he died near the close of his eighty-fourth year, on October 16, 1876. On Sabbath evening October 19, 1873, Rev. S. M. Hamilton, D. D., present pastor, was installed.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

THE close of the interesting narrative of Dr. Talmage's tour in the Holy Land, which his companion, Mr. Louis Klopsch, has written, is as follows:

Dr. Talmage, in a recent letter to his multitudinous friends, has described in his own peculiar style our strange and interesting experience while sheltered from the inclemency of the weather beneath the roof of one of the many mud houses which constitute the ambitious Bedouin settlement known as the "Village of the Sun." So exceedingly licentious of the reverend gentleman's welfare are the two dusky wives of our amiable host, that their bright eyes were continually employed watching his movements from an opening in the wall, at the farther end of the hovel, large enough to enable them to alternately poke their heads into the room itself, until the candles were extinguished, and ensuing darkness rendered futile further effort in that direction. It was our first night in Syria—a never-to-be-forgotten night it was.

Early dawn the next morning found us in saddles ready for the journey to Damascus, the most ancient city on the face of the earth. We were on the most ancient of all highways, once the scene of the pursuit by Abraham of Chedorlaomer, and, many centuries after, of Saul's memorable journey while on his bloodthirsty mission to persecute and extirpate the early Christians. We descended a shoulder of eight thousand feet above the Mediterranean and near the reputed site of the scene of Transfiguration. From this great elevation we enjoyed command of our best view of Palestine. The Jordan and the Dead Sea were plainly visible, while before us in the distance lay Damascus, shaped like a spoon, and surrounded by those beautiful orange and pine groves. At our right Mount Hermon continued to rise five thousand feet higher than the place on which we were standing. A large portion of the snow crowning its summit finds its way to Damascus, there to be flavored with lemon and orange and pineapple and melon, after which served in the daintiest of dishes to the innumerable harems.

Mount Hermon,

Nowhere in all Syria are the inhabitants more tolerant than in the villages that lie between Mount Hermon and Damascus, or more devout in religious duties. The sight of a Christian immediately results in all manner of manifestations of pleasure and contempt, and any expression relating to Mohammedanism is sure to result in a plosion of wrath. Everywhere we found Moslems engaged in prayer; and so formalistic are their devotions that they keep a strict account of the number of prayers offered, and should, for reason or other, there be an omission of the numerous prayers required of the faithful, at the very devotional exercise the service is repeated as many times as may be necessary to make up for the deficiency.

As it appeared quite evident that we could reach Damascus traveling at the customary rate, we wired for a carriage to come and meet us. Katana, near which, the inhabitants insist, is the site of Saul's marvellous vision and miraculous conversion to Christianity. While there may be no doubt as to the particular spot where that memorable event took place, there can be no question as to its having occurred somewhere in mediate neighborhood, no other road leading from Jerusalem to Damascus. With the aid of the carriage, which came promptly, as ordered, we were enabled to accomplish our object; and while the setting sun was gilding the housetops and minarets we rode along the banks of the Abana, at divides Damascus its entire length.

The first impression one gets of Damascus

is an exceedingly favorable one, and the principal approach to it is perfectly beautiful. Even in December the luxuriance of the foliage of the gardens, through which we passed to enter the city, defies description, and the deep glades with their pretty houses, the roofs of which are below the level of the well-graded road, which is completely shaded by majestic trees, planted on either side, present a scene that an abler pen than mine may shrink from describing. A Mohammedan mosque stands at the very entrance of this approach, and here daily are fed the poor of the city at the expense of the Church. It was already quite dark when we entered the city, and within a few minutes thereafter we found ourselves comfortably housed in the finest hotel Damascus can boast of. And no mean hotel it was. In fact, it was the first hotel since we landed at Joppa, at had a comfortably warmed dining-room. After sumptuous dinner we lingered a while at the table, and engaged with the host in a most interesting conversation; in the course of which he vehemently expatiated on the intolerance of the Turks, and the innumerable obstacles they put in his way. Among other things, they refused him the privilege to have windows facing the street, unless they are closely latticed, and hence the front rooms are almost entirely dark. Immediately off the dining-room, he showed us another, about fifteen feet square, which was rendered absolutely useless by the order of the Governor to wall up the windows. The Turks dared to do it they would repeat, he said, the massacre of 1860, when over six thousand Christians were ruthlessly slain by merciless hordes, who first set fire to their houses, and then hewed them down as they fled from the flames.

Although the largest of the cities of Turkey in Asia, Damascus is likewise one of the dirtiest and most fanatical; and yet, in spite of its filth, it is very attractive. Its bazaars are wonderful, and contain the most beautiful fabrics in bewildering profusion. But shopping is not enjoyable, as in our American cities. The ladies of our party were up on, and frequently treated with other expressions of marked contempt, because they appeared unveiled on the streets. Even the Turkish women join the men in these demonstrations, and visit to any of the shops was sure to draw a curious crowd. Deformities of all kinds are shamelessly exhibited, and specimens of elephantiasis, which causes limbs to swell to almost incredible proportions, and covers them with sickening, festering sores, are exposed at street corners. The dirty appearance of most of the houses found curious illustration in the reply elicited by an inquiry of the writer as to the location of a bank. "There," said the informant; "do you see that house on the next corner? Well, right next to it is another with clean windows, and that is the bank." Naturally

The "Street Called Straight," which is said to be the oldest street known, interested Dr. Talmage greatly, and thither we drove the morning after our arrival. It never was a very straight street, but recently it has actually been straightened out, and now deserves its name. A large portion of it is devoted to the use of shops, which form part of the bazaars, and is covered in order to make shopping practicable, and comparatively pleasant during the rainy season. There, also, we found the house on the wall, from a window of which Paul was let down in a basket to escape the wrath of the unbelieving Jews. The house of Naaman the Leper, on the site of which there is now the House of Lepers, is not far distant. Opposite the house on the wall is the tomb of George, the porter, who abetted Paul's escape, as tradition says, at the expense of his life.

No Eastern city can boast of more minarets than Damascus, and five times daily the cry resounds from each, "God is God, and Mohammed is His prophet," which constitutes a call to prayer to all faithful Moslems. Near every minaret are shops for the sale of camel's meat, of which every devoted follower of the Prophet makes a meal once each year. Huge sides of this meat are hung out, and attractively ornamented with garlands of colored paper similar to those used for the ornamentation of Christmas trees. In addition, each quarter bears the Government tax stamp imprinted in pink and plainly visible. The Koran prescribes the use of camel's meat because Mohammed, when a shepherd, frequently subsisted on it. It is very popular with the poor people on account of its exceeding cheapness, and it is said to be as tough as it is cheap.

We remained in Damascus three days and then left for the most Christian city in Asia. Probably the swiftest and pleasantest diligence service in the world is that from Damascus to Beyrout. A French company owns and manages it, and it would be needless to say that this enterprise is in striking contrast to any enterprise conducted by the unspeakable Turk. The road between the two cities is in excellent condition and is a marvelous bit of engineering, crossing the mountains of Lebanon at a height of seven thousand feet. Six horses are harnessed to each conveyance, and these are changed every hour. The trip is of fourteen hours' duration, so that eighty-four horses are brought into use before its completion. With the exception of the beauty of the scenery, which increases in attractiveness all the way, there is nothing of special interest within the hundred and twenty miles along which the road extends. The villas which dot the approaches to Beyrout are surrounded by gardens of rare beauty, giving evidence of the good taste and ample means of their owners, most of whom are merchants in the city.

Beyrout,

The gas-jets illuminating Beyrout were the first we had seen since leaving Athens. They afforded expectations of its appearance by daylight which, happily, we found to be fully justified. Beyrout is a handsome city containing about a hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants, a large percentage of whom are Christians, and civilized according to the highest European standard. These have gained a solid footing in Beyrout, which accounts for its being the most attractive city of all Turkey in Asia.

On Christmas Day we started on the journey homeward. Our parting from those who had accompanied us in various capacities during our pilgrimage through Palestine and Syria was full of sadness and tenderness. The guide was affected deeply, and we shall never forget his prayer invoking for us divine protection and heavenly benediction during the remainder of our trip. After our property had been inspected and our baggage thoroughly overhauled by the revenue officers, who collected one per cent. duty on all purchases made in their own country, we entered a rowboat and were taken over to the Pandora for a seven days' trip

On the Mediterranean.

Three days would have been an amply sufficient time for reaching Constantinople by a fast steamer, but as passenger traffic between the two cities is but incidental, and carrying freight the main consideration, the ship stops at all ports of importance, and the cargo is exchanged as the demands of trade may require. But a more interesting trip than this particular one, with its frequent interruptions, affording opportunities to go ashore and make observations on an average of once a day, cannot be imagined. Our first stop was at the island of Cyprus, where Larnica, an interesting city of nearly twenty thousand inhabitants, was the inducement to disembark. The Greek church, which claims the tomb of Lazarus as one of its attractions, was visited first. Here, it is said, Lazarus was buried after dying the second time, but the claim rests solely on unsupported tradition. After this we visited the scene of General di Cesnola's excavations, which we learned were interdicted by the Government. We bought a number of beautifully colored tear-bottles, of which only a few survived the energetic offices of the baggage-master. At Limasol, where we did not disembark, we enjoyed the pleasure of receiving on board a Grecian bride and groom, who during the balance of the trip treated us to Moody and Sankey's hymns sung in modern Greek. Between Limasol and Smyrna, the next stopping-place, lay Samos, Rhodes, and Patmos. This is the island on which St. John wrote the Book of Revelation. Every moment of the time not necessarily required for refreshment and sleep was spent on deck. The weather was simply grand and the scenery enchanting. Frequently away off among the mountains, rainbows took their start and rose in graceful curves along the sky, further ornamenting and beautifying what nature had already rendered bewilderingly glorious.

We reached Smyrna about 9 in the morning, just too late to catch the train to Ephesus.

But such a trifle as this did not at all discourage us from making good our intention of visiting a city of such great importance in Scripture. We chartered a special train, and telegraphed in advance for horses and lunch. At half-past 9 our train started, rushing along with all the noise and confusion of a lightning express and the speed of an ordinary American freight train. We arrived at Ephesus, a distance of forty-eight miles, at twenty minutes past 1. Soon after reaching the hotel we were seated on six of the most miserable nags that this generation can boast of, for the use of which we agreed to pay one dollar each. On our return, after two hours, we men found ourselves each compelled to pay a dollar and sixty cents, and two dollars for each of the horses ridden by the ladies of the party. When we remonstrated with our host on the overcharges, he quietly informed us that the use of the horses was one dollar for each one, but this price did not include the hire of the saddles, which was three francs for an ordinary one and five francs each for those used by the ladies.

A visit to Ephesus pays. The old Roman aqueduct, with its innumerable stork nests, is the first object of antiquity that one sees in the city. After that there is no end of attractions. Even the very hedges teem with broken statuary and choice specimens of sculpture, which are used as common stones. The gigantic ruins of the Temple of Diana are imposing in the magnificence of their proportions, and their magnitude we found to exceed all that we had seen elsewhere. In comparison with them the Parthenon of Athens is as a village to a city. Two hundred and twenty years were spent in building the structure, and no known edifice has ever equalled it in dimensions or grandeur. Beautiful specimens of the sculptor's art abound in the ruins. The ruins of the theatre, which was once the scene of the great uproar recorded in Acts 19, enable one to form a pretty definite idea of what the building must have been at the time when it had a capacity for over fifty thousand visitors; and the stadium, or race-course, afforded accommodations for no less than seventy-five thousand spectators. It still exhibits the terraces which were cut in the rock for the convenience of its frequenters. But I must not linger longer among the ruins.

After an excellent lunch, of which various delicious preparations of rice formed the principal part, we again boarded the train and returned to Smyrna, where the glad news awaited us that the Pandora would not resume her trip until midnight. This afforded us the welcome opportunity of viewing the city. We found Smyrna a delightfully clean and attractive place. Dr. Talmage visited an everyday mission church, where he charmed the auditors with his matchless eloquence.

The next morning found us at Mytilene, where the American Consul received us cordially and insisted on showing us around. He presented us to Constantinos Valiadis, the Greek archbishop, and to Fahri Bey, the Turkish Governor. The former of those dignitaries conversed with us in German, and insisted on our partaking of Turkish Delight, the most popular, because the most delicious, of sweets, recommending it as a sure cure for dyspepsia, with which he had heard the American nation particularly was afflicted. The Governor, who was fairly covered with diamonds and other precious stones, spoke perfect English. He invited us to inspect the Turkish fortress at Mytilene. Before we left he sent one of his servants out into his garden to pick the choicest oranges, which included, as a matter of course, the delicious mandarin variety, for our refreshment.

At all these places we had recently visited Paul had stopped. In Ephesus, for three years, he "ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." From Mytilene he sailed to Samos, and thus pursued his journey to the end. How full of interest these places were to Dr. Talmage only he himself could tell. He delighted to roam about in them, and read habitually those passages in the Bible which made references to them. In the train on the way to Ephesus he read aloud the entire Epistle to the Ephesians.

Of our subsequent travels in Europe there is no necessity that I should write, the cablegrams published in the newspapers having kept the public fully informed regarding them. I therefore end here the recital of my experiences as his travelling companion with Dr. Talmage on his recent tour abroad.

TO BUILD THE NEW TABERNACLE.

REV. DR. TALMAGE faced the usual multitude at the Academy of Music on Sunday morning, February 23, the building being crowded to the doors. He created somewhat of a sensation by making the following statement while he was giving out his notices:

We are building a new church. We will be worshipping in it next September if the means are furnished. All the congregation, and our friends the world over, want to know how we are going to accomplish it. The annual report of the treasurer, February 1, shows we have what represents $104,000. We must have $150,000 more in order to dedicate the church free of debt. We propose to raise it in this way:

Many know that I have become editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this week I take that chair. Now all the subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD received during this year through the efforts of this congregation and its friends, up to 150,000, will be paid directly to Mr. John Wood, Treasurer of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, for the Building Fund. The Board of Trustees of the Tabernacle will pay the bare cost of printing.

The price of the paper is $1.50 a year. We intend through that paper to ask all the present subscribers in the various cities and neighborhoods in the United States, where the paper already circulates, to help us, and, more than all, we are going to ask every man, woman, and child here to-day, or connected with our church, or friendly to it, to go to work and see how many subscribers can be had. You will get a full equivalent for the $1.50 that the paper costs. It will be a paper of compressed news, and as wide-awake and useful as we can make it. It will contain the sermons of this pulpit. We want you to subscribe for yourself, and to get your friends to subscribe, to appeal by letter to your friends abroad, and to subscribe for those in whose spiritual welfare you are interested. If you all lay hold of the work you can accomplish it, as I believe it will be accomplished, this year. This will in no wise interfere with other styles of subscription by those who want to give their money directly to the church, and without any reference to the newspaper spoken of. Please let us hear from you all this week. Many are anxious to help. Do not wait for some one to call on you. The more manly and womanly way will be to send or go direct to Mr. John Wood, treasurer of our church, 223 Fulton St., two doors from Concord. Do not send any of the money or subscriptions to me. A meeting of the congregation and their friends will be held immediately after the benediction this morning, when you will please come up and report how many CHRISTIAN HERALDS you will be responsible for, or how much you will subscribe directly to the church building fund. As for myself, I subscribe a year of service without any salary. For the rebuilding of our church I do not propose to beg and implore and beseech, as ministers generally do when building churches. I did that for the two previous churches we built in Brooklyn, and the anxieties and worriments nearly took my life. I cannot do it again. Why build to expensive a church? Because nothing is too good for the Lord. Though He was born in a manger, that is no reason why He should be worshipped in a barn.

HENRY W. GRADY.

A Memorial Sermon to the great Editor and Orator preached by Dr. Talmage last Sunday morning, February 23, 1890.

"Take thee a great roll and write in it with a man's pen." Isa 8:1.

God's Mandate to Editors—The Pen Laid Down Forever—Tidings of Mr. Grady's Death—Where they were Received—The Orphaned Boy—The University from which Orphans Graduate—Senseless Praise of Longevity—Lives Measured by Achievements—Can an Editor be a Christian—Grady's Life a Practical Proof—A Great Intellect Gospelized—Mr. Gladstone's Testimony—Editorial Responsibilities—The Patriot Editor—A Representative of the New Era—The Influenza Scourge.

To Isaiah, with royal blood in his veins, and a habitant of palaces, does this divine order come. He is to take a roll, a large roll, and write on it with a pen, not an angel's pen, but a man's pen. So God honored the pen, and so He honored manuscript. In our day the mightiest roll is the religious and secular newspaper, and the mightiest pen is the editor's pen, whether for good or evil. And God says now to every literary man, and especially to every journalist, "Take thee a great roll and write in it with a man's pen." Within a few weeks one of the strongest, most vivid, and most brilliant of those pens was laid down on the editorial desk in Atlanta, never again to be resumed.

I was far away at the time. We had been sailing up from the Mediterranean Sea, through the Dardanelles, which region is unlike anything I ever saw on earth where God has done so many picturesque things with islands. They are somewhat like the Thousand Islands of our American St. Lawrence, but more like heaven. Indeed, we had just passed Patmos, the place from which John had his apocalyptic vision. Constantinople had seemed to come out to greet us, for your approach to that city is different from any other city. Other cities as you approach them seem to retire, but this city, with its glittering minarets and pinnacles, seems almost to step into the water to greet you. But my landing there, that would have been to me an exhilaration, was suddenly stunned with the tidings of the death of my intimate friend, Henry W. Grady.

I could hardly believe the tidings, for I had left on my study table at home letters and telegrams from him, those letters and telegrams having a warmth and geniality, and a wit, such as he only could express. The departure of no public man for many years has so affected me. For days I walked about as in a dream, and I resolved that, getting home, I would, for the sake of his bereaved household, and for the sake of his bereaved profession, and for the sake of what he had been to me, and shall continue to be as long as memory lasts, I would speak a word in appreciation of him, the most promising of Americans, and learn some of the salient

Lessons of His Departure.

I have no doubt that he had enemies, for no man can live such an active life as he lived, or be so far in advance of his time, without making enemies, some because he defeated their projects, and some because he outshone them. Owls and bats never did like the rising sun. But I shall tell you how he appeared to me, and I am glad that I told him while he was in full health what I thought of him. Memorial orations and gravestone epitaphs are often mean enough, for they say of a man after he is dead that which ought to have been said of him while living. One garland for a living brow is worth more than a mountain of japonicas and callalilies heaped on a funeral casket. By a little black volume of fifty pages containing the eulogiums and poems uttered and written at the demise of Clay and Webster and Calhoun and Lincoln and Sumner, the world tried to pay for the forty years of obloquy it heaped upon those living giants. If I say nothing in praise of a man while he lives I will keep silent when he is dead. Myrtle and weeping-willow can never do what ought to have been done by amaranth and palm branch. No amount of "Dead March in Saul" rumbling from big organs at the obsequies can atone for non-appreciation of the man before he fell on sleep. The hearse cannot do what ought to have been done by chariot. But there are important things that need to be said about our friend, who was a prophet in American journalism, and who, only a few years ago, heard the command of my text, "Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen."

The Orphan Boy.

His father dead, Henry W. Grady, a boy fourteen years of age, took up the battle of life. It would require a long chapter to record the names of orphans who have come to the top. When God takes away the head of the household, He very often gives to some lad in that household a special qualification. Christ remembers how that His own Father died early, leaving Him to support Himself and His mother and His brothers in the carpenter's shop at Nazareth, and He is in sympathy with all boys and all young men in the struggle. You say: "Oh, if my father had only lived I would have had a better education, and I would have had a more promising start, and there are some wrinkles on my brow that would not have been there." But I have noticed that God makes a special way for orphans. You would not have been half the man you are if you had not been obliged from your early days to fight your own battles. What other boys got out of Yale or Harvard you got in

The University of Hard Knocks.

Go among successful merchants, lawyers, physicians, and men of all occupations and professions, and there are many of them who will tell you, "At ten, or twelve, or fifteen years of age I started for myself; father was sick, or father was dead." But somehow they got through and got up. I account for it by the fact that there is a special dispensation of God for orphans. All hail! the fatherless and the motherless! The Lord Almighty will see you through. Early obstacles for Mr. Grady were only the means for development of his intellect and heart. And lo! when at thirty-nine years of age he put down his pen and closed his lips for the perpetual silence, he had done a work which many a man who lives on to sixty and seventy and eighty years never accomplishes.

What is Long Life?

There is a great deal of senseless praise of longevity, as though it were a wonderful achievement to live a good while. Ah, my friends, it is not how long we live, but how well we live and how usefully we live. A man who lives to eighty years and accomplishes nothing for God or humanity might better have never lived at all. Methuselah lived nine hundred and sixty-nine years, and what did it amount to? In all those more than nine centuries he did not accomplish anything which seemed worth record. Paul lived only a little more than sixty, but how many Methuselahs would it take to make one Paul? Who would not rather have Paul's sixty years than Methuselah's nine hundred and sixty-nine? Robert McCheyne died at thirty years of age, and John Summerfield at twenty-seven years of age, but neither earth nor heaven will ever hear the end of their usefulness. Longevity! Why, an elephant can beat you at that, for it lives a hundred and fifty and two hundred years. Gray hairs are the blossoms of the tree of life if found in the way of righteousness, but the frosts of the second death if found in the way of sin.

An Editor's Question.

One of our able New York journals last spring printed a question and sent it to many people, and among others, to myself: "Can the editor of a secular journal be a Christian?" Some of the newspapers answered, No. I answered, Yes; and, lest you may not understand me, I say, Yes, again. Summer before last, riding with Mr. Grady from religious meeting in Georgia on a Sunday night, he said to me some things which I now reveal for the first time, because it is appropriate now that I reveal them. He expressed his complete faith in the gospel, and expressed his astonishment and his grief that in our day so many young men were rejecting Christianity. From the earnestness and the tenderness and the confidence with which he spoke of these things, I concluded that when Henry W. Grady made public profession of his faith in Christ and took his place at the holy communion in the Methodist Church he was honest and truly Christian. That conversation that Sunday night, first in the carriage and then resumed in the hotel, impressed me in such a way that when I simply heard of his departure without any of the particulars, I concluded that he was ready to go. I warrant there was no fright in the last exigency, but that he found what is commonly called "the last enemy" a good friend, and from his home on earth he went to home in heaven. Yes, Mr. Grady not only demonstrated that an editor may be a Christian, but that a very great intellect may be gospelized.

His Mental Capacity

was so wonderful it was almost startling. I have been with him in active conversation while at the same time he was dictating to a stenographer editorials for the Atlanta Constitution. But that intellect was not ashamed to bow to Christ. Among his last dying utterances was a request for the prayers of the churches in his behalf. There was that particular quality in him that you do not find in more than one person out of hundreds of thousands—namely, personal magnetism. People have tried to define that quality, and always failed, yet we have all felt its power. There are some persons who have only to enter a room or step upon a platform, or into a pulpit, and you are thrilled by the presence, and when they speak your nature responds, and you cannot help it. What is this peculiar influence with which such a magnetic person takes hold of social groups and audiences? Without attempting to define this, which is indefinable, I will say it seems to correspond to the waves of the air set in motion by the voice or the movements of the body. Just like that atmospheric vibration is the moral or spiritual vibration which rolls out from the soul of what we call magnetic person. As there may be a cord or rope binding bodies together, there may be an invisible cord binding souls. A magnetic man throws wer others as a hunter throws a lasso. Mr. Grady was surcharged with this influence, and it was employed for patriotism and Christianity, and elevated purposes.

Mr. Gladstone's Testimony.

You may not know why, in the conversation which I had with Mr. Gladstone a few weeks ago, he uttered these memorable words about Christianity, some of which were cabled to America. He was speaking in reply to this remark: I said, "Mr. Gladstone, we are told in America by some people that Christianity does very well for weak-minded men, and children in the infant class, but it is not it for stronger-minded men; but when we mention you, of such large intellectuality, as being a pronounced friend of religion, we silence their batteries." Then Mr. Gladstone stopped on the hillside where we were exercising and said: "The older I grow, the more confirmed I am in my faith in religion. Sir," said he, with flashing eye and uplifted hand, "talk about the questions of the day, there's but one question, and that is the Gospel. That can and will correct every thing. Do you have any of that dreadful agnosticism in America?" Having told him we had, he went on to say: "I am profoundly thankful that none of my children or kindred have been blasted by it. I am glad to say that about all the men at the top in Great Britain are Christians. Why, sir," he said, "I have been in public position fifty-eight years, and forty-seven years in the Cabinet of the British Government, and during those forty-seven years I have been associated with sixty of the master minds of the century and all but five of the sixty were Christians. He then named the four leading physicians and surgeons of his country, calling them by name, and remarking upon the high qualities of each of them, and added, "They are all thoroughly Christian."

My friends, I think it will be quite respectable for a little longer to be the friends of religion. William E. Gladstone a Christian; Henry W. Grady a Christian. What the greatest of Englishmen said of England is true of America, and of all Christendom.

The Men at the Top

are the friends of God, and believers in the sanctities of religion, the most eminent of the lawyers, the most eminent of the doctors, the most eminent of the merchants, and there are no better men in all our land than some of those who sit in editorial chairs. And if that does not correspond with your acquaintanceship, I am sorry that you have fallen into bad company. In answer to the question put last spring, "Can a secular journalist be a Christian?" I not only answer in the affirmative, but I assert that so great are the responsibilities of that profession, so infinite and eternal the consequences of their obedience or disobedience of the words of my text, "Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen," and so many are the surrounding temptations, that the men of no other profession more deeply need the defences and the reinforcements of the grace of God.

Editorial Responsibility.

And then look at the opportunities of journalism. I praise the pulpit and magnify my office, but I state a fact which you all know when I say that where the pulpit touches one person the press touches five hundred. The vast majority of people do not go to church, but all intelligent people read the newspapers. While, therefore, the responsibility of the ministers is great, the responsibility of editors and reporters is greater. Come, brother journalists, and get your ordination, not by the laying on of human hands, but by the laying on of the hands of the Almighty. To you is committed the precious reputation of men and the more precious reputation of women. Spread before our children an elevated literature. Make sin appear disgusting and virtue admirable. Believe good rather than evil. While you show up the hypocrisies of the Church, show up the stupendous hypocrisies outside the Church. Be not, as some of you are, the mere echoes of public opinion; make public opinion. Let the great roll on which you write with a man's pen be a message of light and liberty and kindness, and an awakening of moral power. But who is sufficient for these things? Not one of you, without divine help. But get that influence, and the editors and reporters can go up and take this world for God and the truth. The mightiest opportunity in all the world for usefulness to-day is open before editors and reporters and publishers, whether of knowledge on foot, as in the book, or knowledge on the wing, as in the newspaper. I pray God, men of the newspaper press, whether you hear or read this sermon, that you may rise up to your full opportunity and that you may be divinely helped and rescued and blessed.

Editorial Usefulness.

Some one might say to me: "How can you talk thus of the newspaper press, when you yourself have sometimes been unfairly treated and misrepresented?" I answer that in the opportunity the newspaper press of this country and other countries have given me week by week to preach the Gospel to the nations, I am put under so much obligation that I defy all editors and reporters, the world over, to write anything that shall call forth from me one word of bitter retort from now till the day of my death. My opinion is, that all reformers and religious teachers, instead of spending so much time and energy in denouncing the press, had better spend more time in thanking them for what they have done for the world's intelligence, and declaring their magnificent opportunity, and urging their employment of it all for beneficent and righteous purposes.

The Christian Patriot.

Again, I remark that Henry W. Grady stood for Christian patriotism irrespective of political spoils. He declined all official reward. He could have been Governor of Georgia, but refused it. He could have been Senator of the United States, but declined it. He remained plain Mr. Grady. Nearly all the other orators of the political arena, as soon as the elections are over, go to Washington, or Albany, or Harrisburg, or Atlanta, to get, in city or State or national office, reward for their services, and not getting what they want spend the rest of the time of that Administration in pointing about the management of public affairs, or cursing Harrison or Cleveland. When the great political campaigns were over Mr. Grady went home to his newspaper. He demonstrated that it is possible to toil for principles which he thought to be right, simply because they were right. Christian patriotism is too rare a commodity in this country. Surely the joy of living under such free institutions as those established here ought to be enough reward for political fidelity. Among all the great writers that stood at the last Presidential election on Democratic and Republican platforms, you cannot recall in your mind ten who were not themselves looking for remunerative appointments. Aye, you can count them all on the fingers of one hand. The most illustrious specimen of that style of man for the last ten years was Henry W. Grady.

A Representative of the New Era.

Again, Mr. Grady stood for the new South, and was just what we want to meet three other men, one to speak for the new North, another for the new East, and another for the new West. The bravest speech made for the last quarter of a century was that made by Mr. Grady at the New England dinner in New York about two or three years ago. I sat with him that evening and knew something of his anxieties, for he was to tread on dangerous ground and might by one misspoken word have antagonized forever both sections. His speech was a victory that thrilled all of us who heard him, and all who read him. That speech, great for wisdom, great for kindness, great for pacification, great for bravery, will go down to the generations with Webster's speech at Bunker Hill, William Wirt's speech at the arraignment of Aaron Burr, Edmund Burke's speech on Warren Hastings, Robert Emmet's speech for his own vindication.

Who will in conspicuous action represent the new North as he did the new South? Who shall come forth for the new East, and who for the new West? Let old political issues be buried,

Let Old Grudges Die.

Let new theories be launched. With the coming in of a new nation at the gates of Castle Garden every year, and the wheat-bin and corn-crib of our land enlarged with every harvest, and a vast multitude of our population still plunged in illiteracy to be educated, and moral questions abroad involving the very existence of our republic, let the old political platforms that are worm-eaten be dropped, and platforms that shall be made of two planks, the one the Ten Commandments, and the other the Sermon on the Mount, lifted for all of us to stand on. But there is a lot of old politicians grumbling all around the sky who don't want a new South, a new North, a new East, or a new West. They have some old war speeches that they prepared in 1861, that in all our autumnal elections they feel called upon to inflict upon the country. They grow louder and louder in proportion as they are pushed back further and further, and the Henry W. Grady's come to the front. But the mandate, I think, has gone forth from the throne of God that a new American nation shall take the place of the old, and the new has been baptized for God and liberty, and justice and peace, and morality and religion.

And now our much-lamented friend has gone to give account. Suddenly the facile and potent pen is laid down, and the eloquent tongue is silent. What? Is there no safeguard against fatal disease? The impersonation of stout health was Mr. Grady. What compactness of muscle! What ruddy complexion! What flashing eye! Standing with him in a group of twenty or thirty persons at Piedmont, he looked the healthiest, as his spirits were the blithest. Shall we never feel again the hearty grasp of his hand, or be magnetized with his eloquence? Men of the great roll, men of the pen, men of wit, men of power, if our friend so must you when your call comes. When God asks you what you have done with your pen, or your eloquence, or your wealth, or your social position, will you be able to give satisfactory answer? What have we been writing all these years? If mirth, has it been innocent mirth, or that which tears and stings and lacerates? From our pen have there come forth productions healthy or poisonous? In the last great day, when the warrior must give account of what he has done with his sword, and the merchant what he has done with his yardstick, and the mason what he has done with his trowel, and the artist what he has done with his pencil, we shall have to give account of what we have done with our pen. There are gold pens, and diamond pens, and pens of exquisite manufacture, and every few weeks I see some new kind of pen, each said to be better than the other; but in the great day of our arraignment before the Judge of quick and dead that will be the most beautiful pen, whether gold or steel or quill, which never wrote a profane or unclean or cruel word, or which from the day it was carved, or split at the nib, dropped from its point kindness and encouragement and help and gratitude to God, and benediction for man.

Had to Go When the Call Came.

The Influenza Plague.

May God comfort that torn up Southern home, and all the homes of this country, and of all the world which have been swept by this plague of influenza, which has deepened sometimes into pneumonia, and sometimes into typhus, and the victims of which are counted by the ten thousand! Satan, who is the "Prince of the Power of the Air," has been poisoning the atmosphere in all nations. Though it is the first time in our remembrance, he has done the same thing before. In 1696 the unwholesome air of Cairo, Egypt, destroyed the life of ten thousand in one day; and in Constantinople in 1714 three hundred thousand people died of it. I am glad that by the better sanitation of our cities, and wider understanding of hygienic laws, and the greater skill of physicians, these Apollyonic assaults upon the human race are being resisted, but pestilential atmosphere is still abroad. Hardly a family here but has felt its lighter or heavier touch. Some of the best of my flock fell under its power, and many homes here represented have been crushed.

Reunion.

The fact is, the biggest failure in the universe is this world, if there be no heaven beyond. But there is, and the friends who have gone there are many and very dear. Oh, tearful eyes, look up to the hills crimsoning with eternal morn! That reunion kiss will more than make up for the parting kiss; and the welcome will obliterate the good-by. "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Till then, oh departed loved ones, promise us that you will remember us, as we promise to remember you; and some of you, gone up from this city by the sea, and others from under southern skies, and others from the homes of the more rigorous North, and some from the cabins on great western farms, we shall meet again when our pen has written its last word, and our arm has done its last day's work, and our lips have spoken the last adieu.

And now, thou great and magnificent soul of editor and orator! under brighter skies we shall meet again. From God thou camest, and to God thou hast returned. Not broken down, but ascended. Not collapsed, but irradiated. Enthroned one! Coroneted one! Sceptred one! Emparadised one! Hail and farewell.

THE DAY OF CONSUMMATION.

By the Earl of Cavan.

Signs of Christ's Second Advent—The Blindness of the World to the Signs of the First Advent—Two Watchers Then—Simeon and Anna—The Right Attitude for Christians Now—Three Duties Incumbent—The Transfiguration Typical—Three Events Predicted—I. The Restoration of the Jews—II. The Development of Antichrist—A Man, not a System—The Speaking Image—III. The Appearance of Christ—First, to His People—Second, to the World—Three Vivid Contrasts.

THE subject of our Lord's Second Advent is one that has been too much overlooked, but now, in these latter days, those who have closely studied the Word of Christ, and are looking forward to His glorious appearing, cannot but rejoice to give the more earnest heed to it, because it is evidently Fast Approaching.

Just as on the occasion of the First Coming of our Lord there were some, of whom mention is made in Holy Scripture, who were looking for and expecting that First Coming, so, in like manner, how much more essential and important is it for us who are living in the Last Days to be anxiously looking for and expecting a speedy return of our Blessed Lord when He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and admired in all them that believe on Him. We read in the second chapter of Luke about Simeon, who, it is said, was "just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel, and the Holy Ghost was upon him." We find still further in that chapter that "Anna, coming in that instant, gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spoke of Him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem." Now I believe that the Lord's people ought to be in a similar expectant and looking for the speedy pre-millennial Advent of our Blessed Lord. And I hold it to be clearly shown in Scripture that the personal return of Christ, as foretold in Acts 1:11, will take place before the millennium of a thousand years, and that He will reign during that period with the saints of the First Resurrection over the nations of the earth.

Waiting Attitude,

Our Lord Himself opened up the subject of the prophetic events which will accompany His Second Advent, in the thirteenth chapter of Mark, when His disciples asked Him, "What shall be the Sign when all these things shall be fulfilled," or, as St. Matthew expresses it, "What shall be the Sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the age." That prophetic discourse concludes with most admonitory words, "Take ye heed: watch and pray; for the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work; and commanded the porter to watch: watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning; lest, coming suddenly, He find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." Here are mentioned upon every Christian—to be watching, to be praying, and to be working: each individual has his appointed work. Our Master has given to each of us one or more talents, and He has said, "Occupy till I come." We are to be diligently occupying until He returns. We cannot but fear that, at the present day, there is a tendency to spiritual torpor. Even the very activity and bustle of the world around us tend to lead us away from a close walk with God, and from steady, prayerful working in His service. It is needful for us to keep in mind the apostle's exhortation in Ephesians, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." While our Lord has gone away to receive for Himself a kingdom and to return, let us, who are children of the light and children of the day, be stirred up to greater diligence in His service, and "not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober."

Three Duties Incumbent

The Apostle Peter, as well St. Paul, refers fully to this subject. In his Second Epistle he speaks of the scene of the transfiguration, which he had witnessed, as of the future coming of Christ in His kingdom of glory; and he adds, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye may take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts."

A Typical Representation

Most animating is this prospect which lies before us, "of the power and coming of the Lord Jesus Christ" to raise from their graves the bodies of the deceased saints, and to transfigure and translate His waiting people, who shall then be living on the earth, to meet Him in the heavens and to gather them all together into His presence in one united and glorified company.

Let us endeavor to keep prominently in our mind

Three Leading Events,

which are to characterize the last days of this dispensation: first, the restoration of the Jews; secondly, the manifestation of a personal Antichrist; and thirdly, the Lord's personal advent in glory.

I. First, as regards the national restoration of the Jews, we have this fully predicted in the last chapter of Zechariah, as well as in the four previous chapters, and also in the 38th and 39th chapters of Ezekiel, and in the 11th of Romans. It appears that a restoration of some of the Jews to Palestine in an unconverted state will take place about seven years before the end of this dispensation, as foretold in the concluding verse of the 9th chapter of Daniel. "He shall confirm a covenant with many for one week, or hebdomad [a week of seven years], and in the midst of the week, He shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and for the over-spreading of abominations He shall make it desolate, even until that determined shall be poured upon the desolator." (Daniel 9:27.)

It thus seems that a "Prince that shall come," spoken of in the previous verse, will promote their return to Palestine by making a seven years' covenant with many of them, but in the midst of the seven years will put a stop to their renewed sacrifices, and temple-worship, and will cause his image, the abomination of desolation, to be set up in their rebuilt temple during the remaining three and a half years. This is referred to by our Lord in Matthew 24:15.

II. And this brings before us, in the second place, the manifestation and career of this

Personal Antichrist

who, after appearing as the friend of the Jews, and promoting their restoration, will, during the latter half of the week of years, mentioned by Daniel, become the great persecutor both of them and of Christians. This final period of three and a half years, during which the great tribulation and persecution by the Personal Antichrist is to prevail with such unequalled violence and severity, is clearly predicted in Daniel and Revelation as 1260 days, or 42 months, or a time, times, and half-time. I understand these expressions beyond all doubt to signify literally three years and a half. And although the Pope and Popery have been a dreadful Antichrist, yet there will still arise this Last Personal Antichrist,

An Individual Man,

as distinctly foretold in St. John's first epistle, "He is an Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." (2:22.) Instead of being a professing Christian, like the Pope, he will be an avowed infidel.

He is further described, in the second chapter of 11 Thessalonians, as the Man of Sin, who shall sit, as God, in the Temple of God at Jerusalem, showing Himself that he is God, and whom the Lord shall at last destroy with the brightness of his personal Coming. His career is particularly set forth in the 13th and 17th chapters of Revelation, where it is stated that he is to be Head over the ten kingdoms of the Roman Empire, which are to give their power and strength to him, and is to have "authority given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations;" and is to make war with the saints for forty-two months, or three and a half years, and is to overcome them, and all that dwell upon the earth, except the elect, are to worship Him; and all the world is to wonder after him, and exclaim, "Who is like him? who is able to make war with him?"

The Speaking Image.

I fully believe that nothing has ever yet happened at all approaching to the fulfilment of this description; the power of the Pope and Popery has by no means ever yet approximated to the degree of power here depicted. In fact, the Pope has never claimed or received divine worship as God from any one at all, and far less from all that dwell upon the earth except the elect. (Rev. 13:8.) Moreover, the nature of this persecution for three and a half years is further particularized. The Man of Sin is to have an image of himself fabricated by human hands; and by Satanic power this naturally lifeless image is to have life given to it so that it shall speak; and as many as refuse to worship it, or to receive the mark of this Man of Sin in their foreheads or right hands, are to be killed. (Rev. 13:15-18.)

Let us carefully bear in mind that it is by the energy and power of that great and mysterious being, Satan, that the Antichrist will be enabled to accomplish his miraculous and unparalleled career of evil. The tremendous power of Satan, which is incessantly at work, has been too much overlooked by Christian people, but events are approaching which will demand for it much deeper attention. The apostle warns us that we wrestle not merely against foes of flesh and blood, but against wicked spirits in the regions of the air. (See Ephesians 6:12.) Satan is the Prince of the power of the air as well as the god of this world.

Satan Incarnate.

We find, however, in the 12th chapter of Revelation, that he is to be dislodged and cast down, with all his evil angels, from the air upon this earth previously to the great tribulation of three and a half years; and is then to enter into and energize the Personal Antichrist, and is to give to him "his power and his throne, and great authority," and thus to raise him up as the prime agent by whom to conduct the final struggle against Christ and His people (Rev. 13:2). Most solemn is the voice from heaven uttered in reference to that period, "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea, for the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time" (Rev. 12:12).

Two Stages of the Advent.

III. In reference to the third leading event which we should keep in view, namely, the personal Second Advent of Christ in glory, it is generally agreed that it will take place in two stages or acts. The earlier stage is when He descends into the air, and when the bodies of the dead in Christ shall be raised to life and be caught up, together with those living Christians who love His appearing, and look for His coming, and are ready for it, to meet Him in the air; this occurrence precedes the final three and a half years which is the term of Antichrist's career (1 Thess. 4:16, 17; Matt. 25:10).

The later and concluding stage of our Lord's Advent will consist in His descent from the air upon the very surface of the Mount of Olives, as predicted in Zechariah 14:1, 2, when Antichrist and his hosts will be totally overthrown at the final conflict. This is also set forth in the 19th chapter of Revelation, where we have

Three Vivid Contrasts:

the two women, the Bride, the Lamb's wife glorified, and the Scarlet Woman, harlot Babylon, at the same time consumed with fire; the two suppers, the joyous Marriage Supper of the Lamb (which may God grant every one of us may be admitted to sit down at), and the dismal Supper of vengeance, to which the birds of prey are invited to feast upon the flesh of Antichrist's hosts; and the

Two Armies,

the army of the Lamb, composed of His Saints clothed in fine linen and mounted upon white horses, and the army of Antichrist, consisting of the kings of the earth and their armies under his leadership, gathered together to Armageddon to war against the Lamb and against His army; but the imperial Antichrist and his ecclesiastical minister, the false prophet, will be cast alive into the lake of fire, and their vast military hosts slain with the sword of the King of kings, and Lord of lords.

Then Satan will be bound in the bottomless pit for a thousand years, and the surviving inhabitants of the earth that are spared, will become converted to true Christianity, and, together with their posterity, will constitute the subjects of kingdom of Christ and His glorified Saints of the First Resurrection, who will reign over them from heaven during the thousand years. At the close of this period Satan, being loosed from the bottomless pit, will produce a general apostasy of mankind, but is once more captured and consigned to the lake of fire. Then is to follow the creation of a new heaven and a new earth, and the entire disappearance of the sea, in conjunction with the general judgment of the wicked at the Tribunal of the great White Throne. (See Revelation 20 and 21:1.) Well may we exclaim, in looking forward to these impressive and solemn scenes, "Oh the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!"

The Millennium

Holy Ghost Days. By Mrs. M. Baxter.—A volume containing 144 pages. Price, neatly bound in cloth, 35 cents including postage. Address Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD, 41 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

3. Lesson for March 9, Luke 4: 31-44; Golden Text, Matt. 8: 16.

Statute and a Promise—The Threefold Power of Jesus—Satan Causing Sickness and Death—Jesus Informed by Circumstances—Willing to Change the Sphere of His Work—A Momentous Question—The Confession of the Unclean Demon—Its Obedience to Christ—Disease Rebuked—The Sick Brought into the Streets—Jesus the Healer Still.

WHO is the Great Physician? Let God answer in His own Word. "I am the Lord that heal thee," or, as translated by Luther, "I am the Lord thy Physician." It was spoken in connection with the first law or statute which is on record as given in the Word of God. "There He made

A Statute and an Ordinance, and there He proved them and said, If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in His sight, and wilt give ear to His commandments, and keep all His statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee which I have brought upon the Egyptians, for I am the Lord that healeth thee." Before the ten commandments were given this statute was made, binding obedience and instituting God Himself as His people's Physician. The study of medicine is not only known (Job 13: 4; 11 Chron. 16: 12; 1 Sam. 8: 22), but had made considerable progress in Egypt. Yet God reserved to Himself the right of healing for His own people when they were sick, and as we find that, when Jacob was sick, his sons were called around his dying bed, but the physicians were only called in to embalm his dead body after death! (Gen. 48, 49, 50: 1-3.)

Jesus is essentially the Great Physician, because His power comprehends the whole being in each case which he undertakes, that "spirit and soul and body be preserved entire." (1 Thess. 5: 23.) Sickness came into the world, like sin, as a fruit of the fall and a work of the devil. Our great enemy is "the power of death" (Heb. 2: 14), and God's Word shows that he has much to do with sickness, not only within limits which God prescribes. It is Satan who "smote Job with sore boils," but He healed him. Satan bound the poor woman fifteen years with her infirmity. (Luke 13: 11, 16.) The healings of Jesus are declared to have been performed on those who "were oppressed of the devil" (Acts 10: 34), and in His work of healing He destroyed the works of the devil. (1 John 3: 8.) The devil has power to make man blind and dumb (Matt. 12: 22), to cause epilepsy (Matt. 17: 14-18, R. V.), to lead to self-destruction. (Mark 5: 5.) Jesus came with quite another mission.

It is an "old wives' fable" that sickness is God's chosen way of blessing His people. None can deny that in times of sickness, when men are forced to stay away from their ordinary occupations, God has the chance to get their ear, as He cannot in the press and hurry of commercial or fashionable life among the rich, or in the struggle for a living among the poor. But if it were the sickness itself which was the blessing, then Jesus must have done anything but His Father's will when, in connection with His teaching the Gospel of the kingdom, "He healed in manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." (Matt. 4: 23.) Yet He could not "do always those things that please Him." (John 8: 29.) It pleased the Father that the blind should receive their sight, and the lame walk, the deaf be cleansed, and the deaf hear (Matt. 11: 5), and, thank God! what pleased Him then pleases Him now also. It is which has fallen upon many of the Christian workers of this day, that they should count it almost a disgrace to trust the Lord to do that which He has said He would do, when He has never recalled His promise. One of the most prominent Christian workers in London, "whose praise is in all the churches," was crossing over from New York last year, and declared to a fellow-passenger that there was no well-authenticated case of the Lord's healing without remedies! Can he be ignorant that the numbers number thousands, and are increasing every day? This man of God has never taken the trouble to attend a meeting for Divine healing, where he might question those who give their testimony. He takes for granted that a faith which he has never exercised in some of the promises of God is necessarily not true in others. Let us beware of judging others by ourselves.

A Strange Blindness,

Jesus left Nazareth; the attempt upon His life by those who had been impressed in the synagogue had failed. Until His hour was come, the Son of God could not fall into the hands of man. He came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and He was teaching them on the Sabbath day (R. V.). Jesus was not discouraged by persecution. Hindered in one city, He did precisely the same thing in another. He knew His Father overruled all, and as He never set His heart on a certain plan of work in a certain place, but was willing to be interrupted at any time, He was not put out by circumstances. He came down from heaven, not to do His own will, but the will of Him that sent Him. (John 6: 38.)

The same power which accompanied Him at Nazareth was manifest here also. "They were astonished at His teaching, for His word was with authority." (R. V.) But it was the authority of Another, of His Father; very unlike the self-assertion of some, who are wise in their own conceits (Rom. 12: 16). Wherever the Word of God is preached with power, there the enemy of souls will be present to withstand it. "In the synagogue there was a man with an unclean devil" (or demon). The power of God was too much for this inhabitant of hell. Oh, it is strange, yet terribly true, that demons are more sensitive than lost sinners to the power of God. The poor possessed man, the helpless instrument of the demon, cried out, "Let us alone; what have we to do with Thee, Thou Jesus of Nazareth; I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God."

"What Have We to do With Thee?"

It is a question which every unsaved man and woman and child would do well to ask. God has sent His own Son into the world to save my soul; what have I to do with Him just now? What has He to do with me? He has undertaken my cause, prevailed for me, obtained a free pardon for me, but is waiting for my signature, and I have delayed. He has fought the devil for me, regained the ground which was lost through sin, and is become the devil's master, and He offers me the place of victory, and I—am I waiting for my signature to my own death-warrant as crucified with Christ, that not I may live, but Christ in me? Is He, indeed, my Healer? Has He, indeed, taken my infirmities, and borne my sicknesses, that He might purchase healing power for me, and have I failed to sign away that body which He bought with blood as His? Am I tending it, doctoring it, nursing it, as though He, the great Physician, had forfeited His right? "What have we to do with Thee, Jesus of Nazareth?"

The demoniac confessed Him to be Christ, God's Holy One, before one disciple had made the discovery. He, whose word of authority had awed the assembly in the synagogue, now exercised that authority upon the demoniac; "Hold thy peace," he said, "and come out of him." The people were looking on; to be seen, such as were practiced by the exorcists. It was a simple command. They saw the man fall to the earth, but the glaring eyes ceased to glare, and the face lost its uncanny look; the demon went out, and Mark says, "when he had cried in a loud voice;" and the man arose, and was free. Again, a deep impression was made; the people who were present were amazed, and said, "What a word is this! For with authority and power He commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out." Many cases of lunacy are really the possession of the devil, who gets power over the brain, and unhinges it; and in hundreds of cases we have known, in these days, poor lunatics delivered by Jesus in answer to the prayers of their friends.

There Were No Ceremonies

But Jesus did not heal only in the synagogue; He was at this time staying in Peter's home, and there was sickness in the house. Peter's mother-in-law was down with fever, which ran very high. "They besought Him for her." Jesus did not direct them to seek a doctor, or to have recourse to certain remedies, but "He stood over her, and rebuked the fever;" this was all; "and it left her, and immediately she arose, and ministered unto them." When Jesus came into a house, then sickness went out; sickness could no more stand before Him than sin. He came to remedy the fall in its root of sin, and in its fruits of sorrow, sickness, and, finally, of death. He never said to any sick one, "Be patient, it is the will of God that you should see in this; you can glorify Him by it." Those who know most about sickness, know well that in times of weakness and pain temptations of all kinds have much more strength. Oh, the temptation to be irritable when all the nerves are unstrung, and every noise, every vibration, every jar causes suffering! Oh, the temptation to despondency, and to self-pity when there is work to be done, and every movement causes pain, and there is no strength to do it; when we would fain tidy up, but the cost would be an access of agony; and the poor sufferer has not only the pain to bear, but also the reproach of those who find the room all in disorder. There is much more opportunity for the display of Christian graces in a sufferer who cannot rise from bed than in one, very suffering, who still struggles on in pain and weakness. But let Jesus come in, poor sufferer; tell Him you want only His will as but you want all He means to give by taking your infirmities and bearing your sicknesses. He "healed all that were sick" of old time, that He might fulfil this word (Matt. 8: 16, 17); will you trust Him to fulfil that word in your body, "Himself took my infirmities, and took my sickness," just as He has fulfilled in your soul, "Who His own self bears our sins in His own body on the tree, that we being dead to sin should live unto righteousness, with whose stripes we are healed." (1 Pet. 2: 24.)

Your Physician,

The healing of Peter's mother-in-law, combined with the deliverance of the possessed man in the synagogue, had a very practical effect on the people of Capernaum. The news ran from house to house, from mouth to mouth, and thus it came to pass that "when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto Him." They did not so much as wait for daylight; why should their poor sick friends have one more night in helplessness and pain when deliverance was so near? They did not wait to get a doctor's certificate of the disease, as we are often recommended to do before we pray for the needy sufferers;

These Were Practical People.

Their object was, not to reconcile the work of Christ with science, but to get their friends in contact with the great Physician, that they might be healed; and not in vain. He laid His hands on every one of them and healed them. "And devils also came out of many, crying, and saying, Thou art [the Christ, the Son of God, and He, rebuking them, suffered them not to speak: for they knew that He was Christ." Such was the work of the great Physician; such is His work still, wherever men will trust Him, and obey the only command to the sick which is given in the Word of God, and which has never been revoked, "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another that ye may be healed. (James 5: 14-17.)

Why are men so prejudiced against the Lord's healing? Are they not afraid of the simple obedience required by the Lord, which is connected with His promise of healing? And are there not many who shrink from exercising faith in any way that is tangible, and which can be easily proved or disproved by others? There are some who dare not tread on ground which the ordinary class of Christians can not or do not understand; they follow the sheep rather than the Shepherd, and thus fail to know Jesus in one of His most precious relationships. It gives a wonderful rest to the soul when the whole being—spirit, soul, and body—is in the same blessed hands; when, instead of thinking how to avoid or counteract sickness, the first thought is, What has my Lord to say to me? When fear is hushed by the blessed consciousness that the great Physician cannot make a mistake, and the quiet certainty that, if He is calling us home, it is so much better to depart and be with Christ. But it must be no experiment to trust Him as a Physician, you must rest on His Word, and you will find that it is trustworthy, and your relationship to Him immeasurably enriched.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can be obtained.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

THE publisher of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD desires to call special attention to the announcement made in the Brooklyn Academy of Music by Dr. Talmage, which appears on page 132 of this issue. The object therein outlined is nothing less than to defray the cost of erecting the New Brooklyn Tabernacle. Such an object cannot fail to enlist the hearty sympathy and co-operation of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who were among the earliest of the American public to appreciate Dr. Talmage's printed sermons. The publisher has not underestimated the magnitude of the undertaking; but he believes that it may be achieved by a plan which will at the same time largely extend the circulation and influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He proposes to donate to the Building Fund of the New Brooklyn Tabernacle his entire interest in all new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD which can be obtained by Dr. Talmage and his church this year, up to the number of 150,000. He believes that 150,000 subscriptions can easily be obtained by the thousands of friends Dr. Talmage has throughout the land, and thus the whole amount needed for the New Brooklyn Tabernacle will be raised. The few conditions attached to this large donation are as follow:

I. That all such subscriptions shall be endorsed "For the Brooklyn Tabernacle Fund," and sent to the Treasurer of that fund, Mr. John Wood, 223 Fulton Street, near Concord, Brooklyn, N. Y.

II. That they shall be of the full amount of $1.50, with no deduction for commission, agents' fees, etc.

III. That all shall be bona fide new subscriptions, not the renewals of present subscribers.

The publisher has full confidence that this effort will accomplish the object proposed, and thus achieve the first of many good works which he hopes to effect through the agency of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; he trusts, also, that many who thus make the acquaintance of the journal will learn to love it, as its present subscribers do, and will continue to be numbered among its permanent friends.

A GREETING TO ALL.

IN taking the editorial chair of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a paper already widely known, and which has accomplished a vast good under previous management, I wish to announce the principles on which it will be hereafter conducted.

First of all, the paper shall have the widest catholicity. A man's religion is something between him and his God, and not to be made light of. The best way of combatting Error is to proclaim the Truth. We must remember that other people do not differ more from us than we differ from them. A recent visit to Europe, Asia, and Africa has enlarged our sympathies.

Furthermore, it is a cultivated sentiment of our life never to attack a Christian worker. Liberty to do things in our own way implies the right of other people to do things in their own way. Further, our ambition is to be spirited, enterprising, and, in a wide-awake sense, evangelical. Poor and pious ought not to be characteristic of any religious newspaper. The religion that in the Bible is compared to fountains and day-dawn, and a bridegroom and victory, ought not to be stupid, inane, or insipid. We want our paper full of compressed news. We want the articles contributed short, cut in two in the middle, and set on fire at both ends. We invite all lay workers to send us all the encouraging things they know of about men and women and children and good institutions. If you know anything bad about anybody, do not send it, or send it with all the alleviating circumstances. We mean to put the virtues of good people in large letters and in most conspicuous column, and their frailties in small type and in obscure corners, looking for honey like the bee, instead of extracting poison like the spider. We have no grudges to settle, and no wrongs to right. Do not send us March sleet or December fog, but panels out of the sky of a June morning. And now, asking the prayers of all good people in behalf of this religious journal, and their help in its increased circulation, we conclude this editorial salutatory.

T. De Witt Talmage

CURRENT EVENTS.

Epidemic of Crime.—The Week Has Had Sad stories of villany. What is the matter? First, there are more people in the world than there used to be, and therefore more people to be bad if they so choose. In a million people you would expect to find more crime than in a hundred thousand. Beside that, the Associated Press is a great wire rake which twice a day gathers up the crimes of all nations. Beside that, Satan, who is prompt in seizing opportunities, has taken advantage of the world-wide atmospheric depression. In a bracing, tonic atmosphere public morals are better; damp or relaxing weather is sure to unstring nerves and weaken the fibre of body, mind, and soul. We are making no apologies for evils abroad. We are only accounting for the great number reported. Our opinion is that the climates of the world are in a transition state, and that is always disturbing. The severe climates of the world are changing toward the more genial. Before the final garden into which the whole world is to turn, our winters and summers will have to be mightily fixed up. We cannot have the millennium until the thermometer stops rising to ninety-five degrees above zero or drops to ten degrees below. But this unpleasant transition period, when the winters try to be summers and the summers try to be winters, will soon be passed. The gulf streams are changing their course, and the solar and lunar influences are working new chemistries, and the world will yet be so delightful that it will not make much difference whether a man is in heaven here, or a heaven in some other world.

The Temperance Cause is now so Mixed up With politics that moral suasion is being sadly neglected. There used to be held a hundred temperance meetings where now there is one meeting. While we are discussing the laws on the subject of liquor-selling we are letting hundreds of men and women go to ruin for the lack of proper instruction on the importance of abstinence. We want in the country ten thousand old-fashioned John B. Gough temperance meetings. But, you say, where are the John B. Goughs? They are now in our schools and colleges and farm-houses or already in the occupations and professions of life. The eloquence to come is greater than the eloquence passed away. By all means make the laws right, but let us by force of Christian persuasion stop the stampede to death of multitudes who will not wait until we get the laws what they ought to be. We need to work more rapidly on this subject than formerly. In olden times it took most men five or ten years to become thorough drunkards. Now they may reach the foot of that stairs by one jump, because of the worse adulteration of liquors. Young men used to go on a spree and then come back and go to work. Now we have confirmed drunkards at twenty-one,

It is the most urgent duty of all ministers of religion and all reformers to put forth unwonted effort in the direction of moral suasion. Other things need to be done, but this must not be left undone.

An Important Project was Submitted to the Pan-American Conference on February 21, which if realized, will do much to promote that union of interests which was the chief object contemplated in calling the conference. It is proposed to construct a railroad which will connect the majority of the nations represented in the Conference. A committee which formed the project advises that a commission be organized of three civil engineers from each nation, who shall study the possible routes, determine their true lengths, estimate the respective cost, and compare their reciprocal advantages. That, as far as possible, existing lines shall be utilized, and an effort made to obtain from each nation a guarantee of a minimum rate of interest. The United States Government is to be authorized to request the appointment of the engineers so soon as it has been notified of the approval of the project by the respective Governments.

The New Extradition Treaty with England which was ratified by the Senate on February 17 will be a distinct benefit to both countries, chiefly to the United States, which has been its greatest sufferer from the lack of such a treaty. Many citizens are now in Canada, living in luxury on their ill-gotten gains, who might have been stored to their native country, and provided for here in a manner appropriate to their deserts. Such a treaty as this had been ratified a few years ago. The treaty under which we have been living since 1842 allowed the extradition of only seven classes of criminals. The crimes it covered were murder, murderous assault, piracy, arson, robbery, forgery, and the utterance of forged paper. To these are now added manslaughter, counterfeiting, embezzlement, fraud by a banker or trustee, perjury, abduction, burglary, and mutiny at sea. The treaty also provided for the extradition of persons obtaining money or valuables by false pretences, but the Senate thought that this clause might lead to abuses, and therefore struck it out. Happily for the fugitives over the border the treaty is not to be retroactive.

The New Postage-Stamp Placed on Sale at the first-class post-offices on Saturday last are more superior as works of art to any previously produced. They are smaller by about one-eighth than the predecessors; and the portraits upon the various denominations have been changed, and in some instances the colors also. The one-cent stamp remains blue, and bears the portrait of Franklin; the two-cent is carmine, and bears the portrait of Washington; the three-cent is purple, with the portrait of Andrew Jackson; the four-cent is chocolate, and has the portrait of Lincoln; and the five-cent light brown, and bears the portrait of Gen. Grant. New stamps of the value of six, ten, fifteen, thirty and ninety cents have also been issued. They bear the portraits, respectively, in the order named, Garfield, Webster, Henry Clay, Thomas Jefferson and Commodore Perry. The Postmaster-General has ordered nearly forty-four millions of them, representing $784,323.

The Trial of the Temperance Crusaders of Missouri has stirred the whole neighborhood. It commenced at Trenton, Mo., on February 21. Sixteen women were arraigned for raiding the liquor saloons at Lathrop, and breaking up a notorious resort at Spicardville. They were escorted to the court-house by two hundred prominent citizens carrying banners. The Rev. John Cox, of Trenton, offered a prayer for the women, and Rev. B. Deering, of Lathrop, addressed the crowd. After the adjournment of the court the citizens of Trenton would not allow the women and their friends to return to Spicardville for the night, but insisted that their remaining as the guests of the town. Nearly every lawyer in Trenton offered his services to the accused, gratuitously, and the prosecuting lawyer found it almost impossible to get any lawyer to assist him. On February 22, when the court opened, there was strong excitement, all present being in sympathy with the crusaders. The judge, however, ruled against them on a point of law which excluded the evidence as to the character of the places raided. They were convicted and fined five dollars each. All the ministers of the town, Protestant and Romanist, attended a large meeting in the evening, at which a committee was appointed to see that the business of the saloons was resumed.

A Law to Afford Special Protection for United States officers has been framed by Senator Edmunds, and was introduced in the Senate on February 21. It is intended to meet such cases as the outrageous attack on Justice Field, and the shocking murder of Deputy Marshal Saunders. It will be remembered that an effort was made to evade justice by stirring up a conflict between Federal and State rights of jurisdiction in those cases. This bill is an attempt to settle that question. It provides for the punishment of any person trying to prevent an officer of the United States discharging his duties, or to do bodily harm to an officer on account of such duties, and fixes penalties of fine or imprisonment or both in cases of conviction.

The Deadlock in New York on the World's Fair project has been ended by a happy suggestion for which Mr. Chauncey M. Depew has the credit. The Republican politicians at Albany were apprehensive that the large amount of money which the committee in charge of the fair would have to spend in a Presidential year might be diverted to political purposes. They contended that if the mugwumps on the committee voted with the Democrats, as was probable, the fair might have an important influence on the vote of the State. They therefore proposed to add a number of Republicans to the committee to protect the interests of their party. The contention on this proposal was so fierce that it seemed likely that the whole project, so far as New York was interested in it, would be torn to pieces. It has ended, however, in the acceptance by the Republicans of a suggestion which promises to lift the project out of the political slough. It is, to add no politicians to the committee, but to make a two-thirds vote necessary to any important action. Thus, as the committee will consist of 104 members, no measure can be carried without the affirmative action of seventy of them, and this of necessity will include the vote of some Republicans.

The National Education Association, at its meeting in New York on February 20, took notice of the "hostile criticisms openly made against the public schools of the country," and resolved that the best means of meeting them was "to make the schools sources of the most wholesome moral influence, without at all interfering with religious denominational differences." The resolution has wisdom in it. Boys and girls are leaving our public schools, at the end of their course, with their moral natures tainted by association with precociously depraved classmates, with whom they are brought into compulsory association in the schools. Their modesty of thought and speech, carefully fostered by their parents, is exposed to frequent attacks, open or insidious, from their companions; though they close their ears to vicious words and filthy stories, the evil reaches them when they find an open dictionary or some other school-book on their desks with some word marked which no child should use or understand. The child would go to the teacher for help with a difficult example, or some mental problem, but undergoes the moral strain in silence. Meanwhile the teacher's efforts are directed to cramming the child's brain with facts and dates and rules, and no word is spoken to help the tempted one to resist the moral evil. Every right-minded parent will rejoice if the resolution of the National Education Association bears fruit in increased vigilance in this matter on the part of teachers. It is not expected nor desired that teachers undertake the religious education of the children, but they will not have done their whole duty if they have restricted their work to imparting mental instruction, and have made no effort to preserve and promote moral strength.

Idaho's Prospects of Admission to Statehood were advanced a stage on February 18 by the presentation of the favorable report of the Senate Committee on Territories. The report describes the settlement, growth and development of the Territory as rapid and substantial, and states that the foundations of a rich and prosperous commonwealth are already laid. The committee believes that the Governor's estimate of the population, which places it at 117,225, is conservative, and expresses the opinion that it would reach 150,000 within the first year after admission. Quoting from the report of the Surveyor-General of the Territory, it states that 240,000 acres are reclaimed or in process of reclamation. But Idaho will not be dependent on a single industry. Its forests, its mines, and its grazing lands supplement its agricultural resources. The value of live-stock is estimated at over $11,000,000. The production of minerals has reached the enormous total of $157,720,962. The assessed value of property in the Territory is about $25,000,000. The actual value of property in the Territory is estimated at $85,000,000. It has eighteen counties organized, 385 school districts, 24,071 children of school age, and school property valued at $344,300. It has built a capitol building at a cost of $100,000, an insane asylum at a cost of $50,000, has located and begun work on a university, all without the aid of the General Government. Its annual expenses are $533,000, of which the General Government pays only $28,000. It is on the question of population that the opponents of admission join issue with its advocates. They point to the fact that in 1880 the total population as stated in the census reports was only 32,619 and that in the election last month only 14,185 votes were cast. As this is the chief subject of dispute, Idaho may not gain admission until after this year's census returns have been made up.

The Elections in Germany Last Week Have Set all the world thinking and talking. What do they mean? Emperor William a few days before they took place assumed a new character. He appeared as the friend of the workingman. He was concerned for his welfare. He was anxious about the workingman's family. He wanted facilities arranged for easy life-insurance. He was concerned about his relations with his employer. He urged the appointment of representatives of labor for conference with representatives of capital. He summoned all Europe to help him in consultation, that the condition of the workingman in all lands might be improved. Surely the German workingman would rejoice that his Emperor had become his champion. Yet when the workingman came to the polls last Thursday he cast his vote, not for the Emperor's friends, but for his enemies, the Socialists. Fifteen seats in the Reichstag have been captured by that party, and when the second ballot takes place there will be more gains. A conservative estimate places the number of Socialists in the next Reichstag at forty. Relatively the number is small; but the Reichstag is broken up into a dozen political groups, in which a compact body of forty may easily hold the balance of power. The Emperor is grievously disappointed. He thought he had cut the ground from under the feet of the Socialists. He expected gratitude, and now the workmen tell him by their votes that they do not trust him, but prefer their old leaders. The situation is interesting. No man knows what it will bring forth.

The Whole Empire of Austria-Hungary has been thrown into mourning by the death on February 18 of the great statesman, Count Julius Andrássy. His illness has been a long one, but until his death was announced the people refused to abandon hope of his recovery. His career was one of the most romantic of modern times. He came of a distinguished Hungarian family, and in the troubles of 1848, he, then a young man of twenty-five years, was active on the patriotic side. After the suppression of the revolt Andrássy would have been sent to the scaffold for his share in the movement if the Austrians could have caught him, but, happily, he was out of their reach. He had been sent on a mission to Constantinople by the revolutionary Government shortly before the collapse of the insurrection. The Austrian conquerors hung him in effigy to show what they would do if they could capture him. He settled in Paris, and remained there, with occasional sojourns in London, until 1857, when an amnesty was granted. Then he returned to his native land, and in 1860 entered the Diet, where he was speedily known as one of the most able of the party led by the patriot Deak. After the Constitution was granted to Hungary, Andrássy rose into greater prominence. The Emperor recognized his abilities, and in 1871 the man who, fifteen years before, had been an exile under sentence of death became Secretary of Foreign Affairs in the Austrian Cabinet.

The Irish Question is Taking a New Aspect in England. Men of character are indignant about being misled by the London Times. When they read in that journal that the Parnellites were allied with criminals they believed. When the Times published letters in Mr. Parnell's handwriting which showed that he was an accomplice of assassins, men who had been disposed to listen to him, and half disposed to support his plea for home rule in Ireland, turned against him, and voted with the Conservatives. Now that it is proved that the information given in the Times was false, and the letters forgeries, many prominent men feel that they were duped. Among them is Mr. Caine, a member of Parliament, who is a personal friend of Lord Hartington. He was so stirred by the articles in the Times that he published the whole series at his own expense, and circulated them among his constituents. Now he has publicly acknowledged his error in an open letter, in which he says that he cannot find language strong enough to express his horror at the foul conspiracy against Mr. Parnell, or his opinion of the conduct of the Times in lending itself to the printing of infamous libels on the flimsiest possible evidence of their supposed genuineness. It looks very much as if the articles in the Times would prove to be a boomerang.

BRIEF NOTES.

Pastor C. H. Spurgeon spent his period of retirement at Mentone in the preparation of a commentary on St. Matthew's gospel.

Dr. Pentecost has been holding meetings in Greenock, Scotland, where he addressed large congregations with most encouraging tokens of blessing.

Samuel Leonard Parsons, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who originated the Chinese Sunday-schools, died on February 13, aged seventy-three. He was a Congregationalist.

The Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church has appropriated $100,000 to the relief of superannuated ministers, widows, and orphans for the current year.

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, of New York, have arranged with Mr. H. M. Stanley for the exclusive publication of his personal narrative of the expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha.

Rev. George Alexander, D. D., pastor of the University Place Presbyterian Church, had the pleasure of dedicating his new Bethlehem Mission Church on February 14. It has cost $40,000 and is paid for.

Dr. W. S. Rainsford, of St. George's Church, New York, announces among those who will take part in the Friday evening services to be held through Lent, the Rev. Drs. Newman Symth, T. T. Munger, and Lyman Abbott.

Rev. M. Baxter has been giving prophetic discourses at Gateshead, England. Increasing interest in the study of unfulfilled prophecy has been manifested of late throughout the country, and Mrs. Baxter's interpretations are being widely discussed.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, Mass., has completed the twentieth year of his pastorate of the Clarendon Street Baptist Church. In recognition of the event his church presented him with $1,000, to be used for his missionary training-school or for any other of his numerous evangelistic enterprises.

Mr. E. P. Telford is conducting a three weeks' mission in Dr. Miller's M. E. Church, Haverhill, Mass. At the close of that work he has promised to work with Dr. Schauffer, in New York City, for a month, after which he will visit several churches who are seeking his services, and in the fall he expects to go South.

Eli Jones, the widely known Friend preacher and philanthropist, died in South China, Me., February 2, aged eighty-three years. He and his wife, Sybil Jones, began their missionary labors in 1840. After travelling all over this continent, their tours were extended to Liberia, England, Ireland, Norway, Germany, Switzerland, France, Spain, and the Holy Land.

Major George A. Hilton is laboring in the Temperance cause in Michigan. Testimonies of the valuable results of his work on the Pacific coast come from all the cities. The Pacific Express, of Portland, Oregon, says "one might hear temperance sentiment grow in the audience while he was speaking" there, and the results were seen in the enlistment of many new workers in the ranks.

Mr. D. L. Moody is giving a series of morning Bible addresses in the Collegiate Church, at Twenty-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue, New York, this week. The first of the series was given yesterday. They will be continued every day till Friday. Admission is by tickets, which may be obtained by sending a request, naming the day of desired attendance, in a stamped envelope to F. L. Bussing, No. 52 East Twenty-third St.

Dr. R. R. Meredith, pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., hopes to dedicate early in March an enormous Sunday-school Hall which is being erected on the lot next his church. It is a model building, affording abundant seating accommodation for 2,000 children. It will also be used for Dr. Meredith's Tuesday evening Sunday-school teacher's training class, which has grown to enormous proportions. The new building costs $80,000.

Bishop Walker, of North Dakota, has succeeded in raising the necessary funds for his gospel car. On February 19 he signed his contract with the Pullman Palace Car Company for a car with a seating capacity of eighty persons and supplied with a robing room, pulpit, and font. The car is to be of rich design, and is to be completed in fifty days. The Bishop, with his car, will now be able to conduct confirmation services with appropriate surroundings in the barren country where few churches exist.

LOVE'S COMPETITION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most? Simon answered and said, I suppose that he to whom he forgave most. And He said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged." Luke 7: 42, 43.

God's First and Last—I. The Presumption that Pardoned Sinners will Love—A Natural Result of Kindness—Napoleon Astonished on a Battle-field—The Obligation in this Case Infinite—The Holy Spirit Implants It—Many Strangely Unmoved—Various Signs of Love—II. Differences in Degree—How It Grows—Sincerity Essential—III. A Question Pounded—Interesting—Practical—Simple—IV. A Reply Expected—Five-Hundred-Pence Debtors—Foolish and Pernicious Boasting—How the Exceeding Love May be Shown.

I REMEMBER seeing, somewhere or other, as a sign upon an inn, the words "The First and Last." I do not know what that may happen to be among men, but I know that love is God's first and last. It is there that He begins with us in mercy—"We love Him, because He first loved us." His love at the first springs up like a fountain in the midst of a desert, and freely flows along the wilderness to the unworthy sons of men. In the end, the result of that love is that men love Him; they cannot help it any more than the rock can prevent the echo when the voice falls upon it. Love is not a creature of law: it comes not on demand, it must be free or not at all. Love is a duty certainly, but it does not come to us that way: it comes to us like a roe or a young hart, over every mountain and hill, leaping and bounding; it comes not as a heavy burden dragged along an iron way. If a man should give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be condemned.

A Spontaneous Emotion.

Men do not make themselves love by a course of calculation; but they are overtaken with it, and carried away by its power. When godly men consider and enjoy the great love of God to them, they begin to love God in return; just as the bud, when it feels the sunshine, opens to it of its own accord. Love to God is a sort of natural consequence which follows from a sight and sense of the love of God to us. I think it is Aristotle who says that it is impossible for a person to know that he is loved without feeling some degree of love in return. I do not know how that may be, for I am no philosopher; but I am sure that it is so with those who taste of the love of God. As love is the first blessing coming from God to us, so it is the last return from us to God; He comes to us loving, we go to Him loving.

I. I intend to keep to my text, and handle it red-hot, by first noticing that it is that pardoned sinners will love. "Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most?" It is implied that the two debtors who had been frankly forgiven would both love their benefactor. The question was not, "Which of them will love him?" but "Which of them will love him most?" So, then, I say, it is taken for granted in the text that those who are pardoned will love Him who has so freely pardoned them.

Taken for Granted

And this, first, because it seems most natural that where kindness is received gratitude should be felt. This is so generally admitted that gratitude is found among the lowest and worst of mankind. "If ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them." It is manlike to return good for good, and ingratitude is looked upon, most rightly, as one of the basest of vices. Why, we find gratitude not only in men and women—intelligent creatures—but we find it in the very beasts of the field! "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib." How a dog that has received benefits from you will be attached to you, and by every possible means will endeavor to show his affection! You remember that there is a picture in which Napoleon is represented as riding over the battle-field, and he stops his horse, as he sees a slain man with his favorite dog lying upon his bosom doing what he can to defend his poor dead master. Even the great man-slayer paused at such a sight. There is gratitude among the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air. And, surely, if we receive favors from God, and do not feel love to Him in return, we are worse than brute beasts.

But gratitude should surely arise when the benefit is surpassingly great. When favors are far above the common run of blessings—when these favors are not such as are confined to time and to the body, but when they reach to eternity and bless the soul; when favors are of such weight as the forgiveness of sin, the salvation of the soul from wrath to come; surely here love must spring up with the greatest force and freedom.

And moreover, not only is this natural and necessary, because of the greatness of the mercy, but the grace of God always takes care that love shall be ensured; for the Holy Spirit co-operates with the work of Christ, and if we are cleansed from the stain of our former evil through the blood of Christ, we are renewed and changed in the spirit of our minds by the Holy Spirit. He does not take away our sin, and then leave us that old heart of stone, insensible, ungrateful; but as He gives us a garment of righteousness He gives us a heart of flesh. The Spirit works in us a degree of love at the same time that He creates the first look of faith. Anon our faith increases by which we received remission, and then He works in us more and more that love to Christ by which we cling to Him. This love works in us hatred of sin and a spirit of obedience whereby we yield ourselves up to the service of Him who has bought us with His precious blood. You know that it is so, brethren.

Wherever Pardon is Given

Now I want to make a little practical use of this inference from the text. That pardoned souls love their pardoning God is a great truth, and a very solemn one in its bearings upon us at this time, for there are persons in this house of prayer who were never forgiven, and we are sure of that unhappy fact, since they do not love God. Their sins must be still upon them, because they have not the token of pardon, inasmuch as they have no love to Jesus Christ our Lord.

Oh, listen unto me, ye that do not love God, and yet, perhaps, dream that you are saved! Are there not some here that seldom think of God, who do not care if a day, a week, a month, a year, should pass over their heads, and yet they have no thought of the Almighty Judge of all the earth? They receive His mercies; but they do not thank Him. They feel His power; but they do not fear Him. "God is not in all their thoughts." O my hearer, if this be your case you do not love Him; for if we love any person we are sure to think of him.

Some men evidently do not love God, for they have no care about anything that concerns Him. They do not refrain from sin because sin would grieve God. The idea of grieving God, perhaps, has not crossed their minds; so they vex the Holy Spirit thoughtlessly. But if you love any one you you will not do the evil thing which he hates. He that loves God will often have a check put upon him, and feel that he cannot do this great wickedness and sin against God. To sin against God is the greatest of sin, and the essence of sin. The venom of sin lies there. This makes sin so exceedingly sinful, that it is against the God of love. But if you never felt that, then you do not love Him; and, for certain, you are not forgiven.

Will not Like to Cause Him Grief;

Look at others: they do not love God, for they do not care for His house where His people meet. They seldom come to the meeting for worship; and if they come, it is from some other motive than to meet with God. They do not care for His day. Sundays are very dreary in London, so they say. There is nothing to interest them, for they have no interest in the great Father, or his incarnate Son; they have no care to hear of Him, or to praise Him, or to pray to Him. They do not care for His Book, though it is a world of delights and comforts. The Bible is perfumed with the love of God, but they perceive not its fragrance. The Saviour's face is to be seen reflected in almost every page, and yet some think that the Bible is more dull than an old almanac; and though they must keep it in their house—for it is respectable to have a copy of it—yet to read it, and to read it with pleasure, why, that has never happened to them; nor is there any likelihood that it will, unless they get made anew.

Nor do they care for God's people. In fact, they like a quiet joke against Christian people; and sometimes, if they can see faults in them—and oh how readily they may!—they report those faults with considerable exaggerations, and feel pleased to eat up the faults of God's people as they eat bread! Want of love to the children argues want of love to their Father. "He that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him;" and we know that we love God when we love His children. But if in your heart there is no such love to His children, to His Book, to His day, to His house, or to His service, you may rest quite certain, my friend, that your guilt clings to you still.

II. But now, secondly, it is suggested in the text, that there are in the matter of love to God. "Tell me, which of them will love him most?" These words evidently show that some persons love God more than others, and that, albeit there must be a sincere love to God in all pardoned sinners, yet there is not the same degree of love. Love is evidently a grace which is not stereotyped, and cast in a mould, so as to be the same in every case, and at every time. Love is a thing of life: it is, therefore, a thing of growth. It is certainly so in our own selves. There was a time when we did not love God so much as we do now; and I grieve to say that there are even now times when we do not love God so much as we once did, for we grow cold and backsliding. Love is not like a piece of cast iron, fixed and set; but it grows, and has its times of budding, flowering, and leaf-shedding. It is like a fire; at one time it may burn low, and at another time it may be blown up to a very vehement heat. Love rises and falls: I speak not of God's love to us; but of our love to God. It has its ups and downs, its summers and its winters, its flood-tides and its ebbs; and if we find a change in love, in the same heart, we are not at all astonished that it differ in different hearts.

Differences of Degree

The practical point I would reach is just this: Let us look, first of all, to our love in its sincerity. What if my love may not be compared with yours as to degree? Yet the Lord grant that I may truly love Him. Peter could not say that he loved Christ more than others, but he did say, "Thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee." A little pearl is a pearl as much as a great one, though every one of us would sooner have the greater pearl. So, if love be real love, that is the main point. Do you love the Lord with all your heart? If so, strive to have more love, but do not fling away what you have, for you would thus despise what the Spirit of God has wrought in you.

Endeavor also, dear friends, to have growing love. Do not be satisfied to be to-day what you were twelve months ago. I am afraid that some Christians do not grow much. I am very glad when I see them when they are rooted in humility, when they have truer views of themselves than they ever yet had, and a deeper sense of their indebtedness to God. That is good growth. Try to have, however, a love that grows, so that you may more forcibly love Jesus Christ than you did in days that are past.

Grow Downward,

And if you have but little love at present, cry to God to give you an intenser love; and, though I have said that to use your love is a good way to increase it, yet there is something still better, and that is, to know more, and feel more of the love of Christ to you. In proportion as you live close to the glorious central sun of the love of Christ, you will yourself be warm.

III. Thirdly, the text puts to us

A Question,

"Who will love Him most?" I want to introduce the question to you by saying that it is a very interesting one. After what the Lord has done for us, one takes pleasure in thinking what will come of it. One likes to think of the farmer's harvest. After all that ploughing and sowing, what will come of it? It is interesting to begin to calculate the crop, and to anticipate the shouts of harvest-home. Now, what will come of infinite love, the supreme act of God's heart to men? What will come out of the gift of His only begotten Son, and the putting away of sin through the death of Jesus? What will men do for God after this? How much will they love Him? It is an interesting question. What have you to say upon it?

It is a practical question—"Which of them will love Him most?"—for everything in conduct depends upon love. Where there is much love, there is sure to be much service in proportion to the strength. Give us a church that loves Christ Jesus much. You will have mighty prayer-meetings; you will have a holy membership; you will have liberal giving to the cause of Christ; you will have hearty praising of His name; you will have careful walking before the world; you will have earnest endeavors for the conversion of sinners. Missions at home and abroad will be set on foot when love is fervent. When the heart is right, everything is likely to be right; but when the heart goes wrong, oh, what a fatal thing it is!

It is a very simple question, too, not at all hard to answer; for even this Simon, the Pharisee, who ke the rest of the Pharisees, was very badly instructed, yet, nevertheless, could see his way to answer the question correctly. So he answered, "I suppose that he to whom he forgave most;" and the Lord replied, "Thou hast rightly judged." Thus I have set before you the question.

A Reply Expected.

IV. And so, lastly, it is expected that we give a reply; and I do wish for myself—and therefore wish the same for you—that each one of us may say, "I am the man that ought to love the Lord Jesus most; and by His grace I will surely do so." The most indebted should love most. Have we not here many five-hundred-pence debtors? Some of my dear brethren here present were among outward sinners the very chief—men who could drink and wear and lie, ringleaders in everything that was evil. Blessed be God that such have been here led to Jesus! We heard the other night a dear brother tell us of what he used to be. With modesty and unfeignedness he mentioned how great his sin had been; but his sin was put away; he was pardoned, and he knew it, and rejoiced in it. Such a man must say, "I will love Him most." Where there has been overt sin, palpable, undeniable, here the outward character has been defiled and tainted with it, forgiveness involves us in deep obligation to grateful love. You may stand in the front rank, and love Jesus most.

But I am not going to let you rise to that eminence of obligation, or rather, sink to that depth of indebtedness without having a struggle for it myself. Some of us take that place of eminent obligation on another ground, and yet it is the same ground; for while some of us never were openly prone, or drunken, or immoral, we have to confess the equal greatness of our sin on account of our offending against light and knowledge, against early convictions, against a holy training, against a tender conscience, against singular favors received from God; and therefore with shame we begin to take the lowest room, acknowledging that to us belongs the greatest debt of grateful praise to God.

How is it that some who shout that they have been snatched from the burning, and according to their own statement were the very chief of sinners, and make a great trumpet-blowing over their own conversion, yet do not love the Lord Jesus one-half so much as these dear, quiet souls who never went into sin? I take it the reason is this: Our estimate of sin is, after all, the thing which will create and inflame our love; for if a man thinks sin to be exceedingly sinful, and feels it to be so, he has a deep sense of his indebtedness than the man who may have committed grosser vices, but has never seen them in their real blackness, as they appear in the light of God's countenance. Too many believers know little of what it is to be amazed and astounded at the heinousness of their transgressions. I am sorry to say it, but I believe that some make a glory of their shame, and dare to Brag of What They Used to be.

They stand up and make confession without a tear in their eye or a blush on their cheek. Such testimony ought never to be heard, for it is a positive creator of evil in the minds of those that hear it. I am sorry to have to say it; but I know that it is so. Testimonies are published which are provocatives to vice, and rather tend to make men immoral than to make them turn to God. In certain circles one is treated as a hero who can prove that he has been a great rascal. It was not thus that the prodigal was received by his father; he never hung up his old rags as a trophy. O brethren, when we talk about what we were, we had better veil our faces. Our former follies are things to be confessed to God in secret; and if they must be spoken in public, to the praise of divine grace, there must be a careful avoidance of anything like boasting, for it is a shame even to speak of the things that were done of them in secret.

And, dear friends, I believe that some whom God has preserved by preventing grace from going into great sin will, nevertheless, love Him most because they have a clearer view than others of what it cost in order that they might be pardoned. Happy are they who remember well the griefs of our Lord in the garden of Gethsemane.

"There's ne'er a gift His hand bestows

But cost His heart a groan."

For in proportion as you estimate the sacrifice you will love Him whose own self was the sacrifice for sin. Brethren, I hope you all love Christ Jesus more than I do; for I would have Him possess the highest love of every human heart; and yet I will not be willingly excelled by any one of you in a competition of love to Jesus. I will run my very best that no man take my crown.

But supposing, dear friends, any of you do love Him most, then show it, just as that woman did who brought the alabaster box of precious ointment. If you love Him most, do most. Do everything that is possible to humanity, quickened by the Spirit of God. Yet do somewhat distinctly for Jesus. It is a blessed token for good when our work among men is not so much for the sake of sinners as for love of Jesus. When we love the brethren, it should be because they belong to Christ. It is sweet to serve the Lord Christ Himself. See how the holy woman offered homage distinctly to her Lord: tears for His travel-stains, hair to wipe His feet, ointment to anoint His flesh. Do your choicest and best

For Jesus Personally.

Try to do it most humbly. Stand behind Him. Do not ask anybody to look at you. Do it very quietly. Do it feeling that it is a great honor to be permitted to do the least service for Jesus. Do not dream of saying, "I am somebody. I am doing great things. I do more even than Simon the Pharisee. Come see my zeal for the Lord of hosts." Jehu talked in that fashion; but he was good for nothing. Do your personal part without seeking to be seen of men.

Do it self-sacrificingly. Bring your best ointment. Pinch yourself for Christ. Make sacrifices—go without this and that to have something wherewith you can do Him honor. Never mind what the cold-hearted think, for they cannot understand you. They will say, "Ah! that young person is too fast by half." Never mind. Be faster still. Wise people cry out, "He has too many irons in the fire." But I say to you, blow up the fire; get all the irons red-hot; and hammer away with all your might. With all your strength and energy plunge into the service of your Master. If you love your Master, you can best show your love by ardent service. The Lord bless you with the utmost degree of love, for Jesus Christ's sake! Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Sad End of a Gifted Student.—"On Coming home one day I saw that my housekeeper had been weeping. 'What a wretched prodigal was here to-day,' she said. 'The sight of him was enough to make a poor body ill. He was in rags, his teeth were chattering with cold, and he could scarcely speak for yawning, for he had passed the night on a stair-head. He was perishing with hunger, and implored me to give him something to eat. He knew you well in your boyish days, he said, and he is coming back to-night.' The man proved to be Tom, an old fellow-student. He had excellent prospects. What a splendid horse and gig he drove! but now and again the horse seemed to be more sensible than his master; and now Tom had come to this! He was a helpless, destitute drunkard! His rags were changed for decent clothing, and I got him a good situation, but it was all of no use. The chains were too tight upon him. He could not break them, and he had no faith that God would help him to fight his enemy, and he sunk into a grave of darkness and everlasting dishonor."

Thanking God for Snakes.—The Rev. W. Haslam relates that a gentleman and his three sons, worldly people, went out from England to America to make money. They worked seven days a week, and said they could not afford to keep Sundays. The minister of the place tried in vain to induce them to attend church. One day there came one of the sons, named William, to his house in a great hurry. The poor boy was quite out of breath with running. "How goes the work?" asked the minister. "Oh," says the boy, "father says, will you come at once and see him? he is in great trouble." "Certainly," was the reply; and, putting on his hat, the minister returned with the boy. On the way, he asked, "What is the matter?" "Oh," said the boy, "my brother Richard has been bitten by a snake." "But what is the use of sending for me, then?" said the minister. "I cannot cure that." "Oh, but do come," cried the boy, "father is very anxious to see you." On arriving at the house, the minister said, "I am very sorry to hear of this dreadful accident; but what can I do for you?" "Oh," said the distracted father, "do come and pray with us." "Pray with you?" exclaimed the minister; "certainly I will. Let us pray." The father and his two sons knelt down, while the suffering boy remained on the sofa. The minister commenced his prayer by thanking God for making snakes, and particularly for that one which bit Richard. "Now, Lord, send another for John, and one for William, and a big one for the father, for nothing else brings them to their knees."

Two Fortunes Made and Lost.—An Evangelist said: "A friend of mine made a fortune, but soon lost it. Undaunted by his disaster, again he entered the world's arena, and again success crowned his efforts; but, alas, again misfortune dogged his steps and hurled him from the pinnacle of wealth to the depths of poverty. Even this second catastrophe did not dismay him, and to-day he is in a distant part of the world making his thousands, and for the third time building up a fortune. He had three opportunities of acquiring wealth, and seized them; but we cannot assure you of three opportunities of accepting salvation; we have only the warrant to say, 'now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation,' and if you do not come just now, we cannot assure you that the offer will be renewed to-morrow, and instead of being enriched with heavenly wealth as an heir of God, you may die morally and spiritually ruined."

Whiskey Too Much for the Doctor.—Rev. J. Wells said: "One afternoon I was walking down the quadrangle of the Edinburgh University, when a gifted student put his arm in mine. He was tipsy, and would have me go with him to the 'Pump.' He meant an adjoining saloon, which has helped to ruin scores of our Scotch students. 'I am an abstainer, and you ought to be one too,' I replied. He crossed the street to the 'Pump,' which maddens the thirst it promises to slake. He soon began to practice as a doctor, and two or three years afterward I saw the notice of his death in the newspapers. I asked a friend about the doctor's death. He only shook his head and said sadly, 'Whiskey.' And thus died poor Jim. His fast living turned out to be fast dying. As ye sow, so shall ye reap. If ye sow to the wind you will reap the whirlwind. The punishment may seem to tarry, but surely sin ever brings its own reward. There is no way of escape, except in Christ the Saviour."

A Valuable Two Minutes' Talk.—Mr. McLaughlan said: "The other day I was walking toward one of our railway stations, and at the Exchange I met a gentleman, who remarked to me, 'I was at your meeting last night, and I have not slept since with troubling myself about my soul's salvation.' 'I am glad to hear it,' I replied, 'and I hope you will not sleep again until you come to Christ.' 'That is just what I want,' he exclaimed, emphatically. I glanced at my watch, and saw I had only two minutes to spare, so coming to the point at once I said, 'Now, put out of your mind all the other people at the meeting last night, and do not think of me, but only of the message I brought, and come to Christ with that verse—'All we like sheep have gone astray. We have turned every one to his own way; but the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all.' I was obliged to leave him; but this was his testimony as I afterward heard it: 'I considered that verse, and very soon I rejoiced more than I can tell, for God had laid on Jesus Christ all my iniquities, and I knew I was free.' This gentleman is now an elder in the church, and actively engaged in helping others to get quit of their burden of sin."

The Martyr Surgeon of Marseilles.—"There is a monument in the city of Marseilles, and on it is this inscription: 'Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend.' The monument is in honor of Dr. Guyon, who died during a pestilence which had come upon the city, and which swept many people away, as large a number as seven thousand perishing in one week. The physicians, of whom there were eleven in the place, seemed powerless, and it became evident that if the plague were to be stayed, some means of obtaining a more intimate knowledge of it must be devised. The doctors held a consultation, and one of them, Dr. Guyon, said, 'What must be done is that one of us dissect the body of a man who has died of the plague, and write down the details of the disease, which will thus enable the others to combat it.' Then turning to the ten, he said, 'You are all married men, and cannot be spared as easily as I, who am single. I will take the first body that is brought in and dissect it.' He did so, and wrote down the results of his investigation; but he contracted the fell disease himself and died. The other doctors got his notes, and by their aid were enabled to stay the disease and save many lives.

The Harbor and Pier of Buenos Ayres, the Capital of the Argentine Republic.

How those who recovered afterward of the disease through the discoveries that Dr. Guyon made at the cost of his life must have honored him! But their debt was infinitely smaller than that owed to Christ by every one who, through His death, receives eternal life."

A MODERN EXORCISM.

By J. W.

(See S. S. Golden Text for March 9.)

It was a mild, bright Saturday in March. Sunshine everywhere—over the stately homes of the wealthy, and equally in the squalid quarters of the poor. But it seemed to shine with special brightness into a room of a pretty little dwelling-house in a retired street—the home of Margaret Winston.

Here Margaret lived with an invalid mother, and an elder sister, Alice, who was a teacher in the public school. Margaret's duties being the care of the mother, who, although almost helpless and needing constant attendance, yet was so patient, so loving, that far from feeling it a burden, it was the chief joy of Margaret's heart to serve and tend this dear mother. On Saturdays and Sundays, however, when the sister was free from her school, she claimed this privilege, and left Margaret at liberty.

On this Saturday morning Margaret arose with the feeling that in some way this was to be a day in her life different from any that had gone before, though at first she did not remember wherein this difference was to consist, but soon it all came back to her with a warm glad feeling at her heart.

On the previous Sunday she had openly confessed herself one of Christ's disciples, and resolved to do some special work for the dear Lord whom she loved. Her desire was to seek out five or six poor girls and form them into a class, and tell them of One who could make them happy and useful in this life, and she now set out with a prayer for guidance and success. At the same time, in a far different home, another young girl arose on this morning, but in her heart bitterness and anger and envy, with all their attendant evils, reigned supreme. She, too, had an invalid mother and one sister, little Katie, a bright, winsome child of seven. Agnes, the older girl, worked in a neighboring factory, but to her life was all drudgery; no loving thought ennobled her work, and before her dark spirit all joy fled from the heart and the life of the poor, timid little mother, and it even cast a shadow over the sunny face of little Katie. It was to this home Margaret Winston's steps were directed, as Katie was playing in the sunlight. Attracted by the lady's bright smile, Katie readily entered into conversation.

"No," she said, "I don't go to Sunday-school. Mamma is sick, and Agnes is cross, and I can't dress myself."

The mother, to whom Margaret then went, said: "I am willing to have Katie go; the child has little enough of pleasure."

Sunday morning Katie came, shy and happy, and was Miss Winston's only scholar, and out of the abundance of the love and joy in the teacher's heart she spoke to the little one, telling her of the beautiful home where Jesus lives, and of how He wanted

Katie to be good, kind to her mother and sister, and how He loved her.

Katie could talk of nothing else all through the following week, and the next Sunday she begged so earnestly that Agnes would accompany her, that she whose one tender point was her pride in and love for her little sister—half sullenly consented.

Margaret's heart leaped as she saw them enter, but she was too wise to do more than throw an added warmth of welcome into her greeting. She thought, with almost a sigh of disappointment, of the lesson for the day, wishing it had been one fuller of the Saviour's loving invitations. "What can I find in our lesson to reach and touch this embittered, gloomy soul?" she thought to herself. She repeated to herself the words of the golden text, "He cast out the spirits with His word, and healed all that were sick," and looking upon the sullen face before her, words not her own came to her lips. She spoke of One, tender, compassionate, all-powerful touched with the feeling of our infirmities and able with His word to cast out the evil spirit, whatever it may be that clouds our life; envy, pride, temper, intemperance, all are subject to Him if we but let Him work in us, and in their stead will come in love, joy, peace, rest.

Agnes went home apparently unmoved, but in her heart, like a refrain, the words repeated themselves, "He cast out the spirits with His word." With His word—the man possessed need not do it, could not do it; the spirits went not of their own accord, but He did it all. The words haunted her; she tried to but could not get away from them; all the evil in her nature seemed to arise to crush out the good seed. Katie, too, helped to keep alive the whole matter by again and again asking Agnes to hear how well she could say the text, until in despair Agnes once for all faced the question, and from the tortured heart the prayer went up, "Lord, cast out the spirit with thy word," and the Lord healed her.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Minister in the Johnstown Flood.*

THE day preceding the flood was Decoration Day. Although the sky was overcast and there was a slight rainfall occasionally, this Thursday upon the whole was rather pleasant. The citizens of Johnstown were out in their strength, and a large number of strangers were present from Altoona, Holidaysburgh, Wilmore, Ebensburg, Somerset, Latrobe, and other neighboring towns. The great concourse of people on the sidewalks, the long procession of soldiers and of various secret orders, the numerous bands of music, the display of flags and bunting along the principal streets, the strewing of flowers on the graves of deceased patriots, and Colonel W. D. Moore's eloquent oration, all contributed to make this a red-letter day for Johnstown.

*From Through the Johnstown Flood. By a survivor. A thrilling, truthful, and official history of the most appalling calamity of modern times, prepared in response to a request of the leading citizens of Johnstown, and many of the foremost men of the nation, by Rev. David J. Beale, D. D. With numerous portraits and illustrations. Pp. 418; published by Hubbard Brothers, Philadelphia.

After nightfall the clouds grew heavier, hanging nearer the earth, and at 9 o'clock a gentle drizzling rain set in, which after 11 o'clock was followed by an unprecedented outpour. In fact, there seemed to be a series of waterspouts during much of the night. Before morning the banks of both the Conemaugh and the Stony Creek were full, and the lower parts of the city were under water. . . . From 2 o'clock the water seemed to rise slowly, until ten minutes after 4, when the great avalanche rushed upon us. In a moment I heard a sound as of an approaching railroad train, when all at once the mighty torrent struck our residence. I cried, "Upstairs! up-stairs!" and when I saw all my family, and Mr. Lloyd and his sisters—neighbors who were with us at the time—safely in advance of me, I followed with the family Bible in my hand, pushed upward by the incoming water. The water was on the second story sooner than I was, and carried the hat-rack with such force as to strike me on the back, just as I reached the head of the stairs up to my waist in water. In a moment the family had rushed on to the attic, when a man was washed through a window beside me as if shot out of a catapult. He had been carried on a roof a mile and a quarter, and was dashed through the window into my second story as the roof, on which he had been borne, with a great shock struck the parsonage.

Soon we were all together on the third floor, and I had found the Forty-sixth Psalm, a part of which I read to our company, consisting of ten persons. Several of them wished to see and read the passage for themselves, which they did, as the Bible was passed around. The entire company engaged in ejaculatory prayer, and I also led them in prayer, renewing dedicating ourselves to God and our Saviour, expecting in a moment to be present with the Lord. . . . Soon the wreckage to the west of us began to move off, and our house began to shake and rock and sag in the middle. Captain Hart and Mr. Lloyd insisted that we were in immediate peril, as, in their judgment, the house was giving away. Finally, after some hurried conference and an unsuccessful attempt to get upon our own roof, we gained egress from our highest window upon a floating roof below. This was indeed a hazardous alternative. Seizing a rope at hand, let Captain Hart down first. He assured me that the roof was worthy, and then, in quick succession, all the occupants of the attic were passed out the window, and I followed them.

We had hoped to have reached the church, but we soon ascertained that an intervening space—fifty feet or more was entirely uncovered with the wreckage on which we hoped to have walked; as so we abandoned the attempt, and began a perilous journey to Alma Hall, the largest, strongest building in the city, of four very high stories, in a square distant, walking and jumping from one floating house or roof or box-car to another; at sometimes we were on opposite sides of roofs, and therefore, out of sight of each other; then, again, we were compelled to bridge over deep watery space with loose boards or planks. One of the you adies, when walking over piece of scantling, fell into the watery chasm, so that we could see nothing but her hair floating in the surface. She was rescued and pulled on some floating timbers, and just before dark we succeeded in reaching the wall. We found that very many from different parts of the city had sought refuge there before our arrival. Some of our number then went out on the wreckage, taking the rope brought from the parsonage, and succeeded in extricating a number who were either fastened in among the timbers, or were too much exhausted to help themselves.

Two hundred and sixty-four persons were in the hall, and at their request offered prayer, giving thanks to God for His gracious deliverance of those present, and seeking sustaining grace for the beleaguered ones. It was indeed a solemn and impressive occasion. In this service Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants, Africans and Chinamen, united. . . . It is doubtful if any one in that entire building on that awful night, the last of May, 1889, refused to pray to his Maker. One can scarcely conceive of an assembly convened under circumstances more affecting than those which massed us together on the floors of Alma Hall.

THE WHARF OF BUENOS AYRES.

(See illustration on page 140.)

THE progress in commercial enterprise which the Argentine Republic has made in recent times may be inferred from the picture here printed. Buenos Ayres, the capital of the country, is one of the busiest ports to the south of us, and its business is growing rapidly. Already its merchants are formidable competitors with those of the United States for the trade in provisions and breadstuffs in the markets of South America. Their exports of wheat, corn, and rye, alone, to Brazil and Great Britain, have now reached the total value of eight millions. Beside this the pampas can produce sugar, coffee, rice, and cotton. They also supply excellent grazing-ground for cattle. These advantages are now being well developed, and chiefly by settlers from the United States, who are making enormous fortunes.

Buenos Ayres is the Chicago of the nation. Five railroads have their termini there; twenty-one daily newspapers are published in the city; nine banks, with a capital of over a million dollars each, are doing a large business; and there are more telephones and electric lights in proportion to the population than in an American city. It is a singular, and to us a humiliating fact, that while the value of the imports from the United States which arrive in Buenos Ayres have increased during the past ten years by three million dollars, the imports from England have increased during the same period by twenty-two millions. The public-school system is well developed; seventy-two per cent. of the children of school age are enrolled, and the annual appropriation is over ten dollars per pupil, which is more than with us, and nearly double that of Germany. It includes not only free tuition, but all books and educational apparatus. The Argentine Republic promises to be one of the most progressive of our neighbors, whose friendship is worth cultivating.

MR. STANLEY AND HIS PARTY.

(See illustration.)

THE group of men represented in the accompanying picture are the most interesting men of our time. Stanley, the central figure, is beyond all question the hero of this generation. His latest achievement is the crown and culmination of all the triumphs of a heroic life. He has traversed lands unknown to white men, braving the perils of malarial lands, the perils of starvation, the perils of savage warfare, and has returned triumphant, bringing with him the men whom he undertook to rescue. Had England sent him instead of the vain-glorious Wolseley to rescue Gordon from Khartoum, the gallant Christian soldier might have been to-day in the land of the living, pursuing his work as a soldier of the Cross.

Mr. H. M. Stanley, Emin Pasha, Mr. Vizetelly, and Party.

Immediately behind Mr. Stanley in the picture, is Mr. E. Vizetelly, the emissary of the New York Herald, whom Mr. James Bennett sent out to meet Mr. Stanley, and to relieve the wants that the great explorer might be expected to experience after his long absence from civilization. It was fitting that Stanley should be relieved from that source. It was the proprietor of that great journal who first introduced Stanley to the world, recognizing in him the qualities which have since made him the admiration of all lands. In his extremity, Mr. Bennett sent him succor, as he had years ago sent Livingstone succor by Stanley's hands. Owing to the uncertainties of the route Stanley would take, the difficulty of meeting him was hugely increased, and Mr. Vizetelly was unable to deliver the welcome supplies so early as he had hoped; but Stanley must have been deeply touched by the kind intention of his friend and former employer.

Mr. Stanley has himself indicated the character which he hopes to have in history. "I feel," he said, in a recent speech, "as if the mantle of Dr. Livingstone had fallen upon me." The world hopes it has. To be the Elisha to such an Elijah is the greatest honor that could come to any man. Livingstone, however, was a missionary as well as an explorer. If Stanley would have a double portion of his spirit he must look for the blessing to the same source from which Elisha obtained the boon. God is as ready to grant it to the humble, earnest seeker as He was then.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 136.)

Another Band of Pioneers.

In previous chapters we have followed out the early history of the planting of New England with considerable minuteness. The first years of occupation of their chosen place of settlement were years of anxiety, apprehension, and suffering. It was a constant warfare against foes without and within. Famine stared them in the face; armed savages menaced them in the field; death stalked amid their ranks, and threatened their utter annihilation; and from within, their worst foes appeared among those on whom their only hope had seemed to depend. It was a struggle for life, wherein the most undaunted courage seemed hardly equal to the strife. But the Pilgrim Fathers were as the forlorn hope of liberty to the persecuted Nonconformists of England; and even when most fearful they yielded to no thought of retreat. There was the appointed place of conflict, and the only choice they seem ever to have placed before themselves was victory or death. It was with something of the calmness of the soldier on the battle-field that the survivors of the Mayflower Pilgrims committed their friends to the grave, on the bleak shores of Plymouth Bay, in that first dreadful winter of their landing. They had fallen the foremost in the strife, and their companions stepped into the breach.

Even before the death of King James I. the English Nonconformists were anxiously watching the success of the planters of New Plymouth, and so early as 1624 the Pilgrims found the deserted scene of Weston's colonial establishment re-occupied by a more congenial band of settlers. "The early history of Massachusetts," says Bancroft, "is the history of a class of men as remarkable for their qualities, and their influence on public happiness, as any by which the human race has ever been diversified. The settlement near Weymouth was revived; a new plantation was begun near Mount Wollaston, within the present limits of Quincy; and the merchants of the West continued their voyages to the islands of New England.

"But these things were of feeble influence compared with the consequences of the attempt at a permanent establishment near Cape Ann; for White, a minister of Dorchester, a Puritan, but not a Separatist, breathed into the enterprise a higher principle than that of the desire of gain. Roger Conant, having already left New Plymouth for Nantasket, through a brother in England, who was a friend of White, obtained the agency of the adventure. A year's experience proved to the company that their speculation must change its form, or it would produce no results; the merchants paid with honest liberality all the persons whom they had employed, and abandoned the unprofitable scheme. But Conant, a man of extraordinary vigor, 'inspired, as it were, by some superior instinct,' and confiding in the active friendship of White, succeeded in breathing a portion of his sublime courage into his three companions; and, making choice of Salem, as opening a convenient place of refuge for the exiles for religion, they resolved to remain as the sentinels of Puritanism on the Bay of Massachusetts.

"The design of a plantation was now ripening in the mind of White and his associates in the southwest of England. About the same time, some friends in Lincolnshire fell into discourse about New England; imagination swelled with the thought of planting the pure gospel among the quiet shades of America; it seemed better to depend on the benevolence of uncultivated nature and the care of Providence, than to endure the constraints of the English laws and the severities of the English hierarchy; and who could doubt that, at the voice of undefiled religion, the wilderness would change to a paradise for a people who lived under a bond with the omnipresent God? After some deliberation, persons in London and the West Country were made acquainted with the design.

"The council for New England, itself incapable of the generous purpose of planting colonies, was ever ready to make sale of patents, which had now become their only source of revenue. Little concerned even at making grants of territory which had already been purchased, they sold to Sir Henry Roswell, Sir John Young, Thomas Southcoat, John Humphrey, John Endicot, and Simon Whetcomb, gentlemen of Dorchester, a belt of land, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, extending three miles south of the River Charles and the Massachusetts Bay, and three miles north of every part of the river Merrimac. The zeal of White sought and soon found other and powerful associates in and about London, kindred spirits, men of religious fervor, uniting the emotions of enthusiasm with unbending perseverance in action—Winthrop, Dudley, Johnson, Eaton, Saltonstall, Bellingham, an eminent lawyer, famous in colonial annals, besides many others, men of fortune, and friends to colonial enterprise, who desired to establish a plantation of 'the best' of their countrymen on the shores of New England, in a safe seclusion, which the corruptions of human superstition might never invade. Three of the original purchasers parted with all their rights: Humphrey, Endicot, and Whetcomb retained an equal interest with the new partners.

"The company, already possessing the firmness of religious zeal and the resources of mercantile opulence, and having now acquired a title to an extensive territory, immediately prepared for the emigration of a colony; and Endicot—a man of dauntless courage, and that cheerfulness which accompanies courage; benevolent, though austere; firm, though choleric; of a rugged nature, which the sternest form of Puritanism had not served to mellow—was selected as 'a fit instrument to begin this wilderness work.' His wife and family were the companions of his voyage, the hostages of his fixed attachment to the New World. His immediate attendants, and those whom the company sent over the same year, in all not far from one hundred in number, were welcomed by Conant and his faithful associates to gloomy forests and unsubdued fields. Yet, even then, the spirit of enterprise predominated over the melancholy which is impressed upon nature in its savage state; and seven or more threaded a path through the woods to the neck of land which is now Charlestown. English courage had preceded them; they found there one English hovel already tenanted.

"When the news reached London of the safe arrival of the emigrants, the number of the adventurers had already been much enlarged. The 'Boston men' next lent their strength to the company; and the Puritans throughout England began to take an interest in the efforts which invited the imagination to indulge in delightful visions. Interest was also made to obtain a royal charter, with the aid of Bellingham, and of White, an eminent lawyer, who advocated the design. The Earl of Warwick had always been the friend of the company; Gorges had seemed to favor its advancement; and Lord Dorchester, then one of the Secretaries of State, is said to have exerted a powerful influence in its behalf. At last, after much labor and large expenditures, the patent for the Company of the Massachusetts Bay passed the seals; a few days only before Charles I, in a public state-paper, avowed his design of governing without a Parliament."

Here we find the elements of a more rapid and extensive colonization than that of the exiled church of Leyden in Plymouth Bay. Charles I. and Laud, with his Star Chamber and High Commission Court, were most effectual agents in carrying out this scheme. By such means many of the noblest and worthiest among the people of England were selected and sent out to plant religion and free institutions on the shores of New England. Happily the history of the country proves that many more, noble and worthy, tarried behind to establish the same in their native land.

The new settlements in Massachusetts Bay date from the very commencement of Charles's reign. Hope long deferred was waxing dim in the hearts of earnest men in England, and some of her well-wishers had already despaired. Roger Conant and a few zealous associates had proceeded to New England in 1625. It might be wondered why, while they were still few in number, the religious emigrants from England did not seek shelter within the hospitable refuge of Plymouth settlement. But already the harsh spirit of religious persecution was forcing into premature growth many forms of diversity in the opinions of Christian men, and the victims of intolerance did not always learn by their sufferings to practice toleration and grant liberty of conscience to others.

"The settlers at Massachusetts Bay," says Price in his History of Nonconformity, "were distinguished from those at Plymouth by some shades of theological opinion. The latter were Independents, who had separated from the Church of England, and conducted divine worship in harmony with their own views; but the former, for the most part, belonged to the more moderate class of Nonconformists, who, without seceding from the communion of the Hierarchy, acknowledged its corruptions, and earnestly sought its reform. Before their departure for America they drew up a letter, addressed 'to the rest of their brethren in and of the Church of England,' wherein they say, 'We desire you would be pleased to take notice of the principals and body of our company, as those who esteem it our honor to call the Church of England, from whence we arise, our dear mother; and cannot part from our native country, where she specially resideth, without much sadness of heart, and many tears in our eyes; ever acknowledging that such hope and part as we have obtained in the common salvation we have received in her bosom, and sucked it from her breasts. We leave it not, therefore, as loathing that milk wherewith we were nourished, but, blessing God for the parentage and education, as members of the same body, shall always rejoice in her good, and unfeignedly grieve for any sorrow that shall ever betide her; and, while we have breath, sincerely desire and endeavor the continuance and abundance of her welfare, with the enlargement of her bounds in the kingdom of Christ Jesus.'

"The settlement of their ecclesiastical polity engaged their earliest attention. The main principles which it embraced were precisely similar to those now held by the Congregational and Baptist Churches; but the following article, which was also adopted, betrayed their imperfect acquaintance with the rights of conscience, and led to acts of persecution which disgraced their early history. It is thus expressed by Hubbard, 'Church government and civil government may very well stand together, it being the duty of the Magistrate to take care of matters of religion, and to improve his civil authority for the observing the duties commanded in the first as well as in the second table; seeing the end of their office is not only the quiet and peaceful life of the subject, in matters of righteousness and honesty, but also in matters of godliness.' There is more truth in these latter conclusions of the historian of Protestant Nonconformity than in the first; for certainly the early history of New England will lead few indeed to assign to the colonists of Massachusetts the palm of moderation when compared with the Pilgrim Fathers of Plymouth.

The history of the settlement of Massachusetts by the Puritan Pilgrims of Charles I. reign is scarcely less interesting than that of their predecessors in Plymouth Bay. Both were of the same class. Both had been driven forth from their native country by the intolerable burdens of enforced conformity, and both sought, in the colonial possessions of England, to enjoy liberty of conscience without the sense of exile and banishment, which even prosperity cannot efface from the forced resident in a foreign land. It is not to be wondered at that the same degree of harmony and mutual agreement on all the thorny questions of polemic controversy which prevailed in the little settlement of Plymouth, was not always found among the Puritan settlers that occupied the broad lands of Massachusetts. The exiles who escaped from England to Holland were winnowed and sifted again and again, ere the passengers of the Mayflower effected a landing in the New World. At Amsterdam some were left behind, more tarried at Leyden, and even of those who proceeded to England in the Speedwell the faint-hearted and faithless abandoned the enterprise when successive disappointments had allowed their early hope and enthusiasm to give way at the chill touch of experience.

It was very different, however, with those who fled from the systematic persecutions of Laud, and the intolerant High Commission Court and Star Chamber of Charles I. There was no time for sitting then; happily for them, too, less need of it than before. The Pilgrim Fathers had led the way. The wilderness had been proved to be a safe and sure refuge for the persecuted sufferers for conscience' sake, and now hundreds crowded from their native shores, without waiting for the personal experience of the wrongs they saw inflicted on their brethren, longing to breathe the free air of these distant wilds, where no bigot king or merciless zealot strove to constrain the soul within the straitened bonds of established formulas.

All wanted liberty for themselves, but unhappily all were not prepared to exercise toleration, or extend the same liberty to others. Even at the first difficulties arose from this source. Yet why should we wonder that such was the case? The principles on which mutual toleration finds its true basis were then unknown. Even in the Commonwealth, which bold spirits soon after established for a time in England, it was only a small minority, with England's great Protector at their head, who battled for equal privileges and the like liberty to all.

True, indeed, both the Pilgrims of Plymouth and the Puritan settlers of Massachusetts, were even more intolerant of the Service Book and observances of the Church of England than the Puritan rulers of the Commonwealth, but the dictates of sound policy may plead an abundant excuse for this.

It was impossible for Prelacy and Puritanism to live amicably together under the counsels of Laud and the Government of Charles I. The refugees of New England had no choice but to banish or to be banished; to root out the green shoots of emigrant prelacy, or to let it grow until it added to the trials and privations of these planters in the wilderness, the very restraints to escape which all these lesser evils had been braved.

The name of the Rev. John White merits a prominent place among those who fostered the first New England colonies and promoted the work of emigration among the suffering Puritans. He was minister of Dorchester, a borough and market-town in the county of Dorset, a district of England which has borne a prominent share both in the glory and the sufferings of the nation's struggles for liberty. It was the scene of some of the fiercest contests between the forces of the Parliament and the King during the great civil war; and when the despotic bigotry of Charles's infatuated son, James, had driven thousands to peril their fate under the questionable leadership of Monmouth, Dorset was one of the chief scenes of Judge Jeffries's bloody assizes.

Doubtless the zealous administration of such a teacher as John White helped in no slight degree to sow the seed which bore such vigorous fruit. The attention of White was early attracted, and his interest excited, by the settlement effected at Plymouth in New England, and he devoted himself with unwearied zeal to establish similar Christian communities along the unoccupied shores of the New World.

The first settlement at Salem was an offshoot from the Pilgrims' colony at Plymouth Bay. When Roger Conant led forth his little company of hardy adventurers to Cape Ann, and then to Salem; and, disheartened by the perils that surrounded them, all but three of his companions abandoned what seemed to be a desperate project, Mr. White wrote to these last lingerers amid the wreck of many hopes entreating them not to desert the settlement, and promising speedily to reinforce their numbers, and furnish them with supplies of provisions and other requisites from England.

The indefatigable minister of Dorchester amply fulfilled his promises to Conant and his faithful adherents. It was in 1628, only seven years after the sailing of the Mayflower that the Council of Plymouth, as the English company was termed, sold to the six gentlemen of Dorchester the vast tract of land stretching across the vast continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. Mr. White was unwearied in his exertions for furthering this noble scheme of establishing Christian communities, governed by free institutions, amid the uncultivated wilds of America. Chiefly by his exertions, a numerous body of zealous Christian men from his own neighborhood were induced to unite themselves with the original purchasers of the unoccupied tract of land; and among these were men of large fortune and high rank, and distinguished no less by an earnest zeal for spiritual religion, and for the liberty of conscience denied to them by the haughty rulers of England.

Thus constituted, the colonists of Massachusetts were far more fortunately situated than the first Pilgrim Fathers, who had to contend with mercenary greed, envious rivalry, and the overreaching exactions of unfriendly speculators. They immediately began the work of emigration. Mr. John Endicot, one of the six original purchasers, was the leader of the company of colonists who left England to reinforce the forlorn band that still maintained their uncertain footing at the settlement of Salem. That same year an exploring party set out to examine the character of the neighboring country chartered to them by the Council of Plymouth. To their surprise and delight, they discovered at a distance of about twelve miles from Salem, a cottage (the same which the historian of the United States designates an English hovel), where a countryman of their own had already won the favor of the Indians by his skill in working metals.

The locality seemed favorable for settlement, and the ability of their countryman was scarcely less valuable to them than to the wild Indians. A body of the colonists established themselves around the forge of Thomas Walford, the English blacksmith, and with the old patriotic feeling, which no wrongs or sufferings can altogether eradicate, they named their new settlement 'Charlestown, in honor of the King whose severities had driven them from the land of their fathers.

(To be Continued.)

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which envelops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption alone, for scrofula combines the worst features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, and very few persons are entirely free from it. How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressing needs, and can be mailed to the address of SHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

PRIMPET PEALS.

Collection of Timely and Eloquent Extracts

From the Sermons of the
REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.
Collected and classified by Rev. C. L. Wood, with the consent of the author. Pages, besides very copious indexes for reference of the best and most popular of Doctor's writings. Containing also a Portrait of Dr. Talmage, an elegant view of the New Brooklyn Tabernacle being built; also the Doctor's letter from Syria, with account of the baptism in the river Jordan, and other particulars. Sold by subscription only. A lady or gentleman wanted in every city or town tract as sent. Liberal inducements. Application could be made immediately. For particulars apply to the publishers,

BROMFIELD & CO.,
658 Broadway, New York.

THE HOLY LAND.

EGYPT and the HOLY LAND, including JERUSALEM, BETHLEHEM, DEFESE, RAM, GALLILEE, AZAZEL, HEBRON, YERUSA, CONSTANTINOPLE, ATHENS,

A select party has been organized with the object of visiting the above mentioned places, and will leave by the S. S. NOORDLAND, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26th.

This affords a splendid opportunity for persons wishing to visit the Holy Land, and afterwards spend the winter months in Europe at a very moderate cost. For information apply to Rev. R. B. HULL, Brooklyn, N. Y., 1005 COOK & SON, 261 Broadway, N. Y.

ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE PROGRAMMES OF EUROPEAN and ROUND THE WORLD TOURS CAN BE OBTAINED ON APPLICATION AT ANY OFFICE OF THOS. COOK & SON.

OLY LAND PARTY
March 19, per "City of Paris."
$520.

Bring Parties to Europe. Send for pamphlet, "Tourist Gazette," 5 cents. HENRY GAZE, 90, Sole Passenger Agents for the New Line S. S. Co., 90 Broadway, New York. Established 1844.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.—A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full particulars, call on M. G. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

5.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons prepared to furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities.
R. JOHNSON & CO., 109 Main St., Richmond, Va.

A FEW DROPS OF BOVININE TAKEN EVERY HOUR IN THE PATIENT'S STRENGTH WHILE DIETING IN SEVERE CASES OF TYPHOID FEVER
BOVININE is indispensable in all cases of typhoid fever, especially during convalescence. The active principles of Beef concentrated contained in BOVININE acts as a simple and effective nourishment, and is retained by the most irritable stomach, and will sustain life when all other nutrients fail.

THE "OSTRICH PLUME" CHRYSANTHEMUM
(Mrs. Alpheus Hardy).
PETER HENDERSON & CO. NEW YORK

The Dingee & Conard Co's ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, BULBS and SEEDS.
Largest Rose Growers in America.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., ROSE GROWERS and SEEDSMEN, West Grove, Pa.

BURPEE'S GEM COLLECTION FOR 1890
Contains one regular size packet each of the fragrant Little Gem Sweet Alyssum, the rare and lovely blue Torenia Fournieri, the gorgeous new Shirley Poppies, many varieties mixed of Choice Double Asters, the unequalled strain of Burpee's Superb Camellia-Flowered Balsams, the Finest Mixed Chinese and Japanese Pinks, Extra fine Mixed New and Beautiful Ipomoeas, Choice Mixed Pansies, Fordhook strain of Superfine Petunia Hybrids, and twelve grand New Sweet Peas Mixed, in all TEN VARIETIES Best new and popular. 25 Cents, or 5 Gem Col. Annuals for $1.
Try to get up a Club. Illustration and directions for growing printed on each packet. Purchased separately at retail, the ten packets in our 25cent Gem Collection would cost 85 cts., and this Special Offer is made to induce all to
TRY BURPEE'S SEEDS.
ORDER NOW and ask for a Handsomely Illustrated CATALOGUE
—mailed FREE—of all the
including Rare NOVELTIES of unusual merit.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.

SEEDS.

My Annual PRICED CATALOGUE is now ready and mailed free to all applicants. It contains all the leading and most popular sorts of VEGETABLE, FARM AND FLOWER SEEDS. Besides all the desirable novelties of last season, and nearly every thing else in my line of business.

ALFRED BRIDGEMAN,
37 East 19th St., New York City.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

RIDGE'S ELASTIC TRUSS
The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but especially prepared Food, adapted to the

SCOTT'S EMULSION

of pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda is almost as palatable as milk. Children enjoy it rather than otherwise. A MARVELLOUS FLESH PRODUCER. It is indeed, and the little lads and lassies who take cold easily, may be fortified against a cough that might prove serious, by taking Scott's Emulsion after their meals during the winter season. Beware of substitutions and imitations.

3rd Edition Just Published.
Mr. Spurgeon's New Book.
WITH A PAGE OF PRECIOUS PROMISES FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR.

THE CHEQUE BOOK of the BANK OF FAITH. BEING PRECIOUS PROMISES ARRANGED FOR DAILY USE With Brief Experimental Comments. Nearly 400 pages. 12mo. Price $1.50.
In Mr. Spurgeon's Preface he says: "I believe all the promises of God,—but many of them I have personally tried and proved, I have seen that they are true, for they have been fulfilled to me. I remember these daily portions when I was wading in the Surf of controversy. Since then I have been cast into 'waters to swim,' which, but for God's upholding hand, would have proved waters to drown in. The waters rolled in continually, wave upon wave. I do not mention this to exact sympathy, but simply to let the reader see that I am no dry-land sailor—I know the roll of the billows, and the rush of the winds. Never were the promises of Jehovah so precious to me as at this hour."

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

Gathering Jewels;

OR,
The Secret of a Beautiful Life.
A splendid book, bound in cloth and gold. Illustrated.

BISHOP VINCENT says: "In 'Gathering Jewels' the story is well told; the subject, which a gracious Providence furnished, is unusually rich and prolific of evangelical facts and teachings. The book should go into thousands of homes."

New York Witness says: "The material for this volume teems with spiritual food for reflection, and is calculated to inspire many to the work of saving souls. It illustrates the power of prayer, and shows that the sweetest contentment may be found in 'gathering jewels' for the heavenly kingdom that may 'shine in His glory, bright for His crown.'"

This book has been strongly endorsed by The Christian Herald, having republished two full columns from its pages in its issue of Aug. 2d, 1888.

Send a paper Dollar or stamps at our risk, and we will send you a book post-paid.

A celebrated Van Everen adjustable book cover free with each book if requested.

CHRISTIAN NATION, Publishers,
252 Broadway, New York.

ALL THIS for $1.50

An Ice Cream Freezer, (the best in the world.) A Keystone Culinary Beater and Mixer for making cake, bread, etc., etc., whipping cream, eggs, etc., and a thousand other things. A 50c. Cook Book.
PAINE, DIEHL & CO., PHILAD'A, PA.

For a DISORDERED LIVER Try BEECHAM'S PILLS. 25cts. a Box. OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

SHORTHAND. Private instruction by practical verbatim reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

CHRIST WITHIN.

Why wouldst thou teach my soul to rise,
And seek for Jesus in the skies?
Is He so far apart?
Are skies a better dwelling place
Than man's celestial heart and face
Made pure and bright with heavenly grace?
Oh! find Him in thy heart.

Why wouldst thou teach my thirsty soul
To wait till death shall make it whole?
Is Christ so far away?
Oh no! I see Him now and near,
His throbbing life, His word of cheer,
He turns my night to day.

Then cease thy looking here and there,
And first of all thy heart prepare
By purity from sin;
And then lit up with Heaven's bright glow,
Thy soul of truth and love shall know
That Heaven above is Heaven below,
And Christ is found within.

—Prof. T. C. Upham.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The only true method of reaching catarrh is through the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by purifying the blood, removes the cause of the disease and permanently cures catarrh.

The U. S. Navy desiring to buy twenty moderately priced watches, invited the leading American manufacturers to send watches for trial and rating at the Naval Observatory, in October and November last. One hundred and thirty-eight watches of different makes were sent in. It has been officially announced that a Seth Thomas Watch stood first in the trial and the Seth Thomas Watches averaged the best.

Two Favorite Books of Religious Reading.

Counsel and Comfort for Daily Life.

16mo, cloth binding, full gilt edges. Price reduced from $1.00 to 75 cents.

Hopeful Words for the Sick & Suffering

In binding to match the above volume. Reduced from $1.00 to 75 cents.

These new and cheaper editions of two favorites will find a welcome in many thousand more homes.
They contain gems in prose and poetry of a deeply spiritual character, some of the best in literature.
The volumes are printed in clear type, and being handy to hold, they quickly become favorites among helps to religious living.

*Copies sent post-paid on receipt of price. The two sent post-paid for $1.25.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

An Artistic Novelty for Children.

YOUNG AMER-ICA'S PAINTING
BOOK. 32 colored studies and 32 outline copies, printed on hard paper. 4to
varnished cover. 50
cents.

THE PALETTE
PAINTING
BOOK. Consisting of a series of charming designs for coloring, with some colored examples and hints on mixing colors, etc.; in the form of a painter's palette.
Handsome litho-
graphed cover, 4to,
50 cents.

*Delightful for any child, but would be specially welcome to convalescent little ones.—The Public Ledger, Phila.

*Of all booksellers, or, free by mail, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

F. WARNE & CO., 3 Cooper Union, N. Y.

"Dirt in the house builds the highway to beggary."
Be wise in time and use

SAPOLIO.

It is a solid cake of Scouring Soap. Try it in your next house-cleaning.

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of
Send for new books. Shot at Sunday
Targets, by 1000
$2.50 Quick sales, big
pay. Also, Mother,
Home & Heaven,
400 best authors. Edited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75.
192,000 sold. 500
Copies of the above
Catalogue of Books sent free on application.

A Century of Talking Is not worth a Minute's Proof Pyle's Pearline

It don't take many minutes to prove that will wash clothes, will clean house—will do it well—will save you time; labor; wear and tear; will reduce drudgery; will not hurt your hands; your clothes or paint, and besides will cost you no more than common bar soap. One honest trial will prove all that. Why not accept the testimony of the millions who use it, as proof of its virtue. Among your friends you'll find those who have used Pearline for years—ask them—they will tell you "can't do without it."

Beware Pearline is the original Washing Compound—used by millions, but imitated by thousands who peddle their stuff or give worthless prizes. Pearline is never peddled, but sold by all grocers.
Manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

NEW CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

FOR 50 CENTS we will mail one good strong plant each of the NEW CHRYS-ANTHEMUMS: MRS. ALPHEUS
HARDY, a wonderful novelty, with pure white flowers formed into an almost perfect ball, covered with long fine hairs; KIOTO, the best incurved, yellow; LILLIAN BIRD, the finest new pink, and THE BRIDE, the new fringed white—FOUR PLANTS in all—sent post paid, FOR ONLY 50 CENTS. These four sorts could not be purchased last year anywhere for less than $4.25, and it is without exception the grandest offer ever made.

ORCHID WATER LILY.

ORDER NOW. For $1.00 we will mail one good, strong plant each of the four New Chrysanthemums, Orchid Water Lily, Dewdrop Begonia, and also one packet each of the Giant Spider Plant and Scott's Mammoth Belgian Pansies. We also offer for 30 cts. 12 pkts of the choicest Flower Seeds, or any of the following for 50 cts. each: 7 ever blooming Roses, or 8 choice Chrysanthemums, or 7 assorted plants, or 6 splendid hardy shrubs, or 12 beautiful named Gladiolus. In ordering mention this paper and ask for SCOTT'S CATALOGUE FOR 1890., fully illustrated, embracing "THE BEST FLOWERS" and is mailed FREE to any address.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, 19th & CATHARINE STS., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The Great Church Light.
FRINK'S Patent Reflectors give the Most Powerful, the Softest, Cheapest and the Best Light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Parlors, Banks, Offices, Picture Galleries, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches and the trade. L. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl Street, N. Y.

"QUITTING THE MANSE,"

A master-piece of the heroic steel engrav-
ings of the century.

This engraving is intended to commemorate an incident in the Disruption of the Scottish Church in 1843, when nearly 500 ministers resigned their stipends, manse, social positions, and what men most tendently regard, for conscience sake, in what they esteemed the cause of truth. Just published, 16x23 1/2 inches. Sent securely wrapped, post paid, for a paper
dollar or stamps, at our risk.
Mrs. Jane B. Clark, Rochester, N. Y. writes: "The picture is a splendid piece of high art."
CHRISTIAN NATION,
321 Broadway, New York.

IF YOU WANT AN
"OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE,
OR BAGSTER BIBLE,
send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

PLAYS! Speakers: Dialogues: Books of Games,
Shorts and Amusements, Charades, Tableaux, etc. Catalogue sent free on application to
THE DEWITT PUBLISHING HOUSE,
31 Doss Street, New York.

SPRING STYLES IN DRESS GOODS.

Novelties in Wool Dress Fabrics are now ready. Bouclette Plaids and Mixtures with plain goods to match;
Cheviot and Tweed Suitings in irregular checks and stripes; Cameletta, a new twilled fabric in street shades, made for combination with fancy cloths in various novel devices. These goods will be found very reasonable in price.

James McCreery & Co
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

Extract from a letter by Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.
"Be sure you buy a genuine unabridged Cruden, and none of the modern substitutes, good as they may be at the price.
You need only one; have none but the best."

Cruden's Complete Concordance

To the Old and New Testaments and the Apocrypha.

Edited by WILLIAM YOUNGMAN.
"We have just issued what we consider the best and cheapest edition in the World of Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Bible, type new and readable; contains the Apocrypha; alphabetical list of the Proper Names in the Old and New Testament, with their meaning or signification in their original languages; a concordance to the Proper Names; a summary of the contents of the Holy Bible, and also a complete summary of the contents of all the chapters of the New Testament. More references and more supplementary matter of great value than any other popular concordance. In royal 8vo. cloth, gilt, price $1.50; (weighs three pounds.)

SPECIAL OFFER FOR A SHORT TIME.
The postage alone on this book costs 25 cents, but on receipt of One dollar and twenty-five cents, we will mail you a copy, postage free, if you mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.,
3 Cooper Union, 4th Avenue, New York.

PIANOS

$150 to $1500

UNIVERSITY

ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. 1877

PRICE

$180

Sold Direct to families. No Middlemen.

They Lead the World!

Sent for trial in your own home.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT

Guaranteed Six Years.

35

DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!

Cat. Free.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.

235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

ORGANS

$35 to $500

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad

Absorbs all impurities from the blood.
Invigorates and vitalizes the whole system.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad

Cures Biliousness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Diarrhoea, Malaria, Sick Headache,
Rheumatism, &c.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad

Regulates the Stomach and Bowels, improves the Appetite, corrects Assimilation, and beautifies the Complexion.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad

Prevents Sea sickness, Cholera, Smallpox, Yellow Typhus, Typhoid and Bilious Fevers.

All druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $2.00.
HOLMAN LIVER PAD CO.
Box 2112. 81 John St., N. Y.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfe
Tea. A TRIAL ORDER
34 pounds of Fine Tea, with Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpo
der, Young Hyson, Mixed, English
Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, se by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be a ticular and state what kind of T you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baki Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

RUPTURE CURE!

with our Improved Elastic Truss worn with es night and day, retains the rupture under the harde exercise or severest strain. Send for pamphlet.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York

WANTED

Agents in every town and city to s
"The Christian's Legacy."
One young man started on the 18th of Decem and ordered 50 copies before the 31st of Decem
102 copies sold in one month. W. J. GULLA
New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington
 EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 10. Office, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE DR. NATHAN M. ADLER, Chief Rabbi of English-Speaking Jews.
REVISION OF CREEDS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.
 An Infidel at Absalom's Grave—A Nail in an Oak—A State Murder—Building Under Difficulties—The Effect of the Book—The Poet and the Preacher—A Legislator's Service—A Man of One Book.
THE COMING THEOCRACY. By the Late Rev. J. Denham Smith.
 Gems from New Books: Two Cases of Delirium Tremens—Varied Travelling Companions in the Yosemite.
THE DRAUGHT OF FISHES. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
CURRENT EVENTS: The World's Fair—The Mother of Free Libraries—Dr. Phillips Brooks's Lenten Sermons—The Arizona Disaster—The Best Way of Dealing with the Indians—Another Alien Clergyman Excluded, Etc.
THE TWO HEAVENS. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
PORTRAIT OF THE IMPRISONED ORLEANS PRINCE.
PICTURE OF ABYSSINIAN PRIESTS CHANTING A TE DEUM.
A FISHER OF MEN. A Story of the S. S. Golden Text. (With Illustration.)
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: Their Perils, Pains, and Privations. (Con'd.)

THE LATE REV. DR. ADLER, CHIEF RABBI.

SERVICE IN THE CHAPEL, WILLESDEN

SPECIAL SERVICE IN THE GREAT SYNAGOGUE, ST. JAMES'S PLACE, ALDGATE.

SCENE AT THE GRAVE.

The Late Dr. Nathan Marcus Adler, Chief Rabbi of English-Speaking Jews—Scenes at His Obsequies.

THE LATE DR. NATHAN ADLER.

Chief Rabbi of the English-Speaking Jews.

A Unique Priest and People—Aaronic Descent—Universally Respected—Birth in Hanover in 1802—Becomes Chief Rabbi of Hanover—Appointed Chief Rabbi of English-Speaking Jews in 1845—His Early Polemical Controversy—Later Years of Retirement—Literary and Theological Works—An Interesting Funeral—A Pillow of Earth from Palestine—His Interest in Theological Education.

IN almost every country there were men on whom the news of the death of Dr. Nathan Marcus Adler fell with the sense of personal bereavement. Yet no nation was, as a whole, concerned about his death or felt that, as a nation, it had suffered loss. The event brings vividly before us a strange, indeed an unparalleled, aspect of human life. Here, among ourselves, across the Atlantic in England, far away in Australia, large numbers of men and women looked to Dr. Adler with veneration, not only on account of his personal qualities, but on account of his official position, and in every country on the globe are a few men who, on account of nationality and the language they speak, were moved by the news of his death, when it reached them in the land of their sojourn.

These men as they go about their business are men of like feelings, emotions, and pursuits with their fellows, yet separated from them, and united to each other by reason of a strong race power. A people scattered and peeled, enormously wealthy, yet holding themselves loose from the ties of country; carefully abstaining from all interests and investments that would render difficult a sudden removal from the land of their present sojourn. A people delighting in portable property, possessing but few houses or lands, yet rich in money, bonds, stocks, and jewels. A people without a home or a government; adapting themselves to the conditions of life and yielding obedience to the Government of any land in which they locate themselves. Unassimilated, yet with strong affections and friendships, peaceable, law-abiding, intelligent, they are a race unique among all the races of the earth. It was of the English-speaking portion of this race that Dr. Adler was the recognized head. To his words they gave ready heed, and to his declaration in all questions of morals and religious doctrine they rendered profound respect.

The Jewish High Priest,

so far as the present condition of the Jewish race admits of a survival of that office, was Dr. Adler, yet with no Urim and Thummim, no gorgeous ritual, no magnificent temple. Looking sorrowfully back to past glories, looking hopefully forward to future glories, patiently enduring the chastisement of Jehovah, and unable to perceive its cause, Dr. Adler, as the head of his race, must have felt a heavy responsibility, as he was conscious that much of guidance and direction lay within his power, and, as he thought of his people, must have been moved by mingled feelings of pride and humiliation. The secret of their condition is by this time known to him, and he realizes the terrible import of the words uttered by his predecessors as they surrounded that meek, inoffensive martyr long ago, "His blood be upon us and upon our children."

A Descendant of Aaron

Dr. Adler was believed to be; but it was not for him to lead his people to the promised land, nor to have the visible endorsement of his God. A man of great learning, eminent and commanding abilities, and high moral character, he enjoyed the respect of all who knew him, even of those who were not of his faith. The student of prophecy, knowing how grand and influential is the future of the Jewish race, cannot but be deeply interested in the man who was its acknowledged leader, and will like to know who and what he was.

Nathan Marcus Adler was born in Hanover in 1802, and was therefore in his eighty-eighth year when he died. The family was one of the most ancient among the Jewish people. It has among its most treasured possessions a genealogical tree tracing descent from Aaron, the first High Priest. Many of his ancestors held the priestly office, and his father was Chief Rabbi of Hanover when he was born. Dr. Adler was educated at the Universities of Würzburg and Erlangen, at both of which he took a distinguished position. In 1829 he married Miss Henrietta Worms, of Frankfort, and so became connected with the leading Jewish families of that town, including the Rothschilds. As Chief Rabbi of Oldenburg, and afterward, on the death of his father, of Hanover, he gained the experience which materially contributed to his being invited, in 1844, to succeed Rev. Solomon Herschell as Chief Rabbi of the English-speaking Jews.

At this time the Jewish world was much agitated by a reform movement which aimed, among other things, at the alteration of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday, and the chanting of the prayers in the vernacular. A reformed congregation of British Jews was already established in London, and Dr. Adler, taking the orthodox side, was soon engaged in a paper controversy with the innovators, but his gentle spirit soon eliminated from it whatever bitterness it originally possessed. His first wife died in 1853, and four years later he was married to his second wife, Miss Lehel, of Berlin.

Last Days.

For the last few years, by reason of failing health, Dr. Adler has lived in close retirement, his official duties being performed by his distinguished son, Dr. Hermann Adler, the Delegate Chief Rabbi. The last official part he took in any public service was in 1887, on the occasion of the Centenary of Sir Moses Montefiore, when he attended the special service at the Synagogue, at which he recited the Special Prayer composed by him for the occasion. There were personal reasons for his thus emerging from his enforced retirement. From the moment Dr. Adler set foot in England to the day of the death of Sir Moses, there was an unbroken bond of personal affection between these two leaders of the Jewish community.

Dr. Adler was an industrious worker, and in addition to his ministerial duties and the self-imposed toil which his keen interest in controversial subjects involved, he found time to occasionally use his pen. He wrote a volume of "Sermons on the Jewish Faith," and a number of other Hebrew works, the chief of which is a commentary on The Targum of Onkelos.

Of late years Dr. Adler has spent most of his time at Brighton; his son, the Rev. Dr. Hermann Adler, acting in his place as Chief Rabbi, and being also minister of one of the London synagogues.

The Funeral,

which took place on Thursday, January 23, at the Jewish Cemetery, was an interesting ceremony. The body, which was brought up from Brighton on the previous day, was taken to the "Great Synagogue," in Aldgate, where a special service was held (as shown on our front page) and there a procession was formed for the burying-ground. A large number of carriages containing the relatives and friends of the deceased, together with numerous prominent representatives of the Jewish body, were drawn up in order outside the Synagogue. The coffin, which bore no inscription, was of plain wood, covered with cloth, in which, as a pillow for the head, was

A Bag of Earth from the Holy Land

—a fitting link to bind the deceased to the land of his fathers, and a fulfilment of the sentence, "dust to dust," passed upon man at the beginning. The body was wrapped in a white shroud, such as is usually worn by the heads of families at the annual Passover Supper.

The chief mourners were the three sons—the Rev. Dr. Hermann Adler, Mr. Marcus Adler, and Mr. Elkan Adler. Among those who took part in the funeral were the Chief Rabbis of the Orthodox Jews at Berlin; and of the Spanish and Portuguese Jews in London; Dr. M. Friedlander, Principal of the Jews' College in London; Mr. J. Sebag Montefiore; Mr. S. Montague, M. P.; Mr. Arthur Cohen, M. P., etc. The funeral service, in Hebrew, was read by the Rev. Marcus Hast, of the Great Synagogue, in the chapel of the cemetery (as shown on our front page). The coffin was then borne to the grave and lowered into it, the three sons of the deceased Chief Rabbi assisting in this mournful task of duty (as shown in our illustration).

Dr. Adler was an eminent scholar, being versed in the Hebrew, Syriac, and Chaldaic languages, as well as in the chief modern languages of Europe. He gained his degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Erlangen in 1828, just before he was admitted to ordination and elected Chief Rabbi of the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg. It was owing to his deep interest in the education of the rabbis of his race that, ten years later, the Jewish College was opened in London, near which he himself resided until his removal to West Brighton in 1880. The name "Adler" (Eagle) was adopted by one of his ancestors, who, on the occasion of the recall of banished Jews to Frankfort, in 1616, bore the standard of the empire, the German Eagle, at the head of the grand procession.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR DR. ADLER.

THE memorial service held on the afternoon of January 30, at the Great Synagogue, served as a fitting conclusion to the week of mourning for the lamented Chief Rabbi. The selection of this Synagogue, in which Dr. Adler had worshipped during his long Rabbinate, as the scene of the religious tribute of the London Jewish community to their lamented spiritual chief, was in itself a mark of respect to the dead, and at the same time a recognition of the fact that the Synagogue, though less imposing than some others in London, still remains the "Cathedral" Synagogue of the metropolis.

Upward of twelve hundred invitations had been issued; every Synagogue in the city, and every institution, educational and charitable, having been asked to send its representative men.

The scene on entering the Synagogue was impressive and solemn. The building was lit as on festivals and other joyous occasions, but in striking contrast to this illumination was the sombre clothing of the visitors, and the heavy black draperies along the front of the ladies' galleries and over the Ark, the black covering on the Reading Desk. Most touching sight of all was the small light over the seat which used to be occupied by the late Chief Rabbi, and which also was covered with black.

After appropriate Scripture selections had been read or chanted by the choir, the memorial sermon was delivered by Rev. S. Singer, who gave, as an appropriate picture of the life of the deceased Rabbi, the following selection from the prophet Malachi 2:5-7: "My covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave them to him as a source of fear so that he feared Me and bowed himself before Me. The law of truth was in his mouth, and no injustice was found on his lips; he walked with Me in peace and rectitude, and did turn many away from iniquity. For the priest's lips shall keep knowledge, and they shall seek the law at his mouth; for he is a messenger of the Lord of Hosts." One could not but deplore that a character so lovely as that of the preacher depicted, and a man so distinguished by learning and high morality, should have gone to the grave with the veil still over his heart. It is marvellous that such a man could not see in Jesus of Nazareth Him of whom Moses and the prophet did write.

"Judge our departed Chief Rabbi by any of the conditions mentioned by the prophet," said the reverend eulogist, "that fear of God, which frees man from all other fear; the hold on truth, accompanied by the desire for more truth, and the yearning to share it with others; the passionate love of the law of God for its own sake; the unswerving pursuit of righteousness; the love of peace, because it alone makes the enjoyment of other blessings possible; and, finally, the steadfast purpose to see and restore the lost, and turn many from iniquity; and it is hard to repress the thought that in his case there has been, even on this earth, some relation between human effort and heavenly reward."

"His was essentially a refined nature, high strung and sensitive in regard to the best human emotions. The ideal of his life was in the highest degree elevated. It was a simple and a strong piety—strong partly because it was simple. Purity of purpose, large-hearted sympathy for others of every condition, and the old prophetic devotion to the God of his fathers were certainly amongst the fine traits in his lofty character. How tender he was when he entered into the personal sorrows of others. How gentle was his effort to impart religious consolation! And somehow there seemed to attach to his words at such times an unusual strength. An outsider beyond his immediate circle could fully know the sweetness of his character as it was revealed in all the nearest relations of his life."

AN INFIDEL AT ABSALOM'S GRAVE.

DR. EREMETE PIEROTTI, a French scientist, architect, and engineer, a few years ago, when an infidel journeyed through Palestine with the avowed intention of disproving the truth of the Bible. Visiting the heap of stones over Absalom's grave, he sat down to meditate with a heart full of unbelief and while he tarried there an Arab woman came with her little child, which she held by the hand. In passing she threw a stone upon the heap marking the tomb of Absalom, and bade her child do the same. "What do you do that for?" he inquired. "Because it is the grave of a wicked son who disobeyed his father," was the woman's answer. "And who was he?" asked the doctor. "The son of David," she replied. He started as if a bolt struck him. Here was an Arab woman, a Semite, who probably had never seen a copy of the Scriptures, and could not read a word of it, yet she held these ancient facts, and was using her child to fling a stone at a monument dedicated by the name of the son who rebelled against his father. Dr. Pierotti, Bible in hand, turned to the story of Absalom, and as he read it a new light came on him. This was the first of many convictions, which so wrought upon him that at length he renounced the faith he once attempted to destroy, and devoted the remainder of his life to the proof and illustration of the Sacred Scriptures.

A NAIL IN AN OAK.

The course of an interesting article just published by Dr. A. J. Gordon is the following excellent illustration of hidden and secret evil. He says: "The oak-tree was recently felled in the grove adjoining Avondale, near the centre of which was a small nail, surrounded by twenty-nine concentric circles, the growth of as many years. The tree in its annual ascents and descents, had carried it the oxyd from the metal, till a space of some three or four feet in length and four or five inches in diameter was completely blackened. It was, I thought, a striking illustration of the effects of sin upon the heart. There may be no outward sign of the corrupting influence within; the outward may be as fair, the reputation as spotless, as the heart is black. 'Is it not a little one?' the man says when he first begins to love the forbidden; and then, before he is aware, it has become a cancer in him, poisoning the stream of his life, spreading desolation in his heart. To the doctor, indeed, there may appear to be growth, but the world only sees the bark. There are concealed sins in the chambers of his soul, of the existence of which none but God and himself know, and which many times, perhaps in the agony of remorse, he discloses to him the dire consequences of this single cherished sin."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Two Cases of Delirium Tremens.*

KEEN-EYED New England observer, in telling of the drinking customs which prevailed in his early days, spoke of the frequency in those times, of delirium tremens even among persons of the best class of the community. As an illustration in line he mentioned a father and son, living close door to him, who were often thus carried away by their appetites, and whom he was sometimes called to assist in controlling, when the members of the family were unable to manage them. "And is very singular," he said, "to note the difference in the two men when they had the horrors. The father was a genial, jolly man; and he always saw his boys in his visions. He would laugh till the tears ran down his cheeks as he pointed out the misdeeds of the monkeys with their cornstalk fiddles which he all about him in his visions. On the other hand, the son was morose and sullen; and when his father was excited he always saw Spaniards coming to murder him, and devils ready to torture him. One of the men showed what was in him by what he said at such a time." And in that discriminating suggestion the New England observer declared a truth that has its application in other realms than that of visions and dreams. In all that one sees as a doctor about him in the world as it is, in his character, his characteristics, and his aspirations.

Travelling Companions.

Three men were accidental companions in a journey along the Pacific coast, including a visit to the Yosemite Valley. All three had the same scenery before them, but no two of them saw the same things as they looked out on that scenery. One of them seemed to see nothing but sheep-pasture or lack of it. He was all the time talking of the possibilities of raising sheep on the hill-sides and the mountains traversed by the party. He proved to be a Pennsylvania wool grower. A second one was continually measuring the big trees, and was engaged in calculation as to the amount of timber which the redwood forests would supply, and as to the time and cost necessary to bring that timber to market. He was found to be a lumberman from Michigan. The third man was constantly looking away from the attractions of the scenery by observed peculiarities of his travelling companions, and of their guide, and of the persons whom he met on their way. Nothing in inanimate nature could command his sustained interest in comparison with human beings. He was a Christian worker from the East, who cared more for persons than for things.

From Seeing and Being, one of six little volumes of essays. Dr. M. Clay Trumbull. Published by John D. Wattles, Philadelphia.

Yet farther on in their journeyings those three tourists met two other travellers, who again had other sights to see in that which was common to all, yet which was singular to each. One of the two new observers saw only beauty in the natural scenery, and picturesqueness in any group of living personalities. The other was on the lookout for signs of former life and of ancient days, and of natural changes in the country about him. The one was an artist; the other was a scientist.

And just what was observable in those five observers on the Pacific coast at that time, might have been noted among other observers elsewhere as indeed it could be noted everywhere at all times where men who observe are intelligently observed. In one sphere as in all spheres, what one sees shows more or less what one is; or in other words, the observer's personality is unconsciously projected into the object which commands his attention and interest as an observer.

A STATE MURDER.

A DELICATE Russian lady has been flogged to death by jailers in Siberia. Prior to March, 1888, political exiles to Siberia were confined together, and were exempt from the severities of the prisons in which burglars, highwaymen, and other criminals were incarcerated. At that time, however, the St. Petersburg Government, in one of its paroxysms of inhuman brutality, sent an order to Siberia that in the future the political exiles should be separated and distributed so that no two should be together in the same cell. In every case a political prisoner must be put into a cell with a common criminal, must wear the same kind of leg-fetters, do the same work, and be subject to the same punishments. Among the prisoners in the mines of Kara was an educated, refined lady named Hope Sigida, who had been sent there on the charge of conspiracy against the Government. She and three friends, one of them the wife of a professor, were subjected to coarse insult and brutal and licentious outrages at the hands of the jailers. Goaded to desperation, they determined to commit suicide by starving themselves to death. They were thwarted by crafty and violent means. Then Mme. Sigida appealed personally to the Governor of the mine. She did not return to her companions. She was stripped and received a hundred lashes on her bare flesh. She was carried away bleeding and unconscious, and died shortly afterward. But it was not the heavy whip that killed her; her heart broke under the brutal outrage. One more victim was added to the long list of those whose blood cries to heaven for vengeance. Let our Senators think of Mme. Sigida when they are asked to ratify the extradition treaty which has been negotiated between this country and Russia, and let them refuse to surrender any man or woman who has escaped from the tyranny of such a demoniacal Government.

BUILDING UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

IN a speech made recently by the Rev. J. J. Fuller, who has returned for a brief rest from his labors as a missionary on the West Africa coast, he thus described the difficulties against which he had to contend in rearing his first place of worship. He said: "We went up to a place among the Cameroons and tried to put up a little rude house to gather the people into to tell them of our mission. One of their chiefs came one day dressed up in all his charms, sash, horn, war-cap, sword, &c., and said that the missionaries had come to stir up resistance, and his people did not want anything new, but wanted to continue in the habits and customs of their fathers. 'You come,' said he, 'from a strange land to introduce your customs, and we won't have them.' We tried to show him we were his friends. He said, 'You sha'n't put up the house,' so we thought it would be best to leave it alone."

But in our difficulty we read the Bible, and seemed to read a voice to us in the words, "Go forward," and we began to make holes to put in the posts for our house. The news of what we were doing went to the town, and when we had some of the holes dug for our posts, six men came up to stop us. Instead of saying anything to them, we knelt down and asked God to help us. We then took up the post and put it into its place. As we put in the first post the men stood aghast to think that we dared to resist them. They were so overcome with our quietness and steadfastness, that although they came to stop us, it brought them for a moment to a standstill. At last the first post was put up and rammed, and then a chief who was present took off his ornaments and trappings, and then darted at the post, and used all his muscular strength in trying to shake it out. While he was doing this, we went off to the next corner, and while the chief was fighting with the first post, we rammed the second. When he had taken out the first, he came to the second, and we passed on and put in a third. So we went round and put in one post after another, until the poor man had completely tired himself, and after taking out about half a dozen he thought he had had enough for one day's work. After he left we had the holes reopened and the posts put up as fast as we could.

The chiefs could not understand us, and thought we were very determined, and the man who pulled out the posts was anxious to find out more about us, so he came to our meetings. At that time we could only preach through an interpreter, and he stood outside and heard the gospel, and we told the message in such a simple way that the man was drawn into the house. In a few days we had him sitting listening, and by-and-by he came to the mission-house and asked us to tell him something more about this good news. He said he had heard a little, but he wanted to know more. In six months from that time we saw him with the tears running from his eyes as he listened to the message from our interpreter; and in eighteen months more we had the privilege of seeing him baptized on a profession of faith in Christ.

To-day we have a native Baptist church formed there, where about four hundred persons gather together every Sunday to hear the gospel.

THE EFFECT OF THE BOOK.

SEVERAL illustrations were recently given by an agent of the Bible Society of the results directly traced from the reading of the Bible unassisted by oral instruction. He said: "A colporteur in the maritime province of Almeria, Spain, had sold to the crew of a fishing vessel six or eight copies of the Scriptures. He found that they had been blessed. There had been nothing but cursing and swearing in the intercourse of this crew before. Now the songs of Zion float over the moonlit waters of the Mediterranean, and the men's spare moments are jealously improved in the perusal of the Word of Life. A little further inland, on the slopes of the Sierra Morena, you find a man who cannot read himself, but carries about with him a copy of the large-type Testament, and whenever he meets with people who can read, he sets them to read the story of the Divine life on earth. Near Valladolid, the old capital of Spain, a man received a copy of the Scriptures, and perhaps opened it at a long list of names in Genesis or Chronicles, and did not feel specially attracted. On a holiday he was in Valladolid, and heard an evangelist. Remembering where he had placed the book, he went home, took it down, found the place, began to read, and in a short time went back to the evangelist, saying that he had resolved to declare himself a reader of the Bible. That man had so commended himself to the villagers that he is now town clerk against his own will; but they were so convinced of his uprightness that nothing would content them but that he should take the direction of affairs in that place."

THE POET AND THE PREACHER.

A POET'S sympathy with a preacher was exhibited in England a short time ago. In an article on Lord Tennyson, just published, the writer relates an incident which occurred on a bitter, windy morning in the Isle of Wight. It was almost a blizzard, against which few dare expose themselves. One veteran local preacher, while pressing on against wind and rain, fell down dead within a short distance of Freshwater Methodist Chapel. Lord Tennyson came upon the scene in a few minutes, with his friend Professor Ralston. The kindly interest taken by the poet in the widow and friends of the honored local preacher will never be forgotten. He sent a letter of sympathy, in which he expressed his personal belief as to the honor and blessedness of being engaged in so glorious a work as that of the local preacher. Lord Tennyson wrote, "I cannot but look upon his death as a happy one; sudden, painless, while he was on his way to his chapel to render thanks and praise to his Maker. Our liturgy prays against 'sudden death,' but I myself could pray for such a sudden death as Porter's."

REVISION OF CREEDS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning,
March 2, 1890.

"Loose him and let him go." John 11:44.

An Opulent Home—Sickness in the Household—The Bereaved Sisters—Arrival of the Omnipotent Healer—The Summons from the Tomb—Lazarus Unbound—Christians Only Half Liberated—An Antiquated Creed—New Applications of Old Truths—No Infants in Perdition—Metaphysical Dissection of a Rose—A Scripture Creed Wanted—The Essential and Non-essential Articles—Imperative Necessity of a New Creed—Injurious Introspection—The Dread of Death—Innumerable Stellar Homes—Dissolution Painless—A Dreaded Landing at Joppa.

My Bible is, at the place of this text, written all over with lead-pencil marks made last December at Bethany on the ruins of the house of Mary and Martha and Lazarus. We dismounted from our horses on the way up from Jordan to the Dead Sea. Bethany was the summer evening retreat of Jesus. After spending the day in the hot city of Jerusalem He would come out there almost every evening to the house of His three friends. I think the occupants of that house were orphans, for the father and mother are not mentioned. But the son and two daughters must have inherited property, for it must have been, judging from what I saw of the foundations and the size of the rooms, an opulent home. Lazarus, the brother, was now the head of the household, and his sisters depended on him, and were proud of him, for he was very popular and everybody liked him, and these girls were splendid girls. Martha, a first-rate housekeeper, and Mary, a spirituelle, somewhat dreamy, but affectionate, and as good a girl as could be found in all Palestine. But one day Lazarus got sick. The sisters were in consternation. Father gone and mother gone, they feel very nervous lest they lose their brother also.

Disease Did Its Quick Work.

How the girls hung over his pillow! Not much sleep about that house, no sleep at all. From the characteristics elsewhere developed I judge that Martha prepared the medicines, and made tempting dishes of food for the poor appetite of the sufferer, but Mary prayed and sobbed. Worse and worse gets Lazarus, until the doctor announces that he can do no more. The shriek that went up from that household when the last breath had been drawn, and the two sisters were being led by sympathizers into the adjoining room, all those of us can imagine who have had our own hearts broken. But why was not Jesus there as He so often had been? Far away in the country districts preaching, healing other sick, how unfortunate that this omnipotent doctor had not been at that domestic crisis in Bethany. When at last Jesus arrived in Bethany, Lazarus had been buried four days, and dissolution had taken place. In that climate the breathless body disintegrates more rapidly than in ours. If, immediately after decease, that body had been awakened into life, unbelievers might have said he was only in a comatose state, or in a sort of trance, and by some vigorous manipulation or powerful stimulant vitality had been renewed. No! Four days dead.

At the Door of the Sepulchre is a crowd of people, but the three most memorable are Jesus, who was the family friend, and the two bereft sisters. We went into the traditional tomb in December, and it is deep down and dark, and with torches we explored it. We found it all quiet that afternoon of our visit, but the day spoken of in the Bible there was present an excited multitude. I wonder what Jesus will do? He orders the door of the grave removed, and then he begins to descend the steps, Mary and Martha close after him, and the crowd after them. Deeper down into the shadows and deeper! The hot tears of Jesus roll over His cheeks, and plash upon the back of His hands. Were ever so many sorrows compressed into so small a space as in that group pressing on down after Christ, all the time bemoaning that He had not come before?

Now all the whispering and all the crying and all the sounds of shuffling feet are stopped. It is the silence of expectancy. Death had conquered, but now the vanquisher of death confronted the scene. Amid the awful hush of the tomb the familiar name which Christ had often had upon His lips in the hospitalities of the village home came back to His tongue, and with a pathos and an almightiness of which the resurrection of the last day shall be only an echo, he cries, "Lazarus, come forth!" The eyes of the slumberer open, and he rises and comes to the foot of the steps, and with great difficulty begins to ascend, for the cerements of the tomb are yet on him, and his feet are fast, and his hands are fast, and the impediments to all his movements are so great that Jesus commands: "Take off these cerements; remove these hindrances; unfasten these grave clothes; loose him, and let him go!"

Oh, I am so glad that after the Lord raised Lazarus He went on, and commanded the loosening of the cords that bound his feet so that he could walk, and the breaking off of the cerement that bound his hands so that he could stretch out his arms in salutation, and the tearing off of the bandage from around his jaws so that he could speak. What would resurrected life have been to Lazarus if he had not been freed from all those cripplements of his body? I am glad that Christ commanded his complete emancipation, saying, "Loose him, and let him go."

Christians Only Half Liberated.

The unfortunate thing now is that so many Christians are only half liberated. They have been raised from the death and burial of sin into spiritual life, but they yet have the grave-clothes on them. They are, like Lazarus, hobbling up the stairs of the tomb bound hand and foot, and the object of this sermon is to help free their body and free their soul, and I shall try to obey the Master's command that comes to me, and comes to every minister of religion: "Loose him, and let him go."

First, many are bound hand and foot by religious creeds. Let no man misinterpret me as antagonizing creeds. I have eight or ten of them; a creed about religion, a creed about art, a creed about social life, a creed about government, and so on. A creed is something that a man believes, whether it be written or unwritten. The Presbyterian Church is now agitated about its creed. Some good men in it are for keeping it because it was framed from the belief of John Calvin. Other good men in it want revision. I am with neither party. Instead of revision I want substitution. I was sorry to have the question disturbed at all. The creed did not hinder us from offering the pardon and the comfort of the gospel to all men, and the Westminster Confession has not interfered with me one minute. But now that the electric lights have been turned on the imperfections of that creed—and everything that man fashions is imperfect—let us put the old creed respectfully aside and get a brand-new one.

An Antiquated Creed.

It is impossible that people who lived hundreds of years ago should fashion an appropriate creed for our times. John Calvin was a great and good man, but he died three hundred and twenty-six years ago. The best centuries of Bible study have come since then, and explorers have done their work, and you might as well have the world go back and stick to what Robert Fulton knew about steamboats, and reject the subsequent improvements in navigation; and go back to John Gutenberg, the inventor of the art of printing, and reject all modern newspaper presses; and go back to the time when telegraphy was the elevating of signals, or the burning of bonfires on the hill-tops, and reject the magnetic wire which is the tongue of nations, as to ignore all the exegetes and the philologists, and the theologians of the last three hundred and twenty-six years, and put your head under the sleeve of the gown of a sixteenth-century doctor. I could call the names of twenty living Presbyterian ministers of religion who could make a better creed than John Calvin. The nineteenth century ought not to be called to sit at the feet of the sixteenth.

New Application of Old Truths.

"But," you say, "it is the same old Bible, and John Calvin had that as well as the present student of the Scriptures." Yes; so it is the same old sun in the heavens, but in our time it has gone to making daguerreotypes and photographs. It is the same old water, but in our century it has gone to running steam-engines. It is the same old electricity, but in our time it has become a lightning-footed errand boy. So it is the old Bible, but new applications, new uses, new interpretations. You must remember that during the last three hundred years words have changed their meaning, and some of them now mean more, and some less. I do not think that John Calvin believed, as some say he did, in the damnation of infants, although some of the recent hot disputes would seem to imply that there is such a thing as the damnation of infants. A man who believes in the damnation of infants himself deserves to lose heaven. I do not think any good man could admit such a possibility. What Christ will do with all the babies in the new world I conclude from what He did with the babies in Palestine when He hugged them and kissed them. When some of you grown people go out into this world your doubtful destiny will be an embarrassment to ministers officiating at your obsequies who will have to be cautious so as not to hurt the living friends. But when the darling children die there are no "ifs" or "buts" or guesses.

The Autopsy of a Rose.

We must remember that good John Calvin was a logician and a metaphysician, and by the properties of his nature put some things in an unfortunate way. Logic has its use, and metaphysics has its use, but they are not good at making creeds. A gardener hands you a blooming rose, dewy, fresh, but a severe botanist comes to you with a rose and says, "I will show you the structure of this rose, and he proceeds to take it apart, and pulls off the leaves and he says, 'There are the petals,' and takes out the anthers, and he says: 'Just look at the wonderful structure of these floral pillars!'" then he cuts the stem to show you the juices of the plant. So logic or metaphysics takes the aromatic rose of the Christian religion and says: "I will show you how this rose of religion was fashioned, and it pulls off of it a piece, and says: 'That is human will,' and another piece, and says: 'That is God's will,' and another piece, and says: 'That is sovereignty,' and another piece and says: 'That is free agency,' this is this, and that is that. While I stand looking at the fragments of the rose pulled apart, one whom the Marys took for a gardener comes in, and presents me with a crimson rose, red as blood, and says, 'Inhale the sweetness of this, wear it on your heart, and wear it forever.' I must confess that I prefer the rose in full bloom to the rose pulled apart.

The Best Creedmaker.

What a time we have had with the dogmatic apologetics and the hermeneutics. The defect in some of the creeds is that they try to tell us about the decrees of God. Now the only human being that was ever competent to handle that subject was Paul, and he would not have been content had he not been inspired. I believe in the sovereignty of God and I believe in man's free agency, but no one can harmonize the two. It is not necessary that we harmonize them. Every sermon that I have ever heard that attempted such harmonization was to me as clear as a London fog, as clear as mud. My brother of the nineteenth century, my brother of the sixteenth century, let us Paul's statement and leave out your own. After one chapter of Paul on that subject than a Calvin's institutes, able and honest and mighty they are. Do not try to measure either the throne of God or the thunderbolts of God with your little steel pen. What do you know about the decrees? You cannot pry open the door of God's eternal counsels. You cannot explain the mysteries of God's government now; much less the mysteries of His government five hundred quintillion of years ago. I move for a creed for all our denomination made out of Scripture quotations pure and simple. That would take the earth for God. That would be impregnable against infidelity and Apollyon's assault. That would be

Beyond Human Criticism.

The denomination, whatever its name be, that will rise up to that will be the Church of the millennium will swallow up all other denominations, and become one that will be the bride when the Bridegroom cometh. Let us make it simpler and plainer, let people to get into the kingdom of God. Do not hinder people by the idea that they may not be elected. Do not tag on to the one essential of faith in Christ any of the innumerable non-essentials. A man who heartily accepts Christ is a Christian, and the man who does not accept Him is not a Christian, and that is all there is of it. He need not believe in election or reprobation. He need not believe in the eternal generation of the Son. He need not believe in everlasting punishment. He need not believe in infant baptism. He need not believe in plenary inspiration. Faith in Christ is the criterion, is the test, is the pivot, is indispensable.

But there are those who would add unto the list rather than subtract from them. There are the sands who would not accept persons into church membership if they drink wine, or if they smoke cigars, or if they attend the theatre, or if they ds, or if they drive a fast horse. Now I do not nk wine or smoke or attend the theatre, never a game of cards, and do not drive a fast se, although I would if I owned one. But do substitute tests which the Bible does not estab-

There is one passage of Scripture wide enough et all in who ought to enter, and to keep out all ought to be kept out: "Believe in the Lord Christ and thou shalt be saved." Get a man's rt right, and his life will be right.

Action Must be Taken.

now that the old creeds have been put under ilic scrutiny, something radical must be done.
ne would split them, some would carve them,
ne would elongate them, some would abbreviate
m. At the present moment and in the present pe they are a hindrance. Lazarus is alive, but pered with the old grave-clothes. If you want glorious Church, free and unencumbered, take the ceremonies of old ecclesiastical vocabulary.
her, and let her go!

gain, there are Christians who are under sepull shadows, and hindered and hopped by doubts fears and sins long ago repented of. What they is to understand the liberty of the sons of God.
y spend more time under the shadow of Sinai at the base of Calvary. They have been sing-the only poor hymn that Newton ever wrote:

'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought—
Do I love the Lord or no,
Am I His or am I not?

ong to know, do you? Why do you not find out?
to work for God, and you will very soon find

The man who is all the time feeling of his e and looking at his tongue to see whether it is ed, is morbid, and cannot be physically well.
doctor will say: "Go out into the fresh air and active life, and stop thinking of yourself, and will get well and strong." So there are people are watching their spiritual symptoms, and call it self-examination, and they get weaker sicklier in their faith all the time. Go out and something nobly Christian. Take holy exercise then examine yourself, and instead of Newton's nine and bilious hymn that I first quoted, you sing Newton's other hymn:

Amazing grace, how sweet the sound
That saved a wretch like me!
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see.

What Christians Need.

that many of you Christians most need is to get grave-clothes off. I rejoice that you have been ght from the death of sin to the life of the el; but you need to get your hand loose and your feet loose and your tongue loose and your loose. There is no sin that the Bible so ars and punctures and flagellates as the sin of ief, and that is

What is the Matter with You.

"you say, 'if you knew what I once was, and many times I have grievously strayed, you
I understand why I do not come out brighter.'
I think you would call yourself the chief of
rs. I am glad you hit upon that term, for I a promise that fits into your case as the cogs e wheel between the cogs of another wheel, or e key fits into the labyrinths of a lock. A who was once called Saul, but afterwards Paul, ed: "This a faithful saying, and worthy of all tation, that Christ Jesus came into the world e sinners, of whom I am chief." Mark that f whom I am chief." "Put down your over-and hats and I will take care of them while ill Stephen"—so Saul said to the stoners of rst martyr—"I do not care to exert myself but I will guard your surplus apparel while the murder." The New Testament account
"The witnesses laid down their clothes at a man's feet, whose name was Saul." No wonder d, "Sinners, of whom I am the chief."
ist is used to climbing. He climbed to the f the temple. He climbed to the top of t Olivet. He climbed to the top of the cliffs Nazareth. He climbed to the top of Golgotha.
o the top of the hills and the mountains of ansgression He is ready to climb with pardon ery one of you. The groan of Calvary is ier than the thunder of Sinai. Full receipt ed for all your indebtedness. If one throw e at midnight into a bush where the hedge osts, it immediately begins to sing; and into idnight hedges of your despondency these
I hurl, hoping to awaken you to anthem.

Drop the tunes in the minor key and take the major. Do you think it pleases the Lord for you to be carrying around with you the débris and carcasses of old transgressions? You make me think of some ship that has had a tempestuous time at sea, and now that it proposes another voyage, keeps on its davits the damaged lifeboats and the splinters of a shivered mast and the broken glass of a smashed skylight. My advice is: Clear the decks, overboard with all the damaged rigging, brighten up the salted smoke stacks, open a new log-book, haul in the planks, lay out a new course, and set sail for heaven. You have had the spiritual dumps long enough. You will please the Lord more by being happy than by being miserable.

Have you not sometimes started out in the rain with your umbrella, and you were busy thinking, and you did not notice that the rain had stopped, and though it had cleared off you still had your umbrella up, and when you discovered what you were doing you felt silly enough? That is what some of you are doing in religious things. You have got so used to sadness that though the rain has stopped you still have your umbrella up. Come out of the shadow. Ascend the stairs of your sepulchre. Step out into the broad light of noonday. We come around you to help remove your grave-clothes, and a voice from the heavens, tremulous but omnipotent, commands, "Loose him, and let him go."

The Dread of Death.

Again, my text has good advice concerning any Christian hampered and bothered and bound by fear of his own dissolution. To such, the Book refers when it speaks of those who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.
The most of us, even if we have the Christian hope, are cowards about death. If a plank fall from a scaffolding and just grazes our hat, how pale we look! If the Atlantic ocean plays with the steamship, pitching it toward the heavens and letting it suddenly drop, how even the Christian passengers pester the steward or stewardess as to whether there is any danger, and the captain, who has been all night on the bridge, and chilled through, coming in for a cup of coffee, is assailed with a whole battery of questions as to what he thinks of the weather. And many of the best people are, as Paul says, throughout their lifetime in bondage by fear of death. My brothers and sisters, if we made full use of our religion we would soon get over this.

Backed up by the teachings of your Bible, just look through the telescope some bright night and see how many worlds there are, and reflect that all you have seen, compared with the number of worlds in existence, are less than the fingers of your right hand as compared with all the fingers of the human race. How foolish, then, for us to think that ours is the only world fit for us to stay in. I think that all the stars are inhabited, and by beings like the human race in feelings and sentiments, and the difference is in lung respiration, and heart beat, and physical conformation, their physical conformation fit for the climate of their world, and our physical conformation fit for the climate of our world. So we shall feel at home in any of the stellar neighborhoods, our physical limitations having ceased.

One of our first realizations in getting out of this world, I think, will be that in this world we were very much pent up, and had

Cramped Apartments.

and were kept on the limits. The most, even of our small world, is water, and the water says to the human race, "Don't come here or you will drown."
A few thousand feet up the atmosphere is uninhabitable, and the atmosphere says to the human race:
"Don't come up here or you cannot breathe." A few miles down the earth is a furnace of fire, and the fire says, "Don't come here or you will burn."
The caverns of the mountains are full of poisonous gases, and the gases say, "Don't come here or you will be asphyxiated." And, crossing a rail track, you must look out or you will be crushed. And, standing by a steam boiler, you must look out or you will be blown up. And pneumonias and pleurisies and consumptions and apoplexies go across this earth in flocks, in droves, in herds, and it is a world of equinoxes and cyclones and graves.
Yet we are under the delusion that it is the only place fit to stay in. We want to stick to the wet plank midocean while the great ship "The City of God," of the Celestial line, goes sailing past, and would gladly take us up in a lifeboat. My Christian friends, let me tear off your despondencies and frights about dissolution. My Lord commands me regarding you, saying, "Loose him and let him go."

Heaven is ninety-five per cent. better than this world, a thousand per cent. better, a million per cent. better. Take the gladdest, brightest, most jubilant days you ever had on earth, and compress them all into one hour, and that hour would be a requiem, a fast-day, a gloom, a horror, as compared with the poorest hour they have had in heaven since its first tower was built or its first gates swung or its first song carolled. "Oh," you say,
"that may be true, but I am so afraid of crossing over from this world to the next, and I fear the snapping of the cord between soul and body." Well, all the surgeons and physicians and scientists declare that there is

No Pang at the Parting of the body and soul, and all the restlessness at the closing hour of life is involuntary, and no distress at all. And I agree with the doctors, for what they say is confirmed by the fact that persons who were drowned, or were submerged until all consciousness departed, and were afterward resuscitated, declare that the sensation of passing into unconsciousness was pleasurable rather than distressful. The cage of the body has a door on easy hinges, and when that door of the physical cage opens, the soul simply puts out its wings and soars.

"But," you say, "I fear to go because the future is so full of mystery." Well, I will tell you how to treat the mysteries. The mysteries have ceased bothering me, for I do as the judges of your courts often do. They hear all the arguments in the case and then say: "I will take these papers and give you my decision next week." So I have heard all the arguments in regard to the next world, and some things are uncertain and full of mystery, and so I fold up the papers and reserve until the next world my decision about them. I can there study all the mysteries to better advantage, for the light will be better and my faculties stronger, and I will ask the Christian philosophers, who have had all the advantages of heaven for centuries, to help me, and I may be permitted myself humbly to ask the Lord, and I think there will be only one mystery left: that will be how one so unworthy as myself got into such an enraptured place. Come up out of the sepulchral shadows. If you are not Christians by faith in Christ, come up into the light; and if you are already like Lazarus, reanimated, but still have your grave-clothes on, get rid of them. The command is: "Loose him, and let him go."

Landing at Joppa.

The only part of my recent journey that I really dreaded, although I did not say much about it beforehand, was the landing at Joppa. That is the port of entrance for the Holy Land, and there are many rocks, and in rough weather people cannot land at all. The boats taking the people from the steamer to the docks must run between reefs that looked to me to be about fifty feet apart, and one mistake of an oarsman, or an unexpected wave, has sometimes been fatal, and hundreds have perished along those reefs. Besides that, as we left Port Said the evening before, an old traveller said:
"The wind is just right to give you a rough landing at Joppa; indeed, I think you will not be able to land at all." The fact was, that when our Mediterranean steamer dropped anchor near Joppa and we put out for shore in the small boat, the water was as still as though it had been sound asleep a hundred years, and we landed as easily as I came on this platform. Well, your fears have pictured for you an appalling arrival at the end of your voyage of life, and they say that the seas will run high and that the breakers will swallow you up; or that if you reach Caanan at all, it will be a very rough landing. The very opposite will be true if you have the eternal God for your portion. Your disembarkation for the promised land will be as smooth as was ours at Palestine last December. Christ will meet you far out at sea and pilot you into complete safety, and you will land with a hosanna on one side of you and a hallelujah on the other.

"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
O'er the hill of fadeless green,
And the living waters laving
Shores where heavenly forms are seen.

Rocks and storms I'll fear no more,
When on that eternal shore;
Drop the anchor! furl the sail!
I am safe within the veil!

Volume XII., of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1889, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. None are on hand prior to 1884.

THE COMING THEOCRACY.

By the Late J. Denham Smith.

The Interval in Isaiah's Prediction—The Latter Part as Literal as the Former—The True Principle of Interpretation—Distinguish the Periods—The Assurances of the Angels at the Ascension—The Disappointment of the Apostles—The First of Future Events—The Unassimilated Nation—The Jewish Nation and the Gentile Bride.

THE Deliverer to come out of Zion is none other than the Messiah-Saviour, whose whole course, as such, though extending over thousands of years, is told in a few words in Isa. 9:6, where it is said, "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon His shoulder; and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." How is it so many stumble as to the true principle of interpreting prophecy? Some, looking to the first portion of this passage, say, "Oh, that has been accomplished—literally so!" but regard the latter part of the passage as having a spiritual and not a literal fulfilment. But no; why make the difference? What is so plainly predicted in this verse is for different periods. Already near two thousand years have intervened between "the Child born" and the times when "the government shall be upon His shoulder."

The ancients had a saying, remarks Hugh McNeile, "Distinguish the periods, and the Scriptures will harmonize." The Jew had so fastened his attention on one portion of the prophecies that he saw but one period—the glorious period of Messiah's reign; and the Church has for centuries so fixed its attention on one part of the prophecies only that it saw but one period—the coming of the Messiah to be crucified. Jewish prejudices arose from partial attention to the prophecies, and the Christian prejudices have arisen from partial attention to the prophecies. It should be our privilege to Distinguish the Periods;

and while we maintain, as Christians, the literal fulfilment of Isaiah's prophecy of the Virgin's Child, and the birth at Bethlehem as foretold by Micah, and therefore that the Messiah has come, we ought to maintain also, with the Jews, the literal interpretation of Isaiah's prophecy, that the Messiah shall reign at Jerusalem; and the prophecy of Micah, that Jerusalem shall be chief of the nations, and therein to believe with the Jews that the Messiah shall come. Christ has come, and He shall come. Surely this was the real nature and genius of what the angels said to the disciples, as may be read in Acts 1. The disciples in astonishment saw their divine Master carried up into the air from them, and disappearing in the cloud; and, while they were looking up in amazement, two angels appeared, and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?"

This Same Jesus Shall so Come

as ye have seen Him go." Was that calculated to abate their astonishment at the miracle which had taken place? Nay, but it was to assert another miracle. How, then, shall we interpret the incident? What was the basis and ground of their astonishment? I think it very plain and instructive. They had learned unmistakably that Jesus was the Messiah; they were present when they heard Peter's confession and the remarkable approbation which was expressed of it by the Lord Jesus; they knew then that He was the Messiah, the One that was to come, and they expected great things for their nation; they knew that a number of the prophecies, still unfulfilled, were connected with the Messiah's name; they were looking for them, and when He was taken from them and put to death, their expectations were dashed to the ground.

When, however, they saw Him again after the resurrection, their expectations revived, and they said, "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Wilt Thou finish it all now? And when He had given them an answer, not, indeed, to reject their idea that the kingdom would be restored, but only to tell them the time was not for them to know—when He had done this, He was suddenly taken up from among them, and they were

Left in Amazement.

What were they ready to say within their own minds and hearts? "After all, is He not the Messiah? Is it possible that we were wrong? And if He be, how can He have gone away, leaving so much undone that was predicted of the Messiah? He has done enough to assure us that He is the Messiah. He has fulfilled some prophecies—at His word the deaf man heard; at His word the tongue of the dumb man sang; at His word the lame man leaped for joy; at His word the dead has come to life. He must be the Messiah; and yet He is gone! no kingdom restored to Israel! no reigning at Jerusalem!" There was ground for astonishment, and in that state of astonishment the angels addressed them: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" as if He had left undone what had been promised. Do not imagine that all is to be done at one time. "Distinguish the periods." He is gone, it is true, but He is not gone forever. That same Jesus whom you have seen go "shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven."

Hence the kingdom will yet come. As to the first is clearly defined, "The Lord shall set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of His people which shall be left." (Isa. 11:11.) Note, they have never yet been restored a "second time." He "shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." (Isa. 11:12.) Note again, they were never in the four corners of the earth until the time of this dispensation. "And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord." (Amos 9:15.) This obviously is not yet. The planting of them is still future, when it shall be said, "The King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more." (Zeph. 3:15.)

The Order of Events,

Wonderful to a simple student of the Word that such a one as Macaulay should have said, as if it were something strange: "The Christian believes, as well as the Jew, that at some future period the present order of things will come to an end. Nay, many Christians believe that the Messiah will reign visibly over a kingdom on the earth. The number of people who hold it is much greater than the number of Jews, many of them distinguished by rank, ability, etc. They expect that the kingdoms of the earth will be swallowed up in one divine empire." Certainly! No intelligent Christian could read prophecy without seeing that He who suffered would reign, and that as the sufferings were literal, so also the reign.

The question is, How do we read? and what is

The Object of Prophecy?

We do not read prophecy that we may subject it to our own opinion. No; all its ideas are absolute; the splendors and shades of heaven and hell are in them, not as candidates for our opinion, but for our acceptance. Nor do we read to put, each one, a construction of our own on what we read, or to see that God is true; we know He is true. We read that we may learn His ways and know His will, so as to have our minds, our lives, and expectations all adjusted thereto. Yet much that God has foretold of the Jewish people is history now, and so His unchanging truth is obviously and unmistakably seen. It was foretold that Messiah would be "cut off" (rejected), "and," as to His kingdom at His first coming, "have nothing;" it was foretold that His people in the last days should be scattered over all lands; that their existence as a nation should cease, their temple be thrown down, their city lie in heaps. This is what we see in each particular.

Before our eyes, in every land under the sun, the Jews are seen, a homeless, and, often just now, a suffering people—a people distinct from, and as not belonging to, any one nation in which they are exiles. They form a sort of international nation, an element inassimilable by the European and other nations among which they dwell. They mix with the people of all lands over the face of the whole earth, but are not of them. Truly they are living witnesses of the foreknowledge, the truth, and the righteousness of God, and of how the literal is the only true principle for interpreting what God has said concerning them. Agreeable to what other prophets have said, our seer sings of a time far different to the present—the time of

A Coming Glory.

He says, "I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her"—that is, He will speak to her heart—"and I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope; and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt."

But in those days it will not be as a mere Master that He will reveal Himself to them. He says, "It shall be at that day, saith the Lord, that thou shalt call me Ishi" (that is, "my Husband"); "and shalt call me no more Baali," Baal (my Lord), by what title that false god was known. God says He put into her mouth the tenderer word of love—literally "my man," the title of love for one who is a husband. (Chap. 2:16.) And He will not rest till they know His desire, and are to Him what His heart could conceive. And what His heart has conceived is thus tenderly told: "Thou shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more. For thy Maker is thy Husband; the Lord of Hosts is His name. . . . The Lord hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God. . . . Oh thou afflicted, to whom thou wast comforted, and not comforted, in righteousness shalt thou be established." "Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals."

"I Am Married Unto You."

All this respecting the nation and kingdom on earth, not in disagreement with, but in contrast to, the glory of the kingdom which is heavenly, and which will be possessed by raised and glorified saints, who will in another aspect of blessedness form the Bride, the Lamb's wife, whose scene will be, as we shall see, not on the earth, but in the heavens. She will come down from God out of heaven. Let any one read Hosea 2:14; Isaiah Rev. 3:12; 21:2-10, and 22, and they will see the blessed, ineffable, bridal love applied not only to the nation in its Millennial blessedness, but also especially to the glorious risen saints, whose joy at that time will be in the city in the heavens.

A LEGISLATOR'S SERVICE.

A LEGISLATOR in waiter's attire performed a waiter's duties in his own house in Warrington, Fla., recently. The Pensacola News states that a lady, whose father was a planter before the war, recently visited Pensacola, and inquired for a colored family, the head of which, when a young man, had been a slave on her father's plantation. She was informed that the family had removed to Warrington. She went there accompanied by another lady. The colored family received them with pleasure, and were extremely hospitable. As there was no hotel near, the colored man begged the former mistress to stay and dine, and, seeing he would give him pleasure, she consented. While waiting for the meal, the lady who accompanied the chief guest whispered to her friend that she did not like the idea of dining at the same table with a family, but the other only replied, "Wait and see." In a short time they were ushered into a smaller apartment, where stood a table, covered with a clean white cloth, on which was spread a meal. The dishes, knives, and forks were set out, and there, holding a chair in which to seat the mistress, with a fly-brush in one hand and a napkin covering his person from throat to waist, stood the head of the house; and that man was a member of the Legislature of Florida. If all legislators were as loyal to their lord as that colored legislator was to his former mistress, there would be less difficulty in finding volunteers for street cleaning, mission work among the depraved, and other work, which many foolishly suppose they cannot do, without lowering their dignity (John 13:14).

A MAN OF ONE BOOK.

THE power of God's Word alone to speak convincingly to an earnest soul is illustrated in a remarkable manner in an incident reported by a well-known missionary in China, Mr. T. E. O. He says:

A Chinaman named Li, being anxious about his soul's salvation, applied to one of the local teachers, who, not knowing how to advise him, gave him a book, which proved to be a misapprehension. He had a copy of the "Acts of the Apostles," he read the book and made inquiries of his friends as to the doctrine contained therein. They could do him no more than to tell him that men who sold such books came from Hankow. From that time he formed the resolution to go to Hankow to search into the matter. Last he reached Hankow. One morning, after breakfast, he strolled along the street, hardly knowing what was to be done next, when his eyes were caught by the gilded characters over the entrance of our chapel. He entered, and after the prayer he was introduced to me. I asked if he had come to pray. He said, "No; as a sinner he came to pray to God," and it was only after a little conversation that he followed the example of Mr. Shi myself, by kneeling down whilst we commended him to the Lord in prayer. After rising from knees, he seemed for a moment or two lost in thought, and then said, 'Do you really mean to tell me I have a right to pray?' I replied, 'We are all sinners, and have no right of access to God in ourselves, but since the Saviour has come we have the right, through His merit, of intercourse with God.' 'Yes,' he replied, 'I know Christ was a Saviour, but He was a Jew, and I had not realized before that we Chinese had a right to trust in Him for salvation.' During the next ten days he attended constantly, and made remarkable progress in Biblical and religious knowledge. After a while, he expressed his intention of returning home. He had found peace and rest through faith in Christ. I found that he had some time before abandoned idolatry, and induced his mother to do the same. I agreed to baptize him, after which, on our last Sacrament Sunday, he was received into the Church. At my request he gave a short account of his past life, and the history of his conversion."

THE DRAUGHT OF FISHES.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for March 16, Luke 5: 1-11; Golden Text, Luke 5: 10.

The Worker in Hiding—Not Seeking Flattery—The Divine Open—Air Preacher—The Preaching that Feeds—A Command with a Modern Application—The Fishers Near Shore—How the Early Church Launched Forth into the Deep—The Weary Toiler—The Heavy Burden Lifted—Obedience the Secret of Power—Even Experience Yielding—Peter's Confession—The Promise of a Better Occupation.

JESUS became popular in Capernaum, although He was persecuted at Nazareth. Capernaum knew for the day "the time of (her) visitation." (Luke 19: 44.) On the morrow after that memorable evening on which so many were healed, and so many demons were cast out, Jesus "departed and went into a desert place." Whenever Jesus had done mighty works His instinct led Him away from the people, and alone with God. So it is always with those who truly follow Him. It is the shallow workers, those who still "have confidence in the flesh" (Phil. 3: 34), those who think that they are indispensable to God, who tarry with the people after they have done their work, and receive to themselves the flatteries with which those who know not God attribute His work to the creature. The instinct of a worker who is full of God is to lest one eye should be arrested in its look heavenward, or one note in the new song of one who has been blest be out of harmony with the strain which attributes all to God. But "the people sought Him, and came unto Him, and stayed Him that He should not depart from them." (Luke 4: 42.) Just like the selfishness of man! Jesus has been blest to us, and we will keep Him and the blessing for ourselves. A God-filled man, who receives blessing through another, instinctively desires that people in other places, and in other churches, should obtain a like blessing. The selfish believers who are not yet God-filled men, who do not know the indwelling of Christ by the Holy Ghost, instinctively say, "Stay with us, we are blest, and want more blessing of the same kind." When a work of God breaks out in any church, the God-filled members will instinctively pray for all the other churches in the place, that they may have a similar blessing, but the selfish members will do what they can to circumscribe it, and say by way of justification, "We must keep up the cause, you know." The answer of Jesus cut at the root of human selfishness, "He said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent." A servant does as he is bidden. "And He preached in the synagogues of Galilee." "And it came to pass that as the people pressed upon Him to hear the Word of God, He stood by the lake of Gennesaret." Wherever there is a longing soul, the Saviour is not far away. "He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness." (Ps. 107: 9.) Jesus had no great choice in the places where He gathered His audiences. He was a true open-air preacher, and He utilized the mountain-side, the seashore, the private house, the synagogue, or the temple, just as occasion served. But He never complained of the place of meeting; outward circumstances did not affect Him who was always in the will of His Father. Two ships (or boats, R. V.) were standing by the lakeside, but the fishermen were on the shore washing their nets. Jesus went on board one boat, which belonged to Simon Peter, and asked him to "put out a little from the land,"

Hide Away in Him,

(R. V.) By this means He would be better able to make all the people hear. There was about the teaching of Jesus." "He sat down and taught the people out of the ship." Men resort to all kinds of methods to secure the attention of their congregations—anecdotes, humor, attitudes, gesticulations, anything and everything but that which will feed hungry souls—the power of the Holy Ghost. Men always listen to Holy-Ghost-inspired words; they may hate them, oppose them, controvert them, but they command attention. "Now when he had left speaking, He said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught." This is His word to us all—away from the shore out into the deep. O how many of us there are who hang round the shore in our prayers, and dare not so much as ask the things which God has promised.

No Excitement

When the Church was in her infancy it was not thus; there was a vigor in her early days which promised far beyond what the ages since have realized. Peter and John were under persecution. God had made use of the healing of the lame man at the gate of the temple to attract a large audience of people, and the Holy Ghost so used Peter's words and John's prayers, that the number of men who believed was augmented to five thousand. But the powers, both ecclesiastical and political, were stirred up against them; they apprehended them, and, after having them one night in prison, they sat in judgment upon them, and commanded them to speak no more in the name of Jesus. But they did not hang round the shore, and think of what they had to suffer, and how hardly they were treated; they launched out into the deep, looked from earth up to heaven, and said, "Lord, thou art God," these are but men, "Thou art God, which made heaven and earth." These men are doing only what "Thy hand and Thy counsel determined before to be done." And then they launch out into the deep in their prayers, "Now, Lord, behold their threatenings, and grant unto Thy servants that with all boldness they may speak Thy Word, by stretching out Thy hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of Thy Holy Child Jesus, we will testify, but Thou must do the mighty works. They were out in the deep, no cord of self-pity or of fear of man holding them to the shore. They asked only what God had promised, "These signs shall follow them that believe; in My name they shall cast out devils. . . . They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." (Mark 16: 17, 18.) But they believed; they launched out into God's faithfulness, neither occupied with themselves, nor yet with their enemies.

"Simon, answering, said unto Jesus, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing." Oh when will men learn that by their toiling they never will take anything that is worth taking.

We Have Toiled.

Peter was indeed among the shallows. When we toil it is always night. Oh how good it is to come to the end of our toiling, and to see its uselessness! How many an evangelist gets discouraged, and says, "I have toiled until I am almost worn out; I have gone from house to house, I have entreated the people to attend the meetings, I have carefully prepared my subjects, I have had good singing, I have obtained special preachers, etc." Ah, dear friend, all this is working in the shallows; it is man attempting to do the work of the Holy Ghost. The weight of lost souls in a place who are living as though there were no heaven and no hell, as though there was neither eternal life, eternal death, nor any judgment day, is too heavy a burden for you to carry; it needs the present power of the Holy Ghost. As soon can you create a world by your own unaided strength as move a mass of unsaved people out of spiritual death into spiritual life. And yet we are called to do it. Our vocation is to turn men "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among all them which are sanctified by faith that is in" Christ. (Acts 26: 18.) Where, then, is the power? Simon Peter said, "Nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net."

At Thy Word, I Will.

Now Peter was in his place; he was no longer the master fisherman, the master worker, but a simple, obedient instrument of Christ. Now he undertakes nothing, but only carries out what another commands. This is the secret of power. This is to "launch out into the deep." Our own efforts are in the shallows, the works which God does through us are in the depths of His almightiness. Our own efforts lead only to disappointment. How many will say: "I believe God heals the sick; I can believe for others, but for myself I cannot. I have prayed, and believed, and claimed the blessing, and praised God for it, and I am no better." The very fact that you mention what you have done in connection with your healing is evidence that you had some expectation from yourself. Get out of the shallows. What is there in God's heart concerning you? Has He ceased to be thee," because your faith and your prayers fail? Does He heal only those who over-persuade Him by their earnestness? Or does He heal "without money and without price" because He "took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses? Would He rather see us racked with pain, helpless and weak, or strong and joyous in His own strength? Launch out into the depth of what God is.

"The Lord that Healeth

Peter turned away from his own doings, and threw himself entirely on the dependability of the Word of Jesus. In the very waters where he had cast it over and over again in vain, he now let down the net in simple dependence on Him who calleth those things which be not as though they were. (Rom. 4: 17.) Peter's experience as a fisherman went for nothing here; he knew the habits of the fish, and had good reason for doing his fishing by night, but here was One present who had made the laws which governed the fish and all creation, and Simon trusted Him. When the time came for drawing the net they found it heavily laden; so much so that it broke, and they had to "beckon to their partners which were in the other ship to come and help them." But even then they were in a dilemma; the fish filled both the ships, and they began to sink! "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse"—above all the tithe of your heart's trust in Me—"and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." (Mal. 3: 10.) Peter which had been at work; instead of exulting over the success, he fell upon his knees and acknowledged his unbelief. "Depart from me," he said, "for I am a sinful man, O Lord." It is a good sign when a Christian worker is crushed and emptied, rather than exalted, by success. The uplifted worker sees his own share in the work very strongly; the crushed worker is overawed that the mighty God should so come down as to link Himself with such a fellow-worker as he is. "For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of fishes which they had taken: and so also James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men," or, "Follow Me; and I will make you fishers of men." (Matt. 4: 19.) Did Jesus know beforehand that Peter would actually take upon himself to rebuke his Lord? Did He know that Peter, in his selfishness, would propose to establish himself, with James and John, Moses and Elijah, on the mount of transfiguration, and leave the lost world to perish? Did He know that Peter would have so little of His spirit that he would want to limit forgiveness of his brethren? Did He know that Peter could not so much as forsake all to follow Him without asking what he should get by it (Matt. 16: 22; 17: 4; 18: 21; 19: 27), and that this very Peter would one day deny Him with oaths and curses? (Matt. 26: 74.) Yes, He knew it all. But Jesus and loved Peter for what He was going to make of him, and He anticipated the time when that Peter, not John or any other, should be His leading witness on the day of Pentecost, and should indeed "catch men." "And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all and followed Him," i. e., all they knew of at the time—their nets, their ships, but not their self-life. Yet Jesus did not reject them because they did not see or enter into the true Christ-life all at once. He bore with them wonderfully. Oh, the long suffering of God! "By the space of forty years, suffered He their manners (the children of Israel) in the wilderness." (Acts 13: 18.) "Consider Him which endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself." (Heb. 12: 3.) There is wondrous patience in our God. Oh let us take refuge in Him, and in every moment and every circumstance of our life launch out into Him, without fear, away from things, away from people, away from ourselves, into Him.

Recognized the Master Hand

Looked Far on Ahead,

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can be obtained.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Our Contemporaries, One in New York and one in Boston, are not happy about this newspaper. Bless your dear old souls! Go ahead, brethren, and make the best paper you can, and widen your circulation as fast as possible. We wish for you all happiness. The world is large enough for all of us three!

The World's Fair is a Subject Settled. Now the rival cities will cease saying mean things about each other. No city is advantaged by belittling other cities. Each city, like each individual, has characteristics good and bad. I do not know of one city that we could afford to spare from the procession of our national prosperity. It is a lesson that all cities, as well as all persons, should learn, that we cannot build ourselves up by pulling others down. So far as I know, all our cities are advancing. Larger churches, better school-houses, mightier commercial developments and more noble men, and more good women than they ever had before. So let New York and Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Tacoma and Seattle, and all approximate cities, speak only in kindness of their neighbors. Wherever the World's Fair is held, let us all, as far as possible, attend it.

Cooper's Institute Was the Mother of Most of the free libraries, now being opened week by week in the cities. The munificence of Peter Cooper suggested to all millionairessdom how a man might do while living that which the affluent sometimes did after they were dead by "Last Will and Testament." How many quarrels over the property of a deceased father or uncle might be avoided if the example of Andrew Carnegie were followed! That is the way the old fight between labor and capital is to be ended. All the prejudice on the part of the hard-working people against the rich will cease when men of large means, by the endowment of libraries and churches and hospitals, show their interest in the less prosperous. Communism would be forever silenced, and the lives of multitudes of the unfortunate would be illumined. We are glad that the roll of public benefactors is being enlarged by the week, and the day, and the minute.

Rev. Phillips Brooks's Preaching at the Head of Wall Street is just what we want. Think of one of his good sermons rolling out from the door of Trinity Church and clear down to Wall Street Ferry! The fact is, we want more gospel in the business life of America. If Wall Street should get converted, all the other streets might catch the benign influence. The same blessing is going forth from John Street daily meetings and Fulton Street prayer-meeting. What a help to business men if, toward noon, finding some big note to pay and no money to pay it, or some annoyance or disappointment accosting them, they can drop in an hour at a place of prayer or preaching, and have their heart encouraged and their nerves quieted! By the time they get back to their office or store again, they would think of some new way of getting through the business exigency, or if they suffered loss they would have grace to bear it. What is the matter with the old churches of New York and Boston and Philadelphia, from the region of which all the families have moved, leaving those churches surrounded by stores and offices and shops? I think the providential indication is that they should be opened on week days, and sermons should be preached and prayers offered for business men who can run in a little while and be helped and reconstructed. Such churches might do more good than when they were surrounded by dwelling-houses.

Let the doors of the old churches that still stand in the business districts, every day of the week some time between 12 and 4 o'clock, resound with doxology.

A Legal Decision on the Quorum Question is likely to be sought. On February 27 the Democratic party in the House refrained from voting on the question of unseating Mr. John O. Pendleton, of West Virginia, and seating his opponent, Mr. George W. Atkinson. The result was that only 162 votes were cast, or one less than a quorum. The Speaker counted, under the rules, the members present who did not vote, and ruled that a quorum was present. It is now proposed that Mr. Pendleton shall apply to the Speaker at the end of the month for a certificate of salary, and, being refused, apply to the courts for a mandamus. This would raise the question of the legality of the rule by which his unseating was declared valid by the Speaker.

The Exclusion of an American Native Clergyman under the Alien Contract Labor law is another of the anomalies of which that clumsily worded act has been fruitful. On February 27 Acting Secretary Batcheller informed the trustees of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Lewisburg, Pa., that the Canadian clergyman called by them is regarded as an "alien" within the meaning of the law. In answer to the general question, as to whether that law prohibits the landing in this country of a foreign clergyman who comes under a contract, Mr. Batcheller refers them to the decision of the court in the case of the Church of the Holy Trinity of New York, now pending before the United States Supreme Court on appeal. The decision in that case was in effect that the law prohibits the landing of foreign clergymen who come under contract. The minister in the present case was born in the United States of American parents, and when three years of age was taken to Canada by his father, who subsequently became a citizen of that Dominion. He is thus technically an alien, and as the law is now interpreted he is excluded. There is, however, no reason why the church should not withdraw its invitation, and renew it whenever the clergyman happens to be on a visit to New York.

Reports of a Grievous Loss of Life by the Bursting of a dam come from Arizona. Two prospectors who arrived in Prescott, A. T., on February 24 stated that on the night of February 21 they camped near the dam which the Walnut Grove Storage Company erected across the Hassayampa River, about forty miles from Prescott. The company stores the water there in the winter to use for irrigation purposes in the summer. The water was very high, say the prospectors, at nightfall, and shortly after midnight they were awakened by a loud roar. The dam had burst, and the water was rushing down the cañon in a solid wall, apparently eighty feet high. In two hours the three billion cubic feet of water in the dam had flowed out in a mighty torrent, carrying all before it. A huge boulder which must have weighed a hundred tons was swept lightly away. What the total loss of life has been can never be known, as gangs of workmen were at points lower down the river, who it is feared must have been drowned. Thirty-seven dead bodies were found, but that is likely to be only a small portion of the loss of life. The officials on duty at the dam saw the danger before the catastrophe occurred, and sent a messenger to warn the people lower down the river. Unhappily the messenger went into a saloon and became intoxicated, and the warning was not given. It is supposed that he and another messenger who was sent later were both drowned. The dam was built in 1886, and was believed to be of enormous strength, capable of resisting any pressure to which it might be subjected.

An Interview with Louis Kossuth, the Veteran Hungarian patriot, was reported last week by the Italian correspondent of the New York Herald. Kossuth is now eighty-eight years old, and during the past twenty years he has lived in Turin, steadfastly refusing to return to his native land. He has been a quiet but close observer of events during his exile, and his remarks to the correspondent proved him to have been less easily deceived than some more active participants in them. He expressed his belief that the social industrial question was the paramount question of the day. He appears, however, to have no faith in any of the remedies that have been proposed. Having dismissed the idea of obtaining help from monarchy, which he believed was going down the world over, he said: "But republicanism will not cure the malady, for is there not in America the nearest possible approach to a real republic, with an enfranchised democracy free education and popular institutions. Still, America has this social malady too. There seems to be no remedy." Neither in socialism has the aged statesman any faith. His only hope was in a complete reorganization of the world under new conditions. Therein he is in accord with students of prophecy, though, unlike them, he does not perceive the means of realizing it. While they look forward for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, Kossuth is expecting that "some day the present population may be swept from the surface of the earth, and a new race, capable of a new civilization, may appear. A cataclysm is the only hope of solution."

The Emperor William's Invitations to an International Labor Conference have been accepted by England, France, Austria, Italy, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, and Belgium. An amusing suggestion was made in the Senate of Belgium when the subject of the Conference was being discussed by that body. It was embodied in the request of Mr. Van Put that the delegates of Belgium to the Berlin Labor Conference be instructed to propose that another international conference be held to arrange for a general disarmament. The Emperor would probably deem the suggestion irrelevant, yet a disarmament would do more for the relief of workingmen than will any remedy the Conference may devise.

Spain has been the First European Nation to express the alarm prevalent in Europe about the probable results of the Pan-American Conference now sitting in Washington. On February 27 the conference was the subject of discussion in the Cortes. In the course of the proceedings one deputy predicted that a South American policy injurious to Spain would be adopted. Another deputy said that the South American policy of the United States excited alarm in Europe, and was dangerous to the whole Latin race. This policy had always shown a profound dislike for Spain and Spanish America. The "Monroe doctrine" of America for the Americans really meant America for the United States. The only consolation which the Spanish Government was able to administer for the relief of the apprehensions of the deputies was the prediction that the Pan-American Conference would prove to be a fiasco as far as its main object was concerned.

Heroic Measures have Become Necessary to maintain order in the French Legislature. There has been increasing difficulty for some time past in dealing with Deputies who, being called to order directed to take their seats, or otherwise referred to, insolently defy the command of the Speaker, so that the authority of the House, as represented by the Speaker, is seldom respected unless actual force is appealed to, as was recently the case, when a military guard had to be called in to remove members from the floor of the House. This trouble reached its climax in the recent revolt of the Boulangists, who practically made a riot in the House. It became evident then that their view of the relation of members to the Chamber, if indulged in by others, would make Parliamentary proceeding impossible. Hence a new rule has been made which affixes a penalty to every refusal on the part of a member to obey the order of the President. The penalty is that the member shall be suspended from his functions, and excluded from the Chamber of Deputies during thirty-six sessions of the Chamber. Vigorous protests were made against the adoption of the rule, but it was passed by a vote of 277 to 236.

The Mobbing of Mormon Missionaries in London, which is reported by cable, shows that the English people are awaking to the evil results of their work. On February 23 a band of Mormons began an open-air meeting in the East of London, and were gaining the attention of a large crowd when an intelligent man interrupted them and told the meeting that not very long ago a young woman, one of their number, who had been induced to emigrate by Mormon missionaries, had returned to her mother's home, shoeless and starving, with two little children, having tramped the whole distance from Liverpool. He concluded by producing the young woman in question, and asking if they wanted more of their sisters to be served as she had been. This excited the crowd, who groaned and hooted. Finally the missionaries were attacked, and would have been in serious peril of their lives had not a passing vehicle furnished them with the means of escape from their assailants.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $24.25. They are from Philadelphia, Pa., $5; Paw Paw, Mich., $1; Jacksonville, Fla., $5; Galt, Ont., Can., $3; Brooklyn, N. Y., $1; Shelton, Neb., $1.50; Franklinville, N. Y., $1; Hespeler, Ont., Can., $5; Petrolia, Pa., 50 cts.; Maywood, Ill., 50 cts.; Highland, Ill., 75 cts. A letter recently received from one of the ministers who have been supplied through this fund says that the help he has derived from the journal during the past year has opened the meaning of the Bible more clearly to him than he ever supposed to be possible, and that his congregation has increased largely as he has been enabled to preach more lucidly. What is still more gratifying is his statement that God is blessing his work more than before to the salvation of souls. The small sum of money which paid that minister's subscription appears to have been, in the true sense of the words, a productive investment.

A Life was Sacrificed for an Umbrella in New-ark, N. J., on February 18. Early on that morning, while most of the occupants of three large houses were still in bed there was a cry of "Fire!" A baker in the basement of one of the houses had accidentally overturned a pan of fat on the range; it had ignited, and the flame spread to the wood-work around. He did his utmost to extinguish it, but without avail. He then ran to the fire-alarm box, where the key was kept in a saloon, which was closed. He hastened back, and aroused the sleeping people, who hurried on their clothes, and ran down-stairs. No time was to be lost, for the buildings were beginning to burn fiercely. On the third floor was a lady who was on a visit to the family occupying that flat. She rose with her friends, and started on her way to the street; but when she had descended one flight of stairs she remembered that she had left an umbrella behind. She ran back to her room to get it. When she again set out on her way, the stairs had caught fire, and her escape was cut off. It was impossible to save her, and after a fire was put out, her charred body was found among the ruins. She could not have realized the gravity of her situation, or she would not have imperiled her life to save her umbrella. Thousands of men are making a mistake, the folly of which differs from hers only in degree. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" (Mark 8 : 36.)

A Suit on an Ante-nuptial Contract was Tried in Kingston, N. Y., on February 14. A short time ago a prosperous citizen of Ulster County died, and on his will was opened it was found that he had bequeathed all his property to his children and grandchildren. His widow thereupon entered a claim for a share of the estate. She was confronted with a document which she had signed in 1867, shortly before her marriage. It was a legal contract which she and the man who was to become her husband had agreed that neither of them should have any interest in the estate of the other. It appeared that though in 1867 the wife was the richer of the two, her husband had so prospered in the interval that at his death her fortune was trivial compared with his. She had always expected that she would share in his estate if he died before her, in spite of the contract. She also claimed that the contract was not good in law. The court, however, decided that the contract was valid, and she is therefore excluded from participation in her husband's estate. It frequently happens that those who enter into union with Christ are tempted to repudiate the pledges they made to Him in the joy of conversion. But it is not with them, as with the woman, in His provision for them that they are disappointed. Their difficulty is in renouncing their love of the world and its riches for His sake, as they promised to do. (James 4 : 4.)

Suggestive Domestic Trouble Came Before a court at Yonkers, N. Y., for adjustment a short time ago. A remarkably attractive German young man was the complainant. She said that before leaving her own country she was engaged to a young man, who, in order to earn a sufficient income to marry on, emigrated to America. He promised to send her funds to follow him as soon as he had established himself. He did not keep his promise, but the girl worked hard and had saved sufficient money to pay for a steerage passage. On her arrival here she found her lover already married to another woman. She was in great distress, and did not know what to do, as all the money had been spent on the journey. A Western farmer saw her, and was attracted by her beauty. He could not speak German, nor she English, but through an interpreter he made her a proposal of marriage, which she accepted. The couple settled at Yonkers, N. Y., where, for a time, they lived happily. The wife speedily acquired a smattering of English, and as soon as they could understand each other they began to quarrel. Matters grew worse until the man struck his wife, and then she appealed to the judge. As the husband was evidently sorry and promised not to repeat the offense, the judge discharged him with an admonition. In relating the incident recently his honor expressed the opinion that most matrimonial troubles had a similar origin. They proceeded from words more frequently than from actions. The fact, which is noticed in other relations of life, emphasizes the Apostolic warning. (James 3 : 5-8.)

A Strange Discovery of a Man by a Dog is Described in a Chicago journal. It states that a farmer named Barber, on removing from Ashtabula, Ohio, to Lyndon, Wis., left behind him with the people who rented his farm a dog, which was supposed to be of no value. A year afterward, late one night, Mr. Barber heard a dog whining and scratching at the door of his home in Wisconsin, and, on getting up and opening his door, what was his astonishment to see the little dog he had left in Ohio jump upon him with joy and lick his hands. He was so interested in the matter that he wrote to Ashtabula to find out how the dog could have discovered him. The reply stated that the people to whom he had given the dog had removed to Wisconsin, taking the dog with them. They arrived at Sheboygan, Wis., on a day when Mr. Barber also visited that city, but he did not see them. The dog, however, must have come across the track of his former master in the street, and so have traced him to his home, sixteen miles away. When those who call Jesus "Master" are separated from Him, they may find Him again by following in His steps of beneficent service. (John 13 : 13-15.)

A Railroad Passenger's Narrow Escape from death was described recently by the conductor of the train who witnessed the event. He said that a few years ago, as his train was going through an open section of country in New Jersey during the prevalence of a wind that was almost a blizzard, a passenger, who proved to be an important member of the State Government, attempted to pass from one car to another. The statesman was a small man of slight build, and as he stepped upon the platform between the two cars, the wind lifted his hat. He involuntarily raised both hands to keep it on his head, and the next instant the wind lifted him, too, off his feet. It carried him clear of the train and deposited him on a bank of frozen snow a few feet from the track. The train was stopped, and when his friends reached him they found that he had sustained no dangerous injuries. His arms and legs were somewhat bruised, but he was able, with a little assistance, to make his way to the train again and continue his journey. His escape from death seemed almost miraculous. In the storms of political life the statesman's intellectual capacity enabled him to hold his own, but in resistance to the elements, physical capacity is essential to success. A storm is coming in which neither physical nor intellectual power will avail, but only those who will be safe who are strong in faith. Of all others it will be said, "The east wind carrieth him away: a storm hurleth him out of his place." (Job. 27 : 21.)

The Propensity of Public Speakers and Writers to indulge in slanderous attacks on the characters of prominent men has of late been more active than usual. The fact is deplorable, not only on account of its effect on the public mind, but because it degrades the character of those who should be public teachers. A man who has the opportunity of raising the moral tone of the community is culpable when he neglects that opportunity and gives his time and labor to smirching the reputation of some other man who is held in general respect. We have a loathing for an animal whose favorite food is offal, and the same sense moves us to disgust with a man whose favorite subject of discourse is the faults he sees, or thinks he sees, in his fellows. There are times when the public safety demands that it should be put on its guard against evil doers who are seeking to gain more power, or to attain positions of influence in which they may do greater evil; but when a journalist publishes a detailed narrative of the domestic infelicities of a great and just judge, or holds a patriotic and sagacious statesman up to ridicule by a witty and spiteful description of his personal eccentricities, he is engaged in a shameful occupation. Even when his statement is true it is in bad taste, and when it is false, as it too frequently is, it is criminal. Christian men will do well to mark their disapprobation of all such attacks. They usually proceed from an impression that the public enjoys them, and they will cease when it is made clear that the best part of the public is disgusted with them. While the Christian holds fast by his faith, and cherishes and feeds upon his hope, let him not let go his charity, which is the greatest of the three, and which "thinketh no evil," and "rejoiceth not in iniquity." (1 Cor. 13 : 4-7.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. Dr. John A. Broadus has been invited to take the lectureship in Christian Evidences in Johns Hopkins University.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor is asking for a thousand evangelists for China, to preach there under the auspices of the China Inland Mission.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Bangor, Me., has decided on plans for a new building to cost $30,000, exclusive of fitting.

A Spanish class has been added to the Sunday-school of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, New York. The school had previously set apart one room in which only Chinese was spoken.

In one week recently 185 new Societies of Christian Endeavor were reported. Of these, so far as the denominations were known, forty-three were Presbyterian, twenty-six Methodist, twenty Baptist, and fifteen Congregational.

The new General Secretary of the Societies of Christian Endeavor is Mr. J. W. Baer, of Rochester, Minn. He formerly had charge of the work in southern Minnesota, in which he established a reputation for consecration and energy.

A contemporary states, on the authority of a physician of eminence, that the effects of La Grippe on the whole country have been as disastrous as an average epidemic of Cholera would be. Many of the victims are still suffering from nervous prostration.

Rev. Edward Judson announces that the erection of the Judson Memorial Church will be commenced on May 1, and its construction will go on "as long as the money holds out." About $100,000 remains on hand after paying $111,000 for the site of the church. $40,000 will be required to finish the work.

The first Young Men's Christian Association in the United States Army has recently been established at Fortress Monroe, Va. Although only two months old it now has eighty members. Books and papers for the library would be gratefully received at the office of the depot-quartermaster, No. 25 Whitehall St., New York.

The Rev. W. E. Needham, the youngest of the six Needham brothers, who are all preachers or evangelists, is holding special meetings in his newly built church in Germantown, Philadelphia. He is assisted by his brother Thomas, who has returned from his evangelistic work in South America. Many young people are among the converts.

The People's Mission, 97 Varick Street, New York, is in need of funds. Beside its religious and philanthropic work, the mission undertakes the conduct of legal disputes in cases where the poor are oppressed and unable to pay a lawyer to protect their interests. The appeal for help to continue the work is signed by Hiram Duryea and other well-known men.

Mr. D. L. Moody's Bible Readings in the Collegiate Church, New York, last week attracted large audiences. The applications for tickets were so greatly in excess of the capacity of the church that a supplementary meeting was held at 11:30 A. M., in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, at Fifty-third Street, to which Mr. Moody went at the conclusion of the earlier service. The Readings are continued this week.

The China Inland Mission has established its headquarters for North America at Toronto. The council includes some of the best-known missionary workers in Canada. The representatives of the United States on the council are the Rev. W. J. Erdman, of Asheville, N. C., and J. S. Helmer, of Lockport, N. Y. The Secretary is H. W. Frost, formerly of Attica, N. Y.

Rev. A. B. Simpson announces that the annual Convention for Christian Life and Work will be held March 10-17 inclusive, at the Gospel Tabernacle, Eighth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, New York. The dedication of the new Tabernacle, Missionary Training College, and Berachah Home will take place during the Convention. Visitors needing accommodations may address the Secretary, 692 Eighth Avenue, New York.

Rev. Moses D. Hoge, D. D., of Richmond, Va., celebrated on February 27 the forty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate of the Second Presbyterian Church in that city. There was a large assembly in the Academy of Music, at which Governor McKinney presided and Dr. John Hall, of New York, made the principal speech. Dr. Hoge said that out of the sixty-three people with whom he started the church nearly half a century ago, only one is now living.

THE TWO HEAVENS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."—Revelation 7: 16, 17.

"They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them; for He that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall He guide them."—Isa. 42: 10.

The Two Barriers to the Promised Land—The Red Sea Crossed Before the Jordan—One Barrier to Heaven Crossed at Conversion—Streets now Open to the Believer—I. The Heaven Above—Includes the Supply of every Need—The Removal of every Ill—A Good Disease to Die of—Drinking at the Fountain—II. The Heaven Below—A Parallel Picture—How the Believer's Wants are Supplied on Earth—His Steps Protected—Led by His Lord—The Inexhaustible Fountain—The Holy Spirit's Teaching.

JORDAN is a very narrow stream. It made a sort of boundary for Canaan; but it hardly sufficed to divide it from the rest of the world, since a part of the possessions of Israel was on the eastern side of it. Those who saw the Red Sea divided, and all Israel marching through its depths, must have thought it a small thing for the Jordan to be dried up, and for the people to pass through it to Canaan. The greatest barrier between believers and heaven has been safely passed. In the day when we believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, we passed through our Red Sea, and the Egyptians of our sins were drowned. Great was the marvel of mercy! To enter fully into our eternal inheritance, we have only to cross the narrow stream of death; and scarcely that, for the kingdom of heaven lieth on this side of the river as well as on the other.

I start by reminding you of this, because we are very apt to imagine that we must endure a kind of purgatory while we are on earth, and then, if we are believers, we may break loose into heaven after we have shuffled off this mortal coil. But it is not so.

Heaven Must be in Us before we can be in heaven; and while we are yet in the wilderness, we may spy out the land, and may eat of the clusters of Eshcol. There is no such gulf between earth and heaven as gloomy thoughts suggest. Our dreams should not be of an abyss, but of a ladder whose foot is on the earth, but whose top is in glory. There would not be one-hundredth part so much difference between earth and heaven if we did not live so far below our privileges. We live on the ground, when we might rise as on the wings of eagles. We are all too conscious of this body. Oh that we were oftener where Paul was when he said, "Whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth"! If not caught up into Paradise, yet may our daily life be as the garden of the Lord.

Listen a while, ye children of God; for I speak to you, and not to others. To unbelievers, what can I say? They know nothing of spiritual things, and will not believe them, though a man should show them unto them. They are spiritually blind and dead: the Lord quicken and enlighten them! But to you that are begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, I speak with joy. Think of what you are by grace, and remember that what you will be in glory is already outlined and foreshadowed in your life in Christ. Being born from above, you are the same men that will be in heaven. You have within you the divine life—the same life which is to enjoy eternal immortality. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life;" it is your possession now. As the quickened ones of the Holy Spirit, the life which is to last on forever has begun in you.

Look ye, beloved: the inheritance that is to be yours to-morrow is, in very truth, yours to-day; for in Christ Jesus you have received the inheritance, and you have the earnest of it in the present possession of the Holy Spirit, who dwells in you. It has been well said, that all the streets of the New Jerusalem begin here. See, here is which leads to the central palace of God; and now we set our foot on it. "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God." The heavenly street of Victory, where are the palms and the harps, surely we are at the lower end of it here; for "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Everything that is to be ours in the home country is, in measure, ours at this moment. As sleeps the oak within the acorn, so slumbereth heaven within the first cry of "Abba, Father!" Ay, and the hallujahs of eternity lie hidden within the groans of penitence. "God be merciful to me a sinner" has in its bowels the endless "We praise thee, O Lord." O saints, little do you know how much you have in what you have!

The High Street of Peace,

Thus I have conducted you to my two texts, which I have put together as an illustration of what I would teach. In the New Testament text we have the heavenly state above; and in the Old Testament text we have the state of the Lord's flock while on the way to their eternal rest. Very singular, to my mind, is the sameness of the description of the flock in the fold, and the flock feeding in the ways. The verses are almost word for word the same. When John would describe the white-robed host, he can say no more of them than Isaiah said of the pilgrim band, led by the God of mercy.

I. First, let us consider

The Heaven Above.

The beloved John tells us what he heard and saw. The first part of the description assures us of the supply of every need. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more." In heaven no need is unsatisfied, and no desire ungratified. They can have no want as to their bodies, for they are as the angels of God. Children of poverty, your straitness of bread will soon be ended, and your care shall end in plenty. The worst hunger is that of the heart; and this will be unknown above. There is a ravenous hunger, fierce as a wolf, which possesses some men: all the world cannot satisfy their greed. A thousand worlds would be scarce a mouthful for their lust. Now, in heaven there are no sinful and selfish desires. The ravaging of covetousness or of ambition enters not the sacred gate. In glory there are no desires which should not be, and those desires which should be are all so tempered or so fulfilled that they can never become the cause of sorrow or pain; for, "they shall hunger no more."

And as there is in heaven a supply for every need, so is there the removal of every ill. Thus saith the Spirit, "Neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat." We are such poor creatures that excess of good soon becomes evil to us. I love the sun; if you had ever seen it shining in the clear blue heavens, you would not wonder that I speak with emphasis. Life, joy, and health stream from it in lands where it is enough of pleasure to bask in its beams. But too much of the sun overpowers us; his warmth makes men faint, his stroke destroys them. Too great a blessing may prove too heavy a cargo for the ship of life. Hence from dangers which, at the first sight, look as if they were not perilous. In the beatific state, if these bodies of flesh and blood were still our dwelling-place, we could not live under the celestial conditions. Even here, too much of spiritual joy may prostrate a man and cast him into a swoon. I would like to die of the disease; but still, a sickness cometh upon one to whom heavenly things are revealed in great measure, and enjoyed with special vividness. But when the redemption of the body has come about, and the soul has been strengthened with all might, we shall be able to be at home with our God, who is a consuming fire.

We Need Guarding

But, further, the description of the heavenly life has this conspicuous feature—the leading of the Lamb. "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them." It is heaven to be by Him who is the Great Sacrifice. In this present state we have earthly shepherds; but when God graciously feeds us by men after His own heart, whom He Himself instructs, we prize them much. Those whom the Lord ordains to feed His flock we love, and their faith we follow, for the Lord makes them of great service to us; but still, they are only underlings, and we do not forget their imperfections, and their dependence upon their Lord. But in the Gloryland "that Great Shepherd of the sheep" will Himself personally minister to us.

Personally Shepherded

Then the last point of the description is full of meaning. The drinking at the fountain is the secret of the ineffable bliss. "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of water." We are compelled to thirst at times, like the poor flock of slaughter which we see driven through our London streets; and, alas! we stop at the very puddles by the way, and would refresh ourselves at them, if we could. This will never happen to us when we reach the land where flows the river of the water of life. Of the wells of earth we may say, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again;" but when we go beyond temporal supplies, and live upon God Himself, then the soul receives a draught of far truer and more enduring refreshment; even as our Lord Jesus said to the woman at the well, "He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up in everlasting life."

Inexhaustible Wells.

"He shall lead them unto fountains." There eternal source is unveiled: they not only receive mercy, but they see how it comes, and whence flows: they not only drink, but they drink with the eye upon the glorious Well-head. Did you ever see a boy on a hot day lie down, when he has been thirsty, and put his mouth down to the top of water at the brim of the well? How he draws the cool refreshment! Drink away, poor child! has no fear that he will drink the well dry, nor have we. How pleasant it is to take from the inexhaustible! That which we drink is all the sweeter, cause of the measureless remainder. O my God, in thee I feel that I have not only all that I can contain, but all that containeth me. In thee I live, move with perfect content. Such is heaven! Shall have bliss within and bliss around us; we ourselves dwelling by the well for ever.

Thus I could occupy all the morning with my head; but I must not tarry, or I shall miss my point, which is to show you that, even here, we may have line glory and in the wilderness we may have pattern of things in the heavens. This you will see by carefully referring to the second text.

II. Let us consider

The Heaven Below.

I think I have heard you saying, "Ah! this is about heaven; but we have not yet come to it, we are still wrestling here below." Well, well; I cannot go to heaven at once, heaven can come to us. The words which I will now read refer to days of earth, the times when the sheep feed in the ways, and come from the north and from the south at the call of the shepherd. "They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them; for He that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall He guide them." Look at the former passage and at this. The whole description is the same. When I noted this parallel, I stood amazed. John, thou a great artist; I entreat thee, paint me a picture of heaven! Isaiah, thou also hast a great soul; paint me a picture of the life of the saintly ones on earth when their Lord is with them! I have both pictures. They are masterpieces. I look at them, they are so much alike, that I wonder if there is not some mistake. Surely they are depicting the same thing. The forms, the lights and shades, the touches and the tones are not only alike, but identical. Amazed, I cry, "Which is heaven, and which is the heavenly life on earth?"

All Wants Supplied.

First, here is a promise that every want shall be supplied. "They shall not hunger nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them." We are the Lord's people and are trusting in Him; this shall be true in every possible sense. Listen, "your bread shall be given you, your water shall be sure." You shall have no anxious thought concerning what you shall eat, and what you shall drink. But, mark you, if you should know the trials of poverty, and should be greatly tried, and be very low in temporal things, yet the Lord's presence and sensible consolations shall so sustain you that you shall be spiritually and inwardly you shall know neither hunger nor thirst. Many saints have found rich consolation in poverty, ease in labor, rest in pain, and delight in affliction. There may be many things that you would like to have, and you may never have them; but then you will prefer to be without them, saying, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt."

I do not mean that the saints find a full content in this world's goods, but that they find such content in God, that with them or without them they live in wealth. A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of that which he possesseth; and of a man who has had next to nothing that could be seen with eyes or handled with hands, has been very millionaire for true wealth in possessing the kingdom of the Most High. The Lord has brought some of us into that state in which we have no things in Him; and it is true to us, "They shall hunger nor thirst."

Then, next, there is such a thing as having all evil removed from you while yet in this wilderness. "Neither shall the heat nor sun smite them."

pose God favors you with prosperity; if you live near to God you will not be rendered proud or worldly minded by your prosperity. Suppose you should become popular because of your usefulness; you will not be puffed up if Christ Jesus is your continual leader and shepherd. If you live near to Him, you will be lowly. If your days are spent in sunlight, and you go from joy to joy, yet still no sunstroke shall smite you. A man that is without God may be in the safest part of the road, and traverse a level way, and yet he will stumble. It is not the road, but the Lord that keepeth the pilgrim's foot. O heir of heaven, commit thou thy way unto God, and make Him thine all in all, and rise above the creature into the Creator, and then shalt thou hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the heat nor the sun smite thee.

Further, it is said that on earth we may enjoy the leading of the Lord. See how it is put: "For he that hath mercy on them shall lead them." Here we have not quite the same words as in the Revelation, for there we read, "The Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall lead them." Yet the sense is but another shade of the same meaning. Oh, but that is a sweet, sweet name: is it not? "He that hath mercy on them." He has saved them, and so has had mercy on them. Yes, that is very precious, but the word is sweeter still—"He that hath mercy on them," He that is always having mercy on them, He that follows them with mercy all the days of their lives, He that continually pardons, upholds, supplies, strengthens, and thus daily loadeth them with benefits: "He that hath mercy on them shall lead them."

Do you know, beloved friends, what it is to be Led of the Lord?

Many are led by their own tastes and fancies. They will go wrong. Others are led by their own judgments. But these are not infallible, and they may go wrong. More are led by other people; these may go right, but it is far from likely that they will. He that is led of God, he is the happy man, he shall not err. He shall be conducted providentially in a right way to the city of habitations. Commit your way unto the Lord; trust also in Him, and He will bring it to pass. It may be a rough way, but it must be a right way if we follow the track of the Lord's feet.

I do not know anything more delightful than to be such a fool, as the world will call you, as to yield your intellect to the teaching of the Lord; and to be so weak that you cannot judge, but accept His will; and so incapable that even to will and to do must be wrought in you of the Lord. Oh, to be so unselfed as to take anything from Christ far more gladly than you would choose of your own accord! If your Lord puts His hand into the bitter box, you will think the potion sweet; and if He scourge, you will thank Him for being so kind as to think of you at all. When you get to that point, that you are as a sheep to whom God Himself is the Shepherd, it is well with you. Then you will realize, even in the pastures of the wilderness, how the rain from heaven drops upon the inheritance of the Lord, and refreshes it when it is weary. "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

But now the last touch is the drinking at the spring-head. We were not surprised to find, in our description of heaven, that the Lamb led them to the fountains of waters; but we are delighted to find that, here below, "even by the springs of water shall he guide them." Beloved, covet earnestly this drinking at the springs. It is not all who profess to be Christians who will know what I am talking about this morning: they will think I have got into the way of the mystics, and am dreaming of things unpractical. I will not argue with them; let me speak to those who understand me.

Beloved in the Lord, you can even now live upon God himself, and there is no living comparable to it. You can get and come to the river of the water of life, even as they do in heaven. To live by second causes is a very secondary life; to live on the First Cause is the first of living. I exhort you to do this with regard to the inspired Word. This is a day of man's opinions, views, judgments, criticisms. Leave them all, good, bad, and indifferent, and come to this Book, which is the pure fount of inspiration undefiled. When you study the Word of God, live upon it as His Word. Blessed are they to whom the Word is meat and drink. They quit the cistern of man for the fountain of God; and they do well.

Beyond all the Cisterns,

Yet I would exhort you not even to tarry at the letter of God's word, but believingly and humbly advance to drink from the Holy Ghost Himself. He will not teach you anything which is not in the Bible, but He will take of the things of Christ, and will show them unto you. A truth may be like a jewel in the Word of God, and yet we may not see its brilliance until the Holy Spirit holds it up in the light and bids us mark its lustre. The Spirit of God brings up the pearl from and sets it where its radiance is perceived by the believing eye. If ever you get a hold of truth in that way, you will never give it up. A man who has learned truth from one minister, may unlearn it from another minister; but he that has been taught it of the Holy Ghost has a treasure which no man taketh from him.

The Depths of Revelation,

Beloved, we would exhort you to drink of the springs of living water while you are here. Christ's presence, and fountain drinking—give me these two things, and I ask no more. The Lamb to feed me, and the fountain to supply me; these are enough. Lord, whom have I in heaven but thee? Come poverty, come sickness, come shame, come casting out by brethren; yea, come death itself, nothing can I want, and nothing can harm me if the Lamb be my Shepherd and the Lord my fountain.

Before another Sunday some of us may be in heaven. Before this month has finished, some of us may know infinitely more about the eternal world than the whole assembly of divines could tell us. Others of us may have to linger here a while. Yet are we not in banishment. Here we dwell with the King for His work. We will endeavor to keep close to our Master, and if we may serve Him and see His face, we will not grudge the glorified their fuller joys. The Lord bless you. Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Highland Woman's Trust.—Mr. D. M'Lauchlan, the evangelist, relates: "There was an aged believer in the Highlands, who had great faith in Christ. One day a visitor said to her, 'What if after all you should fall, and falling perish?' 'Oh,' was her reply, 'whenever did you hear of a person falling from the centre of a Highland rock? And I am on a far surer and firmer Rock than any in the Highlands; I am firmly fixed on the Rock of Ages, and He is between me and the pit.' Thank God, as long as we remain on the Rock we are safe. The waves of the world, and the fury of the prince of the power of the air may beat upon us, but we are safe as long as we are on the Rock, and God will never put us off."

In the Wishing Chair.—Mr. Thorne Observes: "A friend of mine visited the Giant's Causeway in the north of Ireland lately. He was with a number of tourists, and one by one they all got into the so called wishing-chair and expressed a wish, which the legend says is sure to be fulfilled. When my friend had seated himself in the chair, the company stood around to hear his wish, and one inquired, 'Now, what is your wish?' Raising his voice so that all might hear him, he replied, 'I wish that all may come to Christ and trust Him as their Saviour.' I am not certain, but I think that two of his friends were converted on the spot. That is the greatest and best desire that any man could have for his fellows. May the time not be far off when it will be fulfilled in the case of each one of us."

Sad End of a Minister's Son.—A Scotch Evangelist relates: "I was preaching at Stirling some years ago, and was grieved to find that the son of the godly minister with whom I was staying was taking to drink, going to the theatre, and, indeed, was on the broad road to ruin. He was only twenty-three, yet he seemed to have shaken himself free from the control of both his parents. I spoke to him about his soul, and urged him to stop his career of sin, and come to Christ at once, but he excused himself, saying he was too young. 'But you are not too young to go to the theatre, nor too young to swear or drink. Why, then, do you deem yourself too young to serve God?' 'That is quite true, sir,' he replied, 'but please excuse me to-night, I have an engagement; but to-morrow I shall be at the Union Hall and give myself to Christ.' He left me, and I never saw him alive again. He was out late that night and the gas was left on for his convenience, but in the morning the gas was still burning brightly, and his bedroom showed he had not been home. 'Is Master George not in?' inquired the housekeeper; and being told that he was not, she went down-stairs to see if she could find any trace of him; and there, half-way up the stairs, he lay dead. He had his boots off, presumably that he might make less noise as he slipped into the house. And he had not, as far as I know, accepted Christ. He had intended to do so to-morrow, but for him there was no to-morrow."

Two Striking Pictures.—Mr. W. Thomson Remarks: "I once stood and looked at two striking pictures, which impressed me very much. The first represented a stone cross upon a rock, around which the billows were beating fiercely, and in the surging water was a poor sailor, with outstretched hands. He was very near to the rock and cross, but he was not at it. The other picture was the very same, but only upon the rock was a sailor, looking very like the one in the first picture, and he had one arm thrown around the cross, while the other was reaching out to grasp the outstretched hand of another poor sailor who was battling his way toward the cross. And I turned away thinking, 'Thus should it be with Christians. When we are safe on the Rock ourselves, we should be ever ready to lend a helping hand to our struggling brethren, that they also may enjoy that blessed security.'"

A Town Councillor and a Blind Man.—Mr. McFarlane remarks: "Some time ago I met a wealthy man, a town councillor of Glasgow. We began to speak about a mutual friend who had died some time before, and I took the opportunity to say, 'Well, we cannot live forever. Both of us will have to die sometime.' 'Yes,' was the reply, 'I know that; I don't expect to last very much longer.' 'Then,' I continued, 'doubtless you have made a preparation; you know that the Bible says—'Bible,' he interrupted, with a sneer, 'the Bible is all bosh. How can you believe it?' About the same time, in another part of the city, a poor blind man lay dying. His daughter sat by the bedside comforting him from the Scriptures. She read the words, 'The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.' Then the dying man feebly raised himself, and said, 'Put my fingers on these words and read them over again. Now, if anyone asks how I died, tell them I died resting on that blessed text, that "the blood of Jesus cleanses from all sin."'"

How a Spanish Peasant "Sought Jesus."—A young English lady was seated in a cottage in the northwest of Spain, trying, in imperfect and recently acquired Spanish, to make plain the way of salvation to a group of poor villagers. She had just said, "Jesus is able to save you to-day; is there anyone here really wanting salvation?" Immediately a curious-looking little man rose and threw himself on his knees and cried, "Oh! I do so much want to be saved!" The lady replied, "Only Jesus can save; seek Jesus." In his ignorance the poor peasant took her words literally, and started off after the meeting to seek Jesus, climbing the mountains, hunting the pine forests and the seashore. At length, weary and disheartened, he threw himself on the ground and groaned out his agony of soul to God, and prayed for mercy. In his tender compassion He heard this poor man's cry, and filled his soul with joy and gladness, enabling him to trust in the unseen Lord. He had sought the bodily presence of Christ, while the loving Saviour, by His Holy Spirit, lifted the veil from his understanding, and revealed Himself, the Light of Life.

A Profane Millionaire's Death.—The Rev. Sholto Douglas says: "I remember a very rich man who began life as a poor working lad, and who by his efforts had amassed a very great fortune, being at his death worth more than a million dollars. At the dinner after the funeral, as the gentlemen sat round their wine, one of them rose to his feet, and addressing the dead man's son, said, 'Your father began life with nothing, and has amassed this fortune of more than a million dollars. You begin where he ends, and before you die should be worth more than five million.' The guests waited to hear what answer the son would give. After a moment's silence he rose and said, with great emphasis, as he brought his hand down upon the table to enforce his words, 'I will make more than five millions, though it should cost me my soul.' Time passed, and ere that young man had reached middle age, he had obtained his ambition, and was worth five millions. But he lay on a death-bed raving mad with delirium tremens. So terrible was the scene that every one fled from the room in terror. But outside his room door some of his people stood listening as he threw himself about cursing and swearing. Suddenly the sounds ceased. There came a spell of quietness. 'Ah,' they said to one another,

The Imprisoned Duke of Orleans.

Abyssinians Singing the Song of Moses.

'he is calmer now; perhaps he is asleep;' and opening the door a little, they looked in. What a spectacle met their view! The furniture of the room was literally smashed, not a whole article remained, and there in the middle of the floor, stretched out stark and stiff lay the dead body of the millionaire. He had obtained the summit of his ambition, but he died blaspheming God; and what would his riches profit him in the world to which his soul had taken its flight? 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?'

A Voice From a Prison Cell.—A Minister says: "To-day I heard of a young man who, a few days before his holiday, was earnestly asked to give himself to Christ. He was a little anxious about his soul, but as he thought of the fast approaching holiday, his old habits asserted themselves strongly, and he said, 'No, I shall wait till my vacation is over, and then I may give myself to Christ.' When that time came he went from home, and not being in the best of company got into evil, and to-day instead of being here praising God, as he might have been if he had obeyed God's call, he is in a prison cell. When Satan sees you are thinking of leaving him, he always endeavors to put fresh and stronger chains around you; but do not give him the opportunity; come right away at once to Christ, the Omnipotent Saviour, and be made free."

THE DUC D'ORLEANS.

(See Portrait.)

MENTION has been made, in a previous number, of the escape of the young scion of French Royalty, whose portrait we give this week. He is the son of the Comte de Paris, and the great-grandson of King Louis Philippe, and is consequently one of the possible heirs to the throne of France; his father being the chief representative in the Orleans branch of the Bourbon family.

The act of this young man in presenting himself for enrolment as a recruit in the Army of France, is one of the recent sensations in that sensational country. It appears that having reached his twenty-first birthday on Thursday, the 6th of February, the young Prince, after disguising himself, left Lausanne, in Switzerland, where he had been staying, and travelled to Paris in company with the Duc de Luynes. In so doing he broke the law of June 22, 1886, which forbids the entrance into France of the chiefs of the families who have reigned in France, and their direct heirs; thus rendering himself liable to a term of imprisonment of from two to five years. On arriving in Paris the young Prince went to the recruiting-office of the Seine and asked to be inscribed upon the conscription register, and to be permitted to perform three years of military service "like every good Frenchman."

From the recruiting-office he was politely sent to the office of the Mayor, and from the latter to the Minister of War. Finding he could get no satisfaction there, he wrote to M. de Freycinet, the Minister of War, stating that he did not intend, by prolonging his stay in Paris, to give any pretext for a manifestation, and that he was well aware that he could not take any rank in the French army, but that he thought the Law of Exception did not forbid him from serving as a common soldier. "It is a great honor," concluded the young gentleman, "of which I am ambitious, and on this point I hope for a prompt reply based upon your sense of equity and upon your patriotism." The reply came within half an hour in the shape of a police commissary, who arrested the Duke and took him at once to the Prefecture of Police, whence he was the same place of confinement as that once occupied by Louis Napoleon after his unsuccessful attempt at Boulogne to follow the fortunes of his uncle Napoleon I. On Wednesday, February 12, his trial came off. An enormous crowd of citizens, anxious to see a prince in the prisoners' pen, filled the court. The Prince, who had been taken from the Conciergerie by an underground passage, took his place on the prisoners' bench in front. He was dressed entirely in black—a close-fitting frock coat showing off his graceful figure. In his hands he carried a pair of black gloves and a cane. His brilliant blond complexion, his hair parted mathematically in the middle, his collar, his cravat, the cut of his clothes, his smile, his bow, his manner—everything gave him far more the air of an elegant young Englishman than of a pretender to the throne of Henry IV.

Conducted to the Conciergerie,

Being asked what he had to say to the charge brought against him, the Prince frankly admitted his liability to punishment, declined to advance any arguments in extenuation of his offence, and requested his advocates to abstain from defending him. "I came to France," he said, "to serve as a common soldier. I have nothing to do with politics, which only concern my father, whose obedient son and faithful servant I am. . . . I wished to serve my country in a regiment. Is that a crime? I love my country. Is that a fault? No, I do not believe myself guilty. . . . I expect no clemency; but if I am condemned I am sure of acquittal on the part of the two hundred thousand conscripts of my class, who, more fortunate than myself, are permitted to serve their country."

This little speech evoked murmurs of approbation from the Royalists present, and the President said: "The Court has not to criticise or to discuss the law, its duty being to apply it to everybody with impartiality, without passion and without weakness." The young man was then sentenced to the minimum punishment allowed by the law of banishment of pretenders to the throne of France and their direct heirs. On his way back to his prison at the Conciergerie he was enthusiastically cheered by crowds of Royalists, who shouted "Vive le Duc d'Orleans! Vive le Prince! Vive le Roi!"

Two Years' Imprisonment,

The Prince is now the chief object of interest in France, and obtains the position of a "martyr" in prison for two years, provided he is not sooner pardoned and sent off again from the frontier. The young Prince may be said to inherit the military spirit; for his grandfather, the Duc de Montpensier, the fifth son of Louis Philippe, was wounded in battle with the Arabs in 1844; and his father, the Comte de Paris, saw service in America, when, with his brother, the Duc de Chartres, he volunteered on the staff of General McClellan.

THE ABYSSINIAN TE DEUM.

(See Illustration.)

ONE of the most suggestive incidents connected with the capture of Magdala, in Abyssinia, which was described in this journal on February 12, is depicted in the illustration. When Lord Napier's forces had captured the city on April 13, 1868, and released the European captives from their dungeon, the citizens of Magdala were strangely moved. It was a triumph which astonished them, for the city had been considered impregnable. But their sympathy was with the conquerors rather than with the tyrant, King Theodore. They had suffered too much under his caprices to have any loyalty or affection left for him. They had, however, too much regard for their own safety to openly display their feelings at first. Later came the news that the dreaded monarch had committed suicide, and then, the restraint of fear being removed, public enthusiasm found vent.

A large number of Mohammedan priests and officials of the mosques went in procession to Napier's quarters and serenaded him. With that delicacy and tact in which the Oriental mind never fails, they sought a common ground for the subject of their musical tribute in which Christian and Mohammedan alike could unite. They found it in the song of Moses as we have it in the fifteenth chapter of Exodus. Moses is profoundly revered by Mohammedans, and they therefore joined cordially in chanting the song with which he celebrated the overthrow of the Egyptians as an appropriate psalm of joy over the downfall of their own oppressor.

A FISHER OF MEN.

An Illustration of the Golden Text for March 16.

(See illustration on page 157.)

"Is Dr. Craig at home?" asked a little girl with a bright, eager face, as the one servant the clergyman kept responded to a timid ring of the door-bell. "Who wants him?" was the servant's non-committal reply.

"I do," said the child, but she added quickly, as she saw rejection in the girl's face, "Mr. Willoughby sent me, and he told me to be sure I saw the dominie himself."

"Oh! well, if Mr. Willoughby sent you it's all right, I suppose. Come in, and I'll tell him."

Dr. Craig was working on his next Sunday morning sermon. That was a serious matter with him, for his congregation was an intelligent one, which looked to him for light and leading. Vague generalities, resounding periods, or mere eloquence would have been out of place in that pulpit. The people Dr. Craig had gathered around him were men and women intensely in earnest about getting good and doing good, and he realized his responsibility too vividly to allow them to go away disappointed of the help he might give them. The interruption to his work could not, therefore, be anything but unwelcome. But Mr. Willoughby was the superintendent of his Sunday-school, and was, besides, a man after his own heart, ready for every good work. He laid down his pen with a sigh, and went into the hall where the child stood.

"Please, sir," she said, looking up earnestly; "Mr. Willoughby is with a sick man in our building. He wants you to come to him, if you can. He said he did not like to leave him, so he said, would I come, and I said I would. He says it's urgent," added the child, as if she was giving the name of a disease.

Dr. Craig made a memorandum of the address, which was that of a big tenement-house—a teeming hive of human life in one of the most squalid districts of the city—and promised to come at once. The child went away, but when a few minutes later the clergyman sallied forth he found her at the door, waiting to be his guide.

At the door of the house the clergyman and his young companion met Mr. Willoughby. "Don't go up now, Doctor," he said; "the physician has given him an opiate to lull his pain and he is just going to sleep. But walk with me; I should like to tell you about him."

The clergyman turned with his friend and walked through the narrow street reeking with garbage and filth. Men and women in ragged clothes, with blotched faces, met them at every step, or leaned half helpless against the walls. At nearly every corner was a saloon, which seemed the only thriving kind of business being done in the neighborhood.

"There," said Mr. Willoughby, as they passed one of them, out of which a bold, immodest woman leaned on unsteady feet and accosted them after the manner of her kind, "the devil sets his traps to catch men, and seems successful in it too."

"Yes," said Dr. Craig, "and the sad feature of it is that all we can do is so little compared with this stupendous mass of sin and misery. Life is so short and we are so weak."

"We do not seem to have the right system," said Mr. Willoughby. "Indeed, I do not know what is the right one."

"No; it is hard to devise it, but the closer we follow our divine model the nearer we get to the best. It is as true now as it was when Jesus called Simon and Andrew. If we follow Him, He will make us fishers of men. The best of us do as the scribes did, follow Him afar off."

"This poor fellow whom I have just left is a case in point," said Mr. Willoughby. "He is quite young—not more than five and twenty, I should say. He came up from the country some six years ago. He knew no one here, and we might have caught him, for he was piously reared, but he fell to these Satanic traps and they have held him. Poor fellow, he is quite in despair now, and he is very sick. He is a brilliant fellow, well worth saving. I think if you could see him and talk with him and impart some hope he would come back, and the prodigal. He cannot believe that he will be received."

"I will certainly see him," said Dr. Craig. "The prospect is better than if he thought lightly of his illness."

"That is by no means his difficulty; he thinks he has sinned beyond hope of pardon, and that even if he were pardoned he would fall again."

"Then he will not make the fatal mistake of trusting to his own strength."

It was, as Mr. Willoughby said, a dark case. Dr. Craig found it so when he called the next day. It could have been easier to deal with one who had never known the truth.

"I know all you would urge," he said, "but you do not know my life. I have sinned against light; I have quenched the Spirit; I am one of those of whom the Apostle said it is impossible to renew them again to repentance. No, it is too late. If I could I shall go back to my evil ways."

"No, please God, you shall not," said Dr. Craig.

Dr. Craig Summoned to Labor.

"To Him that is able to keep you from falling we will commit your case. But first you must be reconciled to God."

The journey to the light was a long and painful one. The enemy of souls held his victim bound as firmly by the chain of despair as he had formerly held him by the chain of evil habit. But at last He, who was anointed to set at liberty them that are bound, set him free.

"What can I do?" said the rejoicing man when he was really assured of pardon and acceptance.

"Use me in some way. Let me be an example of what Christ will pardon and save. Point to me as an instance of unlimited mercy, perhaps it may encourage some despairing man. I cannot hope to work for Christ, but I can be a specimen of His power and love."

"How shall you earn a livelihood when you get well?" the clergyman asked.

"Oh, I can go back to my former position. There is plenty of money in it."

"Would you quit it if you could do effectual work for Christ by giving all your time to it? There is little or no money in that."

"I would do it gladly. I have learned how little worth money is as an object of life. I know that pleasure does not satisfy. I am ready for poverty and hardship, if you think I could be of any use, but I am so unworthy and so incapable."

"Look around you," said Dr. Craig; "men and women are perishing everywhere. If some one took them the good news many could be saved. The life is hard, there are many trials in it, many disappointments, and if you gave your life to it you would probably die not worth a dollar. But it is a grand service. You could do it. No one better. Go into these wretched homes, into these dreadful dives. You know by experience where they are. Tell the victims what you know, and how you have been saved, and you will be the means of saving many."

"I should like to try. I do not care for money or pleasure now. But I am so weak and unprepared."

"You will do," said the clergyman. "You know where strength comes from for yourself and others. A man who will leave all to follow Christ has the best preparation. Fear not; 'henceforth you shall catch men' and bring them into the Master's treasure-house."

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 142.)

New Hardships.

In the following year, 1629, a band of three hundred and sixty English Puritans arrived at Salem—one hundred of whom chose Charlestown for their final resting-place; and now the interest excited by such extensive emigration was productive of the most momentous results for the liberty of New England. All attempts to procure a royal charter for Plymouth had proved unavailing, but the Puritans of Salem and Charlestown were more successful. After some little difficulty and delay, Charles I. affixed the royal seal to a charter, dated March 4, 1629, by which the holders of the purchase from the Council of Plymouth were erected into a body politic, by the name of the Governor and Company of Massachusetts Bay, New England.

The Pilgrim Fathers found their transactions with the merchant adventurers who constituted their governing company, the source of perpetual wrongs and disappointments, and were glad at length to purchase relief from such an intolerable yoke on the most exorbitant terms. But the result was altogether different with the colonists of Massachusetts Bay. They had anticipated persecution, moreover, instead of waiting until the galling yoke of the oppressor could no longer be borne. They were not, therefore, driven to the necessity of accepting such terms as might be offered. They could husband their resources and wait their time; and therefore it was that they achieved so readily what their predecessors had sought in vain, and secured for their Puritan brethren free institutions in the New World, which tempted them to emigrate, without tarrying till their worst anticipations were realized.

The leaders in the establishment of the new colony were actuated solely by the honest desire to secure beyond the Atlantic a safe and abiding shelter for the suffering Nonconformists of England. When, therefore, the royal charter had given the highest legal security for the permanence of their corporate rights and privileges, many of the leading members of the company gladly avail themselves of a guaranteed liberty over which they held so great control, and soon the governor and company were themselves settled amid the early clearings of Salem and Charlestown. The consequences that flowed from this were altogether momentous. At the very time when the English sovereign was seeking to overthrow the chief privileges which the British constitution secured, and was entering on a contest which involved the absolute supremacy of Crown or Parliament, he had unconsciously established an independent provincial government within his own dominions.

The granting of the royal charter had furnished to the chief projectors of the settlement a strong inducement to emigrate, but the transference of the governing power to the colony itself produced a far more extensive movement. The suffering Nonconformists throughout England learned with delight of a Puritan settlement established in the New World, governed by Christian men who sympathized in their opinions, and who guaranteed to them, by the security of the King's own charter, the liberty of conscience and the civil privileges, which he was then employing all the means that policy and unprincipled ambition could suggest, to wrest from them at home.

During a single season fourteen vessels sailed from England for Massachusetts Bay, crowded with Nonconformist emigrants fleeing for shelter to this land of promise. About fifteen hundred persons landed in New England, and immediately formed themselves into an independent settlement under the new charter. Mr. John Winthrop, one of the first associates whom Mr. White had induced to unite with the original purchasers of the tract of land on which they were settling, was unanimously chosen Governor; and we owe to his pen the most complete record of the early history of the Puritan settlements of New England.

The settlers of Massachusetts Bay forsook the land of their nativity under a less pressing necessity than that which had driven forth the Pilgrim Fathers to a foreign shore, ere they gratified the indomitable love of their country by seeking to shelter themselves within the skirts of its Government, amid the far wilds which modern adventure had added to its possessions. Nevertheless, the stimulus to emigration originated among the early Nonconformists under Charles I. from similar causes, and they were actuated by a scarcely less passionate attachment to their native land when, on the eve of their departure from Yarmouth Roads, they published the affectionate farewell to England and her Church, to which we have already referred. They would not willingly break every tie that bound them to England. They still regarded it with filial reverence, and encouraged the fond hope that some bond of mutual sympathy would keep alive the union of love between the parent and child.

The privations attendant on the founding of a new settlement produced their usual consequences on the new colonists. They dispersed themselves in various directions, the Governor choosing Charlestown as the place of his residence. Thither many followed him. The place lately occupied by a solitary English cottage was become the populous capital of an extensive colony. But there, as at Plymouth Bay, the colonists had their houses to rear ere they could be occupied; their harvests to sow and tend ere they could be reaped; their streets to lay out, to drain, to pave, ere they could enjoy, in the land of freedom, the thousand necessary comforts and luxuries which they had possessed in England almost without a thought of their necessity, or of the possibility of their absence. Sickness spread among them. There also many reached their destination only to win a grave in the land of promise; and nearly the whole of the survivors deserted Charlestown, and established themselves on the site now occupied by the great city of Boston. On the 19th of October, 1630, the Governor summoned there the first Colonial Assembly to deliberate on the affairs of the settlement, and begin their work as the free legislators of the New World.

The change of locality did not suffice to rescue the colonists from sickness and death. The true sources of their privations still remained; and, doubtless, among the large body of honest, industrious, and wealthy emigrants, who had forsaken England from the love of freedom and the desire for liberty of conscience, not a few were ill fitted by previous habits for enduring the exposures and sufferings attendant on the clearing of the forest, and the rearing of the log huts wherein the exile finds his first shelter from unwonted exposure and the inclemencies of the season, in the strange country of his adoption. Nearly two hundred died after the removal to Boston, and about a hundred more, including some of the leading men of the colony, fled from the dangers which seemed to threaten destruction to the whole settlement, and precipitately returned to England. The survivors, however, did not despair.

It was hardly to be looked for that so numerous a body, necessarily to a great extent strangers to each other, should manifest the same magnanimity and unflinching courage which animated the little Christian family of New Plymouth. Still they did not fail in deeds of generous charity and love. Many noble acts of disinterested kindness proved to the colonists the value of the high Christian principles by which the great body of them were actuated. Like the Pilgrims of the Mayflower, they saw their provisions failing, and looked in vain for the distant sail that should cheer them with the hope of new supplies from England. But like them rich and poor shared together their scanty stores; and it is related among the old traditions of the colony, that Governor Winthrop was in the act of dividing his last handful of meal with a poor neighbor, when the joyful tidings reached him that the long-expected ship from England was in sight.

It has already been hinted that the plantation of Massachusetts Bay was speedily found to include among its settlers sufficient diversity of opinion to produce at a very early period the elements of discord. That the Puritan settlers of New England should have ejected from among them those who wished to adhere to the Church of England, and to retain its ritual and forms of worship, was both natural and perhaps necessary. Sound policy required it, even from those who might see its inconsistency with the free toleration of religious belief. But unhappily the great majority of the settlers went beyond this, and, imitating the earlier English Nonconformists, became almost as strenuous maintainers of enforced uniformity as their English persecutors had been. They differed only on the standard of uniformity, not on the principle. It is folly for either American or English encomiasts to seek to disguise this.

It is an important fact in the history of the human mind—as the impartial records of both countries abundantly prove—that only a very few, even in the seventeenth century, had any just conception of the grand principles of toleration, which acknowledge God as the sole judge of every man's faith, and interfere with opinions or creeds only when they develop consequences inimical to social virtue and order. The emigrant settlers who founded the Puritan colony of New England were composed of the very class among whom diversities of opinion on religious faith and ecclesiastical polity were most likely to arise. They included many of the most devout and earnest thinkers of the age. Religion was with them a thing so momentous that all temporal interests became mean and little worth in comparison with it. But the sufferer for conscience' sake is ever too apt to conclude that the faith which he has maintained in defiance of persecution must be true. He is unwilling to believe that there may be martyrs for error; sincere confessors, worthy of all admiration for their heroic fidelity to what, after all, may prove an unworthy cause.

It is a fact, moreover, too well established to need now to be argued, that suffering has rarely taught the persecuted to show moderation to others; and of this the annals of New England furnish abundant evidence. Above all, it is to be remembered that common sufferings and perils had produced unanimity among the Puritan emigrants who crowded the little fleet that sailed like a triumphant armament to take possession of the chartered land of freedom which they had won in the New World.

It need not greatly surprise us that those who were at one in their opposition to the ritual of the English Church, or to the restraints and formalities imposed on its honest and conscientious adherents by Laud and his disciples, should discover that they were not equally unanimous when they came to give their own creeds and systems practical form. Protestantism in all its phases is but a negative creed. Thousands unite in the protest against error who have little common ground in their ideas of truth. Surely it is not needful for the validity of their protest that they should! Let it suffice that they do not rest their hopes in such a negation. They triumph without a victory who discover in the divisions of Protestantism a proof that it originated in error. Human nature is ever the same, and rarely indeed do the most clear-sighted of men comprehend the ends which Providence is working out by such imperfect means.

There were noble men among these Fathers of Massachusetts. Winthrop, Johnson, and Dudley; Wilson, the chosen minister of the first church formed among them; Cotton, a man who had won distinguished honors at the University of Cambridge ere he became an object of persecution for no less distinguished piety; Eliot, the generous and self-denying apostle of the Indians; Francis Higginson, the enthusiastic but truly catholic Nonconformist, who esteemed the invitation of the first emigrants as a call from heaven; and Roger Williams, the noble pastor of Salem, who has won an unenviable distinction as the object, and in some degree the origin, of much unseemly strife among the first New England churches, but who was notwithstanding a man of true piety, great moral worth, and generous consistency as the advocate of perfect toleration.

Others were not without characteristics less worthy of admiration. The historian of the United States describes Endicot, the foremost among the leaders who planted the new colony, as "benevolent, though austere; firm, though choleric; of a rugged nature, which the sternest form of Puritanism had not served to mellow." Some of the deeds of the stern Puritan are still remembered among records of the past which New England has little pride in recalling, and one will long live in the nervous stanzas of Whittier's "Ballad of Cassandra Southwick," the production of one of the most vigorous and truly national of America's living poets. Yet Massachusetts is justly boastful of her ancestry. Many others might be singled out for notice from among the Puritan Fathers of New England. They were "a chosen generation, a peculiar people." A great work was before them, and the fruit of it has been a rich and abundant reward, though the weakness and failings of human nature mingled with their work; and they proved, to use the modest anticipations of the Pilgrim Fathers, but as stepping-stones to others for the accomplishment of their high aim.

When sickness and death threatened the loyal founders of Charlestown with utter annihilation, the place to which they removed presented the appearance of a promontory stretching into the bay. Its surface swelled into rising grounds of considerable height, now known to the New Englander as Copp's Hill, Fort Hill, and Beacon Hill. The colonists ascribed their sufferings at Charlestown to the dampness of the locality, and, what might perhaps seem an unlikely concomitant of this, to the want of a sufficient supply of water. The neighboring promontory seemed to promise a remedy for both evils. Its rising grounds offered security for the dryness of the locality, while its old name of Shawmut, or the living fountain, pointed it out as a spot celebrated among the Indians for its abundant springs of pure water. Thither, accordingly, the first occupants of Charlestown removed in a body, on the 7th of September, 1630, leaving only seventeen colonists who preferred retaining possession of that earlier settlement. The outlookers were then daily watching the distant horizon, in anticipation of a ship in which their minister, the Rev. John Cotton, had sailed from Boston, in England; and it was in honor of him, and perhaps also of the town with which many of them may have had the dear associations of nativity and kindred, that the colonists conferred on their new settlement the name of Boston.

Shawmut, however, had one occupant, previous to its hasty adoption by the deserters from Charlestown, not unworthy of a passing glance among the good men who first sought for freedom amid the wilds of New England. The following brief notice of him occurs in an American work devoted to the early history of Boston and its founders: "The first settler of Shawmut was Mr. William Blackstone. He probably came over with the company under Endicot, who settled at Salem. Mr. Blackstone built a cottage at a point somewhere near Leverett Street, not very far from Craigie's Bridge, and became sole proprietor of the whole peninsula, which was afterwards bought of him. Here he lived nine or ten years, and saw the foundation of society laid. He was a very eccentric character. He was an ordained minister of the English Church, but holding Puritan sentiments, he preferred to enjoy them unmolested in the wilderness. He loved his liberty so well that he would not connect himself with the church established in his new country.

"He said, 'I came from England because I did not like the Lord-Bishops; and I cannot join with you because I would not be under the Lord-Brethren.' He retained nothing while here of his ministerial character but his canonical coat. He devoted himself to the cultivation of the six acres of land which he retained in his possession, and planted there, it is said, the first orchard of apple trees in New England. It is supposed that he left Boston because he was annoyed by the strict sectarian laws that were established by the colony, and banished himself again to the wilderness, in a place now called Cumberland, on the banks of Pawtucket River. Here he built his house in the midst of park, planted an orchard near it, and divided his time between study and labor. He called his rural retreat Study Hill, and made it his permanent residence until the day of his death, which happened May 26, 1675, two years after he had buried his wife.

"He was a man of a kind and benevolent heart, and when he went to Providence to preach, which he did occasionally, notwithstanding his disagreement in opinion with Roger Williams, he would carry with him some of his beautiful apples as presents to the children, who never had seen such fruit before. Indeed, the kind called yellow sweings were first produced from his orchard; and the older inhabitants, who had seen apples in England had not before seen that sort. His eccentricity, seen in the fact that he used, in his old age, to ride on a bull, which, for want of a horse, he had trained for that purpose. 'The death of this venerable pilgrim,' says the historian, 'was at a critical period, the beginning of an Indian war. His estate was deserted, and his house burnt by the natives. His library, which contained 186 volumes, from folios to pamphlets, shared the same fate. His family is now extinct.'

(To be Continued.)

Booksellers and Newsdealers Desiring Samples for distribution, with the object of increasing their sales and for obtaining subscriptions, may have them free of cost, postage paid, by sending a postal-card stating number of copies required, and mentioning that they are for this purpose to the Manager, 45 Bible House, N. Y. City.

HOOD'S
COMPOUND EXTRACT
SARSAPARILLA
TRADE MARK

Hood's Sarsaparilla has by its peculiar merit and its wonderful cures won the confidence of the people, and is to-day the most popular blood purifier and strengthening medicine. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, dyspepsia, headache, kidney and liver complaints, catarrh, rheumatism, etc. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself. Hood's Sarsaparilla sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

TRUMPET PEALS.
Collection of Timely and eloquent Extracts

From the Sermons of the
V. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.
collected and classified by Rev. C. L. Wood, with the consent of the author. Pages, besides very copious indexes for reference of the best and most popular of Doctor's writings. Containing also a Portrait of Dr. Talmage, an elegant view of the New Brooklyn Tabernacle
being built; also the Doctor's letter to Syria, with account of the baptism in the river Jordan, and other particulars. Sold by subscription only. A lady or gentleman wanted in every city or town tract as to Liberal inducements. Application should be made immediately. For particulars apply to the publishers, BROMFIELD & CO.,
658 Broadway, New York.

CHRISTIAN WORK
—IN—
MEXICO.
Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the office of Bishop H. C. RILEY, of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

THE HOLY LAND.
E. B. COOK and the HOLY LAND, including JERUSALEM, BETHLEHEM, DEAD SEA, DAN, GALLILEE, NAZARETH, SYDNEY, CONSTANTINOPLE, ATHENS, select party has been organized with the object of visiting the above mentioned places, and will be the S. B. NOORDLAND, WEDNESDAY, 11 26th.

affords a splendid opportunity for persons wishing to visit the Holy Land, and afterwards spend the winter in Europe at a very moderate cost. For information apply to Rev. E. B. COOK, Brooklyn, N. Y., 281 Broadway, N. Y.

STRAIGHT DESCRIPTIVE PROGRAMMES OF EUROPEAN and ROUND THE WORLD TOURS BE OBTAINED ON APPLICATION AT ANY OFFICE OF THOS. COOK & SON.

HARTSHORN'S
SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE
TOGRAPH
OF
THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN'S

LES MEN WANTED AT ONCE.
A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest and best in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full address, Continental Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

THAND. Private instruction by practical Circulation, baptism reporter. 20 years' experience. References. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

ORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught by mail or personally. Applications procured all pupils when competent. Circulars. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

BUSH'S FLUID FOOD
BOVININE
R. G. W. COMBS, Sup't City Dispensary, Indianapolis, writes: "I have used BOVININE in severe cases of Typhoid Fever, and have observed that it sustains the patient's strength better than broths, beef tea, &c., and is better borne by the stomach, being less bulky. Also in cases of Pneumonia and Diphtheria, where its effects are equally well marked; it hastens convalescence, and enables the patient to better resist the disease. The improvement is very noticeable to the patient and relatives."

BOVININE is simply the vital principles of concentrated beef, a highly condensed raw food extract, palatable to the most delicate taste.

A GLORIOUS FLOWER
No engraving can do justice to the unique and peerless beauty of this NEW CHRYSANTHEMUM. Imagine plants completely studded with balls of flowers one foot in circumference, whose petals curve gracefully inward, and which in turn are dotted with a peculiar hairy-like growth, the whole resembling, more than anything else, masses of SNOW-WHITE OSTRICH PLUMES, and you then begin to form some idea of the beauty of this royal flower. Your garden will not be complete this season if it does not contain the "OSTRICH PLUME CHRYSANTHEMUM." (Plain and full instructions for culture with each order.)

PRICE.—For fine plants, certain to bloom, 40c. each, three plants for $1; seven plants for $2; twelve plants for $3. Free by mail.

With every order for a single plant or more will be sent gratis our superb Catalogue of "EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN" (the price of which is 25 cents), on condition that you will say in what paper you saw this advertisement. Club orders for THREE, SEVEN or TWELVE plants can have the Catalogue sent, when desired, to the SEPARATE ADDRESS of each member comprising the club, provided always that the paper is named.

THE "OSTRICH PLUME" CHRYSANTHEMUM
(Mrs. Alpheus Hardy).

PETER HENDERSON & CO. 35 & 37 CORTLAND ST. NEW YORK

SCOTT'S FLOWERS
41 Years' Experience in growing our strong and reliable ROSES Grand specialties in PLANTS, BULBS, & FLOWER SEEDS of extra choice quality. Rare Novelties of great beauty. Handsomely illustrated Catalogue for 1890, fully describing many Beautiful New Flowers, sent FREE to any address. Send for it now.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS EFFECTUAL
THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE
WORTH A GUINEA A BOX
For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.
Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents
FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK,
Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beecham's Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper.)

"Well bred, soon wed." Girls who use are quickly married. Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap used for all cleaning purposes except the laundry. Try it.
SAPOLIO

AGENTS E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shot & Sundry Targets, by I. M. J. $2.50. Quick sales. Big pay. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors. Edited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75. 192,000 sold. $5000. Curiousities of Bible $2. By Mail. E. B. TREAT, N. Y.

PLAYS! Speakers; Dialogues; Books of Games, Sports and Amusements, Charades, Tableaux, etc. Catalogue sent free on application to THE DEWITT PUBLISHING HOUSE, 33 Rose Street, New York.

"QUITTING THE MANSE,"
A master-piece of the heroic steel engravings of the century.
This engraving is intended to commemorate an incident in the Disruption of the Scottish Church in 1843, when nearly 500 ministers resigned their stipends, manse, social positions, and what men most tenaciously regard, for conscience sake, in what they esteemed the cause of truth. Just published. 16x23 1/2 inches. Sent securely wrapped, post paid, for a paper dollar or stamps, at our risk.
Mrs. Jane B. Clark, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "The picture is a splendid piece of high art."
CHRISTIAN NATION,
252 Broadway, New York.

RIDGE'S FOOD
The MOST RELIABLE FOOD For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Write to Ridge's Food Co. (on every label). Palmer, Mass.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. For a DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

I took Cold, I took Sick, I TOOK
SCOTT'S EMULSION
RESULT:
I take My Meals, I take My Rest,
AND I AM VIGOROUS ENOUGH TO TAKE ANYTHING I CAN LAY MY HANDS ON; getting fat too, FOR Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda NOT ONLY CURED MY Incipient Consumption BUT BUILT ME UP, AND IS NOW PUTTING FLESH ON MY BONES AT THE RATE OF A POUND A DAY. I TAKE IT JUST AS EASILY AS I DO MILK. SUCH TESTIMONY IS NOTHING NEW. SCOTT'S EMULSION IS DOING WONDERS DAILY. TAKE NO OTHER.

THE BEST SEEDS
are those put up by
D. M. FERRY & CO.
Who are the largest Seedsmen in the world.
D. M. FERRY & Co's
Illustrated, Descriptive and Priced
SEED ANNUAL
for 1890 will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to last season's customers. It is better than ever. Every person using Garden, Flower or Field Seeds should send for it. Address
D. M. FERRY & CO.
DETROIT, MICH.

Gathering Jewels
OR,
The Secret of a Beautiful Life
A splendid book, bound in cloth and gold. Illustrated
BISHOP VINCENT says: "In 'Gathering Jewels' the story is well told; the subject, which a gracious Providence furnished, is unusually rich and prolific in evangelical facts and teachings. The book should be in the hands of every Christian." The book should be in the hands of every Christian.
New York Witness says: "The material for the volume teems with spiritual food for reflection, and is calculated to inspire many to the work of saving souls. It illustrates the power of prayer, and shows that the sweetest contentment may be found in 'gathering jewels' for the heavenly kingdom may 'shine in His glory, bright for His crown.'"
This book has been strongly endorsed by the Christian Herald, having republished two full columns from its pages in its issue of Aug. 20, 1888.
Send a paper Dollar or Stamp at our risk, and we will send you a book post-paid.
A celebrated Van Everen adjustable book cover free with each book if requested.
CHRISTIAN NATION, Publishers,
252 Broadway, New York

The GREAT LIGHT
FRANK'S Patent Reflector
Gas or Oil, give the most powerful softest cheapest & Best light for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A Little discount to churches and the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.
I. P. FRANK, 551 Pearl St., N. Y.

Holman's Liver and Stomach P
Absorbs all impurities from the blood. Invigorates and vitalizes the whole system.
Holman's Liver and Stomach P
Cures Biliousness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Diarrhoea, Malaria, Sick Headache, Rheumatism, &c.
Holman's Liver and Stomach P
Regulates the Stomach and Bowels, improves the Appetite, corrects Assimilation, and beautifies the Complexion.
Holman's Liver and Stomach P
Prevents Sea sickness, Cholera, Smallpox, Yellow Typhus, Typhoid and Bilious Fevers.
All druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $2.
HOLMAN LIVER PAD CO.,
Box 2112. 81 John St. N. Y.

RUPTURE CURE
with our Improved Elastic Truss worn with night and day, retains the rupture under the hand exercise or severest strain. Send for pamphlet.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large and quick sales. SAMPLE FREE rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, New York.

GOD HOLDS THE KEY.

God holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if He trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

What if to-morrow's cares were here,
Without its rest?
Rather would I unlock the day,
And as the hours swing open, say
"Thy will is best."

The very dimness of my sight
Makes me secure;
For groping in my misty way,
I feel His Hand—I hear Him say,
"My help is sure."

I cannot read His future plan,
But this I know,
I have the smiling of His face,
And all the refuge of His grace
While here below.

Enough, this covers all my want,
And so I rest;
For what I cannot, He can see,
And in His care I sure shall be
For ever blest.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets (assorted into two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Boils, pimples, ringworm, and all affections arising from impure blood, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which expels all impurity, and vitalizes and enriches the blood. Give it a trial.

The latest and best imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

Two Favorite Books of Religious Reading.

Counsel and Comfort for Daily Life.

16mo, cloth binding, full gilt edges. Price reduced from $1.00 to 75 cents.

Hopeful Words for the Sick & Suffering

In binding to match the above volume. Reduced from $1.00 to 75 cents.

These new and cheaper editions of two favorites will find a welcome in many thousand more homes. They contain gems in prose and poetry of a deeply spiritual character, some of the best in literature. The volumes are printed in clear type, and being handy to hold, they quickly become favorites among helps to religious living.

Copies sent post-paid on receipt of price. The two sent post-paid for $1.25.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

VanHouten's Cocoa

"BEST & GOES FARTHEST."

The purest, most soluble—the original cocoa. Invented, patented and made in Holland. Delicate, stimulating, nutritious, much better for the nerves than tea and coffee. Ask for VAN HOUTEN'S, take no other. 61

Concert Temperance Exercises.

The National Temperance Society has just published a new book of Temperance Exercises, or Helps for Entertainments. Suitable for Day-schools, Bands of Hope, Loyal Legions, Juvenile Templars and all children's organizations, which will be found useful and helpful for all workers among the young. 12mo, 160 pages. Miss L. Penney, Editor. Cloth, 50 cents; paper covers, 25 cents. Address, J. N. Stearns, Publishing Agent, 58 Reade St., New York.

315th THOUSAND.

The Story of a Church Bonnet.

By CHARLES F. DEEMS, D.D., LL.D.
Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, Editor of "Harper's Bazar," says: "It is exceedingly bright and suggestive."

Sent on receipt of 5 cents in stamps.
WILBUR B. KETCHAM, Publisher,
13 Cooper Union, New York.

WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell "The Christian's Legacy." One young man started on the 15th of December and ordered 59 copies before the 31st of December. 102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you. Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all. We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS, for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only. Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT we send to all parts of the U. S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards sewing Silk and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of dress.

THE GOODS are delivered to you all carrying charges PREPAID

An Artistic Novelty for Children.

YOUNG AMERICA'S PAINTING BOOK, 32 colored studies and 32 outline copies, printed on hard paper. 4to varnished cover. 50 cents.

THE PALETTE PAINTING BOOK. Consisting of a series of charming designs for coloring, with some colored examples and hints on mixing colors, etc.; in the form of a painter's palette. Hand some lithographed cover, 4to, 50 cents.

 "Delightful for any child, but would be specially welcome to convalescent little ones."—The Public Ledger, Phila.

 Of all booksellers, or, free by mail, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

F. WARNE & CO., 3 Cooper Union, N. Y.

The Beautiful Shield here represented is made from extra heavy cardboard in maroon and dark green, with embossed silver letters, beveled and silver edge, 5x8 1/2 inches, corded and ready to hang on the wall. It is a perfect gem. Price 15 cts. each, or 8 for $1.00 post-paid.

I also have a 16-page tract, giving interesting incidents, showing how many a sorrow would be alleviated, how many a wanderer brought back, how many a friend gained, how many an enemy reconciled, how many a perplexity resolved, by the simple reference of all actions and hesitations to this standard—"WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?"

Price, 8 cts. each, or 30 cts. per dozen, post-paid.

A sample, one each of the above (Shield and Tract) will be mailed post-paid for 15 cts.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

HENRY L. REDFIELD, INSURANCE,
100 Broadway, New York.

Parturition Without Pain.

A Code of Directions for avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Childbearing. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price by mail, $1.00.

"A work whose excellence surpasses our power to commend."—New York Evening Mail. 1000 Lady agents wanted. M. L. HOLBROOK CO., 25 Bond St., New York.

"SUNSHINE FOR DARK HOURS,"

By CHARLES F. DEEMS, D.D., LL.D.,
Author of "Weights and Wings," "Home Altar," etc., and Editor of "Christian Thought."

A book for invalids. The matter of this book is drawn from a wide range of reading, observation and experience, and is a genuine aid to contentment, comfort and relief.

The tone of the book is indicative of strength gained by submission, an entire and hearty acquiescence in the will of God. It will brighten dark hours. If you have sick friends brighten their rooms and hearts by sending a copy of this good and helpful book. It is printed in large type and clear page, and is particularly adapted to the invalid.

"A bright and cheering little volume."—Christian Herald.

"Full of comforting thoughts and incidents."—The Advance.

"It is full of such sunshine as Dr. Deems knows how to bring both soul and body."—N. Y. Observer.

The Union Signal says: "This is called a book for invalids; it is equally appropriate for well people, to whom dark hours are sure to come. The sunshine of this book is concentrated from many different sources by the strong lens of Dr. Deems' personality."

Price 25 cents; by mail, post-paid, 30 cents.
Sent post-paid to any address on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

WITH BRIEF MEMOIR OF THE AUTHOR.
By Rev. J. H. BROOKES, D.D.

"This practical and valuable compend is not to be confounded with the well known 'Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings,' edited by S. R. BRIGGS and J. H. ELLIOTT, which has reached, during the past six years a sale of 30,000 copies, and has been extensively circulated in the United States, Great Britain and Canada. The entire new volume is suggestive and serviceable."—The Presbyterian.

"The book is admirably adapted to its purpose. Through Dr. Brookes' brief memoir the reader becomes exceedingly interested in the personality of the late author, and enjoys studying Scriptures under his leadership."—The Golden Rule.

"The readings are practical, helpful, full of suggestiveness, and bring out the most important points and truths in the subjects on which they are based. It is, in fact, the best thing of the kind we have seen."—The Christian at Work.

"The selection appears to be made with reference to instruction and spiritual profit. Persons who engage in the work of teaching the truths of God's Word will find great assistance by consulting this book."—The Philadelphia Methodist.

232 pages, large 12mo., with Complete Index.
Bound in Cloth, Library Edition, $1.00
Cloth Flexible, Travelers' Edition, 75

* Sent post paid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

A Gem For The Little Folks.

THE STORY OF JESUS

For Little Children.

By MRS. G. E. MORTON.
Fully Illustrated.

12mo, 316 Pages,
Cloth, Printed in Colors,
$1.00, post-paid.

"Told in simple words and a very handsome book. How wonderful that the biography of the Son of the Highest is better adapted than any other to be told to little children. Angels study it; divines dive into it; babes love it. Blessed be the Story of Jesus."—C. H. SPURGEON.

"The demand for a fourth edition of this pleasant and instructive work shows that it has already met with considerable favor. Planned something on the same lines as the 'Peep of Day.' Several illustrations and an attractive binding add to its value as a Sunday-school prize or children's reward book."—The Book-seller.

"A difficult task well executed in simple, but not childish language, the 'old story' is told once more. The history of our Lord, and the great object of His life are kept in prominence, while his intercourse with all classes is described in a life-like way. We heartily recommend the book, which is improved by neat wood-cuts."—The Christian.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

ALL THIS for $1.50

An Ice Cream Freezer, (the best in the world.) A Keystone Culinary Beater and Mixer (for making cake, bread, etc., etc., whipping cream, eggs, etc., and a thousand other things.) A 50c. Cook Book.

PAINE, DIEHL & CO., PHILAD'A, PA.

Spring Dress Goods

Dentelle and Satin Stripes effects in

Rare Novelties.

Unique and exclusive designs

Paris Robes.

Shetland Tweeds. Cheviots and Suitings for Tailor made costumes.

Plain Fabrics in all the new weaves and colorings.

Fine French Chalties and Mohairs.

Lord & Taylor

Broadway and Twentieth Street, N. Y.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY

ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. 18

PRICE $180

Sent for trial in your own home.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT

Guaranteed Six Years.

Don't Buy A Poor Piano!

ORGAN

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

GOD IN BUSINESS

A REMARKABLE RECORD OF DIVINE HELP

DELIVERANCES TO CHRISTIAN BUSINESS MEN

This book is a record of God's dealings with people in business. The author begins with personal testimony. Then follows the experience of more than 100 of God's people who desire to know that they were helped by Him in business. * * * The incidents here recorded are such a wonderful character that it is not a matter to lay down the book until every page is perused. A short sketch of the life of John Creed, of Brooklyn, is a most wonderful record of divine guidance and help. Here then is testimony that there is a God-force waiting to be used in prayer and faith for all our affairs. It is a fact that all God's people need more and more to read.—Presbyterian Messenger (London).

This is a well-intended book, and one more of that is built on such a foundation that it is impossible to shake it. * * * If young business men will read they may learn from it a lesson that will prove of great commercial value.—Methodist (London).

Bound in Cloth. Price, 85 Cents.
Paper Cover, 50 Cents.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

The Greatest Thing in the World

An Address on I Corinthians xiii

By PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND, F.R.S.E., and of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World."

Leatherette Binding, Gilt Top, Price, 35 cts.

"Beautiful and suggestive."—Baptist Magazine.

"Professor Drummond has a happy faculty of bringing the dust of old truths, and presenting them afresh in their native integrity."—North British Mail.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Peppermint Tea. A TRIAL ORDER for 3 1/2 pounds of Fine Tea, Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, by mail on receipt of $2.00. In return, state what kind of tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered for orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Blends. For full particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED BY PECK'S INVISIBLE TUBULAR CUSHIONS. Whispers heard clearly. Fortable. Successful where all else fails. Sold by F. H. L. only, 552 Broadway, New York. Write for book of proofs.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 11. Office, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 1890.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF MR. ANDREW CARNEGIE, and Picture of the Allegheny City Free Library.
WOULD YOU LIKE TO LIVE YOUR LIFE OVER
AGAIN? Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday.
THE APPROACHING NATIONAL RECONSTRUCTION.
By Rev. W. H. Daniels.
CHRIST FORGIVING SIN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
An Exile's Life in Siberia—A Persecuted Chinaman
—A Praying Weaver's Sons—A Chinaman's Rebuke
—A Wind that Disappointed Cannibals, Etc.
THE EARTH'S FUTURE.

PLEADING, NOT CONTRADICTION. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGEL-ISTIC MEETINGS.

Gems from New Books: Science and the Bible—A Proof of Inspiration—The Earth's Closing Scene.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE COUNT ANDRASSY.

PICTURE OF A BISHOP'S ADVENTURE IN AFRICA.

THE SOLDIER'S HEARTBREAK: A Story of the
S. S. Golden Text. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. (Continued.)

MR. ANDREW CARNEGIE—THE FREE LIBRARY HE HAS GIVEN TO ALLEGHENY CITY, PENN.

ANDREW CARNEGIE,

The Millionaire Donor of the Allegheny City Free Library.

The Difficult Problem of the Age—Mr. Carnegie's Attempt at Its Solution—His Astonishing Career—A Poor Boy Seeking Work—A Telegraph Messenger at Three Dollars a Week—Becomes a Telegraph Operator—Made Superintendent of the Road—His Successful Speculations—Vast Iron Work Enterprises—His Appeal to men of Wealth—His Munificent Gifts.

THE great problem of our day is how to deal with the inequalities in social condition. It is the problem everywhere. In the United States, under republican institutions, equally with the nations of Europe, under despotisms and limited monarchies, the question demands an answer. The poor man labors, and receives, when he is fortunate, a weekly wage which enables him to purchase food and clothing for himself and his family, but does not enable him to accumulate a provision for old age, for times of sickness, or for his family after his death. Meanwhile his employer grows rich, lives in luxury, and becomes a millionaire. The question presented by this anomaly is one of stupendous difficulty, and thoughtful men in all lands are giving it their most earnest consideration. Even the Emperor of Germany is exercised by it, and has summoned an international council to consider in what way the burdens of the workingman can be lightened. It is gratifying to see that one of the favored class, like a few of his predecessors—Peabody, Peter Cooper, Mr. Pratt, of Brooklyn, Mr. Enoch Pratt, of Baltimore, and others—is concerned about the subject, and, having thought it out from his side, has not only published the solution he has discovered, but has, at an immense expenditure of money, given practical effect to his theory. All honor to the man who has done this! May many such givers appear among us to benefit the cities in which they live? It is a pleasure to the Christian, who is enjoined to regard every man as his brother, to honor a man who thus consecrates his wealth, and therefore we publish this week the portrait of Mr. Carnegie and a picture of the magnificent building which he has given to Allegheny City.

The Solution of the Problem which is thus presented by Mr. Carnegie in theory and in practice is not, however, final. We do not believe for a moment that it is a solution at all. But it is a noble effort to reach it, and it shows a right spirit. It does honor to the head and heart of the man; but it is very far indeed from a solution. The real trouble lies far deeper than any gift can reach. The problem, with all its hideous injustice, with all its awful danger, still confronts society, and if millionaires by the hundred were to act as nobly as Mr. Carnegie has done, the problem would still remain unsolved. Not until every business enterprise is conducted on the principle that the capitalists and the toilers are sharers in just proportions in the profits and proprietary rights of the enterprise will this gigantic problem approach solution. The idea may appear Utopian, but every man who has talked with intelligent workingmen knows that until this principle is adopted there will be no genuine content. It is not gifts, not charity, that they ask for, but justice. The value of gifts like this of Mr. Carnegie's consists chiefly in the confidence they inspire in workingmen. Such gifts show a concern for the public welfare, a recognition of personal responsibility, and a disposition to deal on reasonable and righteous terms with the poor. That disposition leads men to hope that when the true remedy is formulated Mr. Carnegie and men like him will become the advocates of the workingman and the pioneers in the cause of social justice and righteousness.

Andrew Carnegie's Career has been a very remarkable one. He was born in Dunfermline, Scotland, in 1835, and came to America when he was only twelve years of age. He had a hard time looking for work, but at last succeeded in obtaining employment in looking after a stationary engine in a cellar. His next position was as a messenger in a telegraph office at Pittsburgh at three dollars a week. The late Thomas A. Scott was then superintendent at Pittsburgh of the Pennsylvania Railroad. He engaged young Carnegie as operator in his office, and favored him in many ways, giving him opportunities to speculate in oil and coal, by which he made considerable money. He thought out a plan for governing the running of the trains by telegraph, which saved the company an immense sum of money, facilitated business, and was an additional security against accidents. The value of this plan was appreciated, and young Carnegie was removed to the chief office at Altoona, where his splendid organizing faculties were speedily recognized. So high were the company's opinions of his abilities that he was made Superintendent of the western branch of the Pennsylvania road before he was twenty years of age.

Carnegie was now on the high road to wealth. Under Col. Scott's guidance and with his help he bought several farms in upper Pennsylvania, where oil was shortly afterward found in large quantities. The output became enormous, and Mr. Carnegie soon had a large capital at his control. With the quick perception of opportunities which distinguishes Scotchmen above all other nationalities, Mr. Carnegie embarked in the iron trade at the moment when railroad development and the rapid growth of population made it most profitable. In quick succession he became chief owner of the Edgar Thompson Steel Works, the Homestead Iron Works, the Union Iron Works, and the Keystone Bridge Works at Pittsburgh. To-day, at the age of fifty-five, he is the largest iron and steel manufacturer in the world.

The Responsibilities of Wealth might not have been expected to touch the conscience of a man who owed his fortune to his own enterprise, energy, and industry. A man who had inherited his wealth might be so affected, but a "self-made man" would naturally be supposed to say, "May I not do what I will with my own?" Mr. Carnegie, however, realized these responsibilities and considered them in the light of conscience. He was anxious that other wealthy men should do so likewise, and he therefore wrote two thoughtful articles in a magazine, presenting in forcible terms the considerations which weighed heavily upon himself.* In these articles Mr. Carnegie did not shrink from stating in plain terms truths which could not be very palatable to wealthy men. Writing of the duty of men of wealth, he said: "This, then, is held to be the duty of men of wealth; First, to set an example of modest, unostentatious living, shunning display or extravagance; to provide moderately for the legitimate wants of those dependent upon him; and, after doing so, to consider all surplus revenues which come to him simply as trust funds, which he is called upon to administer, and strictly bound as a matter of duty to administer in the manner which, in his judgment, is best calculated to produce the most beneficial results for the community—the man of wealth thus becoming the mere trustee and agent for his poorer brethren, bringing to their service his superior wisdom, experience, and ability to administer, doing for them better than they could do for themselves."

Living Benefactors

are esteemed by Mr. Carnegie far higher than men who, being unable to take their millions with them, bequeath them in charity in their will. In his pamphlet he specially dwells on the superiority of the benefactions which are done in life, and he eloquently urges these benefactions as the best method of dealing with this difficult problem of the day. He says: "Thus is the problem of rich and poor to be solved. The laws of accumulation will be left free; the laws of distribution free. Individualism will continue, but the millionaire will be but a trustee for the poor; entrusted for a season with a great part of the increased wealth of the community, but administering it for the community far better than it could or would have done for itself. The best minds will thus have reached a stage in the development of the race, in which it is clearly seen that there is no mode of disposing of surplus wealth creditable to thoughtful and earnest men into whose hands it flows, save by using it year by year for the general good. This day already dawns. Men may die without incurring the pity of their fellows, still sharers in great business enterprises from which their capital cannot be or has not been withdrawn, and which is left chiefly at death for public uses, yet the day is not far distant when the man who dies leaving behind him millions of available wealth, which was free for him to administer during life, will pass away, 'unwept, unhonored, and unsung,' no matter to what uses he leaves the dross which he cannot take with him. Of such as these the public verdict will then be: 'The man who dies thus rich dies disgraced.' Such, in my opinion, is the true

* These articles have been reprinted in pamphlet form under the title The Gospel of Wealth, and have had a large sale in England as well as in the United States. They are published in this country, price ten cents, by Jenkins & McCowan, 224 Centre Street, New York.

gospel concerning wealth, obedience to which is destined some day to solve the problem of the rich and the poor, and to bring 'Peace on earth, among men good-will.'"

The Practical Example

which Mr. Carnegie has given to men of wealth is a proof that with him the words he has written are not mere theory. He has given large sums to found free libraries in his native land, and now he is given the magnificent building, a picture of which appears on the first page, to Allegheny City. He has further offered a still more magnificent gift of a Free Library to Pittsburgh, which will cost him less than a million dollars, and he is prepared to make it two millions on the sole condition that the city pay $40,000 annually for its maintenance, the money to be raised by taxation. Mr. Carnegie, who has spent much time in the examination and study of public buildings of an educational character, proposes first to construct and furnish a grand central library building, the books of which are to be used both for reference and circulating purposes. The central building, which is to be fire-proof, will contain a fine room for the reception of works of art, it being intended by the giver that in time it will become a magnificent art museum. The building also will contain rooms for the meetings of the various learned and scientific societies comprised in the Academy of Sciences. The intention of Mr. Carnegie is to furnish rooms for such societies to meet in, leaving it for other wealthy men of Pittsburgh to raise a fund for scientific research. The branch buildings will contain portions of the circulating library from the main structure, and books are to be dealt out in the manner that experience may demonstrate to be most in accordance with the needs of the people. These branch libraries will contain rooms for reading and literary societies, and such other organizations as will lead people to read, which is the great object desired.

The Organization.

The proposition includes site and building of a monumental character, and it is intended that the central building and the branch buildings shall be models of architectural skill. As far as has been determined, the Commission or Board of Trustees in the management of the library will consist of twenty-one members; nine of these, who represent the city Government, are to comprise the Mayor, the presidents of the Common Council, the Select Council, and the Central Board of Education, and five members of a Library Commission to be appointed by the Councils; and twelve citizens upon the commission will provide for the election of their successors; and the officers representing the city Government are directly responsible, of course, to the people, and their place, when vacant, will be filled in the ordinary manner of municipal elections. Mr. Carnegie will furnish some books for the library, but the city revenue of $40,000 is the one relied upon to maintain the annual growth of desirable literature.

Mr. Carnegie is the author of several books which have had a wide circulation. His Four-in-Hand story of an English coaching trip, but more especially his glorification of American institutions under the title Triumphant Democracy, have rendered him a literary fame.

THE FREE LIBRARY.

THE handsome building of which a picture appears on the first page is described in the Pittsburgh Dispatch as "a perfect temple of art." Its exterior is of granite from the Fox Island quarries, of Macungie. The straight columns and pointed arches of the architecture are Romanesque. One of the first examples of that style of architecture ever erected is the tower, which rears its pointed turret 100 feet aloft. The graceful finials and capitals crown a series of small columns, which are very symmetrical in appearance. The deep arches of the entire building, worked out both in windows and doorways, are very strong in effect. Two Moorish arches are features of the library frontage. Around the entire building is a terraced wall, erected after-thought, but in perfect harmony with the enclosed building. Externally, no more graceful building can be seen in the United States. Singularly do the various sections of the building conform to each other that the blending of towers, columns, arches, and gables is perfect. Not a feature of the exterior is extraneous, nor does anything seem lacking.

Passing into the vestibule, a noble marble floor leads to the art rooms and the scientific hall. Directly in front of the visitor are the doors leading into the library. This section of the building is divided into nine separate rooms, viz., the reception-room, reading-room, ladies' reading-room, bibliographic room, inner office and repair room, librarian's room, and lavatory. The reception-room is the chief glory of the building, and is a notable example of refined art. The floor is in an irregular mosaic of white marble tint with a heavy black mosaic border. In the centre is a circular pattern of reddish tint, with arabesque designs surrounding the words, worked in mosaic "Carnegie Free Library." The tint of the walls is a rich light brown, and the dimensions of the room, 36 by 40, are imposing enough to make the height of 26 harmonize. Facing the entrance is the enormous chimney in the terra cotta style. In the middle of its broad face is the strongly drawn picture of Andrew Carnegie, the contribution of the members of the commission to the attractions of the building.

Five feet below the ceiling level, running around the sides of the room, is a series of serrated arches forming a colonnade, the contrast in color between the tints of the arches and the wall being very pleasing. Each arch encloses a chocolate-tinted panel, upon which appears the private mark of every noted American publisher, ancient and modern. They are a study for an enthusiast. At the base of the colonnade is a lacquered band of deep blue. On this appear the names of the following distinguished American authors, representative of all fields of literature: Audubon, Bancroft, Bryant, Cary, Channing, Cooper, Edwards, Emerson, Franklin, Fuller, Hodge, Hawthorne, Holmes, Irving, Longfellow, Motley, Parker, Prescott, Sigourney, Silliman, Story, Stowe, Taylor, Thoreau, and Whittier. The band of blue where it crosses the chimney bears the sentiment: "Choose Your Master as You Choose a Friend."

The Dedication by the President

Thursday, February 20, was a fête-day in the city. Long before the hour for beginning the exercises the splendid music-hall of the building was crowded. President Harrison, Governor Beaver, of Pennsylvania, Mayor Pearson, of Allegheny, and many other persons of note were present. Bishop Doane offered the invocation. Mr. Carnegie presented the key of the library to Mayor Pearson, remarking: "I wish that the masses of working men and women, the wage-earners of Allegheny, would remember and act upon the fact that this is their library, their gallery, and their hall. The poorest citizen, the poorest man, the poorest woman that toils from morn till night for a livelihood (as, thank heaven, I had to do in my early days) as he walks this hall, as he reads the books in these alcoves, as he listens to the organ and admires the works of art in this gallery equally with the millionaire and the foremost citizen, I want him to exclaim in his own heart, 'Behold, all this is mine.' I support it and I am proud to support it. I am joint proprietor here."

The Mayor, in accepting the key in trust, extended the thanks of the citizens of Allegheny for the grand, beautiful, and costly gift. "It is a noble gift, an immortal testimonial of our beneficence, and will keep your name before us—a name that will never be forgotten." President Harrison was then introduced, who made an appropriate address, closing with these words: "It gives me great pleasure to be associated in the inauguration of this great enterprise. No one can tell how wide and deep and strong the influence will be that shall have its origin here. We must follow it through the generations that are to come. It is left in your charge, citizens of Allegheny, and speaking for its generous donor, I desire it now to be opened to public use as a place of assembly for all, and I charge you that you care in such manner that its highest usefulness be reached, and that it may not in your hands fall below the high thought which was in the mind of the man who has, out of his own personal means, founded and dedicated this library to public use."

Volume XII., of the Christian Herald, containing numbers for 1889, with complete index, bound in cloth, is had from this office; price, $2 50, including postage. Volumes of 1884, 1885, 1887, and 1888 are also for sale. Are on hand prior to 1884.

Booksellers and Newsdealers Desiring Sample for distribution, with the object of increasing their weekly and for obtaining subscriptions, may have them free of postage paid, by sending a postal-card stating number of required, and mentioning that they are for this purpose Manager, Bible House, New York.

AN EXILE'S LIFE IN SIBERIA.

SINCE Dr. Baedeker's conversion he has devoted his life to evangelistic work among the exiles in Siberia. Speaking during his recent visit to England of the state of these unhappy creatures, he said that they are generally sent far north in Siberia, to Yakootsk. There is no town. The thinly populated district is inhabited by the native race, who speak a language of their own. They are, generally speaking, a heathen people, though a few are baptized. Here, in the intensely cold and bleak country, the exiles settle down in wooden huts. They do not understand the people, and they cannot make themselves understood. They have nothing to do. No wonder that many of the educated and intelligent lose their reason! It was a great satisfaction to carry to these Russians the glad tidings of the gospel.

On his latest tour in Siberia he met, among others, a young man and his wife who had been so long in exile that, although highly educated, they had become excessively awkward in walk, dress, and manner. They were Polish exiles, who had at length been set at liberty. The man had been taken prisoner on the death of the late Emperor. There was no charge against him; merely a suspicion. He had been kept six months in solitary confinement in Russia. He had never been permitted to speak aloud, or to hear a word spoken aloud. He was not even allowed to clean his cell or make his bed. He was kept in forced idleness and silence. He did not go mad, as many do. But he got very ill with scrofula. The doctor thought he would die. He was taken out of solitary confinement, and put into another prison. He might have what he liked to eat. He recovered, and then had chains placed on his feet, and was sent off to Siberia. One-half of his hair was shaved off, and, escorted by soldiers, he was sent forward by train and steamer till he reached his destination, Tomsk. He narrated his whole story. His brother filled a high political office, and gave himself no rest till, at the close of six years, he obtained his liberation. When he was originally arrested his wife heard nothing of it, and knew nothing of his whereabouts, until she herself came under suspicion, and was similarly arrested, and sent to Siberia. There, to their intense joy, they met again.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Science and the Bible.*

I REMEMBER that when I was a boy an old infidel addressed me: "How can you believe the Bible, which says there was light before the sun appeared?" I was not able to answer the objection, but science now can do so when it tells us that the formed earth is older than the formed sun, and that there must have been light nourishing plants before the sun was condensed. In the present advanced stage of science the infidel would have started an objection which could not be answered if Genesis had represented the sun as appearing on the first day.

The correspondence between Genesis and Geology has been demonstrated of late years by very competent men, whose writings are accessible to all. In particular, this has been done by the three men on this continent who have the best right to speak on this subject from their knowledge of physical geography and geology—Dr. Guyot, Dr. Dana, and Sir William Dawson. In the one of these, the written record, we have an account of the genesis of the earth as it would have been witnessed by a spectator who had lived through the unremembered ages; in the other the combined results of the researches of geologists within the last few ages; the one is ocular, the other is scientific. This accounts at once for their essential sameness and their superficial differences—which do not imply any contradiction. . . . I believe that if you would ask a geologist to write for us a true account of the production of our earth in as brief a space as the first chapter of our Bible, he would confess his inability to do so. Suppose that the opening chapter of Genesis, all unknown before, were discovered and published in our day, it would at once be denounced as a forgery, constructed by one who knows geological science, and who varies the record simply to keep the trick from being detected.

* From the Religious Aspect of Evolution. By James McCosh, D. D., LL. D., ex-President of Princeton University. Dr. McCosh is probably one of the most able, as well as the most learned, theologians of our time. It must reassure many apprehensive minds to find from this, his latest work, that he believes that even if the evolutionists should be able to prove their theories the Christian need be under no apprehension as to the stability of the Bible record. Pp. 119. Price $1. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

A Proof of Inspiration.

The question arises and demands an answer, How comes it that there is such a correspondence between Genesis and science, which has been formed in so much a later age? According to the common reckoning, which can be justified, the Pentateuch was written by Moses 1,400 years before the Christian era. The wildest German neologist are sure it could not have been written later than the time of Ezra, 500 years before Christ. Every one acknowledges that the Pentateuch was translated into Greek between 300 and 200 years before Christ, and that after this copies of it were to be found in many libraries. How, then, were the early Scriptures able to publish truths which have been discovered by science only in this century? truths many and varied and minute, and covering a lengthened series of years amounting to at least a hundred millions. There is only one answer to which reason will listen for an instant—the truths must have been disclosed to Moses, as they profess to be, by the immediate inspiration of God.

The Closing Scene.

I have tried to unfold a panorama of our earth's history from its commencement to its close, so far as I can see it by the light of Scripture and of science. It is a flickering light, with crossings and interferences of rays. At times I am dazzled with excess of light, and at times there is a dimness by reason of distance, and I can scarcely distinguish land from cloud. The several Ages rise, like mountain ranges, one beyond the other, apt to be covered with clouds, but their outlines visible, one beyond the other, with valleys between. The history is one throughout, the evening and the morning always making the day.

A PERSECUTED CHINAMAN.

In a letter to the Missionary Herald Mr. Hager reports an instance of the treatment Chinamen receive who return to their own country after professing Christianity in America. He says:

"In one village I found a sick brother recently returned from California and a member of the Oakland Church, Rev. Dr. McLean, pastor. He was prostrated with a nervous fever, and had been sick for some months, but was getting better. The saddest part of all was that, when his fever was at its highest point, the women of the village arose en masse and demanded of his mother that she should worship the idols, and declared that her son was sick because he had refused, since his return to China, to worship his ancestors and the idols. Their anger was also directed against the old mother, who received baptism this summer and who no longer worshipped the idols. After a good deal of persecution this mother finally yielded to worship the spirits.

"After this worship of idols the son was reported to have immediately mended, but when we saw him he was still very feeble. At first we did not know that the villagers were so bitter against us, but, as we were about to depart, an old lady almost raved as she cursed us and the sick brother, who was at this time sitting in an arm-chair. All that was vile and evil she wished would befall this unfortunate brother; she hoped he would die and after death have his head cut off. We tried to pacify the infuriated woman, but all to no purpose, for she did not wish to hear anything of the foreigners' religion, and this is the feeling of many villagers. It is only occasionally that we find some one glad to see us."

A PRAYING WEAVER'S SONS.

THE godly home is the school from which God takes His instruments of evangelical usefulness. This has never been illustrated more forcibly than in the autobiography of the Rev. John G. Paton, lately published. Mr. Paton's father was a stocking-weaver. He, his wife, and their eleven children lived in three rooms, near Dumfries, Scotland. One of these rooms was the father's workshop, the second, a closet, where frequently the head of the household retired to be alone with God. When the father entered that room the children knew "that prayers were being poured out there for us, as of old by the high-priest within the veil in the Most Holy Place. We occasionally heard the pathetic echoes of a trembling voice pleading as if for life, and we learned to slip out and in past that door on tiptoe, not to disturb the holy colloquy." The mother of the family was also a devoted Christian. What wonder that three honored preachers of the gospel went out from the humble home of the poor weaver?

WOULD YOU LIKE TO LIVE YOUR LIFE OVER AGAIN?

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, March 9, 1890.

"All that a man hath will he give for his life." Job 2:4.

A Satanic Libel on Humanity—A Falsehood Built on a Truth—A Captain's Defence on Court-Martial—Why Many Would Like to Live Their Lives Over Again—Conscious of Mistakes—The Search for the Fountain of Youth—A Stale and Stupid Experience—An Undesirable Repetition of Sorrows—A Visit to Pompeii—Temptations Renewed—Postponement of Reunion in Heaven—How a Better Opportunity May be Had—Make the Best of What is Left—An Experience With Green Apples—Buoys on the Voyage of Life—The Lesson for Beginners—An Indian Chief Releasing a Captive.

THAT is untrue. The Lord did not say it, but Satan said it to the Lord when the evil one wanted Job still more afflicted. The record is: "So went Satan forth from the presence of the Lord, and smote Job with sore boils." And Satan has been the author of all eruptive disease since then, and he hopes by poisoning the blood to poison the soul. But the result of the diabolical experiment which left Job victor proved the falsity of the Satanic remark—"All that a man hath will he give for his life." Many a captain who has stood on the bridge of the steamer till his passengers got off and he drowned; many an engineer who has kept his hand on the throttle-valve or his foot on the brake until the most of the train was saved, while he went down to death through the open draw-bridge; many a fireman who plunged into a blazing house to get a sleeping child out, sacrificing his life in the attempt; and thousands of martyrs who submitted to fiery stake and knife of massacre and headsman's axe and guillotine rather than surrender principle, proving that in many a case my text was not true when it says, "All that a man hath will he give for his life."

A Falsehood Built on a Truth.

But Satan's falsehood was built on a truth. Life is very precious, and if we would not give up all, there are many things we would surrender rather than surrender it. We see how precious life is from the fact that we do everything to prolong it. Hence all sanitary regulations, all study of hygiene, all fear of draughts, all waterproofs, all doctors, all medicines, all struggle in crisis of accident. An admiral of the British navy was court-martialed for turning his ship around in time of danger, and so damaging the ship. It was proved against him. But when his time came to be heard he said: "Gentlemen, I did turn the ship around, and admit that it was damaged, but do you want to know why I turned it? There was a man overboard, and I wanted to save him, and I did save him, and I consider the life of one sailor worth all the vessels of the British navy." No wonder he was vindicated. Life is indeed very precious. Yea, there are those who deem life so precious they would like to repeat it, they would like to try it again. They would like to go back from seventy to sixty, from sixty to fifty, from fifty to forty, from forty to thirty, from thirty to twenty. I purpose, for very practical and useful purposes, as will appear before I get through, to discuss the question we have all asked of others, and others have again and again asked of us, Would you like to live your life over again?

A General Wish.

The fact is that no intelligent and right feeling man is satisfied with his past life. We have all made so many mistakes, stumbled into so many blunders, said so many things that ought not have been said, and done so many things that ought not to have been done, that we can suggest at least ninety-five per cent. of improvement. Now would it not be grand if the good Lord would say to you: "You can go back and try it over again. I will by a word turn your hair to brown or black or golden, and smooth all the wrinkles out of your temple and cheek, and take the bend out of your shoulders, and extirpate the stiffness from the joint and the rheumatic twinge from the foot, and you shall be twenty-one years of age and just what you were when you reached that point before." If the proposition were made I think many thousands would accept it.

That feeling caused the ancient search for what was called the Fountain of Youth, the waters of which, taken, would turn the hair of the octogenarian into the curly locks of a boy, and however old a person who drank at that fountain he would be young again. The island was said to belong to the group of the Bahamas, but lay far out in the ocean. The great Spanish explorer, Juan Ponce de Leon, fellow-voyager with Columbus, I have no doubt felt that if he could discover that Fountain of Youth he would do as much as his friend had done in discovering America. So he put out in 1512 from Porto Rico and cruised about among the Bahamas in search of that fountain. I am glad he did not find it. There is no such fountain. But if there were, and its waters were bottled up and sent abroad at the demand would be greater than the supply; and many a man who has come through a life of uselessness, and perhaps sin, to old age would be shaking up the potent liquid, and if he were directed to take only a teaspoonful after each meal would be so anxious to make sure work he would take a tablespoonful, and if directed to take a tablespoonful would take a glassful.

A Thousand Dollars a Bottle,

But some of you would have to go back further than to twenty-one years of age to make a fair start, for there are many who manage to get all wrong before that period. Yea, in order to get a fair start some would have to go back to the father and mother and get them corrected; yea, to the grandfather and grandmother and have their life corrected, for some of you are suffering from bad hereditary influences which started a hundred years ago. Well, if your grandfather lived his life over again, and your father lived his life over again, and you lived your life over again, what a cluttered-up place this world would be—a place filled with miserable attempts at repairs. I begin to think that it is better for each generation to have only one chance, and then for them to pass off and give another generation a chance.

Beside that, if we were permitted to live life over again, it would be a

Stale and Stupid

experience. The zest and spur and enthusiasm of life come from the fact that we have never been along this road before, and everything is new, and we are alert for what may appear at the next turn of the road. Suppose you, a man in mid-life or old age, were, with your present feelings and large attainments, put back into the thirties, or the twenties, or into the teens, what a nuisance you would be to others, and what an unhappiness to yourself! Your contemporaries would not want you, and you would not want them. Things that in your previous journey of life stirred your healthful ambition, or gave you pleasurable surprise, or led you into happy interrogation, would only call forth from you a disgusted "Oh, pshaw!" You would be blasé at thirty, and a misanthrope at forty, and unendurable at fifty. The most inane and stupid thing imaginable would be a second journey of life. It is amusing to hear people say: "I would like to live my life over again, if I could take my present experience and knowledge of things back with me and begin under those improved auspices." Why, what an uninteresting boy you would be with your present attainments in a child's mind. No one would want such a boy around the house: a philosopher at twenty, a scientist at fifteen, an archaeologist at ten, and a domestic nuisance all the time. An oak crowded into an acorn. A Rocky Mountain eagle thrust back into the egg-shell from which it was hatched.

A Repetition of Sorrows.

Beside that, if you took life over again, you would have to take its deep sadnesses over again. Would you want to try again the griefs and the heart-breaks and the bereavements through which you have gone? What a mercy that we shall never be called to suffer them again! We may have others bad enough, but those old ones never again. Would you want to go through the process of losing your father again, or your mother again, or your companion in life again, or your child again? If you were permitted to stop at the sixtieth milestone or the fiftieth milestone or the fortieth milestone and retrace your steps to the twentieth, your experience would be something like mine one day last November in Italy.

I walked through a great city with a friend and two guides, and there were in all the city only four persons and they were those of our own group. We went up and down the streets, we entered the houses, the museums, the temples, the theatres. We examined the wonderful pictures on the walls, and the most exquisite mosaic on the floor. In the streets were the deep-worn ruts of wagons, but not a wagon in the city. On the front steps of mansions the word "Welcome," in Latin, but no human being to greet us. The only bodies of any of the citizens that we saw were petrified and in a museum at the gates. Of the thirty-five thousand people who once lived in those homes and worshipped in those temples and clapped in the theatres, not one left! For eighteen hundred years that city of Pompeii had been buried before modern exploration scooped out of it the lava of Vesuvius. Well, he who should be permitted to retrace on the pathway of his earthly life and live it over again would find as lonely and sad a pilgrimage as would be an exploration of the dead past. The school house, the old church, the old home, the old play-ground either gone or occupied by others, and for you more depressing than was our Pompeian visit in November.

Temptations Renewed.

Beside that, would you want to risk the temptations of life over again? From the fact that you are here I conclude that, though in many respects your life may have been unfortunate and unimproved, you have got on so far tolerably well, nothing more than tolerable. As for me, though my life has been far from being as unimproved as I would like to have had it, I would not want to try it over again, lest next time I would be worse. Why, just look at the temptations we all have passed through, and just look at the multitudes who have gone completely under! Just call up the roll of your school-mates and college-mates, the clerks who were with you in the same store, the bank, or the operatives in the same factory, just as good prospects as you, who have come to a complete mishap. Some young man that told you that he was going to be a millionaire, and owned the fastest trotters on Westchester turnpike, and by the time he was thirty-five years of age, you not hear from for many years, and know nothing about him until some day he comes into your room and asks for five cents to get a mug of beer.

You, the good mother of a household, and your children rising up to call you blessed, remember when you were quite jealous of the wife of the village, who was so transcendently fair and popular. But while you have these two honors, and queenly names of wife and mother, she becomes a poor wail of the street, and went into the land of darkness forever. Live life over again. Why, if many of those who are now respected were permitted to experiment,

The Next Journey

would be demolition. You got through, and says, by the skin of the teeth. Next time you might not get through at all. Satan would say, "I know him now better than I did before, and have for fifty years been studying his weakness, and I will weave a stronger web of circumstances to catch him next time." And Satan would concentrate his forces on this one man, and the last state of that man would be worse than the first. My friends, our faces are in the right direction. Better go forward than backward, even if we had the chance. The greatest disaster I can think of would be for you to return to boyhood in 1890. Oh, if life were a smooth Luzerne or Cayuga lake, I would like to get into a yacht and sail over it, not once, but twice—yea, a thousand times. But life is a certain sea, and some of the ships crash on the icebergs of cold indifference, and some take on evil passion, and some lose their bearings and drift into the Skerries, and some are never heard of. Surely on such a treacherous sea as that one voyage is enough.

Postpones Heaven.

Besides all this, do you know, if you could live your wish and live life over again it would play so much further from reunion with your friends in heaven? If you are in the noon of life, the evening of life, you are not very far from the gate at which you are to meet your transportation to emparadised loved ones. You are now, let us say, twenty years, or ten years, or one year of celestial conjunction. Now suppose you went back in your earthly life thirty years, or forty years, or fifty years, what an awful postponement of the time of reunion! It would be as though you were sent to San Francisco to a great banquet, and you were to go to Oakland, four or five miles this side of the city, and then came back to Hoboken or Harlem to the banquet; better start; as though you were going to England to be crowned, and having come in sight of the mountains of Wales you put back to Sandy Hook in order to make a better voyage. The further you get in life, if a Christian, the nearer you are to the renewal of broken-up companionship.

o; the wheel of time turns in the right direction, and it is well it turns so fast. Three hundred and sixty-five revolutions in a year and forward, rather than three hundred and sixty-five revolutions in a year and backward. But hear ye! hear while I tell you how you may practically live your life over again and be all the better for it. You put into the remaining years of your life all you have learned of wisdom in your past life. You make the coming ten years worth the preceding year or fifty years. When a man says he would like to live his life over again because he would do much better, and yet goes right on living as he always lived, and you not see he stultifies himself. He proves that if he could go back he would almost the same as he has done.

Green Apples.

A man eat green apples some Wednesday in the winter time and is thrown into fearful cramps, and on Thursday: "I wish I had been more prudent in my diet; oh, if I could live Wednesday over again!" and then on Friday eat apples just as green, and proves that it would have been no advantage for him to live Wednesday over again. And if we, looking over our past life, and with the idea of improvement, long for an opportunity to try it over again, yet go on making the same mistakes, and committing the same sins, we only demonstrate the repetition of our existence would afford no improvement. It was green apples before, and it would be green apples over again.

As soon as a ship-captain strikes a rock in the sea or sea he reports it, and a buoy is swung over the reef, and mariners henceforth stand off from the rock. And all our mistakes in the past ought to be buoys, warning us to keep in the right channel. There is no excuse for us if we split on the rock where we were split before. Going along the shore at night where excavations are being made, we frequently see a lantern on a framework, and we turn aside, for that lantern says, keep out of this hole. And all along the pathway of life, warnings are set as warnings, and by the time we reach mid-life we ought to know where it is safe to walk, and where it is unsafe.

The Best Atonement.

Since that, we have all these years been learning to be useful, and in the next decade we ought to accomplish more for God, and the Church, and the world, than in any previous four decades. The way to atone for past indolence or past transgression is by future assiduity. Yet you often find Christian men who were not converted until they were forty or fifty, as old age comes on, saying: "Well, my work is about done, and it is time for me to rest." They gave forty years of their life to God and the world, a little fragment of their life to God, and now they want to rest. Whether that is comedy or tragedy I say not.

A man who gave one-half of his earthly existence to the world, and of the remaining two quarters to Christian work and the other to rest, would I suppose, get a very brilliant reception in heaven. If there are any dried leaves in heaven, it would be appropriate for his garland; or if there is any throne with broken steps, it would be appropriate for his coronation; or any harp with a broken string, it would be appropriate for his finger. My brother, you give nine-tenths of your life to Satan and then get converted, and then while in sanctified laziness, and then go up to God for his heavenly reward, and I warrant it will not be the cashier of the royal banking house a great deal to count out to you all your dues. He will ask you whether you will have it in bills of large denomination or small. I would like to put one line of my sermon in Italics, and have it underlined, and three exclamation points at the end of the sentence, and that sentence is this: As we can never live our lives over again, the nearest we can come to living over the past is by redoubled holiness and industry in the future.

This rail-train of life has been detained and held off and is far behind the time-table, the engineer for the rest of the way must put on more steam and go a mile a minute in order to arrive at the right time and place, under the approval of conductor and directors.

I supposed it would be, there are multitudes of people listening to this sermon on whom the subject has acted with the force of a galvanic ray. Without my saying a word to them, they soliloquized, saying: "As one cannot live his life over again, and I can make only one trip, I must live it out and make no mistakes; I have but one chance, and I must make the most of it." My young friends, I am glad you made this application of the sermon yourself. When a minister toward the close of his sermon says, "Now a few words by way of application," people begin to look around for their hats and get their arm through one sleeve of their overcoats, and the sermon application is a failure. I am glad you have made your own application and that you are resolved, like a Quaker of whom I read years ago, who, in substance, said: "I shall be along this path of life but once, and so I must do all the kindness I can and all the good I can." My hearers, the mistakes of youth can never be corrected. Time gone is gone forever. An opportunity passed the thousandth part of a second has by one leap reached the other side of a great eternity. In the autumn when the birds migrate you look up and see the sky black with wings and the flocks stretching out into many leagues of air, and so to-day I look up and see in full sweep. They are the wings of the flying year. That is followed by a flock of three hundred and sixty-five, and they are the flying days. Each of the flying days is followed by twenty-four, and they are the flying hours, and each of these is followed by sixty, and these are the flying minutes. Where did this great flock start from? Eternity past. Where are they bound? Eternity to come. You might as well go a-gunning for the quails that whistled last year in the meadows, or the robins that last year caroled in the sky, as to try to fetch down and bag one of the past opportunities of your life. Do not say, "I will lounge now and make it up afterwards." Young men and boys, you can't make it up. My observation is that those who in youth sowed wild oats, to the end of their short life sowed wild oats, and that those who start sowing Genesee wheat always sow Genesee wheat.

Two Large Wings

And then the reaping of the harvests is so different. There is grandfather now. He has lived to old age because his habits have been good. His eyesight for this world has got somewhat dim, but his eyesight for heaven is radiant. His hearing is not so acute as it once was, and he must bend clear over to hear what his little grandchild says when she asks him what he has brought for her. But he easily catches the music raised from supernatural spheres. Men passing in the streets take off their hats in reverence, and women say, "What a good old man he is!" Seventy or eighty years, all for God and for making this world happy. Splendid! Glorious! Magnificent! He will have hard work getting into heaven, because those whom he helped to get there will fill up and crowd the gates, to tell him how glad they are at his coming, until he says: "Please to stand back a little till I pass through and cast my crown at the feet of Him whom, having not seen, I love." I do not know what you call that. I call it the harvest of Genesee wheat.

A Man on Fire.

Out yonder is a man very old at forty years of age, at a time when he ought to be buoyant as the morning. He got bad habits on him very early, and those habits have become worse. He is a man on fire—on fire with alcoholism, on fire with all evil habits; out with the world and the world out with him. Down, and falling deeper. His swollen hands in his threadbare pockets and his eyes fixed on the ground, he passes through the street, and the quick step of an innocent child, or the strong step of a young man, or the roll of a prosperous carriage maddens him, and he curses society and he curses God. Fallen sick, with no resources, he is carried to the almshouse. A loathsome spectacle, he lies all day long waiting for dissolution, or in the night rises on his cot and fights apparitions of what he might have been and of what he will be. He started life with as good a prospect as any man on the American continent, but there he is, a bloated carcass, waiting for the shovels of public charity to put him five feet under. He has only reaped what he sowed. Harvest of wild oats! "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is death."

Young man, as you cannot live life over again, however you may long to do so, be sure to have your one life right. There is in this august assembly I wot not, for we are made up of all sections of this land and from many lands, some young man who has gone away from home and perhaps under some little spite or evil persuasion of another, and his parents know not where he is. My son, go home! Do not go to sea! Do not go to-night where you may be tempted to go. Go home!

Your father will be glad to see you; and your mother—I need not tell you how she feels. How I would like to make your parents a present of their wayward boy, repentant and in his right mind. I would like to write them a letter, and you to carry the letter, saying: "By the blessing of God on my sermon I introduce to you one whom you have never seen before, for he has become a new creature in Christ Jesus." My boy, go home and put your tired head on the bosom that nursed you so tenderly in your childhood years.

A Captive Son Restored.

A young Scotchman was in battle taken captive by a band of Indians, and he learned their language and adopted their habits. Years passed on, but the old Indian chieftain never forgot that he had in his possession a young man who did not belong to him. Well, one day this tribe of Indians came in sight of the Scotch regiments from whom this young man had been captured, and the old Indian chieftain said: "I lost my son in battle and I know how a father feels at the loss of a son. Do you think your father is yet alive?" The young man said: "I am the only son of my father, and I hope he is still alive." Then said the Indian chieftain: "Because of the loss of my son this world is a desert. You go free. Return to your countrymen. Revisit your father, that he may rejoice when he sees the sun rise in the morning and the trees blossom in the spring." So I say to you, young man, captive of waywardness and sin: Your father is waiting for you. Your mother is waiting for you. Your sisters are waiting for you. God is waiting for you. Go home! Go home!

THE LATE COUNT ANDRÁSSY.

(See Portrait.)

THE death of Count Julius Andrassy, Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, as mentioned briefly in our news columns two weeks ago, occurred at Volosca, Istria, on February 18, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. The Count, who was for many years one of the finest types of Hungarian chivalry, patriotism, and statesmanship, was born at Zemplin, on March 8, 1823. He was the second son of Count Charles Andrassy, an energetic reformer and progressist. He was with his father when the latter died in Brussels (1845), and shortly afterward returned to Hungary, where his remarkable administrative and oratorical talents soon attracted the attention of the patriots who were preparing to shake off the Austrian yoke, and whose efforts led to the national movement that culminated in the general uprising of 1848.

On the failure of this patriotic movement and the flight into Turkey of Kossuth, accompanied by the leading Hungarian generals, the subjection of Hungary was complete, and Andrassy was condemned to death with many other gallant patriots, and was actually hanged in effigy by order of the Austrian authorities. He was at the time on a diplomatic mission in Turkey, whence, as his liberty was threatened, he fled to France, and during the following eight years resided in Paris and London.

In virtue of the general amnesty granted to political "offenders" by the Austrian Emperor in 1857, Andrassy returned to Hungary. The Imperial Government, anxious to obtain the countenance and support of so popular and influential a personage, showed him great attention, and at length, as one of the leaders of the National Party in the Hungarian Diet, he was entrusted with the negotiations of the Treaty of 1867, whereby Franz Josef, Emperor of Austria, having been defeated at Sadowa, recognized and confirmed the suspended rights of the kingdom of Hungary, making every concession that he had refused to the patriots of 1848.

On Beust's retirement Count Andrassy succeeded him as Premier of the joint Austro-Hungarian Ministry. He steered the ship of state very skillfully through the storms of 1875 (Herzegovinian insurrection), 1876 (Serbian rebellion), and 1877 (Russian invasion of Turkey), and played no inconsiderable part at the Berlin Congress of 1878, in securing a huge slice of the spoils of the Ottoman Empire for his country. Since then he has lived in comparative retirement, and abstained from any active participation in public affairs. He remained, however, the intimate personal friend and confidential adviser of the Emperor and Empress alike, and enjoyed to the last day of his life the love, admiration, and cordial sympathy of his fellow-countrymen in general, as well as of every person, native or alien to Hungarian soil, privileged to claim his personal acquaintance. His death makes a notable gap in the thin rank of the patriot heroes of 1848.

THE APPROACHING NATIONAL RECONSTRUCTION.

By Rev. W. H. Daniels, of Boston, Mass.

THE ten coming kingdoms which are to be formed out of the existing twenty-three kingdoms of Europe are represented in the Book of Daniel, where we have the prophetic basis of this theory given us in the image of a man in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Daniel gives us the interpretation. The head of gold signifies the Babylonian kingdom. After this was to arise another kingdom, and that kingdom was represented by the breast and arms of the image, which were of silver. That was the Medo-Persian kingdom. You will notice this was a divided kingdom. The Medes were represented by one of the arms, and the Persians the other. Then follows another section of the image, which is of brass. This is the body, which is a single mass in the structure. This is the kingdom of Greece. Next we come to the legs of the image, which are of iron, and any school-boy can tell you that after the ruin of the great Grecian empire, founded by Alexander, came the great Roman empire, which was at length divided, as represented by the legs of the image, the capital of the eastern empire being Constantinople, while the capital of the western empire was Rome.

Let us now look at the political Significance of the Image.

The single head of the image corresponds with the actual history of the case, and all the other sections of the image have had their fulfilment in the history of the empires they represented. Now we have come down to the feet of the image, which are part of iron and part of clay. Last of all we reach the ten toes, and the peculiarity is that when we come down to them we read of a stone cut out of the mountain, which struck the image, and it crumbled and vanished, like dust from the summer threshing-floor. This last part of the vision must be literally and exactly fulfilled just as the first parts have been.

Now you see the reason for the prediction concerning the change of the present twenty-three kingdoms into ten kingdoms. This must come to pass, for the Word of God cannot fail. Everything, so far, has been fulfilled, and we are just

Now Living in the Feet

of the image. There never has yet been a time, for any considerable number of years, or months even, when the original territories comprising the Grecian and Roman Empires have existed as ten kingdoms, but we see that events in Europe and Asia are now leading in this direction. On the continent, in spite of the assurances of peace, great military preparations are being pushed forward, and enormous burdens are laid upon the nations in the form of war taxes, under which, at no distant day, the present social order must break down, and when the crisis comes we shall see Europe, and large parts of Asia as well, bursting into a blaze of destruction.

In Germany every man must carry a soldier on his back; that is to say, on an average, every man who is head of a family, must not only support himself, and his wife and children, but he must also support one other man as a soldier. What is true of Germany is true largely of France, and largely of Austria, and very largely throughout Italy. Italy is rolling up debts for war purposes at such an enormous rate that there is actual danger of the Government breaking down. Of course this state of things is telling on Great Britain also. How long will the nations stand up under this strain? A little more of this, and there will come the last straw that breaks the camel's back. Then will come of the present condition of affairs, and you will have the fulfilment of Daniel's prophecy on the setting up of the ten kingdoms made out of the same countries as those which composed the Empire of the Cæsars. You may say it is improbable that ten kingdoms should be made out of the twenty-three between 1890 and 1892. Not so. How long did it take Prussia to change the map of Europe at the battle of Sadowa? A six weeks' campaign made a united Germany possible, and reduced Austria to the position of a second-rate power. When the French armies started out with the cry, "To Berlin!" how long did it take to settle that question? On the Sunday when Napoleon III. had ordered "rest for the entire army" in and around the fortress of Sedan, with the break of day the sentries caught sight of their enemies, the Germans, posted on all the heights which closed in that great valley, and instead of "rest," the hosts of the chief French army found that day their rout and ruin. In these days war does not creep like a snail, but rushes and two and a half years, with the present means of destruction, will give ample time for the rise of the ten kingdoms which must soon appear on the map of the Eastern World. Here are the nations with which God will make good the word of ancient prophecy. Now, with this link supplied to complete the chain, where is the difficulty?—where is the occasion for doubt? You say it is so horrible. But God declares, "As it was in the days of Noah, so it shall be in that day." They were buying and selling, building and planting, marrying and giving in marriage, until the flood came and took them all away. I used to wish that I might be snug in my grave when that awful day should come, but now my heart goes out—my soul rejoices that I am living in the End of this Age, and that it shall be my glad privilege not to die, but to be one of the humblest of the 144,000 watchful ones to be taken up in the glorious retinue of my divine, adorable King. May you be there also.

A Universal Break-up

Like a Whirlwind,

A CHINAMAN'S REBUKE.

A CHICAGO lady travelling through New Mexico was side-tracked at Santa Fe one Sunday. She and a lady friend had some handkerchiefs they wanted washed, and spying a Chinese camp a short way off went to it. She asked a Chinaman if he would wash the handkerchiefs. He replied, "No, me no washee to-day." The friend, thinking, of course, that John was lazy, recommended her to display her cash and renew the request. So she held out a dollar bill, together with the handkerchiefs, and again asked him to wash them. At this John grew solemn, and reaching up to a shelf took down a book, which the lady was surprised to see was a Bible, and holding it in one hand, pointed to it with the other, looking into her face while a tear stood in his eye, and said: "Me Chinaman, and you Melican lady, and I lovee that book. You no good lady." The handkerchiefs were not washed that day. A profound impression was made on the ladies and their party, ending in the conversion of the one who relates the incident.

THE EARTH'S FUTURE.

A DISCUSSION has recently taken place in the columns of the press, started by a letter in a daily journal, on the probable failure of the earth's fertility, owing to the artificial exhaustion of the soil in the process of cultivation. The teachings of Liebig give countenance to such an idea, and we remember that a scientific journal several years ago drew an alarming picture as to the using up of the humus, or vegetable mould, which is necessary to agriculture. The poet has described how

"Ships were drifting with the dead,
To shores where all was dumb."

But, although it is argued at some length that we are on the very verge of the long decline—the down-grade of the earth's physical history—it is admitted that the complete descent must occupy an enormous period of time. If time be allowed, of course the descent must be a greatly prolonged phenomenon. But will such time be granted?

As might be expected, there are those who believe that there are compensatory forces at work, which will serve to maintain the earth's fertility so long as the solar heat remains undiminished. On this latter point there is a general concession that the sun will ultimately lose its splendor and its power, and with its decline the solar system will become a desolation. Thus it is acknowledged that, from one cause or another, at some period as yet undetermined, the glory of this world will absolutely pass away. The date may be nearer or more remote, but earth cannot "with eternity endure."

Science scans the prospect so far. But Revelation is more precise, and brings the subject closer home, telling us that the final scene will not be ushered in by "slow gradations of decay." The human race will not find the earth ceasing to sustain them. On the contrary, there is the covenant, with the rainbow for its token, that "while the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease." All things will continue "as they were."

But there is a day fixed, and a veritable hour, when the present order shall terminate. In the meantime, science and Revelation agree that "the things which are seen are temporal." Beyond all, the children of God look, according to His promise, for "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Unto the last hour the earth shall yield her fruit, and the husbandman shall gather in the harvest. So fair shall all things be that men shall be crying "peace and safety" in the very hour of doom. So rose the sun on the Cities of the Plain. The birds sang among the branches, and the flowing waters flashed in the sunlight; but in a moment all was changed, and the catastrophe was accomplished.

A BRUISED REED.

IN one of his sermons Mr. William Birch says "I remember some years ago, while riding over one of the deserts of northern Africa, meeting with company of Arab travelers, and dining with them in the primitive way of sitting on the sand. After dinner, one of the men brought out his pipes to play. These pipes were two reeds, something like the tin whistles on which boys sometimes play, but made of cane. The man put the end of the reed in his mouth and played Arab tunes with them, the music thus produced being soft and tremulous. When he had finished playing, he placed the reed on the ground, and a horse happening to tread on one, it was injured. I at once thought of the passage of Scripture referring to Christ, which says, 'bruised reed shall he not break,' and I wondered for a moment what this Arab would do. He took up the reed, and though it was bruised he did not throw it away, but sat down on the ground, and probably half an hour tried, gently and patiently, to straighten and repair it, so that he might be able to use it again for his cheering tunes, as it was the only instrument in that little caravan."

A CHINESE FARMHOUSE.

WRITING to the Christian Alliance Miss F. says: "The other day I went into a Chinese farmhouse. If you could but one moment have the opportunity of seeing such a sight, you could never cease to thank God for our own country and its enlightened people.

"It was merely a mud hut. The roof was covered with straw and looked something like our haystacks at home. As we approached the house, an old woman came out and took us in. And what a scene! In one corner was a nest of pigs, and the mother pig was walking around the room. In another corner was the place for chickens, and right in the centre was the feeding-trough for the animals.

"On one side of the room was a bed where the family slept. It was made of a few boards and only a little covering on it.

"As we came in the woman brought out an old bench for us and we took our seats. Dr. S., who was also along, found another seat. He talked with them for a while, and this gave me time to meditate on what was around me. How strange it all seemed! I could hardly believe it to be true, and yet millions throughout this land are living just such a life.

"After I sat there a while, my eyes caught sight of something on the wall, and upon looking closer I found it was a shrine where they worship. It was the picture of an idol. How much that meant to them, and yet what an abomination to God.

"We stayed only a short time, but I had suffered enough to make my heart sick and to make me long to do something for these dying souls, and I ask you, dear reader, have you ever asked God, 'What wilt thou have me to do?' The doors are open, will you enter the field and labor?"

A WIND THAT DISAPPOINTED CANNIBALS

SPEAKING at Northfield, Mass., Rev. J. H. Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, related the following thrilling personal experience: "I have had all sorts of experiences in all sorts of circumstances, and when I have come to God and pleaded His own promises in His own Word, I have never been disappointed. I have been in circumstances of great difficulty, and have been led to ask for remarkable help. I was nearly wrecked when I was going out to China the first time. Our vessel was becalmed, and gradually drifting upon the coast of New Guinea. We could see the savages on the shore. They had kindled a fire, and were evidently expecting a good supper that night. When I was a medical student some of the other students used to jeer at me because I was going among the heathen, and they would talk about 'cold missions.' Well, it did look that night as if something was going to have a piece of hot missionary. The captain said to me: 'We can't do anything else but down the long-boat.' They had tried to turn the head of the vessel around from the shore, but vain. We had been becalmed for several weeks, and never a breeze, or any sign of one. In a few minutes we would be among the coral reefs. We would be at the mercy of those savages, and they would not look as if they had much mercy. 'Well,' I said, 'there is one thing we haven't done yet. Let the Christians on board pray about it.' There was a black man on board, a steward, who was a Christian man, and the captain was a Christian, and myself. I proposed that we should retire to our cabins, and in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ ask our Father and His Father for a breeze immediately. They agreed. I went to my cabin and told the steward that I was just on my way to China; that He had sent me; and that I couldn't get there if I was wrecked and killed; and then I was going on to ask Him for a breeze, but I felt so confident that it that I couldn't ask Him. So I went up on deck; there was the second officer, the chief mate, a very godless man. I went up to him and said; 'I were you I would let down the mainsail.' He said: 'What do you want me to let down the mainsail for?' I said: 'We have been praying for a breeze, and it is coming directly, and the sooner we are ready for it the better.' With an oath he said he would rather see a breeze than hear of one. He was speaking I instinctively looked up, and noticed that one of the sails was quivering with the coming breeze. Said I: 'Don't you see that the masts of the royals are already shaking? My dear fellow, there is a good breeze coming, and we had better be ready for it.' Of course the man went to work, and soon the sailors were tramping over the deck. Before the sails were set the wind was down on us. The captain came up to see what was the matter. He saw that our prayers had been answered; and we didn't forget to praise God for so great a deliverance from the perils to which we were exposed."

CHRIST FORGIVING SIN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Lesson for March 23, Luke 5:17-26; Golden Text, Luke 5:21.

Leper in the Last Stage of Disease—Moral Leprosy Christ's Vocation—The Leper's Only Doubt—The Crowded Assembly—The Sick Man's Persistent Ends—Faith Only for Healing—Christ's Clearer Diagnosis—A Disease Needing Prior Treatment—The Healing Commenced in the Heart—Christ's Credentials Challenged—The Power to Forgive Proved by the Power to Heal—The Thing Seen an Evidence of the Thing Not Seen.

God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit and with power; who went about doing good, healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for he was with Him." (Acts 10:38.) "Doing good healing," fit occupation for Him who came to be Saviour of mankind! "When He was in a certain city, behold a man full of leprosy, who, seeing Jesus, fell on his face, and besought Him, saying, 'Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean.'" "Full of leprosy," and yet "in a certain city." Was it not written in the law, "The leper from the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall put a covering upon his lips, and shall cry, Unclean, unclean! All the wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean; he shall dwell alone; out of the camp shall his habitation be" (Lev. 13:6)? Why, then, was this leper at large in the city? He was "Full of Leprosy."

If the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he (the leper) shall pronounce him clean that had the plague; it is all turned white; he is clean." (Lev. 13:3.) No longer infectious, but a disfigured, helpless being, needing the Great Physician. Are there not here and there among us such lepers? Men who have entirely given up the attempt to conceal their condition, who know and are not afraid to own, that in them, that their flesh, "dwelleth no good thing" (Rom. 7:5); that there is "no soundness" in them (Isa. 60:21). Such are not infectious sinners; they warn more than any others to flee from sin; they are not detained "without the camp," for the Father of God has shown them their need; they are obtaining deliverance, and they know where to be had.

Lord," said the poor leper, "if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean." Never before, and never after, in the days of Jesus upon earth, was a question ever raised of His willingness to heal.

His every-day life showed that it was His vocation, and no unusual thing to Him to heal the sick. He came down from heaven, not to do His own will, but the will of His Father, whose name is, "I am the Lord that healeth thee" (Ex. 15:26); and thus it could not but be His will to heal the sick.

"Thou Canst."

The poor man had got thus far. How should He, who healed all manner of disease, be unequal to this case? "Thou canst"—this was a settled point. "If Thou wilt." The poor leper looked back at himself; he had no claim on Jesus, no worthiness for which he could expect something from the Lord, no reward to give Him; his look at self had crushed him; he must have an assurance from Jesus before he could believe in His willingness to heal him. But he did not carry his doubts abroad, and sow them broadcast, so as to spread the infection of unbelief among others; he brought them all to Jesus. Our most loving Lord never despises a doubt when it is expressed to Him. "He put forth His hand and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean; and immediately the leprosy departed from him." He was another man, his whole being and aspect had changed; "old things"—the hideous disfigurement, the pain and listlessness, of his disease—"are passed away; behold, all things are become new." (II Cor. 5:17.)

Jesus charged the leper to tell no man, "but go shew thyself to the priests, and offer the gift which Moses commanded for a testimony unto them." The priests could pronounce a man clean, but they could not make him clean, they could not extract the disease from the poisoned blood, or reform the crippled or the maimed limbs and members. But when the very leper who had long been known to them, and who, that very day, had been seen in their streets a hideous object, now walked with a firm step to the house of the priests and presented himself for examination, with the wondrous story of the healing of Jesus, the priests could not but know that a greater power than theirs was at work in the land. If the leper told no man but the priests, some one, nevertheless, spread the news abroad. "So much the more went there a fame abroad of Him; and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by Him of their infirmities." Jesus was for the time popular.

Most evangelists go on the principle of making hay while the sun shines; and when an awakening breaks out they think then is the time to multiply meetings, and to bring all the methods possible into play to keep up the work of God. It may be, or it may not be, the right thing. Sometimes the work of God is stopped by these very methods.

Jesus "Withdrew Himself

